¶ The Epistle or Preface to the Christian Reader.

AS we haue great cause to geeue thankes to the high prouidence of almighty God, for the excellent arte of Printing, most happely of late found out, and now commonly practised euery where, to the singular benefite of Christes Church, wherby great increase of learnyng and knowledge, with innumerable commodities els haue ensued, and dayly doe ensue to the lyfe of man, and especially to the furtheraunce of true Religion: so agayne of our parte, it is both of vs all in generall to be wished, and especially of them to be procured, who occupie the trade therof, rightly to vse the same to the glory of hym which gaue it, and to the ende wherefore it was ordayned, and not to abuse vnworthely that worthy facultie, eyther in thrusting into the worlde euery vnworthy trifle that commeth to hand, or hauing respecte more to their owne priuate gayne, then regarde to the publike edifiyng of Christes Church, or necessary preferment of Religion. For therefore I suppose this science of Printing first to be set vp and sent of God to mans vse, not so much for temporall commoditie to be taken, or mans glory to be sought thereby, but rather for the spirituall and inwarde supportation of soulehealth, helpe of Religion, restoring of true doctrine, repayring of Christes Church, and repressing of corrupt abuses, which had heretofore ouerdarckened the doctrine of fayth, to reuiue agayne the lost lyght of knowledge to these blynde tymes, by renuing of holsome and auncient writers: whose doinges and teachinges otherwise had lyen in obliuion, had not the benefite of Printing brought them agayne to light, or vs rather to light by them. Wherfore such Printers in my mynde, are not to be defrauded of their due commendation, who in pretermitting other light trifiyng pamflets of matter vnneedful, and impertinent, little seruing to purpose, lesse to necessitie, doe employe their endeuour and workemanship chiefly to restore such fruitfull workes and monumentes of auncient writers, and blessed Martyrs: who as by their godly lyfe, and constant death, gaue testimonie to the trueth, in tyme wherein they suffered, so by their doctrine and learning, geeue now no lesse lyght to all ages and posteritie after them.

In the number of whome, may rightly be accompted, and no lesse recommended to the studious Christen Reader these three learned fathers of blessed memory, whom the Printer of this booke hath diligently collected, & in one volume togither, inclosed the workes I meane of William Tyndall, Iohn Frith, and Robart Barnes: chiefe ryngleaders in these latter tymes of thys Church of England. Wherein as we haue much to prayse God for such good bookes left to the Church, and also for such Printers in preserving by their industrie and charges such bookes from perishing: so haue I to exhorte all ſtudious readers, wyth lyke diligence to embrace the benefite of God offered, and ſeriouſly to occupie them ſelues in markyng and folowing both the valiaunt actes, and excellent wrytinges of the ſayd godly perſons. Concernyng the prayſe whereof, I ſhall not neede in thys place to beſtow much commendation: becauſe, neither is it the prayſe of men, but profite of the godly, that they doe ſeeke: nor yet the contempt of the vngodly that they doe feare. Moreouer, what is to be ſayde or thought of them, rather by their owne workes, then by other mens wordes, by readyng their bookes, then by my preface, is to be ſeene. In peruſing whereof, thou ſhalt fynde (gentle Reader) whether thou bee ignoraunt, what to learne, or whether thou be learned, what to folowe, and what to ſticke to. Briefly, whatſoeuer thou art, if thou be yong, of Iohn Frith: if thou be in middle age, of W. Tyndall: if in elder yeares of D. Barnes, matter is here to be founde, not onely of doctrine to enforme thee, of comfort to delyte thee, of godly enſample to directe thee: but alſo of ſpeciall admiration, to make thee to wonder at the workes of the Lord, ſo mightely worckyng in theſe men, ſo oportunely in ſtirryng them vp, ſo graciouſly in aſſiſting them.

Albeit diuers other alſo beſides theſe, I ſay not nay, as well before them as after, through the ſecrete operation of Gods mighty prouidence haue beene rayſed vp, both famous in learnyng, floriſhyng in witte, and ſtout in zeale, who labouryng in the ſame cauſe, haue no leſſe valiantly and doughtely ſtoode in the like defence of Chriſtes true Religion, agaynſt blynde errour, peſtilent ſuperſtition, and perillous hypocriſie, namely, agaynſt the Arche enemye of Chriſt and hys flocke, the Byſhop I meane of Rome, with hys tyrannicall ſeate, as namely here in England, Iohn Wicklyffe, Rigge, Aſton, Swynderby, W. Thorpe, Walter Brute, L. Cobham, wyth the reſidue of that former age: And alſo after them many other moe freſhe wittes, faythfull preachers, and learned writers haue ſprong vp by the Lord of hoaſtes to furniſhe hys fielde: Briefly no age nor tyme hath euer lacked ſome or other, ſtyll bayting at the beaſt, but eſpecially nowe in theſe our preſent dayes ſuch plenty, yea whole armyes the Lord hath powred vppon hys Church of heauenly ſouldiours, who not onely in number exceedyng, but in knowledge alſo excellyng, both by preaching and Printing, doe ſo garniſhe the Church in euery reſpecte, that it may ſeeme, and ſo peraduenture wil be thought this time of ours to ſtand now in little neede of ſuch bookes and momumentes as theſe of former antiquitie: yet notwithſtandyng, I am not of that mynde ſo to thinke. For albeit, increaſing of learning of tonges, and ſciences, wyth quicknes of wit in youth and other, doth maruailouſly ſhut vp, as is to be ſeene, to the ſufficient furniſhyng of Chriſtes Church yet ſo it happeneth I can not tell how, the farther I looke backe into thoſe former tymes of Tyndall, Frith, and others lyke, more ſimplicitie, wyth true zeale, and humble modeſtie I ſee wyth leſſe corruption of affections in them, and yet wyth theſe dayes of ours, I finde no fault. As by reading and conferring their workes togither may eftſoones appeare.

In opening the Scriptures, what trueth, what ſoundnes can a man require more, or what more is to be ſayd, then is to be founde in Tyndall. In his his Prologues vppon the fiue bookes of Moſes, vppon Ionas, vppon the Goſpelles, and Epiſtles of S. Paule, namely to the Romaines: how perfectly doth he hit the right ſence, and true meaning in euery thing? In his obedience, how fruitfully teacheth he euery perſon his dutie? In his expoſitions, and vppon the parable of the wicked Mammon, how pithely doth he perſwade? how grauely doth he exhort? how louingly doth he comforte? ſimply without oſtentation, vehement without contention. Which two faultes, as they cōmonly are wont to folow the moſt part of writers, ſo how farre the ſame were from him, and he from them, his replies and aunſweres to Syr Thomas More, doe well declare: in doctrine ſound, in hart humble, in life vnrebukeable, in diſputation modeſt, in rebuking charitable, in trueth feruent, and yet no leſſe prudent in diſpenſing with the ſame, and bearyng with time, and with weakenes of men, as much as he might, ſauing onely where mere neceſſitie conſtrayned hym otherwiſe to doe, for defence of trueth againſt wilfull blyndnes, and ſubtile hypocriſie, as in the Practiſe of Prelates is notorious to be ſeene. Briefly, ſuch was his modeſtie, zeale, charitie, and painefull trauaile, that he neuer ſought for any thing leſſe, then for hymſelfe: for nothyng more, then for Chriſtes glory, and edification of other: for whoſe cauſe not onely he beſtowed his labours, but hys life and bloud alſo. Wherfore not vnrightly he might be then, as he is yet cauled, the Apoſtle of England, as Paule cauleth Epaphroditus the Apoſtle of the Philippians, for his ſingular care and affection toward them. For as the Apoſtles in the primatiue age firſt planted the Church in trueth of the Goſpell: ſo the ſame trueth beyng agayne defaced and decayed by enemies in thys our latter tyme, there was none that trauayled more earneſtly in reſtoring of the ſame in this Realme of England, then dyd William Tyndall.

With which William Tyndall, no leſſe may be adioyned alſo Iohn Frith, and D. Barnes, both for that they togither with him in one cauſe, and about one tyme, ſuſtayned the firſt brunt, in this our latter age, and gaue the firſt onſet agaynſt the enemies: as alſo for the ſpeciall giftes of fruitfull eruditiō, and plentifull knowledge wrought in them by God, and ſo by them left vnto vs in their writinges. Wherfore accordyng to our promiſe in the booke of Actes and Monumentes, wee thought good herein to ſpend a litle diligence in collecting, and ſetting abroad their bookes togither, ſo many as could be founde, to remaine as perpetuall Lāpes, ſhyning in the Church of Chriſt, to geeue lyght to all poſteritie. And although the Printer, herein taking great paynes, coulde not paraduenture come by all (howbeit, I truſt there lacke not many) yet the Lord be thanked for thoſe which he hath gotte and here publiſhed vnto vs.

And woulde God the like diligence had beene yſed of our auncient forelders, in the tyme of Wickliffe, Purney, Clerke, Brute, Thorpe, Huſſe, Hierome, and ſuch other, in ſearching and collecting their workes and writings. No doubt but many thinges had remayned in lyght, which now be lefte in obliuion. But by reaſon the Arte of Printing was not yet inuented, their worthy bookes were the ſooner abolyſhed. Such was then the wickednes of thoſe dayes, and the practiſe of thoſe Prelates then ſo craftie, that no good booke coulde appeare, though it were the Scripture it ſelfe in Englyshe, but it was restrayned, and so consumed. Whereby ignoraunce and blyndnes so preuayled amonge the people, tyll at the last, it so pleased the goodnes of our God to prouide a remedy for that mischiefe, by multiplying good bookes by the Printers penne, in such sort, as no earthly power was able after that (though they did their best) to stoppe the course thereof, were he neuer so myghtie, and all for the furtheraunce of Christes Church.

Wherefore receaue (gracious Reader) the Bookes here collected and offered to thy hand, and thanke God, thou hast them, and reade them whilest thou mayst, while time, life, and memory serueth thee. In reading whereof the Lord graunt, thou mayst receaue no lesse fruit by them, then the harty desire of the setter forth is to wishe well vnto thee. And the same Lord also graunt, I beseech him, that this my exhortation & wishe so may worke in all, that not onely the good, but the enemies also, which be not yet wonne to the worde of trueth, setting aside all partialitie and preiudice of opinion, woulde with indifferent iudgementes, bestow some reading and hearyng likewise of these, to taste what they doe teach, to vewe their reasons, and to trye their spirite, to marke the expositions of Tyndall, the argumentes of Frith, the Articles and allegations of Barnes. Which if they shall finde agreable to the tyme and antiquitie of the Apostles doctrine, and touchstone of Gods worde, to vse them to their instruction: If not, then to myslike them as they finde cause, after they haue first tryed them, and not before. And thus not to deteine thee with longer processe, from the reading of better matter, I referre and commende thee and thy studies gentle reader, with my harty wishe and prayer to the grace of Christ Iesu, and direction of hys holy spirite, desiryng thee lykewyse to doe the same for mee.

Iohn Foxe.

The Martyrdome and burning of William Tyndall in Brabant, by Filford Caſtell.

Here foloweth the hiſtorie and diſcourſe of the lyfe of William Tyndall out of the booke of Actes and Monumentes Briefly extracted.

FOr ſomuch as the lyfe of W. Tyndall author of this treatiſe immediately folowing, is ſufficiently & at large diſcourſed in the boke of Actes and Monumentes, by reaſon whereof we ſhall not nede greatly to intermedle with any new repetition therof, yet notwithſtanding becauſe as we haue take in hand to collect and ſet forth his whole workes togither, ſo we thought it not vnconuenient, to collecte likewiſe ſome briefe notes concerning the order of his lyfe and godly conuerſation that both his teaching, & lyuing going togither, as the one may edifie by doctrine, ſo the other may profit by example. Firſt touching the birth and parentage of this bleſſed Martyre in Chriſt, he was borne in the edge of Wales, and brought vp from a childe in the vniuerſitie of Oxforde, where he by long continuance grew, and encreaſed aſwell in the knowlege of tongues, and other other liberall artes, as especially in the knowlege of Scriptures, whereunto his mind was singularly addicted: Insomuch that hee liyng in Magdalene hall, read priuelye to certaine studentes, and felowes of Magdalene College, some percell of Diuinitie, instructing them in the knowlege, and trueth of the Scriptures. Whose maners also and conuersation being correspondent to the same, were such that all they which knewe him, reputed, and esteemed him to bee a man of most verteous disposition, and of a life vnspotted. Thus hee in the vniuersitie of Oxford encreasyng more and more in learning, and proceeding in degrees of the scholes, spiyng his tyme, remoued from thence to the Vniuersitie of Cambridge, where after hee had likewise made his abode a certayne space, and beeing now farther rypened in the knowledge of Gods worde, leauing that vniuersitie also, hee resorted to one M. Welshe a knyght of Glocester sheare and was there schole master to his children, and in very good fauour with his master. This gentleman, as hee kept a very good ordinary commonly at his table, there resorted vnto him many tymes sondry Abbottes, Deanes, Archdeacons, with other diuers Doctours, and great beneficed men: Who there togither with M. Tyndall sittyng at the same table, did vse many tymes to enter communication and talke of learned men as of Luther and Erasmus, and of diuerse controuersies, and questions vpon the scripture. At which time M. Tyndall, as he was learned, & wel practised in Gods matters, so he spared not to shew to them simply, and playnely his iudgement in matters as he thought. And when as they at that tyme did varie from Tyndall in opinions, and iudgment, he would shewe them the booke, and lay playnely before them the open, and manifest places of the scriptures to confute their errours, and to confirme his sayinges. And thus continued they for a season, reasoning, and contending togither diuers and sondry tymes, till at the length they wared wery of him, and bare a secret grudge in their hartes against hym.

Tyndall a vertuous and godly man.

Not long after this it happened that certaine of these great Doctours had inuited M. Welshe, and his wife to a banket, where they had talke at will and pleasure, vttering their blindnes, and ignorance without any resistaunce, or gayne saying. Then M. Welshe, and his wife comming home, and calling for M. Tyndall, beganne to reason with him about those matters, wherof the Priestes had talked before at their banket. M. Tyndall aunswering by Scriptures mainteyned the trueth, & reproued their false opinions. Then sayd the Lady Welshe, a stoute and wise woman (as Tyndall himselfe reporteth) well sayd she, there was such a Doctour which may dispend a C.l. & an other CC.l. and an other CCC. poūdes. And what, were it reason thinke you that we should beleeue you before them? M. Tyndall gaue her no aunswere at that tyme, nor also after that (because he saw it would not auayle) he talked but litle in those matters. At that tyme he was about the translation of a booke called. Enchiridon militis Christiani. Which being translated he delyuered to his Master and lady: Who after they had read, and well perused the same, the doctourly Prelates were no more so often called to the house, nether had they the Chere nor countenaunce when they came as before they had, which thing they well marking, and perceiuing, and supposing nothing lesse but it came by the meanes of Tyndall, refrayned thē selues, and at the last vtterly withdrewe them selues, and came no more there.

As this grewe on, the Priestes of the countrey clustering togither, beganne to grudge, and storme against Tyndall, rayling at him, in houses, and other meeting places. Of whom Tyndall him selfe in his first Prologue before the first booke of Moses testifieth in his owne wordes, and reporteth that hee suffered much in that countrey by a sort of vnlearned Priestes, being full rude and ignoraunt (sayth hee) God knoweth which haue seene no more Latyn then that onely which they reade in their Portealles and Missalles (which yet many of them can skarsely reade) except it bee Albertus de Secretis mulierum, in which yet, though they bee neuer so sorely learned, they pore day and night, and make notes therein, and all to teach the mydwifes (as they say) and also an other booke called Lynwood, a Booke of Constitutions to gather tythes, mortuaryes, Offeringes, Customes, and other pillage, which they call not theirs, but Gods part, the duetie of holy Church, to discharge their consciences with all. For they are bound that they shall not diminishe, but encrease all thinges to the vttermost of their powers which pertcineth to holy Church. Thus these blinde, and rude Priestes flocking togither to the Alehouse (for that was their preaching place) raged and rayled against him, affirming that his sayengs were heresy: addyng moreouer vnto his sayenges of their owne heades, more then euer hée spake, and so accused him secretly to ỹ Chauncelour, and other of the Bishops officers.

It followed not long after this, that there was a sitting of the Byshops Chaũcelour appointed, and warning was geuen to the Priestes to apers, amõgest whom M. Tyndall was warned to bée there. And whether hée had any misdoubt by their threatenings or knowledge geuen him, that they would lay some thinges to his charge, it is vncerteyne: But certaine this is (as hée him selfe declareth) that hée doubted their preuy accusations, so that hée by the way in going thitherwardes, cryed in his mynde hartely vnto God to geue him strength to stand fast in the trueth of his worde.

When the tyme came of his apperaunce before the Chaũcelour, hée threatened him greuously, reuiling and rating him as though hée had bëne a dogg, and layed to his charge many thinges, whereof no accuser could yet bée brought forth (as commonly their maner is, not to bring forth the accuser) notwithstanding that the Priestes of the countrye the same time were there present. And thus M. Tyndall after those examinations escaping out of their handes, departed home, and returned to his Master againe. Vniust dealing of the Papistes.

There dwelt not farre of a certaine Doctour that had bëne an olde Chauncelor before to a Bishop, who had bëne of olde familiar acquaintaunce with M. Tyndall, and also fauoured him well. Vnto whom M. Tyndall went and opened his mynde vpon diuers questions of the Scripture: For to him hée durst bée bolde to disclose his harte. Vnto whom the Doctour sayd: Doe you not knowe that the Pope is very Antechrist, whom the Scripture speaketh of? But bëeware what you say: for if you shall bée perceaued to bée of that opinion, it will cost you your life: And said moreouer, I haue bëne an officer of his, but I haue geuen it vp, and defye him, and all his workes.

Not long after M. Tyndall happened to bée in the company of a certeyne deuine recounted for a learned man, and in commoning and disputing with him, hée droue hym to that issue that the sayd great Doctour burst out into these blasphemous wordes, and sayd, we were better to bée without Gods lawe, then the Popes. M. Tyndall hearing this and beeing full of Godly zeale, and not bearing that blasphemous saying, replyed agayne and sayd: I defie the Pope and all his lawes, and farther added, that if God spared him life ere many yeares, hée would cause a boy that driueth the plough to know more of the Scripture then hée did. Notorious blasphemy of a Papist.

After this the grudge of the Priestes encreasing still against Tyndall, they neuer ceased barking, and rating at him, and layd many sore thinges to his charge, saying ỹ hée was an heretick in sophistry, an hereticke in logique, and an hereticke in Diuinitie: And sayd moreouer vnto him, that hée bare hymself bolde of ỹ Gentlemẽ there in ỹ coũtry, but notwithstanding shortly hée should bée otherwise talked withal. To whom M. Tyndall aũswering againe thus said: it was not the place hée stuck vpõ: hée was cõtẽted they should bring him into any countrey in all England, geuing him x.l. a yeare to liue with, and bynding him to no more but to teach children and to preach.

To bée short M. Tyndall beeing so molested and vexed in the countrey by ỹ Priests was constrayned to leaue that Countrye, and to seeke another place: and so comming to M. Welshe hée desired him of his good will, that hée might depart from hym, saying thus vnto him: Syr I perceaue I shall not bée suffered to tarye long here in this countrie, neither shall you bée able (though you woulde) to kéepe mée out of the handes of the spiritualtie, and also what displeasure might growe to you by kéeping mée God knoweth: for the which I should bée right sory. So that in fine M. Tyndall with ỹ good will of his Master departed, and eftsones came vp to London, and there preached a while according as hée had done in the countrye beefore. At length hée bethought hym selfe of Cutbert Tunstall then Byshop of London, and especially for the great commendatiõ of Erasmus, Who in his annotations so extolleth him for his learning, thus casting Tyndall remoueth from M. Welshe.

with him selfe, that if hée might attayne into his seruice, hée were a happy man. And so comming to Syr Henry Gilforde the kinges Controller, and bringing with hym an oration of Isocrates, which hée had translated out of Grécke into Englishe hée desyred him to speake to the sayd Byshop of London for hym: which hée also did, and willed him moreouer to write an Epistle to the Byshop and to goe him selfe with him: which hée did likewise, and deliuered his Epistle to a seruaunt of his named William Hebletwhait, a man of his olde acquaintaunce.

Tyndall sueth to be with Tonstall Byshop of London, but coulde not obtayne.

But God, who secretly disposed the course of things, saw ẏ was not best for Tyndals purpose, nor for the profite of his Church, and therefore gaue him to fynde litle fauour in the Bishops sight. The aunswere of whome was this, that his house was full: hée had moe then hée could well fynde, and aduised him to séeke in Londō abroad where he sayd he could lacke no seruice &c. And so he remayned in London the space almost of a yeare, beholding and marking with him selfe the course of the world and especially ẏ Demeanour of the preachers, how they boasted them selues, & set vp their auctoritie & kingdome: Beholding also the pompe of the Prelates, with other thinges that greatly misliked him. Insomuch, as he vnderstode not onely to be no rome in ẏ Bishops house for him to translate the new Testament: but also that there was no place to doe it in all England. And therefore fynding no place for his purpose within the Realme, and hauing some ayde and prouision, by Gods prouidence ministred vnto him by Humfrey Mommouth Merchaunt, who after was both Shirife and Alderman of London, and by certaine other good men, he toke his leaue of the Realme, and departed into Germany. Where the good man being inflamed with a tender care and zeale of his countrey refused no trauell, or diligence, how by all meanes possible, to reduce his bretheren & Countrymen of England to the same tast and vnderstanding of Gods holy worde, and veritie which the Lorde had endued him withall.

The Scripture in the vulgare tongue, a speciall manifesting of the trueth.

Where vpon he considering in his minde, & partly also conferring with Iohn Frith thought with him selfe no way more to conduce thereunto, then if the scripture were turned into the vulgare speeche, that the powre people might also see the simple and playne worde of God. For first, he wisely casting in his minde, perceiued by experiẽce how that it was not possible to stablish the lay people in any trueth, except the Scripture were so plainlye layd before their eyes in their mother tongue, that they might see the processe, order, and meaning of ẏ text: For els whatsoeuer trueth should be taught them, these enemies of the trueth would quench it agayne either with apparaũt reasõs of Sophistrye, and traditions of their awne making, founded without all ground of Scripture: Either els iuggling with the text, expounding it in such a sence, as impossible it were to gather of the text, if the right processe, order and meaning thereof were seene.

Ignorance of Scripture cause all mischife & erroures in religion.

Agayne right well he perceaued, and considered this onely, or most chiefly to be the cause of all mischiefe in the Church, that the Scriptures of God were hydden from the peoples eyes: For so long the abhominable doinges and Idolatries mainteyned by the Pharasaicall Clergie, coulde not be espyed, and therefore all their labour was with might and mayne to keepe it downe, so that either it should not bee read at all, or if it were, they woulde darken the right sence, with the myst of their Sophistry, and so entangle them which rebuked, or despised their abhominations, with argumentes of philosophy, and with worldly similitudes, and apparant reasons of naturall wisedome: and with wresting of Scripture vnto their awne purpose, contrary vnto the processe, order, and meaning of the text, would so delude them in deskanting vpon it with allegories, and amaze them, expounding it in many sences layed before the vnlearned laye people, that though thou felt in thy heart, and were sure that all were false that they sayd, yet couldest thou not solue their subtile ryddells.

For these and such other considerations, this good man was moued (and no doubte styrred vp of God) to translate the Scripture into his mother tongue, for the publique vtilitie and profit of the simple vulgar people of his coũtrey: First setting in hand with the new testament, which he first translated about the yeare of our Lord. 1527. After ẏ he toke in hand to translate the olde testament, finishing the v. bookes of Moses, with sondry most learned and godly prologues prefixed before euery one of them most worthy to be read, and read againe of all Christians, as the like also he did vpon the new testament.

He wrote also dyuerse other workes vnder sondry titles, among the which is that most worthy monument of his intuled the obedyence of a Christian man, wherein with singular dexteritie he instructeth all men in the office, and duetie of Christian obedience, with dyuerse other treatises as may apere in the contentes of this boke.

So sone as these bokes were compiled, and made by William Tyndall, and the same were published and sent ouer into England, it can not bee spoken what a doze of light they opened to the eyes of the whole Englishe nation, which before were many yeares shut vp in darknes.

Now these godly bokes, and specially the new Testament of William Tindals translation beyng spred abroad and come into many mens handes, as they wrought singular profitte to the godly: so the vngodly enuying and disdayning that the people should be any thing wiser then they: and agayne, fearing least by the shyning beames of trueth, their false hypocrisie and workes of darcknes should be discerned: began to stirre with no small adoe, lyke as at the byrth of Christ, Herode and all Ierusale were troubled wyth hym, so the Papistes made open exclamation agaynst this godly man, and published hym opēly in all their sermons to be an hereticke, and that all his bokes were none other but dammable heresies, and sought by all the meanes they might, how so empeach and hynder that godly man in his blessed trauayles.

The reprobate are alwayes offended at ỹ trueth.

But to returne to the story. After that William Tyndall had translated the fifth boke of Moses called Deuteronomium, and he mynding to print the same at Hamborough, sayled thitherward: and by the way vpon the coast of Holland, he suffered shipwracke, and lost all his bokes, writinges, and coppes: and so was compelled to beginne all agayne anewe, to his hynderaunce and doublyng of his labours. Thus hauyng lost by that ship both money, his coppes and tyme, he came in an other shippe to Hamborough, where at his appointment M. Couerdale tarped for hym, and helped hym in the translatyng of the whole fiue bokes of Moses. And after hee returned to Andwarp, and was there lodged more then one whole yeare in the house of Thomas Pointz, an English man, who kept a table for Englishe marchauntes. About which tyme, an Englishe man whose name was Henry Phillips, whose father was customer of Poole, a comely man, and semed to be a gentleman. This man sodainely entred into the great loue and fauour of Willam Tyndall, who greatly commended his curtesie and learning, and in the ende fell into familier loue and acquaintaunce with him. And Thomas Pointz their host espying such great loue and familiaritie to be betweene M. Tyndall and this Philippes, which vnto hym was but a mere straynger, did much meruell thereat, and fell into a gelousy, and suspition that this Phillipes was but a spye, and came but to betraye M. Tindall, wherefore on a time, the a fore sayd Thomas Poyntz asked M. Tyndall how he came acquainted with this Phillipes: M. Tyndall answered that he was an honest man, handsomely learned, and very conformable. Then Pointz perceauing that he bare such fauour vnto him, sayd no more, thinking that hee had beene brought acquainted with him by some frende of his. The sayd Phillipes beyng in the towne iij. or iiij. dayes did then depart to the Court at Bruxelles, which is from Andwarp xviij. myles and did so much there that he procured to bring from thence with him to Andwarp the procuror generall, which is the Emperours attorney with certaine other officers. And first the sayd Phillipes seruaunt came vnto Poyntz and demaunded of him whether M. Tyndall were there or not, for his maister would come and dyne with him. And forthwith came Phillipes and asked Poyntz wife for M. Tyndall and she shewed him that he was in his chamber, then sayd he, what good meate shall we haue to dinner for I entend to dyne with you, and she answered they should haue such as the market would geue. Then went phyllipes straight vp into M. Tyndales chamber, and tolde him that by the way as he came he had lost his purse, and therefore prayed him to lend him xl. shillings, which he forthwith lent, for it was easie enough to be had of him if he had it. For in the wilie subtilnes of this world, he was simple and vnexpert.

Then sayd Phillipes you shall be my gest here this day. No, sayd Tyndall, I goe forth this day to dynner, and you shall goe with me and be my gest where you shalt be welcome. And when dynner tyme came M. Tyndall and Phillipes went both forth togither. And at the going forth of Poyntz house was a long narrow entrey, so that y. coulde not goe on a front. Tyndall would haue put phillipes before him, but Phillipes would in no wise, but put Tyndall before him, for that hee pretended to shew greate humanitie. So Tyndall being a man of no great stature went before, and Phillipes a tall person folowed behinde him, who had set officers on either syde of the doze vpon y. seates, which being there might see who came in the entrye. And comming through ỹ sayd entrye, Phillipes pointed with his finger ouer M. Tyndales head downe to hym, that the officers which sat at the doze, might see that it was hee whom they should take, as the officers that toke Tyndall afterward tolde the a foze sayde Poyntz, and sayd that they pitied to see his simplicitie when they toke him. But Tyndall when hee came nere the doze espied the officers and woulde haue shronke backe: nay sayd Phillipes by your leaue you shall goe forth, and by force bare hym forward vpon the officers. And assone as the officers had taken him, they forthwith brought him vnto the Emperours attorney, or procurour generall, where hee dyned. Then came the procurour generall to the house of Poyntz, and sent away all that was of Tyndales, aswell his bookes as other thinges: And from thence Tyndall was had to the Castell of Filforde, xviij Englishe myles from Andwarpe, where hee remayned prisoner more then a yeare and a halfe, and in that meane tyme, came vnto him diuerse lawyers, and Doctours in Diuinitie, aswell fryers as other with whom hee had many conflictes: But at the last Tyndall prayed that hee might haue some Englishe Deuines come vnto him, for the maners and Ceremonies in religion in Douch land (sayd hee) did much differ from the maners and Ceremonies vsed in England. And then was sent vnto hym diuerse Deuines from Louayne whereof some were Englishmen: and after many examinations, at the last they condemned him by vertue of the Emperours decree made in the assembly at Ausbrough, and shortly after brought him forth to the place of execution, and there tyed him to a stake, where with a feruent zeale, and a loud voyce hee cried, Lord open the eyes of the King of Englande, and then first he was with a halter strangled by the hangman, and afterward consumed with fier. In the yeare of our Lord. 1536.

Tyndals simplicitie pitied of the officers.

Tyndals godly zeale to his Prince.

Such was the power of his doctryne, and the sinceritie of his lyfe, that during the tyme of his imprisonment, which (as aforesayd) endured a yeare and a halfe, hee conuerted his keepers Daughter, and other of his housholde. Also such as were with him conuersaunt in the Castell reported of him, that if hee were not a good Christian man, they could not tell whom to truste. The Procurour generall the Emperours attorney beeing there, left this testemony of him, that he was Homo doctus, pius et bonus. that is a learned, a good, and a godly man.

A testimony of Tyndals godly life, euen by his aduersarye.

The worthy vertues, & doinges of this blessed martyr (who for his painfull trauels and singular zeale to his countrey may be worthelye called in these our dayes, an Apostle of England) it were long to recite. Amongest many other, this one thing, because it semeth worthy of remembraunce, I thought good to shew vnto you. There was at Andwarp on a tyme, amongest a company of merchauntes as they were at supper a certaine iuggeler, which thorough his Diabolicall inchauntmentes, or Art Magicall, woulde fetch all kinde of Vyandes and wine from any place they would, and set it vpon the table incontinent before them, with many other such lyke thinges. The fame of this iuggeler being much talked of, it chaunced that as M. Tyndall heard of it he desired certeine of the merchauntes that he also might be present at supper to see him playe his partes. And to be short, the Supper was appoynted and the merchauntes with Tyndall were there present. Then was the iuggler called forth to play his feates and to shew his conning, and after his wonted boldnes began to vtter all that he coulde doe, but all was in vayne. At the last with his labour, sweating, and toyling, when he saw that nothing would goe forward, but that all his inchauntmentes were voyde, he was compelled openly to confesse that there was some man present at supper which disturbed, and letted all his doinges. So that a man euen in the martyrs of these our dayes can not lack the myracles of true fayth, if myracles were now to be desired.

And here to ende and conclude this history with a selve notes touching his priuate behauiour in dyet, study, and especially his charitable zeale, and tender relcuing of the powre: First he was a man very frugall, and spare of body, a great student and earnest laborer, namely in the setting forth of ỹ Scriptures of God. He reserued or halowed to hym selfe ỹ. dayes in the weeke, which he named his dayes of pastime, and those dayes were Monday the first day in the weeke, and Saterday the last day in the weeke. On the Monday he visited all suche powre men and women as were fled out of England by reason of persecution into Antwarp, and those well vnderstanding their good exercises and qualities he did very liberally comfort and relieue: and in like maner prouided for the sicke and deseased persons. On the Saterday he walked round about the towne in Antwarpe, seeking out euery Corner, and hole where he suspected any powre person to dwell, (as God knoweth there are many) and where he found any to be well occupied, and yet ouerburdened with children, or els were aged, or weake, those also he plentefully releued. And thus he spent his ỹ. dayes of pastime as he cauled them. And truelye his Almose was very large and great: and so it might well bee: for his exhibition that he had yearely of the Englishe merchauntes was very much, and that for the most part he bestowed vpon the powre as afore sayd. The rest of the dayes in the weeke he gaue hym wholy to his booke where in most dilligently he traueled. When the Sonday came, then went he to some one merchaunts chamber, or other, whether came many other merchauntes: and vnto them would he reade some one percell of Scripture, eyther out of the olde testament, or out of the new, the which proceded so frutefully, sweetely and gentely from him (much like to the writing of S. John the Euangelest) that it was a heauenly comfort and ioy to the audience to heare him reade the scriptures: and in likewise after dinner, he spent an houre in the aforesayd maner. He was a man without any spot, or blemishe of rancor, or malice, full of mercy and compassion, so that no man liuing was able to reproue him of any kinde of sinne or cryme, albeit his righteousnes and iustification depended not there vpon before God, but onely vpon the bloud of Christ, and his fayth vpon the same: in the which fayth constantly he dyed, as is sayd at Filforde, and now resteth with the glorious company of Christes Martyrs blessedly in the Lord, who be blessed in all his saintes Amen.

And thus much of W. Tyndall, Christes blessed seruaunt, and Martyr.

¶ A Protestation made by William Tyndall, touchyng the Resurrection of the bodyes, and the state of the soules after this life. Adstracted out of a Preface of his that he made to the new Testament, which he set forth in the yeare 1534.

Concernyng the resurrection, I protest before God and our sauiour Jesus Christ, and before the vniuersall congregation that beleeueth in him, that I beleeue according to the open and manifest Scriptures & Catholicke faith, that Christ is risen agayne in the flesh which he receaued of his mother the blessed virgine Mary, and body wherein he died. And that we shall all both good and bad, rise both flesh and body, and appeare togither before the iudgement seat of Christ, to receaue euery man according to his deedes. And that the bodies of all that beleeue and continue in the true faith of Christ, shalbe indewed with like immortalitie and glory, as is the body of Christ.

And I protest before God & our Sauiour Christ, and all that beleeue in hym, that I hold of the soules that are departed, as much as may bee proued by manifest and open Scripture, and thinke the soules departed in the faith of Christ & loue of the lawe of God, to be in no worse case, then the soule of Christ was, from the tyme that he deliuered his spirite into the handes of his father, vntill the resurrection of his body in glory and immortalitie. Neuertheless, I confesse openly, that I am not perswaded that they be already in the full glory that Christ is in, or the elect Angels of God are in. Neither is it any article of my faith: for if it so were, I see not but then the preaching of the resurrection of the flesh, were a thyng in vayne. Notwithstanding yet I am ready to beleeue it, if it may be proued with open Scripture.

Moreouer, I take God (which alone seeth the hart) to recorde to my conscience, beseechyng hym that my parte be not in the bloud of Christ, if I wrote of all that I haue written throughout all my boke, ought of an euill purpose, of enuie or malice to any man, or to stirre vp any false doctrine or opinion in the Church of Christ, or to be author of any secte, or to draw disciples after mee, or that I woulde be esteemed, or had in price aboue the least childe that is borne: saue onely of pitie and compassion I had, and yet haue, on the blyndnes of my brethren, and to bryng them vnto the knowledge of Christ, and to make euery one of them, if it were possible, as perfect as an Angell of heauen: and to weede out all that is not planted of our heauely father, and to bring downe all that lifteth vp it selfe against the knowledge of the saluation that is in the bloude of Christ. Also, my parte be not in Christ, if myne hart be not to folow and liue according as I teach: and also if myne hart weepe not night and day for myne owne sinne, and other mens indifferently, beseeching God to conuert vs all, and to take his wrath from vs, and to be mercifull as well to all other men, as to myne owne soule: caring for the wealth of the Realme I was borne in, for the king, and all that are thereof, as a tender harted mother woulde doe for her onely sonne.

As concerning all I haue translated, or otherwise written, I beseeche all men to read it, for that purpose I wrote it: euen to bring them to the knowledge of the Scripture. And as farre as the scripture approueth it, so farre to allowe it: and if in any place the worde of God disallow it, there to refuse it, as I doe before our Sauiour Christ and his congregation. And where they finde faultes, let them shewe it mee, if they be nye, or write to mee if they bee farre of: or write openly agaynst it and improue it: and I promise them, if I shall perceaue that their reasons conclude, I will confesse myne ignorannce openly.

¶ The Preface of master William Tyndall, that he made before the fiue bookes of Moses, called Genesis. An.1530.Ianua.17.

When I had translated the newe Testamẽt, I added an Epistle vnto the latter ende, In which I desired them that were learned, to amend if ought were found amisse. But our malicious and wylie hypocrites, whiche are so stubburne, and hard harted in their wicked abhominations, that it is not possible for thẽ to amend any thing at all (as we see by daylye experience, when both their lyinynges, and doyngs are rebuked with the trouthe) saye, some of them that it is impossible to translate the Scripture into Englishe, some that it is not lawfull for the lay people to haue it in their mother toũg, some that it would make them all hereticks, as it would no doubt from many thynges whiche they of long tyme haue falsely taught, and that is the whole cause wherefore they forbid it, though they other clokes pretende. And some or rather euery one, say that it would make them rise agaynst the king, whom they them selues (vnto their damnation) neuer yet obeyed. And lest the temporall rulers should see their falsehode, if the Scripture came to lyght, causeth thẽ so to lie.

The reason that the papistes make agaynst the translation of the scripture into English.

A subtile shift of the popes clergy to couer their cull.

And as for my translation in which they affirme vnto the lay people (as I haue heard say to be I wotte not how many thousand herelies, so that it can not be mended or correct, they haue yet taken so great payne to examine it, and to compare it vnto that they would fayne haue it, and to their owne imaginations and iugglyng termes, and to haue somewhat to rayle at, and vnder that cloke to blaspheme the truth, that they might with as litle labour (as I suppose) haue translated the most part of the Bible. For they which in tymes past were wont to looke on no more scripture th they found in their Dnus, or suche like deuilishe doctrine, haue yet now so narowly loked on my trãslation, ẏ there is not so much as one I therin if it lack a title ouer his hed, but they haue noted it, & nomber it vnto ẏ ignorannt people for an hereſy. Finally in this they be all agreed, to driue you from the knowledge of the Scripture, and that ye shall not haue the text therof in the mother toũg, and to kepe the world still in darkenesse, to the entent they might sit in the consciences of the people, thorow vayne superstition and false doctrine, to satisfie their filthy lustes, their proude ambition, and vnsatiable couetousnes, and to exalte their owne honour aboue kyng and Emperour, yea, and aboue God hym selfe.

How the Papistes were vexed with Tindals translation of the new testament.

The Papistes shamed not to forgest the scriptures.

A thousand bookes had they leuer to be put foorth agaynst their abhominable doynges and doctrine, then that the Scripture should come to light. For as long as they may keepe that down, they wil so darken ẏ right way with the mist of their sophistry, & so tãgle thẽ ẏ either rebuke or despise their abhominations, with Argumentes of Philosophie, and with worldly similitudes, and apparent reasons of naturall wisedome: and with wrestyng the Scripture vnto their owne purpose cleane contrary vnto the processe, order and meanyng of the text, and so delude them in descantyng vpõ it with allegories, and amase them, expoundyng it in many senses before the vnlearned lay people (when it hath but one simple litterall sense whose light the owles can not abide) that thoughe thou feele in thine harte, and arte sure how that all is false that they say, yet couldest ẏ not solue their subtle rydles.

The Papistes haue wrought wonderfully to haue suppressed ẏ scripture.

As owles abide not the brightnes of the day, so cannot the papists abide the lyght of the gospell.

Whiche thyng onely moued me to translate the new Testament. Because I had perceaued by experience, howe that it was impossible to stablishe the laye people in any truth, excepte the Scripture were playnely layd before their eyes in their mother toung, that they might see the processe, order and meanyng of the text: for els what soeuer truth is taught them, these enemies of all truth, quench it agayn, partly with the smoke of their bottomlesse pitte, wherof thou readest Apocalipsis, ix. that is, with apparãt reasons of sophistry, and traditions of their owne makyng, founded without grounde of Scripture, and partely in iugglyng with the texte, expoundyng it in such a sense, as is impossible to gather of the text, if thou see the processe, order and meanyng therof.

What first moued W. Tyndale to translate ẏ Scripture into englisshe

This bishop of Lōden was then Tunstall, which afterward was bishop of Durham

And euē in the Bysshops of Londons house, I entented to haue done it. For when I was so turmoyled in the countrey where I was, that I could no lēger there dwell (the processe whereof were to long here to rehearse) I this wise thought in my selfe, this I suffer because the Priestes of the countrey be vnlearned, as God it knoweth, there are a full ignorant sorte whiche haue sene no more Latin, then that they read in their Portesses and Missales, which yet many of them can scarcely read (except it be Albertus de secretis mulierū, in which yet, though they be neuer so sorily learned, they poore day and night, and make notes therein, & all to teach the mydwiues as they say, and Lindwode a booke of constitutions to gather tithes, mortuaries, offeringes, customes, and other pillage, whiche they call not theirs, but Gods part, and the duety of holy church, to discharge their consciences with all: for they are bold that they shall not diminishe, but encrease all thyng vnto the vttermost of their powers) & therfore (because they are thus vnlearned thought I) when they come together to the Alehouse, whiche is their preachyng place, they affirme that my sayinges are heresie. And besides that they adde to of their own heades, which I neuer spake, as the maner is to prolōg the tale to shorte the time with all, and accused me secretly to the Chauncellour, and other the Bysshops officers. And in dede when I came before the Chauncellour, hee threatned me greuously, and reuiled me, and rated me as though I had ben a dogge, and layd to my charge, wherof there could be none accuser brought forth (as their maner is not to bryng forth the accuser) and yet all ỳ Priestes of the countrey were the same day there.

The popes chaplens pulpet, is the alehouse

Christes apostles dyd meekely admonish, but the Popes sectaryes dyd brawle and skold.

As I this thought, the Bysshop of London came to my remembraunce whom Erasmus (whose young maketh of litles gnattes great Elephants, and lifteth vp aboue the Starres whosoeuer geueth him a litle exhibition) prayseth exceedyngly (amōg other in his annotations on the new Testament for hys great learnyng. Then thought I, if I might come to this mans seruice, I were happy. And so I gatte me to London, and thorow the acquaintance of my master, came to Syr Harry Gilford the Kynges graces Controller, and brought hym an Oration of Isocrates, whiche I had translated out of greeke into English, & desired hym to speake vnto my Lorde of London for me, whiche hee also dyd as he shewed me, and willed me to write an Epistle to my Lord, and to go to hym my selfe whiche I also dyd, and deliuered my Epistle to a seruaunt of his own, one William Hebilthwayte, a man of myne old acquaintaunce. But God (which knoweth what is within hypocrites) saw that I was begyled, and that that counsayle was not the next way vnto my purpose. And therfore he gatte me no fauour in my Lordes sight.

How Tindale was deceaued.

Whereupon my Lord answered me, his house was full, he had mo then he could well finde, and aduised me to seeke in Londō, where he sayd I could not lacke a seruice. And so in London I abode almost a yeare, and marked the course of the world, and heard our praters, I would say our Preachers, how they boasted thē selues and their hye authoritie, and beheld the pompe of our Prelates, and how busie they were (as they yet are) to set peace and vnite in the world (thoughe it be not possible for them, that walke in darkenesse, to continue long in peace, for they cā not but either stombie or dash them selues at one thyng, or an other ỳ shall cleane vnquiet all togerther) and sawe thynges wherof I deferre to speake at this tyme, & vnderstode at the last not onely that there was no rowme in my Lord of Londons Palace to translate the new Testamēt, but also that there was no place to do it in all Englād, as experience doth now openly declare.

Roome enough in my Lordes house for belly chere, but none to translate the new testament.

Under what maner therfore should I now submit this booke to be corrected and amended of them, whiche can suffer nothyng to bee well? Or what protestation should I make in such a maner vnto our Prelates those stubburne Nimrothes whiche so mightely fight against God, and resiste hys holy spirite, enforcyng with all craft and sutletie to quench ỳ lyght of the euerlastyng Testament, promises, and appointement made betwene God and vs? and heapyng the fierce wrath of God vpō all Princes and rulers, mockyng them with false fayned names of hypocrisie, and seruyng their lustes at all poyntes, and dispensyng with them euē of the very lawes of God, of which Christe hym selfe testifieth Mathew 5. That not so much as one title therof may perish or be broken. And of whiche the Prophet sayth Psalme. cxviij. Thou hast commaunded thy lawes to bee kept mead, that is in Hebrew excedyngly, Tindale could get no place in the bishop of Londōs house.

with all diligence, might and power, and haue made thē ſo mad with their iugglyng charmes, and craftie perſuaſiōs, that they thinke it a ful ſatisfactiō for all their wicked lyuing, to torment ſuch as tell them trouth, and to burne ẏ word of their ſoules healthe, and ſlea who ſoeuer beleue thereon.

Tyndals ſubmiſſion is to all ſuch as ſubmit them ſelues to God.

Notwithſtandyng yet I ſubmitte this booke, and all other that I haue either made or tranſlated, or ſhall in tyme to come (if it bee Gods will that I ſhall further labour in his haruest) vnto all them that ſubmit them ſelues vnto the word of God, to be corrected of them, yea and moreouer to be diſalowed and alſo burnt, if it ſeme worthy, when they haue examined it with the Hebrue, ſo that they firſt put forth of their owne trāſlatyng, an other that is more correct.

A prologue by Williā Tyndall, ſhewyng the vſe of the Scripture, which he wrote before the fiue bookes of Moſes.

Though a man had a precious iuell & a rich, yet if hee wiſte not the value therof, nor wher fore it ſerued, he were neither the better nor richer of a ſtraw. Euē ſo though we read the Scripture, and bable of it neuer ſo much, yet if we know not the vſe of it, and wherfore it was geuen, and what is therein to be ſought, it profiteth vs nothyng at all. Not the toung but the life proueth a true Goſpeller. It is not enough therfore to read and talke of it onely, but we muſt alſo deſire God day and night inſtantly to open our eyes, and to make vs vnderſtand and feele, wherefore the Scripture was geuen, that we may applye the medicine of the Scripture, euery man to his own ſores, vnleſſe then we entend to be idle diſputers, and brauelers about vaine wordes, euer gnawyng vppon the bitter barcke without, and neuer attaynyng vnto the ſweete pith within, and perſecuting one an other in defendyng of lewde imaginations, and phantaſies of our owne inuentions.

The trueſt touchestone of Religion is Chriſtes Goſpell.

Paule in thyrd of the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothe ſayth, That the Scripture is good to teache (for that ought men to teach, and not dreames of their owne makyng, as the Pope doth) and alſo to improue, for the Scripture is the touch ſtone that tryeth all doctrines, and by that we know the falſe from the true. And in the vj. to the Epheſians he calleth it the ſword of the ſpirite, by cauſe it killeth hypocrites, and vttereth and and improueth their falſe inuentions. And in the xv. to ẏ Romains he ſaith. All that are written, are written for our learnyng, that we thorow patience and comforte of the Scripture, might haue hope. That is, the examples that are in the Scripture, comfort vs in all our tribulations, and make vs to put our truſt in GOD, and patiently to abide hys leyſure. And in the x. of the firſte to the Corinthians, hee bringeth in examples of the Scripture, to feare vs, and to bridle the fleſhe, that wee caſt not the yoke of the lawe of God from of our neckes, and fall to luſtyng and doyng of euill.

The Scripture of god is ẏ ſworde of the Spirite.

So nowe the Scripture is a lyght, & ſheweth as the true way, both what to do, & what to hope for. And a defēce from all errour, and a comforte in aduerſitie that we diſpaire not, and feareth vs in proſperitie, that we ſynne not. Seeke therefore in the Scripture as thou readeſt it, firſt the law, what God commaundeth vs to do. And ſecondarely the promiſes, whiche God promiſeth vs agayn, namely in Chriſt Jeſu our Lord. Then ſeeke examples, Tribulatiō is the gifte of God. firſt of comfort, how God purgeth all them that ſubmit themſelues to walke in his wayes, in the Purgatory of tribulation, deliuerying them yet at the latter end, and neuer ſuffering any of them to periſhe, that cleaue faſt to hys promiſes. And finally, note the examples which are writtē to feare the fleſh that we ſinne not. That is, how God ſuffereth the vngodly and wicked ſinners that reſiſt God, and refuſe to follow him, to continue in their wickednes, euer waxyng worſe and worſe, vntill their ſinne be ſo ſore encreaſed, and ſo abhominable, that if they ſhuld lōger endure, they would corrupt the very elect. But for ẏ electes ſake God ſendeth them preachers. Neuertheleſſe they harden their hartes agaynſte the truth, and God deſtroyeth them vtterly, and beginneth the world a new.

What we ought to ſeeke in the Scriptures.

This comfort ſhalt thou euermore finde in the playne texte, and litterall ſenſe. Neither is there any ſtorye ſo homely, ſo rude, yea or ſo vyle (as it ſemeth outward) wherein is not exceedyng great comforte. And when ſome which ſeme to thē ſelues great clarkes ſay: they wott not what more profite is in many geſtes of the Scripture, & they be read without an allegory, then in a tale of Robenhode: say thou, that they were written for our consolation and comforte, that we dispayre not, if such like happen vnto vs. We be not holyer then Noe, though he were once dronke. Neither better beloued then Iacob, though his owne sonne defyled his bead. We be not holyer then Lot, thoughe his daughters thorow ignorannce deceaued hym, nor peraduenture holier then those daughters. Neither are we holyer then Dauid, though he brake wedlocke, and vpon the same committed abhominable murther. All those men haue witnesse of the Scripture that they pleased God, and were good mē, both before that those things chaunced, and also after. Neuerlesse such thynges happened them for our example: not that we should counterfeite their euill, but if whyle wee fight with our selues, enforsyng to walke in the law of God (as they dyd) we yet fall likewise, that we despayre not, but come agayne to the lawes of God, and take better hold.

A goodly comfort agaynst desperation.

Ensāples of their euils not to bolden vs, but to feare vs frō sinne and desperation.

We read sence the tyme of Christes death, of virgins ẏ haue bene brought vnto the common stues, and there defiled, and of Martyrs that haue bene bound, and whores haue abused theyr bodyes. why? The iudgementes of God are bottomlesse. Such thynges chaunced partly for examples, partely God thorow sinne healeth sinne. Pride can neither be healed, nor yet appeare, but thorow such horrible deades. Peraduenture they were of the popes sect, and reioysed fleshly, thinking that heauen came by dedes, and not by Christ, and that the outward dede iustifyed them, and made thē holy, and not the inward spirite receaued by fayth, & the consent of hart vnto the law of God.

Howe we ought to prepare our selues, to the reading of the scriptures.

As thou readest therfore thinke that euery sillabe pertayneth to thine own selfe, & sucke out the pithe of the Scripture, and arme thy selfe agaynst all assaultes. First note with strong fayth the power of God, in creatyng all of nought. Then marke the greuous fall of Adam, and of vs all in him, thorow the light regardyng of the cōmaundemēt of God. In the iij. Chapter God turneth hym vnto Abell, and thē to his offeryng, but not to Cain and hys offeryng. Where thou seest that thoughe the dedes of the euil, appeare outwardly as glorious, as the dedes of ẏ good: yet in the sight of God, which looketh on the hart, the dede is good because of the man, and not the man good because of his deede. In the vj. God sendeth Noe to preach to the wicked, and geueth them space to repent: they war hard harted, God bringeth them to nought. And yet saueth Noe: euen by ẏ same water by whiche he destroyed them. Marke also what folowed the pride of the buildyng of the Tower of Babell.

Consider how God sendeth forth Abraham out of his owne countrey into a straunge land, full of wicked people, and gaue him but a bare promisse with him that would blesse, him & defende him. Abraham beleued: and that worde saued, and deliuered him in all perilles: so that we see, how that mās life is not maintayned by bread onely, (as Christe sayth) but much rather by beleuyng the promises of God. Behold how soberly, & how circumspectly both Abrahā, and also Isaac behaued them selues among the infidels. Abraham byeth that which might haue ben geuen him for nought, to cut of occasions. Isaac when his welles whiche he had digged were taken from him, geueth rowme and resisteth not. Moreouer they eare, and sowe, and fede their cattell, and make confederations, and and take perpetuall truce, and doe all outward thinges: Euen as they doe whiche haue no fayth, for God hath not made vs to be idle in this world. Euery man must worke godly & truly to ẏ vttermost of the power, that God hath geuen him: and yet not trust ther in: but in Gods word or promise: and God will worke with vs, and bryng that we do to good effect. And thē whē our power will extende no further, Gods promises will worke all alone.

Fayth onely surest shield in all assaultes.

We may not trust in our workes but in the word and promise of God.

How many thynges also resisted the promises of God to Iacob? And yet Iacob conuerteth God, with hys owne promises saying: O G O D of my father Abraham: and G O D of my father Isaac, O Lord which saydest vnto me, returne vnto thine owne countrey, and vnto the place were thou waste borne, and I wil do thee good: I am not worthy of the lest of those mercyes, nor of that trouth, whiche thou hast done to thy seruaunt, I went out with a staffe, and come home with two droues, deliuer me out of the handes of my brother Esau, for I feare him greatly. &c. And God deliuered him, and will likewise all that call vnto his promises, with a repentyng hart, were they neuer so great sinnes. Marke also the weake infirmi-

God burdened with hys promise.

ties of the man. He loueth one wife more then an other, one sonne more then an other. And see how God purgeth hym. Esau threateneth hym: Laban begyleth him. The beloued wife is long baren: his daughter is rauished: his wife is defiled, and that of his owne sonne. Rahell dyeth. Joseph is taken away, yea & (as he supposed) rent of wild beastes. And yet how glorious was his ende: Note the weakenesse of his children, yea and the sinne of them, and how God thorow their owne wickednes saued them. These examples teache vs, that a man is not at once perfect the first day he begynneth to liue well. They that be strong, therefore must suffer with the weake, & helpe thē in vnity, and peace, one with an other vntill they be stronger.

The holy ghost breaketh where and when it pleaseth hym.

Note what the brethren sayd when they were tached in Egypt, we haue verely sinned (sayd they) agaynst our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soule when hee besought vs, and would not heare him: and therfore is this tribulation come vppon vs. By which example thou seest, how that cōscience of euill doynges findeth men out at last. But namely in tribulation and aduersitie: there temptatiō and also desperatiō, yea and the very paynes of hell finde vs out: there there ỹ soule feeleth the fierce wrath of GOD, and wisheth mountaines to fall on her, and to hyde her (if it were possible) from the angry face of God.

Conscience of euill doynges fyndeth out euill men.

Marke also how great euils folow of howe litle an occasion Dina goeth but forth alone to see the daughters of the countrey, and how great mischief and trouble foloweth: Jacob loued but one sonne more then an other, and howe greuous murther folowed in their hartes: These are examples for our learnyng, to teache vs to walke warely, and circumspectly in ỹ world of weake people, that we geue no man occasions of euill.

Of small occasions do rise great euils.

Finally, see what GOD promised Joseph in his dreames. These promises accompanyed him, alwayes, and went downe with hym euen into the depe dongeon. And brought hym vp agayne. And neuer forsoke hym till all ỹ was promised was fulfilled. These are examples writtē for our learnyng (as Paule saith) to teach vs to trust in God in the strōg fire of tribulation, & purgatory of our flesh. And that they whiche submitte them selues to folow GOD, should note and marke such thynges, for learnyng and comfort, is the frute of the scripture, & cause why it was written: And with such a purpose to read it, is the way to euerlasting life, and to those ioyful blessings that are promised vnto all nations in the seede of Abraham, whiche seede is Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom be honour and prayse for euer, and vnto God our father thorow him. Amen.

Ensāples for our learnyng.

A Table expoundyng certayne wordes in the first booke of Moses called Genesis.

ABrech, tender father, or (as some will) bow the knee.

Arke, a shyppe made flat, as it were a chest, or cofer.

Bisse, fine white, whether it be silke or lynen.

Blesse, Gods blessings are his gifts: as in the first Chapter he blessed them, saying, grow and multiply, and haue dominion. &c. And in the ix. Chapter, he blessed Noe, and his sonnes, and gaue them dominion ouer all beastes, and authoritie to eat them. And God blessed Abraham with cattell, and other riches. And Iacob desired Esau to receaue the blessing, whiche he brought hym, that is the present and gift.

God blessed ỹ vij. day, that is, gaue it a preheminēce that men should rest therin, from bodily labour, and learne to know the wil of God, & his lawes, and how to worke their worke godly all the weeke after. God also blesseth all nations in Abrahams sede, that is, he turneth hys lone, & fauour vnto them, and geueth them his spirite, and knowledge of the true way, and lust and power to walke therin, and all for Christes sake Abrahams sonne.

Cain, so is it writtē in Hebrue. Notwithstandyng whether we call hym Cain or Caim, it maketh no matter, so we vnderstand the meanyng: Euery land hath his maner, that we cal Iohn, the welshmen call Euan, the Dutch Haunce. Such difference is betwene ỹ Ebrue, Greke, and Latine: and that maketh them that translate out of the Ebrue varie in names from them, that translate out of Latine, or Greke.

Curse, Gods curse is the takyng away of his benefites: as God curled ỹ earth, and made it barren: So now hunger, dearth, warre, pestilence, and such like, are yet right curses, & signes of the wrath of God vnto the vnbeleuers: but vnto thē that know Christ, they are very blessings, and that wholsome crosse, and true purgatory of our flesh, through which, all must goe that will liue godly, and be saued: as thou readest Math. 5. Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnes sake, &c And Hebr. 11. The lord chastiseth whom he loueth, and scourgeth all the children that he receaueth.

Eden, pleasure.

Firmament, the sky.

Fayth, is the beleuyng of Gods promises, and a sure trust in the goodnes and truth of God, which fayth iustified Abrah. Gen. 15. and was the mother of all his good workes whiche he afterafterward did, for faith is the goodnes of all workes in the sight of god. Good workes are things of gods commaundement wrought in fayth. And to sow a shoe at the commaundemēt of God, to doe thy neighboure seruice withall, with fayth to be saued by Christe (as God promiseth vs) is much better thē to build an abbey of thine owne imagination, trusting to bee saued by the fained workes of hipocrites. Iacob robbed Laban hys vncle: Moses robbed the Egiptians. And Abraham is aboute to slay and burne his own sonne: and all are holye workes, because they are wrought in fayth at Gods commaundement. To steale, robbe, and murder, are no holye workes before worldly people, but vnto them that haue their trust in God, they are holy when God commaundeth them. what God commaundeth not, getteth no rewarde with god. Holy workes of mens imaginations receaue their rewarde here, as Christ testifieth: Math. 6. Howbeit of fayth and workes I haue spoken aboundantly in Mammon. Let him that desireth more, seeke there.

Grace, fauour, as Noe founde grace, that is to say, found fauour and loue.

Ham and Cam all one.

Iehouah, is gods name, neither is any creature so called, and it is as much to say, as one that is of himselfe, and dependeth of nothing: Moreouer as ofte as thou seest LORDE in greate letters (except there be any error in the printing) it is in Hebrue Iehouah, thou that art, or he that is.

Marshall in Hebrue, he is called Sarrabaim, as thou wouldest say, Lorde of the slaughter men. And thoughe that Tabaim, be taken for cookes in manye places, (for the cookes did slaye the beastes themselues in those days,) yet it may be taken for them that put men to execution also: and that I thought it should here best signify, in as muche as he had the ouerlight of the kynges prison, and the kyngs prisoners: were they neuer so greate men, were vnder his custodie: & therfore I cal him chief Marshal, an officer as it were, ỹ Lieuetenaunt of the tower, or maister of the Marshalsey.

Slyme was their morter, chap. 11. and slyme pittes chap. 4. that slyme was a fatnesse that issued out of the earth, like vnto tarre: and thou mayst call it cement, if thou wilte.

Siloh after some, is as muche to say as sent, and after some happy: and after some it signifieth Messias, that is to say, annoynted, & that we call Christ after the Greke worde: and it is a prophesie of Christ: for after all the other tribes were in captiuitie, & their kingdome destroyed, yet the tribe of Iuda had a ruler of the same blond, euen vnto the commyng of Christ: and about the commyng of Christ, the Romaines conquered them, & the emperour gaue the kyngdome of the tribe Iuda, vnto Herode, which was a straunger, euen an Edomite, of the generation of Esau.

Testament, that is an appoynmente made betwene God and man, & gods promises: And sacramēt is a signe representyng such appointment, and promises: as the raynebowe representeth the promise made to Noe, that God wyll no more drowne the world: And circumcision representeth the promises of God to Abraham, on the one side, & that Abraham and his seede should circuncise, and cutte of the lustes of their flesh, on the other side, to walke in the wayes of the lord. As baptisme which is come in the roome therof, now signifieth on the one side, howe that all that repent and beleue, are washed in Christes blond: and on the other syde, how that the same muste quenche, and drown the lustes of the flesh, to follow the steppes of Christ.

There were tirantes in the earth in those dayes, for the sonnes of god saw the daughters of men &c. The sonnes of God were the Prophetes children, which (though they succeded their father) fell yet from the right way, and through falshode of hipocrisie, subdued the world vnder them, and became tirantes, as the successors of the Apostles haue played with vs.

Vapour, a dewie mist, as the smoke of

To walke with God, is to liue godly, and to walke in hys commaundedementes.

Enos walked with God, and was no more ſene, he lyued godly and died: God toke him away, that is, God hid hys body, as he did Moſes and Aarons, leſt happly they ſhould haue made an Idole of hym, for he was a great preacher, and an holy man.

Zaphnath Paenea wordes of Egipt are they (as I ſuppoſe) and as muche to ſay, as a man to whome ſecret thinges be opened, or an expounder of ſecrete thinges, as ſome interprete it.

That Ioſeph broughte the Egiptians into ſuch a ſubiection, would ſeme vnto ſome a very cruell deede: howe be it, it was a very equall way: for they payd but ỳ fifth part of that, that grew on the grounde, and therewith were they quit of all dueties, both of rente, cuſtome, tribute, and tolle: & the kyng therwith found them Lordes, and all miniſters, and defended them, we now pay half ſo much vnto the prieſts only: beſide their other craftye exactions. Then pay we rente yearely, thoughe there grow neuer ſo litle on ỳ ground, and yet when the kyng calleth, pay we neuer the leſſe. So that if we looke indifferently, their condition was ealier then oures, and but euen a very indifferent way, both for the common people, and the kyng alſo.

See therfore that thou looke not on the enſamples of the Scripture wyth worldly eyes, leaſt thou preferre Cain before Abell: Iſmaell before Iſaac: Eſau before Iacob: Ruben before Iuda: Sarah before Phares: Manaſſes before Ephraim, and euen the worſt before the beſt, as the maner of the world is.

The Prologue to the ſecond booke of Moſes called Exodus.

BY the Preface vppon Geneſis, mayeſt thou vnderſtand howe to behaue thy ſelfe in this booke alſo, and in all other bookes of the Scripture. Cleaue vnto ỳ texte and playne ſtorie, and endeuour thy ſelfe to ſearche out the meanyng of all that is deſcribed therein, and the true ſence of all maner of ſpeakinges of the Scripture, of prouerbes, ſimlitudes, & borowed ſpeach, wherof I entreated in the ende of the obedience, and beware of ſubtile allegories.

Learn here how to read & vnderſtād ỳ ſcripture.

And note euery thyng earneſtly, as thynges pertainyng vnto thyne own hart and ſoule.

For as God vſed him ſelfe vnto thē of the old Teſtament: euen ſo ſhall he vnto the worldes end vſe him ſelf vnto vs, whiche haue receiued hys holy Scripture, and the teſtimonie of hys ſonne Ieſus. As God doth all things here for thē that beleue his promiſes, & herken vnto his commaūdements, and with patiēce cleaue vnto him, and walke with him: euen ſo ſhall he do for vs, if we receiue the witnes of Chriſt with a ſtrong fayth, and endure patiently folowyng his ſteppes. And on the other ſide, as they that fel from the promiſe of God thorow vnbelief, and from his lawe and ordinaunces, thorowe impatiēcie of their owne luſtes, were forſakē of God, and ſo periſhed: euen ſo ſhall we as many as doe lykewiſe, and as many as mocke with the doctrine of Chriſt, and make a cloke of it to liue fleſhly, & to folow our luſtes.

If we herken vnto the voyce of God, and bend our ſelues to do hys wyl, he wyll be our God, & help vs, but otherwiſe he wyl plague vs as he plagued the vnthankful & faythleſſe Iewes.

Note thereto howe God is founde true at the laſt, and howe when all is paſt remedy, and brought into deſperation: he then fulfilleth his promiſes, and that by an abiect and a caſt away, a deſpiſed, and a refuſed perſō, yea, and by a way impoſſible to beleue.

The cauſe of all the captiuitie of Gods people is this. The world euer hateth them for their fayth, and truſt whiche they haue in GOD: but in vayne, till they fall from the fayth of ỳ promiſes, and loue of the lawe, and ordinaunces of God, & put their truſt in holy dedes of their owne finding, and liue altogether at their owne luſt & pleaſure, with out regarde of God, or reſpect of their neighbour. Then God forſaketh vs, & ſendeth vs into captiuitie, for our diſhonorynge of his name, and deſpiſyng of our neighbour. But the world perſecuteth vs for our fayth in Chriſt onely (as the people nowe doth) and not for our wicked liuyng. For in his kingdom thou mayeſt quietly, and with licence, and vnder a protection, do what ſoeuer abhominatiō thine hart luſteth: but God perſecuteth vs, bycauſe we abuſe his holy Teſtament, and bycauſe when we knowe the truth, we folowe it not.

Truſt and beleue in God, and care not what the world ſay.

The world liketh well all wycked lyuers and vngodly people.

Note alſo the mightie hande of the Lord, how he playeth with his aduerſaries, and prouoketh them, and ſtyrreth them vp a litle and a litle, and delivereth not hys people in an houre that both the patience of his elect, and also the worldly wit and wyly policie of the wicked, wherwith they do fight agaynst God, might appeare.

Marke y long sufferyng, and soft patience of Moyses, and howe he loueth the people, and is euer betwene the wrath of God and them, and is ready to liue and dye with them, & to be put out of the booke that God had written for their sakes (as Paule for his brethren. Romaines ix.) and how he taketh his own wronges patiently, and neuer auengeth hym selfe. And make not Moyses a figure of Christe with Rochester: but an ensample vnto all Princes, and to all that are in authoritie, how to rule vnto Gods pleasure, & vnto their owne profite. For there is not a perfecter life in this world, both to the honor of God, and profite of his neighbour, nor yet a greater crosse, thē to rule christianly. And of Aaron also, see that thou make no figure of Christ, vntill hee come vnto hys sacrifisyng: but an example vnto all Preachers, that they adde nothyng vnto Gods word, or take ought therefro.

Here is set forth the office of euery good person,

Note also, how GOD sendeth his promise to the people, and Moyses cōfirmeth it with miracles, and the people beleue. But when temptatiō commeth, they fall into vnbelief, and fewe byde standyng. When thou seest that all be not Christen that will be so called, and that the crosse tryeth the true from the fayned: for if the crosse were not, Christ should haue Disciples enough. whereof also thou seest, what an excellent gift of God true fayth is, and impossible to be had, without the spirite of God. For it is aboue all natural power, that a mā in time of temptation, when GOD scourgeth hym, should beleue then stedfastly, how that God loueth him, and careth for hym, and hath prepared all good thyngs for hym, and that, that scourgyng is an earnest that GOD hath elect and chosen hym.

Temptatiō is the triall of true christians.

The excellency of faith which is the gifte of God.

Those whō God scourgeth he dearely loueth.

Note how oft Moyses styrred them vp to beleue, and trust in God, putting them in remembraunce alway in tyme of temptation, of the miracles & wonders that GOD hath wrought before tyme in their eye sight. How diligently also forbiddeth hee all that might withdraw their hartes from God? to put ought to GODS word, to take ought from it, cōmaundyng to do that onely, that is right in the sight of the Lord, that they should make no maner Image, to kneele downe before it: yea, that they should make none aultare of hewed stone, for feare of Images, to fle the heathen Idolatries vterly, and to destroy their Idols, and cut downe theyr groues where they worshypped, and that they should not take the daughters of them vnto their sonnes, nor gene their daughters to y sonnes of them, and that who soeuer moued any of them to worshyp false Gods, how soeuer nighe of kynne he were, they must accuse him, and bryng him to death: yea, & wheresoeuer they heard of man, woman, or Citie, that worshypped false Gods, they should slea them, & destroy the Citie for euer, and not builde it agayne, and all bycause they should worshyp nothing but God, nor put confidence in any thing, saue in his word.

A necessary lesson for a good preacher.

God commaundeth that we shold make no images.

The worshypping of Idoles or Images, was abhorred of god.

Yea, and howe warneth he to beware of witchcraft, sorcerie, enchauntment, nicromancie, and all craftes of the Deuill, and of dreamers, sothsayers, and of miracle doers to destroy the word, and that they should suffer none such to lyue.

witchcraft sorcery, &c. abhorred of God.

Thou wilt hapely say, they tell a man the truth. what then? GOD will that we care not to knowe what shall come. He will haue vs to care onely to kepe his commaundementes, and to committe all chaunces vnto hym: He hath promised to care for vs, & to kepe vs from all ill. All thynges are in hys hand, he can remedy all thynges, and will for his truth sake, if we pray hym. In his promises onely will hee haue vs trust, and there rest, and to seke no farther.

How also doth he prouoke them to lone, euer rehearsing the benefites of God done to them already, & the godly promises that were to come? And how goodly lawes of loue geueth hee, to helpe one an other, and that a man should not hate his neighboure in hys hart, but loue him as himself. Leuit. 19 And what a charge geueth he in euery place, ouer the poore and nedie? ouer the straūger, frendlesse and widowes? And when he desireth to shew mercy, he rehearseth with all, the benefites of God done to them at their neede, that they might see a cause, at the least waye in GOD to shew mercy of very loue vnto their neighbours at their nede.

Moses often reherseth the benefites of almighty God, to moue vs to feare hym, and to loue our neighbour.

Also there is no lawe so simple in ap paapparaunce thoroughout the v. bokes of Moses, but that there is a great reason of ỹ makyng therof, if a man search diligently. As that a man is forbyd to sethe a kydde in hys mothers milke, throueth vs vnto compassion, and to be pitiful. As doth also that a man should not offer the syre or damme & the yong both in one day. Leuiticus. xxii. For it might seme a cruell thyng, in as much as his mothers milke is as it were his blond, wherfore god wil not haue him sodde therin: but will haue a man shew curtesie, vppon the very beastes. As in an other place hee commaundeth that we mosell not the Ore that treadeth out the corne (whiche maner of threshyng is vsed in hoate countreys) and that bycause we should much rather to be liberall and kynd vnto men that do vs seruice. Or happely GOD would haue none such wanton meate vsed among his people. For the kydde of it selfe is nourishyng, and the Goates milke is restauratiue, and both together might be to rancke, and therefore forbydden, or some other lyke cause there was.

God will haue vs to be merciful to our neighbors.

Of the ceremonies, sacrifices, and tabernacle, with all hys glory and pompe, vnderstand that they were not permitted onely, but also commaunded of GOD, to lead the people in the shadowe of Moyses and night of the olde Testament, vntill the lyght of Christ, and day of the new Testament were come. As children are lead in the phantasies of youth vntill the discretion of mans age be come vpon them. And all was done to keepe them from Idolatrie.

All the ceremonies of the olde testament, were but preachers of Christ that was to come.

The tabernacle was ordened to the entent they might haue a place appointed them, to do their sacrifices openly in the sight of the people, and namely the Priestes whiche wayted thereon: that it might bee sene that they dyd all thynges accordyng to Gods worde, & not after the Idolatry of their owne imagination. And the costlinesse of the Tabernacle and the beauty also, pertayning therunto, that they should see nothyng among the heathen, but that they should see thinges more beautiful at home, because they shoulde not bee moued to follow them.

The beautie of the tabernacle was to keepe the Iewes from harkenyng to the heathen.

And in lyke maner the diuers fashions of sacrifices and ceremonies, was to occupy their minds, that they shold haue no lust to follow the Heathen: & the multitude of them was, that they should haue so much to do in keepyng them, that they should haue no leysure to imagine other of their owne: yea, & that Gods worde might be there by in all that they did, that they might haue their fayth and trust in God, which he cannot haue that followeth either hys own inuentions, or traditions of mēs makyng without Gods worde.

Finally, God hath two testaments, the olde and the new. The olde testament is those tēporall promises which God made the children of Israell of a good lande, and that he would defend them, and of wealth and prosperitie, & of temporall blessinges, of which thou readest euer all the law of Moses, but namely, Leuiticus. 26. and Deut. 28. & the auoyding of all threatenynges and curses of which thou readest likewyse euery where, but specially in the two bookes aboue rehearsed, and the auoiding of all punishment ordeyned for the transgressours of the law.

God had two Testaments, that is, the olde and the new.

And the olde Testament was builte altogether vpō the kepyng of the lawe and ceremonies, and was the rewarde of kepyng them in this lyfe onely, and reached no farther then this lyfe & this world. As thou readest Leuit. 18. A mā that doth them shall lyue therin, which text Paule reherseth, Rom. 10. & Gal. 3. That is, he that keepeth them shall haue his lyfe glorious, according to all the promises and blessings of the law, and shal auoyde both all temporal punishments of the law, & all the threatnynges and curlinges also. For neyther the lawe of the tenne commaundementes, nor yet the ceremonies, iustified in the hart before God, or purified vnto the lyfe to come. In so much that Moses at his death, euen fourtye yeares after the lawe, and ceremonies were geuen, complaineth saying, God hath not geuen, you an hart to vnderstande, nor eyes to see, nor eares to heare vnto this day. As who shoulde haue sayd. God hath geuen you ceremonies, but ye knowe not the vse of them, and hath geuen you a lawe, but god hath not writen it in your hartes.

The old testament was built vpon the obseruatiō of the law.

The law could not geue lyfe.

Wherfore serueth the law then, if it geue vs no power to do the law? Paul answereth them, that it was geuen to vtter sinne onely, and to make it appeare. As a corosie is layd vnto an old sore, not to heale it, but to stirre it vp, and make the disease alyue, that a man myght feele in what iopardie he is, & how nye death and not aware, and to make a way vnto the healing playster. Euen so sayth Paul Gal. 3. The law was geuen bycause of transgression (that is to make the sinne alyue, that it might be felt and sene) vntill the seede came vnto whome it was promised, that is to saye, vntill the children of fayth came, or vntill Christ that sede in whom God promised Abraham, that all nations of the world should be blessed, came.

The law is the vtterer of sinne.

The law was geuen by God to shewe what sinne was.

That is, the law was geuen to vtter sinne, death, damnation, and curse, and to drive vs vnto Christ, in whom forgeuenes, lyfe, iustifyng, and blessynges were promised, that we might see so great loue of God to vs ward in Christ, that we hence forth ouercome with kindnes, might loue agayne, and of loue kepe the commaundementes.

Ceremonies are not geuen to iustify the hart, but to signifie our iustificatiō by Christ.

Now he that goeth about to quiet his conscience, and to iustifie him selfe with the law: doth but heale hys woundes with freatyng corosyes. And hee that goeth aboute to purchase grace with ceremonies: doth but sucke the ale pole to quench his thyrst, in as much as the ceremonies were not geuen to iustifie the hart, but to signifie the iustifyng, and forgeuenesse that is in Christes bloud.

Of the ceremonies that they iustifie not thou readest. Hebr. x. It is impossible that sinne should be done away with the bloud of Oxen, and Goates. And of the law thou readest. Galla. iij. If there had bene a lawe geuen that could haue quickened or geuen lyfe: then had righteousnes, or iustifiyng come by the lawe in deede. Now the law not onely quickeneth not the hart, but also woundeth it with conscience of sinne, and ministreth death, and damnation vnto her. ij. Cor. iij. So that she must nedes dye and be damned, except she find other remedy. So farre it is of, that she is iustified, or holpen by the law.

Ceremonies cannot iustify.

The new Testament is those euerlasting promises, whithe are made vs in Christ the Lorde throughout all the the Scriptures. And that Testament is built on fayth, and not in workes.

The new Testament are the euerlasting promises made to vs in Christ.

For it is not said of that Testament. He that worketh shall lyue: but he that beleueth shall lyue. As thou readest. Iohn. iij. God so loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that none that beleue in hym should perishe, but haue lyfe euerlasting.

Faith only iustifieth.

And when this Testament is preached and beleued, the spirit entreth the hart, and quickeneth it, & geueth it lyfe, & iustifieth her. The spirite also maketh the law, a lively thyng in the hart, so that a man bringeth forth good workes of his owne accord, without compulsion of the lawe, without feare of threatenynges, or cursings: yea, and without all maner respect, or loue vnto any temporall pleasure, but of the very power of the spirite, receiued thorough fayth, as thou readest. Iohn. i. He gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, in that they beleued on his name.

Good workes spryng out of the loue we haue to God.

And of that power they worke, so that he which hath the spirit of Christ, is now no more a child: he neither learneth, nor worketh any lōger for payne of ỹ rod, or for feare of bugges or pleasure of apples, but doth all thynges of his owne courage. As Christe sayeth. Iohn. vij. He that beleueth on me, shall haue riuers of liuyng waters flowyng out of hys belly. That is all good workes, and all giftes of grace spryngе out of hym naturally, and by their owne accord. Thou nedest not to wrest good woorkes out of hym, as a man would wryng verjuce out of crabbes. Nay they flowe naturally out of hym, as sprynges out of rockes.

where true fayth is, there good workes do flow and abound.

The new Testamēt was euer euen from the begynnyng of the world. For there were alwaies promises of Christ to come by fayth, in which promises the elect were then iustified inwardly before God, as outwardly before the world, by keppyng of the law, and ceremonies.

The new Testament was from the beginnyng.

And in conclusion, as thou seest blessynges, or cursynges folowe the breaking, or keping of the law of Moyses: euen so naturally do the blessynges, or cursynges folowe the breakyng or keping of the law of nature, out of which spryng all our temporall lawes. So that when the people kepe the temporall lawes of their land, temporal prosperitie, and all maner of such temporall blessynges (as thou readest of in Moyses) do accompany them, and fall vpon them. And contrarywise, when they sinne vnpunished, and when the rulers haue no respect vnto equitie or honestie, then God sendeth his curse among them, as hunger, dearth, inrein, bannyng, pestilence, warre, oppression, with straunge and wonderful diseases, and new kyndes of misfortune and euill lucke.

Our temporall lawes spryng out of the law of nature.

If any man aske me, seing that faith iustifieth me, why I worke? I answere. Loue cōpelleth me. For as lōg as my soule feeleth what loue GOD hath shewed me in Christ: I can not but loue God agayne, and his wil and com-commaundements, and of loue worke them, nor can they ſeme hard vnto me. I thinke not my ſelfe, better for my worckyng, nor ſeeke heauen nor an higher place in heauē bycauſe of it. For a Chriſtiā worketh to make his weake brother perfecter, and not to ſeeke an higher place in heauen. I compare not my ſelfe vnto hym, that worcketh not. No, hee that worketh not to day, ſhall haue grace to turne, and to worcke to morow, and in the meane tyme, I pitie hym and pray for hym, If I had wrought the will of God thoſe thouſād yeares, and an other had wrought the will of the deuill as long, and this day turne, and bee as well willyng to ſuffer with Chriſt as I: hee hath this day ouer taken me, and is as far come as I, and ſhall haue as much reward as I, & I enuie hym not, but reioyce moſt of all, as of loſt treaſure found.

We muſt not preſume in our well doing, not cōdēne others that run aſtray: the laſt which turneth to god is as farre forward as the firſt.

For if I be of GOD, I haue theſe thouſād yeares ſuffered to winne him, for to come & praiſe the name of God with me. Theſe thouſand yeares, I haue prayed, ſorowed, longed, ſighed, and ſought for that which I haue this day found, and therefore reioyce with all my might, and praiſe God for his grace and mercy.

A Prologue into the thirde booke of Moſes called Leuiticus.

THe ceremonies whiche are deſcribed in ỳ booke following, were chiefly ordeined of God, (as I ſayd in the ende of the prologue vpon Exod.) to occupye the myndes of that people the Iſraelites, and to kepe them from ſerning of God, after the imagination of their blynde zeale, and good entent: that their conſciences might be ſtabliſhed shed, and they sure that they pleased God therin, which were impossible, if a man did of his own head that which was not commaunded of god, nor depended of any appointment made betwene hym and God. Such ceremonies were vnto them as an A,B,C, to learne to spell and read, and as a nurse to feede them with mylke and pappe, & to speake vnto them after their own capacitie, and to lispe the wordes vnto them accordyng as the babes and children of that age might sound them agayne. For all that were before Christ, were in the infancy and childhoode of the world, and saw that sonne whiche we see openly, but thorow a cloud, and had but feble, and weake imaginatiõs of Christ, as children haue of mennes deedes (a few prophets except) which yet described hym vnto other in sacrifices and ceremonies, likenesses, riddles prouerbes, and darke and strange speaking, vntil the full age were come, that god would shew him openly vnto the whole worlde, and deliuer them from their shadowes and cloudelight, & the hethen out of their dead slepe, of starck blinde ignorancy. And as the shadowe vanisheth away at the comming of the light, euẽ so do the ceremonies and sacrifices at the comming of Christ, and are henceforth no more necessary, then a token left in remembraunce of a bargayn, is necessary whẽ the bargayne is fulfilled. And though they seme plaine childishe, yet they bee not altogether fruiteleslie: as the puppets & rr. maner of trifles, which mothers permit vnto their yong children, be not all in vaine. For albeit that suche fantasies be permitted to satisfie the childerns lustes, yet in that they are the mothers gift, & be done in place and tyme at her commaundement, they keepe the children in awe, and make them know the mother, and also make them more apte against a more stronger age to obey in thinges of greater earnest.

And moreouer, though sacrifices and ceremonies can be no grosid, or foundation to build vpon: that is, thoughe we can proue nought with them: yet when we haue once found out Christe and his mysteries, thẽ we may borow figures, that is to say allegories, similitudes, or examples to opẽ Christ, and the secretes of God hid in Christ, euen vnto the quicke, and to declare them more liuely and sẽsibly with them, thẽ with all the wordes of the world. For similitudes haue more vertue & power with them then bare wordes, and leade a mans wittes further into the pithe and marye, and spirituall vnderstandyng of the thyng, thẽ all the wordes that can be imagined. And though also that al the ceremonies, & sacrifices haue as it were a starrelight of Christ, yet some there be that haue as it were the lyght of the broad day, a litle before the sonne rising, and expresse hym, and the circumstaunces and vertue of hys death so plainly, as if we shoulde play his passion on a scaffold, or in a stage play, openly before the eyes of the people. As the scape gote, the brasen Serpent, the Ore burnt without the hoste, the passeouer Lambe, &c. In so muche that I am fully persuaded, and cannot but beleue that God had shewed Moses the secretes of Christ, and the very maner of hys death before hande, and commaunded hym to ordaine them for the confirmation of our fayethe, which are now in the cleare day light, and I beleue also that ẏ prophets, which followed Moses to confirme his prophesies, and to maintayn his doctrine vntil Christes comming, were moued by such thinges to search further of Christes secretes. And though God would not haue the secrets of Christ generally known, saue vnto a fewe familiare frendes, which in that infãcy he made of mans wit to helpe the other babes: yet as they had a generall promise that one of the seede of Abraham shoulde come and bless them, euen so they had a generall fayth, that God woulde by the same man saue them, thoughe they wist not by what meanes, as the very apostles when it was oft tolde them, yee they could neuer comprehende it, till it was fulfilled in dede.

And beyond all this, their sacrifices, and ceremonies as far forth as the promises annexed vnto them extend, so far forth they saued thẽ, and iustified thẽ, and stoode them in the same steade as our Sacramentes doe vs: not by the power of the sacrifice or deede it selfe, but by the vertue of the fayth in ẏ promise, which the sacrifice or Ceremonye preached, and whereof it was a token or signe. For the ceremonies and sacrifices were left with them, & commaũded them to keepe the promise in remembraunce, and to wake vp theyr fayth. As it is not enough to send many on errandes, and to tell them what they shall do: but they must haue a remembraunce with them, and it be but a ringe of a rushe aboute one of their fin-fingers. And as it is not inoughe to make a bargayne with wordes onely, but we must put therto an othe, & gene earnest to confirme the fayth of ỳ person with whom it is made. And in like manner if a man promise, whatsoeuer trifle it be, it is not beleued excepte he hold vp hys finger also, suche is the weakenesse of the world. And therfore Christe himselfe vsed ofttymes diuers ceremonies in curyng ỳ sicke to stirre vp their fayth with al. As for example: it was not ỳ bloud of ỳ Lambe that saued thẽ in Egipt, when ỳ angell smote the Egiptians: but the mercy of God and hys truth, wherof that bloud was a token and remembrance, to stirre vp their fayethes withall. For though god make a promise, yet it saueth none finally but them, that long for it, & pray God with a strong fayth to fulfil it, for hys mercy and truth only, and knowledge their vnworthinesse. And euen so our sacramentes (if they be truly ministred) preach Christ vnto vs, & lead our faithe vnto Christe, by which faith our sinnes are done away, and not by the deede or worke of the Sacrament. For as it was impossible that ỳ bloud of calues should put away sinne: euen so is it impossible that the water of the riuer should wash our hartes. Neuertheless, the sacramentes clense vs and absoluc vs of our sinnes as the priests do, in preachyng of repentance & fayth, for whiche cause either other of them were ordayned, but if they preach not, whether it be the priest, or the Sacrament, so profite they not.

Our nature is so weake that we must be holpen by outwarde signes and tokens.

No man is holpen by Gods promises, but sinners that feele their sinne.

Sacraments truly ministred are profitable.

Sacraments truly ministred preach vnto vs repẽtaunce of our sinnes.

And if a man alledge Christ, John in the. iij. Chapter saying: Except a man be borne agayne of water, and the holy Ghost hee can not see the kyngdome of GOD, and will therfore that the holy ghost be present in the water, and therfore the very deede, or worke doth put away sinne: then I will send hym vnto Paul which asketh his Galathiãs, whether they receaued the holy ghost by the dede of the law, or by preachyng of fayth, and there concludeth that the holy ghost accõpanyeth the preachyng of faith, and with the word of faith, entreth the hart and purgeth it, whiche thou mayest also vnderstand by Saint Pauls saying: Ye are borne a new out of the water through the worde. So now if Baptisme preach me the washyng in Christes bloud, so doth the holy ghost accompany it, and that deede of preachyng throughe fayth doth put away my sinnes. For the holy Ghost is no dome God, nor no God that goeth a mummynge. If a man say of the Sacrament of Christes body and bloud, that it is a sacrifice as well for the dead as for the quicke, and therfore the very dede it self iustifieth and putteth away sinne: I answere that a sacrifice is the sleyng of the body of a beast, or a man: wherefore if it be a sacrifice, then is Christes body there slayne and his bloud there shed: but that is not so. And therfore it is properly no sacrifice but a Sacrament, and a memoriall of that euerlastyng sacrifice once for all, which he offered vpon crosse now vpon a. v. hundred yeares ago, & preacheth onely vnto them that are alyue. And as for them that be dead, it is as profitable vnto them as is a cãdle in a Lãterne without light vnto them that walke by the way in darke night, and as the Gospell song in Latine is vnto them that vnderstand none at all, and as a Sermon preached to him that is dead, and heareth it not. It preacheth vnto them that are alyue onely, for they that bee dead, if they dyed in the fayth whiche that Sacrament preacheth, they bee safe, and are past all icopardy. For when they were alyue their hartes loued the law of GOD, and therfore sinned not, and were sory that their members synned, and euer moued to sinne, and therfore thorough fayth it was forgeuen them. And now their synneful members be dead, so that they can now sinne no more, wherfore it is vnto them that bee dead neither Sacrament nor sacrifice: But vnder the pretence of their soule health it is a seruaũt vnto our spiritualties holy couetousnesse, and an extorcioner, and a builder of Abbayes, Colledges, Chauntryes and Cathedral Churches with false gotten good, a pickepurse, a polar, and a bottomlesse bagge.

The difference betwene a sacrifice, and a Sacrament.

What state we dye in the same wise shall rise agayn, either of saluation or damnation.

The Sacramentes are vnto ỳ dead, no Sacramentes at all.

Sacramentes abused by ỳ Clergy.

The Papistes haue had no smal frend and good helper of the masse

Some man would happely say, that the prayers of the Masse helpe much: not the liuing onely, but also the dead. Of the hoate fire of their feruent prayer whiche consumeth faster then all the world is able to bryng sacrifice, I haue sayd sufficiently in other places. Now beit it is not possible to bryng me in belief, that the prayer whiche helpeth her own master vnto no vertue, should purchase me the forgeuenes of sinnes. If I saw that their prayers had obtained them grace to lyue suche a lyfe, as Gods word dyd not rebuke, the could I soone be borne in hand that what so euer they asked GOD, their prayers shuld not be in vayne. But now what good cā he wish me in his prayers that enuieth Christe the fode, and the lyfe of my soule? what good can hee wilhe me, whose hart cleaueth a sonder for payne, when I am taught to repent of my euill?

Furthermore, because that fewe know the vse of the old Testamēt, and the most part thinke it nothyng necessarie but to make allegories, whiche they fayne euery man after hys owne brayne at all wyld aduenture without any certaine rule: therefore (though I haue spoken of them in an other place) yet lest the boke come not to all mens handes that shall read this, I will speake of them here also a woorde or twayne.

Allegories are to bee wel weyed and considered.

We had neede to take hede euery where that wee bee not begyled with false allegories, whether they be drawē out of the new Testament, or the old, either out of any other story, or of the creatures of the world, but namely in this booke. Here a man had neede to put on all his spectacles, and to arme him selfe agaynst inuisibles spirites.

The greatest cause of the decay of faith and blindnes that wee were in, was thorough Allegories.

First allegories proue nothyng (and by allegories vnderstand examples or similitudes borowed of straunge matters, and of an other thyng then that thou entreatest of.) And though circūcision be a figure of Baptisme, yet thou canst not proue Baptisme by Circumcision. For this argument were very feble, the Israelites were Circumcised therfore, we must be Baptised. And in like maner though ỳ offering of Isaac were a figure or example of the resurrection, yet is this argument nought, Abraham would haue offered Isaac, but GOD deliuered him from death, therefore we shall rise agayne, and so forth in all other.

How allegories are to bee vnderstand.

The ryght vse of allegories.

But the very vse of allegories is to declare and open a text that it may bee the better perceaued and vnderstand. As when I haue a cleare text of Christ and of the Apostles, that I must be baptised, then I may borow an example of Circumcisiō, to expresse the nature, power, and frute or effect of baptisme. For as Circumcision was vnto them a common badge signifyng that they were all souldiers of god, to warre his warre, and separating them from all other nations, disobedient vnto God: euen so baptisme is our cōmon badge, and sure earnest and perpetual memoriall that we pertaine vnto Christ, and are separated frome all that are not Christes. And as Circumcision was a token certifyeng them, that they were receaued vnto the fauour of God, and their sinnes forgeuē them: euen so Baptisme certificth vs that we are washed in the bloud of Christ, and receaued to fauour for his sake, and as Circumcisiō signified vnto them, the cutryng awaye of their owne lustes, and sleayng of their free will, (as they call it) to folow the will of GOD, euen so Baptisme signifieth vnto vs repentaunce, and the mortifying of our vnruly members, and bodyes of sinne, to walke in a new life, and so forth.

Baptisme is ỳ commō badge of all true professours of Christ.

Baptisme teacheth vs repentaunce of sinne.

And likewise, thoughe that the saning of Noe, & of them that were with him in the shyp, thorough water, is a figure, that is to say an example and likenesse of Baptisme, as Peter maketh it. 1. Peter. 3. yet I can not proue Baptisme therewith, saue describe it onely: for as the shyp saued them in the water thorough fayth, in that they beleued God, and as ỳ other that would not beleue Noe perished: euen so Baptisme saueth vs through the worde of fayth whiche it preacheth, when all the world of the vnbeleuyng perish. And Paule. 1. Corin. 10. maketh the sea and the cloude a figure of Baptisme, by which, and a thousād mo I might declare, it but not proue it. Paule also in the sayd place maketh the rock, out of which Moses brought water vnto the children of Israell, a figure or example of Christ, not to proue Christe (for that were impossible) but to describe Christ onely: euen as Christ him selfe John. 3 borroweth a similitude or figure of the brasen serpēt to lead Nichodemus frō his earthy imagination, into the spirituall vnderstādyng of Christes saying: As Moses lifted vp a Serpent in the wilderneſſe, so must the sonne of man be lifted vp, that none that beleue in hym perish, but haue euerlasting lyfe. By which similitude the vertue of Christes death is better described then thou couldest declare it with a thousād wordes. For as those murmurers agaynst God, as soone as they repented were healed of their deadly woundes, thorough lookynge on the brasen Serpent onely, without medicine or any other helpe, yea and without any other reason, but that God hath sayd it should be so, and not to murmure agayne, but to leaue their murmurying: euen so all that repent and beleue in Christ, are saued frō euerlastyng death, of pure grace without, and before their good workes, and

The bare washyng helpeth not but thorough the worde of fayth it purifieth vs.

How christ borroweth figures of the old Testament, to make plain the textes of the new testament.

not to ſynne agayne, but to fight agaynſt ſinne, and henceforth to ſynne no more.

Euen ſo with the ceremonies of this booke thou canſt proue nothyng, ſaue deſcribe, and declare onelye the putting away of oure ſinnes thorowe the deathe of Chriſte. For Chriſte is Aaron, and Aarons ſonnes, and all that offer the ſacrifice to purge ſinne. And Chriſt is all maner offering that is offered: he is the oxe, the ſhepe, the gote, the kyd and lambe: he is the oxe that is burnt without the hoſt, and ỹ ſcapegote that caried all the ſinne of the people away into the wildernesſe: for as they purged the people from their worldly vncleanesſes thorow bloud of ỹ ſacrifices, euen ſo doth Chriſt purge vs frō the vncleannesſes of euerlaſting death with hys owne bloude, and as their worldly ſinnes coulde no otherwiſe be purged, then by bloud of ſacrifice: euen ſo can our ſinnes bee no otherwiſe forgeuen, then thorowe the bloud of Chriſt. All the deedes in the worlde, ſaue the bloude of Chriſt, can purchaſe no forgeuenesſe of ſinnes: for our dedes do but help our neighbour, and mortify the fleſh, and help that we ſinne no more, but and if we haue ſinned, it muſt be freely forgeuen thorow the blond of Chriſt, or remayne euer.

Our duety is to do good dedes but ſaluation we cannot chalēge therby.

And in lyke manner of the Leapers thou canſt proue nothing: thou canſt neuer conioure out confeſſion thence, howbeit thou haſt an handſome exampie there, to open the binding & loſyng of our prieſts, with the key of Gods worde, for as they made no man a Leper, euen ſo oures haue no power to commaund any man to be in ſinne, or to go to purgatory or hell. And therefore (in as much as binding and looſing is one power) as thoſe Prieſtes healed no man, euen ſo ours can not of their inuiſible, and domme power, driue any mans ſinnes away, or deliuer hym from hel, or fayned purgatory, how be it, if they preached Gods worde purely, which is the authoritie that Chriſt gaue them, then they ſhold binde and loſe, kill and make alyue agayne, make vncleane and cleane agayne, and ſend to hel and fetch thence agayne, ſo mighty is gods worde. For if they preached the lawe of God, they ſhold bynd the conſciences of ſinners, with the bondes of the paynes of hell, and bring them vnto repentance. And then if they preached vnto thē ỹ mercy that is in Chriſt, they ſhold looſe them and quiete their ragyng conſciences, & certifie them of the fauour of God, and that their ſinnes be forgeuen.

A good exampie taken of the Lepers.

The true preachyng of Gods word, doth bynde and loſe conſciences.

Finally, beware of allegories, for there is not a more handſome or apte thyng to beguile withall, then an allegory, nor a more ſubtle and peſtilente thyng in the world to perſwade a falſe matter then an allegory. And contrariwiſe, there is not a better, vehementer or mightier thyng to make a man vnderſtand with all, thē an allegory. For allegories make a man quicke witted, and printe wiſdome in hym, and maketh it to abide, where bare wordes go but in at the one eare, and out at the other. As this with ſuch lyke ſayings: put ſalt to all your ſacrifices, in ſtede of this ſentēce, do all your dedes wyth diſcretion, greeteth and biteth (if it bee vnderſtand) more then plain wordes. And when I ſay in ſtede of theſe wordes, boaſt not your ſelfe of your good dedes, eate not the bloud, nor the fat of your ſacrifice, there is as greate difference betwene them, as there is diſtance betwene heauen and earth. For the lyfe and beauty of all good dedes is of God, and we are but the caren lean, we are onely the inſtrument whereby God worketh onely, but the power is his. As God created Paul a new, poured hys wiſdome into hym, gaue hym might, & promiſed hym that his grace ſhould neuer fayle hym, &c. and al with out deſeruinges, except that hurtering the ſayntes, and making them curſe & rayle on Chriſt bee meritorious. Now as it is death to eate the bloud or fatte of any ſacrifice, is it not (thinke ye) dānable to robbe God of hys honour, & to glorify my ſelfe with hys honour?

In allegories is both honye & gall, that is to ſay, both good & euil

All good dedes are gods worke manſhip, & bee hys inſtrumēts wherby he doth them.

The Prologue into the fourth boke of Moses called Numeri.

IN the second and thirde booke they receaued the law. And in this fourth, they beginne to worke, & to practise. Of whiche practising ye see manye good examples of vnbeliefe, and what freewill doth, when she taketh in hand to kepe ẏ law of her own power, without helpe of faith in ẏ promises of god: how she leaueth her maisters carkasses by the way in the wildernesse, and bringeth them not into the lande of rest. why could they not enter in? Because of their vnbeliefe, Hebruc. 3. For had they beleued, so had they bene vnder grace, and their old sinnes had ben forgeuē them, and power should haue bene geuen them to haue fulfilled the law thencefoorth, and they should haue bene kepte from all temptations that had bene to strong for them. For it is writen, Iohn. 1. He gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, throw beleuyng in hys name. Now to be ẏ sonne of God, is to loue God and hys commaundementes, and to walke in hys way after the ensample of hys sonne Christ. But these people tooke vppon them to worke without faith, as thou seest in the 14. of this boke, where they would fight and also did, without the worde of promise: euen when they were warned that they should not. And in the 16. agayne, they woulde please God with their holye faythlesse workes (for where Gods worde is not, there can be no faith) but the fire of God consumed their holy workes, as it did Nadab and Abihu Leuit. 10. And from these vnbeleuers turn thine eyes vnto the Pharises whiche before the commyng of Christ in hys flesh, had layde the foundation of freewyll, after the same ensample. wherein they built holy workes after their owne imagination without fayth of ẏ word, so feruently, that for the great zeale of them, they shewe the king of all holye workes, and the lord of freewil, which onely throwe hys grace maketh the will free, and looseth her from bōdage of sinne, and geueth her lout, and lufte vnto the lawes of God, and power to fulfill them. And so through their holy workes done by the power of freewil, they excluded themselues out of the holy rest of forgeuenes of sinnes by fayth in the bloud of Christ.

Freewill and vnbeliefe were the ouerthrow of our forefathers.

Then cannot they be the children of God, which put more trust in their owne workes, then in ẏ bloud of Jesus Christ.

Faithlesse workes.

The Pharises by their freewill excluded them selues from the saluatiō

And then looke on our hipocrites, which in lyke manner followyng the doctrine of Aristotle, and other hethen Paganes, haue agaynst all the Scripture set vp freewill again, vnto whose power they ascribe the kepyng of the commaundementes of God. For they haue set vp wilfull pouerty of another maner then any is cōmaunded of god. And ẏ chastitie of matrimony vtterly defied, they haue set vp another wilful chastitie not required of God, whiche they swere, vowe and professe to geue God, whether he wyll geue it them or no, and compel all their disciples thervnto, saying that it is in the power of euery mans freewill to obserue it, contrary to Christ and his apostle Paul.

in Christ. Blasphemy to christes death.

And the obedience of God and man excluded, they haue vowed an other wilfull obedience condemned of all the scripture, which they wil yet geue god whether he wyll or will not.

O sadtle Foxes throw pouertie made themselues Lordes of all.

And what is become of their wilfull pouerty? hath it not robbed the whole worlde, and brought all vnder them? Can there be either kyng or emperor, or of whatsoeuer degree it be, except he will hold of them, and be sworne vnto them to be their seruaunte, to goe and come at their lust, and to defende their quarels bee they false or true? Their wilful pouertie hath alredy eaten vp ẏ whole world, & is yet stil gredier then euer it was, in so muche that tenne worldes mo were not inough to satisfie the honger thereof.

Wilfull chastitie is wilful wickednes.

Moreouer besides daily corrupting of other mens wiues, and open whore dome, vnto what abhominations, (to filthy to be spoken of) hath their voluntary chastitie brought them?

And as for their wilfull obedience, what is it but the disobedience and the disdaunce both of al the lawes of God and man? in so much that if any Prince begyn to execute any law of man vpon them, they curse him vnto the bottome

of

of hel, & proclayme him no right kyng, and that hys Lordes ought no longer to obey hym, and interdite his commō people as they were heathen Turkes or Saracenes. And if any man preach them gods law, him they make an hereticke and burne him to ashes. And in steade of Gods lawe and mans, they haue set vp one of their owne imagination, whiche they obserue with dispensations.

The Papistes wilful obedience, is cōmon disobedience to all princes.

And yet in these workes they haue so great confidence that they not onely trust to be saued therby, and to be hyer in heauen then they ẏ be saued through Christ: but also promise to all other forgeuenesse of their sinnes, thorough the merites of the same. wherin they rest, and teach other to rest also, excludyng the whole world from the rest of forgeuenesse of synnes through fayth in Christes bloud.

Our righteousnes commeth not by our merites, but thorow fayth, by the bloud of our sauiour Jesus Christ.

And now seing that fayth onely letteth a man in vnto rest, and vnbelief excludeth him, what is the cause of this vnbeliefe? verely no sinne ẏ the world seeth, but a Pope holinesse, and a righteousnes of their own imagination as Paule sayth. Roma. x. They bee ignoraunt of the righteousnes wherewith God iustifieth, and haue set vp a righteousnes, of their owne makyng thorough which they be disobedient vnto the righteousnes of God. And Christ rebuketh not the Pharises for grosse sinnes whiche the world sawe, but for those holy deedes whiche so blered the eies of the world, that they were taken as Gods: euen for long prayers, for fastyng, for tythyng so diligently that they lefte not so much as their herbes vntithed, for their clennesse in washyng before meate, and for washyng of cups, dishes, and all maner vessels, for buildyng ẏ Prophetes sepulchers, and for keepyng the holy day, and for turnyng ẏ heathē vnto the fayth, & for geuyng of almes. For vnto such holy dedes they ascribed righteousnes, and therefore when the righteousnesse of GOD was preached vnto them they could not but persecute it, the deuill was so strong in them. whiche thyng Christ well describeth. Luke. xi. saying, That after the deuill is cast out, he commeth agayne, and findeth hys house swept, and made gay, and then taketh seuen woorse then hym selfe and dwelleth therein, and so is the ende of that man worse then the beginnyng. That is, whē they be a litle clēsed from grosse sinnes which the world seyth, and then made gaye in their own sight, with the righteousnes of traditions, then commeth seuen, that is to say the whole power of the deuill: for vij. with the Hebrues signifieth a multitude without number, and the extremitie of a thyng, and is a speach borowed (I suppose) out of Leuiticus, where is so ofte mention made of seuen. where I would say: I will punish thee, that all the world shal take an example of thee, there the Jew would saye, I will Circumcise thee or Baptise thee seuen tymes. And so here by seuen is ment all the deuils of hel, and all the might and power of the deuill. For vnto what further blindnesse could all the deuils in hell bring them, then to make thē beleue that they were iustified thorough their owne good workes? For when they once beleued that they were purged frō their sinnes, and made righteous thorough their owne holy workes, what rowme was there left for the righteousnes that is in Christes bloudshedyng? And therfore whē they be fallen into this blindnesse, they can not but hate and persecute the light. And the more cleare and euidently their deedes be rebuked, the furiousser and maliciousser blinde are they, vntill they breake out into open blasphemy, and synnyng agaynste the holy ghost, which is the malicious persecutyng of the cleare trouth so manifestly proued, that they can not once hisse agaynst it: as the Pharisees persecuted Christ, because hee rebuked their holy dedes. And when he proued hys doctrine with the Scripture and miracles, yet thoughe they could not improue hym, nor reason agaynst him, they taught ẏ the scripture must haue some other meanyng, because his interpretation vndermined their foundatiō and plucked vp by the rootes the sects which they had plāted, and they ascribed also his miracles to the deuill. And in lyke maner thoughe our hypocrites can not deny but this is the scripture, yet because there can be no other sense gathered therof, but that ouerthoweth their buildynges, therefore they euer thinke that it hath some other meanyng then as the wordes sounde, and that no man vnderstandeth it, or vnderstode it since the tyme of the Apostles. Or if they thinke that some that wrote vpon it since the Apostles vnderstode it: they yet thinke that we in like maner as we vnderstand not the text it selfe, so we vnderstand not the meanyng of the wordes of that Doc-

The Pharises ascribe righteousnesse to themselues, & therfore were condemned of Christ.

Christ rebuketh the Pharises for their holy and hipocritical dedes.

The iustifyng of our selues, maketh the deuell more busier then he would be.

What is meant in the scripture by this word vii. tymes.

Heritīgers of more their blindnes is rebuked, the more they rebell against Christ and his gospell.

The doctrine of the pharises, and the doctrine of our papists do well agree.

tour. For when thou layest the iustifying of holy workes and denyest the iustifying of fayth, how canst thou vnderstand S. Paule, Peter, John and the Actes of ỹ Apostles or any Scripture at all, seyng the iustifying of fayth is almost all that they entēde to proue?

The Papistes cannot away with iustification by fayth.

Finally, concernyng vowes wherof thou readest in the xxx. Chapter, there may be many questions, whereunto I aūswere shortly, that we ought to put salt to all our offerynges: that is, we ought to minister knowledge in all our workes, and to doe nothyng whereof we could not geue a reason out of Gods wordes. We be now in the day light, and all the secretes of God, and all hys counsell and wil, is opened vnto vs, and he that was promised should come and blesse vs, is come alredy, and hath shed hys bloud for vs and hath blessed vs with al maner blessinges, and hathe obtayned all grace for vs, and in hym we haue all. Wherfore God henceforth wil receiue no more sacrifices of beastes of vs as thou readest. Hebr. 10. If thou burne vnto god the bloud or fatte of beastes, to obtaine forgeuenesse of sinnes therby, or that God should the better heare thy request, then thou doest wrong vnto the bloud of Christ, and Christ vnto thee is dead in vayne. For in him God hath promised not forgeuenesse of sins onely, but also what soeuer we aske to keepe vs from sinne and temptation with all. And what if thou burne frankencens vnto him, what if thou burne a candle, what if thou burne thy chastitie, or virginitie vnto him for the same purpose, doest thou not lyke rebuke vnto Christs bloud? Moreouer, if thou offer gold, siluer, or any other good for the same entēt, is there any difference? And euen so if thou go in pilgrimage, or fastest, or goest wolward, or sprynclest thy selfe with holy water, or elles what soeuer dede it is, or obseruest what soeuer ceremonie it be, for lyke meanyng, then it is lyke abhominatiō. we must therfore bryng the salt of the knowledge of Gods word, with al our sacrifices, or elles we shall make no swete sauour vnto God therof. Thou wilt aske me, shall I vow nothyng at all? yes, Gods commaundemēt, which thou hast vowed in thy Baptisme. For what entent? verely for the loue of Christe, which hath bought thee with his bloud, and made the sonne & heyre of God with him, that thou shouldest wayte on hys will and commaundementes, and purifie thy members accordyng to the same doctrine that hath purified thyne harte, for if the knowledge of Gods word hath not purified thine hart, soy thou consentest vnto the law of god ỹ it is righteous and good, & sorowest, ỹ thy members moue thee vnto the contrary, so hast thou no part with Christ. For if thou repent not of thy sinne, so it is impossible that thou shouldest beleue that Christe had deliuered thee from the daunger therof. If thou beleue not that Christ hath deliuered thee, so is it impossible that thou shouldest loue Gods commaundementes. If thou loue not the commaundementes, so is Christes spirite not in thee, which is the earnest of forgeuenesse of sinne, and of saluation.

Of vowes

God accepteth for vs none other sacrifice, but onely Iesu christ his sonne.

All holines in our own imaginatiō is a robbing of christes honor.

Faith followeth repentaunce of sinne.

For Scripture teacheth, first repentaunce, then fayth in Christ, that for his sake sinne is forgeuen to them that repent: then good workes, whiche are nothyng saue the comaundement of God onely. And the commaūdements are nothyng elles, saue the helpyng of our neighbours at their nede, and the tamyng of our members, that they might be pure also, as the hart is pure thorough hate of vice and loue of vertue, as Gods word teacheth vs, which workes must procede out of the fayth: that is, I must doe them for the loue which I haue God, for that great mercy which he hath shewed me in Christ, or elles I do them not in the sight of God. And that I faint not in ỹ payne of the slaying of the sinne that is in my flesh, myne helpe is the promise of the assistance of the power of God, and the comforte of the reward to come, which reward I ascribe vnto the goodnesse, mercy, and truth, of the promiser, that hath chose me, called me, taught me, & geuen me the cruest therof, & not vnto the merites of my doynges, or sufferynges. For all that I do and suffer, is but the way to the reward, and not the deseruyng thereof. As if the kynges grace shoulde promise to defende mee at home in myne owne realme, yet the way thether is thorowghe the Sea wherin I might happely suffer no litle trouble. And yet for all that, if I might lyue in rest when I come thether, I would thinke, and so would other say, that my paynes were well rewarded: which reward & benefit, I would not proudly ascribe vnto the merites of my paynes takyng by the waye: but vnto the goodnesse, mercyfulnesse and constant truth of the kynges grace whose Repentāce goeth before fayth, and prepareth the way vnto Christ.

How our workes are good in the sight of God.

The worke saueth not, but the word, that it is to say, the promise

An apt similitude for reward of good workes.

whoſe gifte it is, and to whō the prayſe and thanke thereof belongeth of duety and right. So now a reward is a gift geuen freely of the goodneſſe of the geuer, and not of the deſeruynges of the receaucr. Thus it appeareth, that if I vowe what ſoeuer it be, for any other purpoſe thē to tame my members, and to be an enſample of vertue and edifying vnto my neighbour, my ſacrifice is vnſauery, and cleane without ſalt & my lampe without oyle, and I one of the foolyſhe virgines, and ſhalbe ſhut from ỹ feaſt of the bridegroome whē I thinke my ſelfe moſt ſure to enter in.

All vowes muſt be made for ỹ mortifying or tamyng of our members or the edifying of our neighbours, or elſ they are wicked.

If I vow voluntary pouertie, this muſt be my purpoſe, that I will be cōtent with a competent liuyng, whiche commeth vnto me either by ſucceſſion of myne elders, or whiche I get truly with my labour in miniſtryng, & doyng ſeruice vnto the common wealth, in one office or in an other, or in one occupatiō or other, becauſe that riches and honor ſhall not corrupt my mind, and draw myne hart from God, and to geue an example of vertue and edifying vnto other, and that my neighbour may haue a liuyng by me as wel as I, if I make a cloke of diſſimulation of my vow, laying a net of fayned beggery to catch ſuperfluous aboundaunce of riches, and hye degree and authoritie, and thorough the eſtimatiō of falſe holyneſſe, to feede & maintaine my ſlouthful idlenes with the ſweate, labour, landes, and rentes of other mē (after the example of our ſpiritualtie) robbyng them of their faythes, & God of his honour turnyng vnto myne hypocriſie that confidence, which ſhould be geuen vnto the promiſes of GOD onely, am I not a wily fore, and a rauenyng wolfe in a lambes ſkinne, and a paynted ſepulchre fayre without and filthy with in? In like maner thoughe I ſeeke no worldly promotion thereby, yet if I doe it to be iuſtified therewith, and to get an hyer place in heauen, thinkyng that I doe it of myne owne naturall ſtrength, and of the naturall power of my freewill, and that euery man hath might euen ſo to do, & that they doe it not is their faulte, and negligence, &, ſo with the proude Phariſie in compariſon of my ſelfe deſpiſe the ſinneſull Publicanes: what other thyng do I then eate the blond and fat of my ſacrifice, deuourng that my ſelf, which ſhould be offered vnto God alone, and his Chriſt. And ſhortly what ſoeuer a man doth of his naturall giftes, of his naturall witte, wiſedom, vnderſtandyng, reaſon, will, and good entēt before he be otherwiſe and cleane contrary taught of Gods ſpirite, and haue receaued other witte, vnderſtandyng, reaſon and will, is fleſhe, worldly and wrought in abhominable blindneſſe, with whiche a man can but ſeeke him ſelfe, his owne profite, glory and honour, euen in very ſpirituall matters. As if I were alone in a wilderneſſe, where no man were to ſeke profite or prayſe of, yet if I would ſeeke heauen of God there, I could of myne owne naturall giftes ſeke it no other wayes then for the merites and deſeruynges of my good workes, and to enter therin by an other way then by the dore Chriſte, whiche were very theft, for Chriſte is Lord ouer all, and what ſoeuer any man will haue of God, he muſte haue it geuen hym freely for Chriſtes ſake. Now to haue heauē for myne owne deſeruyng, is myne owne praiſe and not Chriſtes. For I can not haue it by fauour, and grace in Chriſte and by myne owne merites alſo: For free geuing, & deſeruyng can not ſtand together.

Our workes do not ſtand in the wiſedome of mē but in the power of God.

Deſert, and free gift are contraries.

If thou wilt vow of thy goods vnto God, thou muſt put ſalt vnto thys ſacrifice: that is, thou muſte miniſter knowledge in this dede as Peter teacheth. 2. Pet. 1. Thou muſt put oyle of Gods worde in thy Lampe, and do it accordyng to knowledge, if thou wait for the comming of the bridegrome to enter in with hym into his reſt. But thou peraduenture wilt hang it about the image to moue men to deuotion. Deuotion is a feruent loue vnto gods commaundementes, and a deſire to be with God, and with hys euerlaſtyng promiſes. Now ſhall the ſight of ſuch riches as are ſhewed at S. Thomas ſhryne, or at walſingham, moue a mā to loue the commaundements of god better, and to deſire to bee looſed from his fleſh, and to be with God, or ſhall it not rather make his poore hart ſigh, becauſe he hath no ſuch at home, and to wiſhe part of it in another place? The prieſt ſhall haue it in Gods ſtead. Shall the prieſt haue it? If the Prieſt be bought with Chriſtes blonde, then he is Chriſtes ſeruaūt & not his owne, and ought therefore to fede Chriſtes flocke with Chriſtes doctrine, and to miniſter Chriſtes Sacramentes vnto them purely for very loue, and not for filthy lucres ſake, or to be Lorde ouer them as Peter teacheth. 1. Pet. v. and

The ſight of riches, is rather a cauſe of coueteouſnes then a meane to honor God

Paul, Acts. xx. Beside this, Christ is ours, and is a gift geuen vs, and we be heyres of Christ, and of all that is Christes. wherefore the Priestes doctrine is ours, and we heyres of it, it is the foode of our soules. Therfore if he minister it not truly, and freely vnto vs wythout sellyng, he is a theef, & a soule murtherer: and euen so is he if he take vpon hym to feede vs, & haue not wherwith. And for a like conclusion, because we also with all that we haue, be Christes, therfore is the priest heyre with vs also of all that we haue receiued of God, wherfore in as much as ỹ priest wayteth on ỹ word of God, and is our seruaunt therin, therfore of right we are his detters, and owe him a sufficient liuyng of our goodes, and euen thereto a wyfe of our daughters owe we vnto hym, if hee require her. And nowe when we haue appoynted him a sufficiente liuyng, whether in tythes, rentes, or in yearely wages, he ought to be content and to require no more, nor yet to receaue any more, but to be an ensample of soberneſſe and of despising worldly things vnto the ensample of hys parishioners.

Whether byd the papist so or no

Yet ỹ spiritualities pil lage was more then theyr standing stipēd.

Wilte thou vowe to offer vnto the poore people? that is pleasaunt in the sight of God, for they be left here to do our almes vpon in Christes stead, and they be the right heyres of all our aboundaunce and ouerplus. Moreouer we must haue a schole to teache Gods worde in (though it needed not to bee so costly) and therfore it is lawfull to vow vnto the building or maintenāce therof, & vnto the helping of all good workes. And we ought to vow to pay custome, tolle, rent, and all maner duties, and whatsoeuer we owe: for that is Gods commaundement.

A good vowe is to kepe Gods commaundementes.

Howe thou mayst lawfully goe on pilgrimage.

If thou wilt vowe pilgrimage, thou must put salt therto, in like manner, if it shall be accepted, if thou vowe to go and visite the poore, or to heare gods word, or whatsoeuer edifieth thy soule vnto loue & good worke after knowledge, or whatsoeuer God commaundeth, it is wel done, and a sacrifice that sauoureth well, ye wil happly say, that ye will go to this or that place, because God hath chosen one place more then another, and wyll heare your petition more in one place then another? As for your prayer it must be according to to gods worde. Ye may not desire god to take vengeaunce on hym, whome Gods worde teacheth you to pity and to pray for. And as for the other glose, that God will here you more in one place then in another, I suppose it sal infatuatum, salt vnsauery, for if it were wisdome, how could we excuse ỹ deth of Steuen Acts 7. which died for that article that God dwelleth not in temples made with handes, we ỹ beleue in God, are the temple of God (sayeth Paul.) If a man loue God, and keepe hys worde, he is the temple of God, & hath God presently dwellyng in him, as witnesseth Christ, John. 14. saying: If a man loue me, he wyll keepe my worde, and then my father wyll loue hym, and we wyll come vnto hym and dwel with hym. And in the 15. he saith: if ye abyde in me, and my wordes also abyde in you, then aske what ye wyll and ye shall haue it. If thou beleue in Christe and hast the promises whiche God hath made thee in thine hart, then go on pilgrimage vnto thyne owne hart and there pray and God wil heare thee, for hys mercy and truthes sake and for his sonnes Christes sake, and not for a few stones sakes. what careth GOD for the temple? The very beastes in that they haue life in them, be much better then an heape of stones couched together.

God heareth al that call vppon him in all tymes and at al places alyke.

God dwelleth not in temples made with mannes handes.

God regardeth the hart, and not ỹ places where we pray.

To speake of chastity, it is a gift not geuen vnto all persones, as testifieth both Christ and also his Apostle Paul, wherfore all persons may not vow it. Moreouer there bee causes wherefore many persons may better lyue chast at one tyme then at an other. Many may lyue chast at twenty and thirtie for certayne cold diseases folowyng them, which at xl. when their health is come can not do so. Many be occupyed with wilde phantasies in their youth that they care not for mariage, which some when they be waxen sad shalbe greatly desirous, it is a daungerous thyng to make sinne where none is, and to forsweare the benefite of God & to bynde thy self vnder payne of dānation of thy soule, that ỹ wouldest not vse remedy that god hath created, if nede required.

Wilfull chastitie is not mete for all persons to vow.

An other thyng is this, beware that thou get thee not a false fayned chastitie made with the vngodly persuasiōs of S. Dierome, of Ouide in his filthy booke of the remedy agaynst loue, lest when throughe such imaginatiōs thou hast vtterly despised, defied and abhorred all womankynde, thou come into such case thorough the fierce wrath of God, that thou canst neither lyue chast nor finde in thy hart to mary and so be compelled to fall into the abhomination of the Pope against nature and kynde.

The Pope restrayned that which God permitted and forbyd that which God forbiddeth.

Moreouer, god is a wise father and, knoweth all the infirmities of his children, and also mercyfull, and therefore hath created a remedy without sinne, and geuen therto his fauour and blessyng. Let vs not be wyser then GOD with our imaginatiõs, nor tempt him, for as godly chastitie is not euery mãs gift: euen so he that hath it to day hath not power to continue it, at his owne pleasure, neither hath God promised to geue it him stil, and to cure his infirmities without hys naturall remedy, no more then he hath promised to slake hys hunger without meate or thyrst without drinke. wherfore either let all thynges byde free as God hath created them, and neither vowe that which God permitteth thee with his fauour and blessing also: or els if thou wilte nedes vowe, then vow godly and vnder a condition, that thou wilt continue chast, so long as God geueth thee that gift, and as long as neither thyne own necessitie, neither charitie toward thy neighbour, nor the authoritie of thē vnder whose power thou art, driue thee vnto the contrary.

A good admonition to such as wil make vowes.

The purpose of thy vowe must bee salted also with the wisedome of God. Thou mayest not vowe to be iustified thereby, or to make satisfaction for thy sinnes, or to wynne heauē, nor an hyer place: for then diddest thou wrong vnto the bloud of Christ, and thy vowe were playne Idolatry and abhommable in the sight of GOD. Thy vow must be onely vnto the furtheraunce of the commaundementes of GOD, which are (as I haue said) nothing but the tamyng of thy members, and the seruice of thy neighbour: that is if thou thincke thy backe to weake for the burthen of wedlocke, and that thou canst not rule thy wife, children, seruauntes and make prouision for them godly, & without ouermuch busying and vnquietyng thy selfe, and drownyng thy selfe in worldly busynesse vnchristenly, or that thou canst serue thy neighbour in some office better beyng chast then maryed. And then thy vowe is good and lawfull. And euen so must thou vowe abstinence of meates, and drinkes so farre forth as it is profitable vnto thy neighbours, and vnto the tamyng of thy flesh: But thou mayst vowe neither of them vnto the slaying of thy body. As Paule commaundeth Tymothe to drincke wyne, & no more water because of his diseases. Thou wilt say that Timothy had not happely forsworne wyne. I thinke the same, and that the Apostles forsware not wedlocke thoughe many of them lyued chast, neither yet any meate or drincke, though they abstreined from them, and that it were good for vs to folow their example. Howbeit though I vowe and sweare and thinke on none exception, yet is the breakyng of Gods cõmaundemẽts except, and all chaunces that hange of God. As if I sweare to be in a certain place at a certain houre, to make a loueday without exception, yet if the king in the meane tyme commaunde me an other way, I must goe by Gods commaundement, and yet breake not myne othe. And in like case if my father & mother be sicke & require my presence, or if my wife, children or houshold be visited that my assistance be required, or if my neighbours house be a fire, at the same houre and a thousand such chaunces: in whiche all I breake myne othe, & am not forsworne and so forth. Read Gods word diligently & with a good hart, and it shall teach thee all thynges.

Wherunto and howe we should apply our vowes.

How a vow is to be made.

He that faseth to any other ende thē to tame his body, that it may waite vpon God, deceiueth hym selfe.

All our doynges must tende to the honour of God, and loue of our neighbour.

A Prologue into the fifte booke of Moses called Deuteronomy.

THis is a booke worthy to be read in, daye and night, & neuer to be out of handes. For it is the most excellent of all the bokes of Moses. It is easy also & lyght, and a very pure Gospell, ẏ is to wit, a preachyng of fayth & loue: deducyng the loue to God out of fayth, and the loue of a mans neighbour out of ẏ loue of God. Herein also thou mayst learne right meditation or contemplation, which is nothyng els saue ẏ calling to minde, & a repeatyng in the harte of the glorious and wonderfull dedes of God, and of his terrible handling of his enemies, and mercyfull entreatyng of them that come when hee calleth them whiche thyng this booke doth, and almost nothyng elles.

This boke is a preachyng of fayth and loue.

Here thou mayest learne a right meditation or contemplation.

In the foure first Chapters he rehearseth the benefites of GOD done vnto them, to prouoke them to loue, & his mightie dedes done aboue all natural capacitie of faith, that they might beleue GOD, and trust in him, and in his strength. And thirdly he rehearceth the fierce plagues of God vppon his enemyes, and on them which through impatiencie & vnbeliefe fell from hym: partly to tame and abate the appetites of the flesh which alway fight agaynst the spirite, and partely to bridle the wilde ragyng lustes of them in whom was no spirite: that though they had no power to do good of loue, yet at the lest way, they should abstaine from outward euill for feare of wrath, and cruell vengeaunce whiche should fall vpō them and shortly finde them out, if they cast vp gods nurter, and runne at riotte beyond his lawes and ordinaunces.

The wordes of God are supernatural.

We must abstaine frō outward euill though not for loue yet for feare of the vengeance of God.

Moreouer he chargeth them to put nought to, nor take ought away from Gods wordes, but to be diligēt onely to keepe them in remembraunce, & in the hart and to teach their childrē, for feare of forgetryng. And to beware either of makyng imagery, or of bowyng them selues vnto Images, saying: Ye saw no image when God spake vnto you, but heard a voyce onely, & that voyce keepe, and therevnto cleaue, for it is your lyfe, and it shall sane you. And finally if (as the frailtie of all flesh is) they shal haue fallen from God, and he haue brought them into trouble, aduersitie, and combraunce and all necessitie: yet if they repent and turne, hee promiseth, them that God shall remēber his mercy, and receaue them to grace agayne.

Vnto the law of god, we may neither adde nor minish.

We are cōmaunded to abstayne from Images.

God is mercyful to them that repent.

In the fifte he repeateth the x. Commaūdementes, and that they might see a cause to do them of loue, he biddeth them remember that they were bound in Egypt, and how God deliuered thē with a mighty hande, and a stretched out arme, to serue him and to kepe his maundementes: as Paule sayth that wee are bought with Christes bloud, and therefore are his seruauntes and not our owne, and ought to seeke his wil and honour onely, and to loue and serue one an other for his sake.

Christ hath deliuered vs, & therfore we aught to serue him & our neyghbour for his sake.

In the sixte he setteth out the fountaine of all commaundementes: that is, that they beleue how that there is but one God that doth all, and therfore ought onely to bee loued with all the hart, all the soule, and all the might. For loue onely is the fulfillyng of the cōmaundementes, as Paule also sayth vnto the Romaines, and Galathians likewise. He warneth them also that they forget not the cōmaundementes, but teache them their children, and to shew their children also how God deliuered them out of the bondage of the Egiptians, to serue him and his commaundements, that the children might see a cause to worke of loue likewise.

Loue onely is the fulfillyng of the lawes of God.

The seuenth is all together of faith: hee remoueth all occasions that might withdrawe them from the faith, and pulleth them also from all confidence in them selues, and sturreth them vp to trust in God boldly and onely.

We must trust onely in God, & not in our selues.

Of the eight Chapter thou seest how that the cause of temptation is, that a man might see his own hart. For whē I am brought into that extremity, that I must either suffer or forsake GOD, then I shall feele how much I beleue and trust in him, and how much I loue him. In like maner, if my brother do me euill for my good, then if I loue him when there is no cause in him, I see that my loue was of God, and euen so if I then hate him, I feele and perceaue that my loue was but worldly, and finally hee sturreth thē to the fayth and loue of God, and driueth them frō all confidence of their owne selues.

How a man may trye & examine hym selfe, how much he loueth God, and his neighbour.

In the ninth also hee moueth them vnto fayth, and to put their trust in God, and draweth them from confidēce of them selues, by rehearsing all y wickednesse whiche they had wrought from the first day, he knew them vnto that same day. And in the end he repeteth howe he conjured God in Horeb, and ouercame him with prayer, where thou mayest learne the right maner to pray.

God styreth vp his people vnto fayth.

Right way of prayer.

In the tenth he reckeneth vppe the pith of all lawes, and the keping of the law in hart: which is to feare GOD, loue him and serue hym with all their hart soule and might, and kepe his cōmaundementes of loue. And he sheweth a reason why they should that do: euen because God is Lord of heauen and earth, & hath also done all for them of his owne goodnesse without their deseruyng. And then out of the loue vnto God, he bringeth the loue vnto a mans neighbour saying: God is Lord aboue all Lordes and loueth al his seruauntes indifferētly, as well the poore and feble, and the straūger, as the rich and mighty, and therfore will that we loue the poore and the straunger. And he addeth a cause, for ye were straungers, and God deliuered you and hath brought you vnto a land, where ye bee at home. Loue the straunger therefore for his sake.

The pith & effect of all y lawes of God.

And if we first loue God, then out of that loue, wee must needes loue our neighbour.

In the xj. he exhorteth them to loue

and

What it is to loue and feare God, and what it is to despise hym.

and feare God, and rehearceth the terrible dedes of God vpō his enemyes, & on them that rebelled agaynst hym. And he testifieth vnto them both what wil folow, if they loue and feare God, and what also if they despise hym, and breake his commaundement.

The word of god may not be altered.

In the xij. hee commaundeth to put out of the way all that might be an occasion to hurt the fayth, and forbiddeth to do ought after their owne myndes, or to alter the word of God.

Let no mā draw vs from gods worde.

In the xiij. he forbiddeth to herken vnto ought saue vnto Gods word: no though he whiche counseleth contrary should come with miracles, as Paule doth vnto the Galathians.

In the xiiij. the beasts are forbidden, partly for vncleannesse of them, and partly to cause hate betwene the heathen and them, that they haue no conuersation together, in that one abhorreth what the other eateth. Vnto this xv. chapter all perraine vnto faith and loue chiefly. And in this xv. hee begynneth to entreate more specially of thinges pertainyng vnto the common welth, and equitie, and exhorteth vnto the loue of a mans neighbour. And in the xvj. among other he forgetteth not the same. And in the xvij. he entreateth of right and equitie chiefly, in so much that when hee looketh vnto faith, and vnto the punishment of Idolaters, hee yet endeth in a law of loue and equitie: forbiddyng to condemne any man vnder lesse then two witnesses at the lest, and commaundeth to bryng the trespassers vnto the open gate of the citie, where all men go in and out, that all men might heare the cause and see that he had but right. But the Pope hath founde a better way, euen to oppose him with out any accuser, and that secretly, that no man know whether hee haue right or no, either heare his Articles or answere: for feare lest the people should searche whether it were so or no.

Of matters of the common welth

None may be condemned vnder two witnesses.

In the xviij. hee forbiddeth all false and deuilish crafts that hurt true faith. Moreouer because the people could not heare the voyce of the law spoken to them in fire, he promiseth them an other Prophet to bring them better tydynges whiche was spoken of Christ our Sauiour.

Christ our sauiour declared in the old testament.

The xix. and so forth vnto the end of the xxvij. is almost altogether of loue vnto our neighbours, and of lawes, of equitie, and honesty, with now and the a respect vnto faith.

The xxviij. is a terrible Chapter and to be trembled at: A Christen mās hart might well bleed for sorrow at the reading of it, for feare of the wrath that is like to come vpon vs, according vnto all the curses which thou there readest. For according vnto these curse hath God delt with with all nations, after they were fallen into the abhominations of blindnesse.

The curse and wrath of God ouer al those that breake his lawes.

The xxix. is like terrible with a godly lesson in the end that we shold leaue searchyng of Gods secrets, & geue diligence to walke according to that hee hath opened vnto vs. For the keepyng of the commaundementes of God, teacheth wisedome as thou maiest see in the same Chapter, where Moses saith, keepe the commaundementes, that ye may vnderstand what ye ought to doe. But to search Gods secretes, blindeth a mā, as it wel proued by the swarmes of our sophisters, whose wise bookes are now when we looke in the Scripture, founde but full of foolishnesse.

we may not be to curious in the searchyng of Gods secretes, but rather studdy to vnderstand & to do our duety towards god and our neighbour.

The Prologue of the Prophete Ionas made by William Tyndall.

AS the enuious Philistines stopped ỳ welles of Abraham, and filled them vp with earth, to put the memoriall out of mynde, to the entent that they might chalenge the grounde: euen so the fleshly minded hipocrites, stoppe vp the vaynes of life, which are in the scripture, with the earth of their traditions, false similitudes, and lying allegories, & that of lyke zeale, to make the Scripture their owne possession, and merchaundice, and so shut vp the kyngdome of heauen, which is Gods worde, neither entring in themselues, nor suffering them that would.

The Papistes kepe the Scriptures from the lay people, because they onely will be the publishers & expositors therof

The Scripture hath a body and a soule.

The Scripture hath a body without, and within a soule, spirite & lyfe. It hath without a barke, a shel, and as it were an harde bone, for the fleshlye mynded to gnaw vpon. And within it hath pith, cornell, mary, and all swetenes for Gods elect, which he hath chosen to geue them hys spirite, & to write hys law, and the fayth of hys sonne in their hartes.

The Scripture conteineth iij. thinges in it: First, the lawe to condemne all flesh: Secondarily, the Gospel, that is to say, promises of mercy for al that repente and knowledge theyr sinnes, at the preachyng of the lawe, and consent in their hartes that the lawe is good, and submit themselues to bee scholers to learne to kepe the law, and to learn to beleue the mercye that is promised them: and thirdly, the stories & lyues of those scholers, both what chaunces fortuned them, & also by what meanes their scholemaister taughte them, and made them perfect, and how he tried ỳ true from the false.

The maner of hipocrites in reading the law of god.

When the hipocrites come to the law, they put gloses to, and make no more of it, thē of a worldly law which is satisfied with the outwarde worke, and whiche a Turke may also fulfill. when yet Gods law neuer ceaseth to condemne a man, vntil it be written in hys harte, and vntill he keepe it naturally without compulsion, and all other respect, saue onely of pure loue to God, and his neighbour, as he naturally eateth when he is an hungred, without compulsion, and all other respect, saue to slake hys hunger onely.

The papistical and corrupt doctrine of the papists

And when they come to the Gospell, there they mingle their leuen and say. GOD now receiueth vs no more to mercy, but of mercy receueth vs to penaunce, that is to witte, holy deedes ỳ make them fatte bellies, and vs their captiues, both in soule and body. And yet they fayne their Idole the Pope so mercifull, that if that thou make a litle money glister in hys Balaams eyes, there is neither penance, nor purgatory, nor any fastyng at all, but to flye to heauen as swift as a thought, & at the twinckling of an eye.

How the Papistes wryng and wrest the scriptures.

And the liues, stories, and giftes of men, whith are contayned in the bible, they reade as thinges no more pertaining vnto them, then a tale of Robin hood, & as things they wot not wherto they serue, saue to faine false discant, and iuglyng allegories, to stablishe their kyngdome with all. And one of the chiefest and fleshliest studies they haue, is to magnifie the saintes aboue measure, and aboue the truth: & with their Poetry to make them greter thē euer God made them. And if they find any infirmitie, or sinne ascribed vnto the sayntes, that they excuse with all diligence, diminishyng the glory of the mercy of god, and robbyng wretched sinners of all their comforte: & thinke therby to flatter the saintes, and to obtayne their fauour, and to make speciall aduocates of them, euen as a man would obtayne the fauour of worldly tyraunntes: as they also fayne ỳ saintes more cruell then euer was any heathē man, and more wreakeful, and vengeable, then the Poetes fayne their goddes or furies, that torment the soules in hell, if their euens be not fasted, and their images visited, and saluted wyth a pater noster, which prayer onely our lippes be acquainted with: our hartes vnderstandyng none at all, and worshipped wyth a candle, and the offring of our deuotiō, in the place which they haue chosen to heare supplicatiōs, and make petitions of their clientes therin

But thou reader, thynke of the law of god, how that it is altogether spirituall, and so spirituall, that it is neuer fulfilled wyth dedes or works, vntill they flowe out of thyne harte, wyth as great loue towarde thyne neighbour, for no deseruyng of his (yea thoughe he bee thyne ennemy) as Christ loued thee, and dyed for thee, for no deseruyng of thyne, but euen when thou wast hys ennemy. And in the meane tyme, through out all our infantie, and childhoode in Christ, till we be grown vp into perfect men, in the full knowledge of Christ, and full loue of Christ agayne, and of our neighbours for hys sake, after the ensample of hys loue to vs, remēbring that the fulfillyng of the law, is a fast fayth in Christes bloude coupled with our profession, & submit ous selues to do better.

And of the gospell or promises which thou meetest in the scripture, beleue fast that god wyll fulfill them vnto thee, & that vnto the vttermost iot, at the repentance of thyne hart, when thou turnest to hym and forsakest euill, euen of hys goodnes, and fatherly mercy vnto thee, and not for thy flatteryng hym with hipocritishe woorkes of thyne owne fayning. So that a fast fayth only, without respect of all workes, is the forgeuenesse both of the sinne, which we did in tyme of ignorance, with lust and consent to sinne: and also of that synne which we do by chaunce, and of frailtie: after ỳ we are come to knowledge, and haue professed the law out of our hartes. And all dedes serue only for to helpe our neighbours, and to tame our flesh that we fall not to sinne agayne, and to exercise our soules in vertue, and not to make satisfaction to Godwarde for the synne that is once paste.

And all other stories of the Bible, with out exception, are ỳ practising of ỳ law, & of the gospel, & are true and faythfull ensamples, and sure earnest that God will will euen so deale with vs, as he did with them, in all infirmities, in all temptations, and in all lyke cases & chaunces. Wherin ye see on the one side, how fatherly and tenderly, and with all cōpassion GOD entreateth hys elect, which submit themselues as scholers, to learne to walke in the wayes of hys lawes, and to kepe them of loue. If they forgate themselues at a tyme, he would stirre them vp agayne with all mercy, if they fell and hurt themselues, he healed them agayne with all compassion and tendernes of hart. He hath oft brought great tribulation and aduersitie vpon hys elect: but all of fatherly loue onely, to teach them, and to make them see their owne hartes, and the synne that there lay hid, that they might afterward feele hys mercy. For his mercy wayted vpon them, to ridde them out agayne as soone as they wer learned, and come to the knowledge of their own hartes: so that he neuer cast man away, how deepe so euer he had sinned, saue them onely which had first cast the yoke of hys lawes from their neckes, with vtter defiaunce, and malice of harte.

God correcteth where he loueth.

God casteth none away, but such as refuse to kepe his lawes, and will not harken vnto hys voyce.

Which ensamples how comfortable are they for vs, when we be fallen into sinne, and God is come vpon vs with a scourge, that we dispayre not, but repent with full hope of mercy, after the ensamples of mercy that are gone before? And therfore they were written for our learnyng, as testifieth Paule, Rom. 15. to comfort vs, that we might the better put our hope & trust in god, when we see, how mercifull he hathe bene in tymes past vnto our weake brethrē, that are gone before in al their aduersities, nede, temptations, ye and horrible sinnes into which they nowe and then fell.

And on the other side, ye see how they that hardened their hartes & sinned of malice, and refused mercy that was offered them, and had no power to repent, perished at the latter ende with all confusion and shame mercilessely. Which ensāpies are very good and necessary, to kepe vs in awe, and dread in tyme of prosperitie, as thou mayest see by Paul. 1. Cor. 10. that we abide in the feare of God, and ware not wylde and fall to vanities, and so sinne and prouoke God, and bryng wrath vpon vs.

Such as hardē their hartes and not harken to the will of God to do it, God casteth out

And thirdly, ye see in the practise, how as God is merciful and long suffering, euen so were all hys true Prophetes and preachers, bearing the infirmities of their weake brethren, and their own wrongs, and iniuries with all patience, and long suffering, neuer casting any of them of their backs, vntill they sinned against the holy ghost, maliciously persecutyng the open and manifest trouth: contrary vnto the ensample of the Pope, which in sinnyng agaynst God, and to quench the truth of his holy spirite, is euer chiefe Captaine and trompet blower, to set other a worke, and seketh only his own fredome, libertie, priuiledge, wealth, prosperitie, profite, pleasure, pastime, honour and glory, with the bondage, thraldom, captiuitie, misery, wretchednes, and vile subiection of his brethrē: and in hys owne cause is so feruent, so stiffe and cruell, that he will not suffer one worde spoken agaynst hys false maiestie, wily inuentions, and iugling hipocrisie to be vnauenged, though all christendome should be set together by the eares, and should cost he cared not how many hundred thousande their lyues.

The Prophetes of God bare the weaknes of their brethren, & their iniuries also with patience.

The Pope and his ministers are persecutors ouer their brethren.

Now that thou mayest read Jonas frutefully, and not as a Poetes fable, but as an obligation betwene god and thy soule, as an earnest penny geuen thee of God, that he wyll helpe thee in tyme of nede, if thou turne to him, and as the worde of God the only foode, & lyfe of thy soule, this marke, and note. First count Jonas the frend of God, & a man chosen of GOD, to testify his name vnto the world: But yet a yong scholer, weake and rude, after the fashiō of the apostles, whyle Christ was with them yet bodily, which thoughe Christ taught them euer to be meeke, and to humble thēselues, yet oft strone among thēselues who should be greatest. The sonnes of Zebede would sitte the one on the right hand of Christ, the other on the lefte. They would praye that fire might descend from heauen & consume the Samaritanes. when Christ asked who say men that I am: Peter aunswered, thou art the sonne of the liuyng God, as though Peter had bene as perfecte as an angel. But immediatly after whē Christ preached vnto them of hys death and passion: Peter was angry and rebuked Christ, and thought earnestly that he had raued, and not wist what he sayde, as at another time, when Christ was so feruently busied in healyng the people, that he had no leisure to eat, they went out to hold him, supposing that he had bene beside hymselfe. And one that cast out diuels in Christes name they forbade, because he wayted not on them, so glorious were they yet.

The cruell opiniō that the disciples had of Christ.

The ignoraunce and imperfection of the apostles.

And though Christ taught alway to forgeue, yet Peter after long goyng to schole, asked whether men should forgeue seuen tymes, thinkyng that vij. tymes had bene to much. And at the last supper Peter would haue dyed with christ, but yet within few houres after, he denyed him, both cowardly and shamefully. And after the same maner, though he had so long heard that no man might auenge hym self, but rather turne the other cheeke to, then to smite agayne, yet when Christ was in takyng, Peter asked whether it were lawful to smite with the sword, and taried none aunswere, but layed on rashly. So that though when we come first vnto knowledge of the truth, and the peace is made betweene God and vs, and we loue his lawes, and beleue and trust in him, as in our father and haue good hartes vnto him, and be borne a new in the spirite, yet we are but childrē and young scholers, weake and feble, and must haue leysure to grow in the spirite: in knowledge, loue and in the dedes therof, as young children must haue tyme to grow in their bodies.

And God our father and scholemaister feedeth vs, and teacheth vs accordyng vnto the capacitie of our stomackes, and maketh vs to grow and waxe perfect, and fineth and trieth vs, as gold, in the fire of temptations and tribulations. As Moyses witnesseth Deutero. viij. saying. Remember all the way by whiche the Lord thy God caried thee this xl. yeares in the wildernesse, to humble thee, and to tempte or prouoke thee, ẏ it might be knowen what were in thine hart. He brought thee into aduersitie, and made thee an hungred, & then fed thee with Manna, which neither thou nor yet thy fathers euer knew of, to teach that man lyueth not by bread onely, but by all that procedeth out of the mouth of GOD. For the promises of God are lyfe vnto all that cleaue vnto them, muche more then breade and bodyly sustenaunce, as the iourney of the children of Israell out of Egipt into the land promised them, ministreth thee notable ensamples, and that aboundantly, as doth all the rest of the Bible also. Howbeit it is impossible for flesh to beleue, and to trust in the truth of Gods promises, vntil he haue learned it in much tribulation, after that God hath deliuered him out therof agayne.

God doth mercifully try & tempt vs, to moue vs to vtter our hartes & myndes towardes hym.

God therefore to teach Jonas, and to shew him his owne hart, & to make him perfect, and to instruct vs also by his ensample, sent him out of the lande of Israell where he was a Prophet to go among the heathen people, and to the greatest and mightiest Citie of the world then, called Ninine: to preache that within xl. dayes they should all perish for their sinnes, and that the Citie should be ouerthrowen. Whiche message the free will of Jonas had as much power to doe, as the weakest harted woma̅ in the world hath power, if she were commaunded, to leape into a tubbe of lyuyng snakes and adders: as happely if God had cōmaunded Sara to haue sacrificed her sonne Isaac, as he did Abraham, she would haue disputed with him, yet shee had done it, or though she were strong enough: yet many an holy Saint could not haue founde in their hartes, but would haue runne away from the presence of the commaundement of God, with Jonas, if they had bene so strongly tempted.

Jonas of himselfe, was an vnmete messenger to be sent of such a message, but god assisted him with his holy spirit.

For Jonas thought of this maner: loe, I am here a Prophet vnto Gods people the Israelites: whiche though they haue Gods worde testified vnto them dayly, yet despise it, and worshyp God vnder the likenesse of calues, and after all maner fashions saue after hys owne word, and therfore are of all nations the worst, and most worthy of punishment. And yet God for loue of fewe that are among them, and for his names sake spareth and defendeth them. How then should GOD take so cruel vengeaunce on so great a multitude of them to whō hys name was neuer preached to, and therfore are not the tenth part so euill as these? If I shall therfore go preach, so shal I laye and shame my selfe and God thereto, & make them the more to dispise God, and set the lesse by him, and to bee the more cruell vnto his people.

The carnal imagination of mans nature without Gods spirite.

And vpon that imagination he fled from the face or presence of God: that is, out of the coūtrey where God was worshipped in, and from the prosecutyng of Gods commaundement, and thought, I will get me an other way among the heathen people, and be no more a prophet, but liue at rest and out of all combraunce. Neuertheless the God of all mercy which careth for his elect Jonas so long as he was in his carnall imagination, could not abyde the voice of God, but fled: howbeit God called hym agayne.

elect children, & turneth all vnto good to them, and smiteth them, to heale thē againe, and killeth them to make them aliue agayne, and playeth with them (as a father doth some tyme with his young ignorant children) and tempteth them, and proueth them to make them see their owne hartes, prouided for Ionas, how all thinges should be.

Ionas flesh rebelled agaynst the spirite.

When Ionas entred into the shyp, he layd him down to slepe, and to take his rest: that is, his conscience was tossed betweene the commaundement of God which sent him to Ninine, and his fleshly wisedome that dissuaded, & counselled him the contrary, and at the last prenailed against the commaundement, and caryed him an other way, as a shyp caught betweene two streames, & as Poetes faine the mother of Meliager to be betwen diuers affections: while to auenge her brothers death, shee sought to slea her owne sonne. whereupon for very paine and tediousnes he lay down to slepe, for to put the commaundement which so gnewe and fret his conscience, out of mynde, as the nature of all wicked is, when they haue sinned a good, to seke all meanes with riot, reuell and pastime, to driue the remembraūce of sinne out of their thoughtes, or as Adam did, to couer their nakednes with apoznes of Pope holy worke. But God awoke him out of his dreame, & set his sinnes before his face.

The wicked seke to to couer their wickednes with Pope holy worke.

How Ionas was trapped & made afrayed.

For when ỹ lot had caught Ionas, then bee sure that his sinnes came to remembraunce agayne, and that his cōscience raged no lesse then the waues of the Sea. And then he thought that he onely was a sinner, and the heathen that were in the shyp, none in respect of him, and thought also, as veryly as he was fled from God, that as veryly God had cast him away: for the sight of the rodde maketh the naturall child not onely to see, and to knowledge his faulte, but also to forget all his fathers old mercy and kindnesse. And then he confessed his sinne openly, and had yet leuer perishe alone, then that the other should haue perished with him for his sake: and so of very desperatiō to haue lyued any longer, he bad cast him into the Sea betimes, except they would be lost also.

Ionas beyng afrayd confesseth his sinnes.

To speake of lottes, how farre forth they are lawfull, is a light question. First to vse them for the breakyng of strife, as when parteners, their goods as equally diuided as they can, take euery man his part by lot, to anoyde all suspition of deceitfulnesse: and as the Apostles in the first of the Actes, when they sought an other to succede Iudas the traitour, and two persōs were presented then to breake strife, and to satisfie all parties, did cast lottes whether should be admitted, desiryng God to temper them, and to take whom he knew most mete, seyng they wyste not whether to preferre, or happely could not all agree on: either is lawfull, and in all like cases. But to abuse them vnto the temptyng of God, and to compell hym therewith to vtter thinges wherof we stand in doubt, when we haue no commaundement of him so to do, as these heathen here dyd, though God turned it vnto his glorie, can not be but euill.

Lots howe they may be vsed lawfully.

The heathen shypmen astonyed at the sight of the miracle, feared GOD, prayed to him, offered sacrifice and vowed vowes. And I doubte not, but that some of them, or happely all came thereby vnto the true knowledge, and true worshipping of GOD, and were wonne to GOD in their soules. And thus God which is infinite mercifull in all his wayes, wrought their soules health out of the infirmitie of Ionas, euen of his good wil and purpose, and loue wherewith he loued them, before the worlde was made & not of chaunce, as it appeareth vnto the eyes of the ignorant.

Miracle moueth the heathen to know god, and to call vpon him.

And that Ionas was three dayes and three nightes in the belye of hys fishe: we can not therby proue vnto the Iewes, and infideles or vnto any mā, that Christ must therefore dye, and bee buried and rise againe. But we vse the ensample and likenesse to strength the fayth of the weake. For he that beleueth the one, cā not dout in the other: in as much as the hand of GOD was no lesse mightie in preseruyng Ionas alyue agaynst all naturall possibilitie, and in deliuerying him safe out of this fish, then in raising vp Christ agayne, out of his sepulchre. And we may describe the power and vertue of the resurrection thereby, as Christ him selfe borroweth the similitude therto. Math. xij. saying vnto the Iewes that came about him, and desired a signe or a wōder from heauen, to certifie them that he was Christ: this euill and wedlocke breakyng nation (whiche breake the wedlocke of faith, wherwith they bee maried vnto God, and beleue in their false woorkes) seke a signe, but there shall no signe bee geuen them saue the signe of the Prophet Jonas. For as Jonas was three dayes and three nightes in the bely of the whale, euen so shall the sonne of mā be three dayes, & three nightes in the hart of the earth. which was a watch word (as we say) and a sharpe threatenynge vnto the Jewes, and as much to say as thus, ye hard harted Jewes seke a signe: loe this shal be your signe, as Jonas was raised out of the sepulchre of his fishe, and then sent vnto the Niniuites to preach that they should perish, euen so shall I rise againe out of my sepulchre, and come and preach repentaunce vnto you. See therfore, when ye see the signe that ye repent, or els ye shal surely perishe and not escape. For though the infirmities whiche ye now see in my flesh, be a let vnto your fathers, ye shall then be without excuse, when ye see so great a miracle and so great power of God shed out vpon you. And so Christ came agayne after the resurrection in his spirite, and preached repentaunce vnto them, by the mouth of his Apostles and Disciples, and with miracles of the holy Ghost. And all that repented not, perished shortly after, & the rest caried awaye captiue into all quarters of the world for an example, as ye see vnto this day.

Ionas lay three dayes and iij. nightes in ỹ whales belye, so Christ lay three dayes and three nightes in the earth.

How christ sheweth his death, & resurrectiō by Ionas the Prophet.

Christ by the mouth of his Apostles preached repentaunce to the Jewes.

And in like maner since the worlde began, where soeuer repentaunce was offered, and not receaued, their GOD tooke cruell vengeaunce immediatly: as ye see in the floude of Noe, in the ouerthrowynge of Sodome and Gomorra, and all the countrey about, and as ye see of Egypt, of the Amorites, Cananites and afterward of the very Israelites, and then at the last of the Jewes to, and of the Assirians, & Babilonians, and so throughout all the empeires of the world.

where ther is no repentaūce, there God powreth out his vengeaunce.

Gildas preached repentaunce vnto the old Britaines, that inhabited England: they repented not, and therfore God sent in their enemies vpon them on euery side, and destroyed them vp, and gaue the land vnto other nations. And greate vengeaunce hath bene taken in that lande for synne, since that tyme.

Gildas a writer of y Britishe Chronicle.

Wicleffe preached repentaunce vnto our fathers not long since: they repented, not for their harts were indurate, and their eyes blinded with their own Pope holy righteousnesse, wherewith they had made their soules gay against the receiuing agayne of the wicked spirite, that bringeth seuen worse thē him selfe with him, and maketh the later ende worse then the begynnyng: for in open synnes there is hope of repentaunce, but in holye, hypocrisie none at all. But what folowed? they slew their true and right kyng, and set vp three wrong kynges arowe, vnder which all the noble bloud was slayne vp, and halfe the commons thereto, what in Fraunce, and what with their owne sword, in fightyng among themselues for the crowne, and the Cities and Townes decayed, and the lande brought halfe into a wildernesse, in respect of that it was before.

And now Christe to preache repentaūce, is risē yet once agayn, out of his sepulchre in which y Pope had buried him, & kept him downe, with his pilars & polars & all disguisinges of hipocrisy, with gyle, wiles & falshode & with the sword of all Princes, whiche he had blinded with his false marchandise. And as I doubt not of the ensamples that are past, so am I sure that great wrath will follow, except repentaunce turne it backe againe, & cease it.

Christe now preacheth repētaunce vnto vs.

when Jonas had bene in the fishes bely a space, and the rage of his conscience was somewhat quieted, and swaged, & he come to him selfe againe, and had receaued a litle hope, the qualmes and panges of desperation which went ouer his hart, halfe ouercome, he prayed, as he maketh mention in the text saying: Jonas prayed vnto the Lord his GOD out of the bely of the fish. But the wordes of that prayer are not here set. The prayer that here standeth in the text, is the prayer of prayse, and thankesgeuyng, which he prayed, and wrote when hee was escaped, and past all ieopardie.

Jonas called vpon God out of the fishes belly.

In the end of which prayer he saith, I will sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgeuyng, and pay that I haue vowed, that sauyng commeth of the Lord. For verely to confesse out of the hart, that all benefites come of GOD, euen out of the goodnesse of his mercie, and not deseruing of our dedes, is the onely sacrifice that pleaseth God. And to beleue that all the Jewes vowed in their Circumcision, as we in our Baptisme, whiche vowe Jonas now beyng taught with experience, promiseth to pay. For those outward sacrifices of beastes, vnto which Jonas had happely ascribed to much before, were but feble, and childish thinges, and not ordeined, that the workes of them selues should be a seruice vnto the people, but to put them in remembraunce of this inward sacrifice of thankes and of faith, to trust and beleue in GOD the onely Sauiour: whiche signification when it was away, they were abhominable and denilithe Idolatrie, and Image seruice: as our ceremonies and Sacramentes are become now to all that trust and beleue in the worke of them, and are not raught the significations, to edify their soules with knowledge, and the doctrine of God.

Ionas dyd that God commaunded hym.

When Ionas was cast vpon lande agayn, then his will was free, and had power to go whether God sent hym, and to do what GOD bade, his owne Imaginations layd a part. For he had bene at a new schole, yea and in a fornace where hee was purged of much refuse and drosse of fleshely wisedome, whiche resisted the wisedome of God, and led Ionasses will contrary vnto the will of God. For as farre as we be blinde in Adam, we can not but seke, and will our owne profite, pleasure & glory. And as farre as we be taught in the spirite, we can not but seke and wil the pleasure, and glory of God onely.

Nineue was the greatest Citie in the world.

And as the iij. dayes iorney of Nineue, whether it were in length, or to go round about it, or thorough all the stretes, I commit vnto ỳ discretion of other men. But I thinke that it was then the greatest Citie of the world.

And that Ionas went a dayes iourney in the Citie. I suppose hee did it not in one day: but went faire and easyly preachyng here a Sermon, and there another, and rebuked the sinne of the people, for which they must perish.

And when thou art come vnto the repentaūce of the Niniuites, there hast thou sure earnest, that how soeuer angry God be, yet he remembreth mercy, vnto all that truly repent and beleue in mercy. whiche ensample our Sauiour Christe also casteth in the teeth of the indurate Iewes saying: The Niniuites shall rise in iudgemēt with this nation, and condemne them, for they repented at the preachyng of Ionas, and behold a greater then Ionas, here meanyng of him selfe. At whose preachyng yet, thoughe it were neuer so mightie to pearce the hart, and for all his miracles thereto, the hard harted Iewes could not repent: when the heathen Niniuites repēted at the bare preachyng of Ionas, rebukyng their sinnes without any miracle at all.

Christ is mercyfull to the that repent and call for mercy.

Why: For the Iewes had leuened the spirituall law of God, & with their gloses had made it altogether earthly and fleshly, and so had set a vaile or couerying on Moses face, to shadow and darken the glorious brightnes of hys countenaunce. It was sinne to steale: but to robbe widowes houses vnder a colour of long praying, and to polle in the name of offerynges, and to snare ỳ people with intollerable constitutions agaynst all loue, to catche theyr money out of theyr purses, was no synne at all.

The doctrine of the Pharisees and the Papists make sinne of that is no sinne.

To smite father and mother was sinne: But to withdraw helpe from them at theyr nede, for blynde zeale of offring, vnto the profite of ỳ holy pharises, was then as meritorious as it is now, to let all thy kinne chuse whether they wil sincke or swimme, while thou buildest and makest goodly foundations for holy people, whiche thou hast chosen to be thy Christ, for to supple thy soule with ỳ oyle of their swete blessinges, and to be thy Iesus for to saue thy soule from the purgatory of the bloud, that onely purgeth sinne, with their watching, fasting, wolward goyng, & rising at midnight, &c. wherwith yet they purge not themselues, from their couetousnes, pride, lechery, or any vice that thou seest among the lay people.

This is ỳ doctrine of ỳ Papistes and hypocriticall monkes at this day.

The blynd and frutelesse workes of the Papistes.

It was great sinne for Christ to heale the people on the sabaoth day vnto the glory of God hys father, but none at all for them to helpe their cattell vnto their owne profite.

Papisticall sinnes.

It was sinne to eate with vnwashed handes, or on an vnwashed table, or out of an vnwashed dishe: but to eate out of that purified dishe: that whiche came of bribery, theste and extortion, was no sinne at all.

It was exceeding meritorious to make many disciples: but to teach thē to feare God in hys ordinaunces, had they no care at all.

The hye Prelates so defended the right of holy church, and so feared the people with the curse of God, and terrible paynes of hell, that no man durst leaue the vilest herbe in his garden vntithed. And the offeringes and thinges dedicate vnto GOD, for the profite of his holy vicars, were in such estimatiō and reuerence, that it was a much gretter sinne to sweare truly by them, then to forsweare thy selfe by God. What vengeaunce then of God, and how terrible and cruell damnation thynke ye preached they to fall on them that had Papistes taught thē selues and theyr workes withall crueltie.

The false & wicked doctrine of the Papistes.

stolen so the holy thinges? And yet sayth Christ, that rightcousnes & sayth in kepyng promise, mercy, and indifferent iudgement, were vtterly troden vnder foote, and clean despised of those blessed fathers, whiche so mightely maintained Aarons patrimony, and had made it so prosperous, and enuironed it, and walled it about on euery side with the feare of God, that no ma durst touche it.

Blinde and hypocritical doctrine.

It was great holines to garnish the Sepulchers of the prophetes, and to condemne their owne fathers for slaying of them, and yet were they themselues for blynde zeale of their owne constitutions, as redy as their fathers to slea whosoeuer testified vnto them, the same truth which, the prophets testified vnto their fathers. So ẏ Christ compareth al the rightcousnes of those holy patriarckes, vnto the outwarde beauty of a painted Sepulcher full of stenche, and all vncleannes within.

And finally to beguile a mās neighbors in subtle bargaining, & to wrap and compasse hym in with cautels of the law, was then as it is now in the kyngdome of the Pope. By the reason wherof, they excluded the law of loue out of their hartes, and consequently all true repentaunce: for how coulde they repent of that they could not see to be sinne?

The Pharisees set vp a rightcousnes of workes to clēse their soules withall.

And on the other side they had set vp a rightcousnes of holy workes, to clēse their soules with all: as the Pope sanctifieth vs with holy oyle, holy bread, holy salte, holy candels, holy dome, ceremonies, and holy dome blessinges, & with whatsoeuer holines thou wilt, saue with the holines of Gods worde, which onely speaketh vnto the harte, and sheweth the soule hys filthinesse, and vncleannes of synne, and leadeth her by the way of repentance vnto the fountayne of Christes bloud, to washe it away thorow faith. By the reason of which false rightcousnes, they wer disobediēt vnto the rightcousnes of god, whiche is the forgeuenesse of sinne in Christes bloud, and could not beleue it. And so thorow fleshly interpretyng the law, and false imagined rightcousnes, their hartes were hardened, and made as stony as clay, in an whot furnace of fire, that they could receiue neither repentance nor fayth, or any moysture of grace at all.

By the worldly & fleshly interpretations of the scriptures the Iewes hartes were hardened.

But the heathen Niniuites, though they were blinded with lustes, yet wer in those two poyntes vncorrupte, and vnhardened, and therfore with the only preachyng of Jonas, came vnto the knowledge of their sinnes and confessed them, and repented truly, and turned euery man from hys euil dedes, & declared their sorrow of hart and true repentaunce, with theyr deedes which they did out of fayth and hope of forgeuenesse, chastising their bodies with prayer and fastyng, and with takyng all pleasures from the flesh: trustyng, as God was angry for their wickednesse, euen so should he forgeue them of his mercy if they repented, and forsoke their misseliuing.

The heathen repented at the preachyng of Jonas.

And in the last ende of all, thou hast yet a goodly ensample of learnyng, to see how earthy Jonas is still for all his trying in ẏ whales belly. He was so sore displeased because the Niniuites perished not, that he was wery of hys life, and wished after death for very sorow, that he had lost the glory of hys propheslyng, in ẏ hys prophecie came not to passe. But GOD rebuked hym with a likenes, saying: it greueth thine hart for the losse of a vile shrub or spray wheron thou bestowedst no labour or cost, neither was it thine handy worke. How much more then should it greue myne hart the losse of so great a multitude of innocentes as are in Niniue, which are all mine hādes worke. Nay Jonas, I am God ouer all, and father as well vnto the heathen as vnto the Jewes, and merciful to all, and warne ere I smite, neither threate I so cruelly by any prophet, but that I will forgeue, if they repent and aske mercy: neither on the other side, whatsoeuer I promise, will I fulfill it, saue for their sakes onely, which trust in me, & submit themselues to keepe my lawes of very loue, as naturall children.

A good and profitable example.

Note here the great mercy of God.

ON this maner to read the Scripture is the right vse therof, & why the holy ghost caused it to be written. That is, that thou first seke out ẏ law, that God wyll haue thee to do, interpreting it spiritually, without glose or couering the brightnes of Moses face, so that that thou feele in thyne harte, how that it is damnable sinne before God, not to loue thy neighbour that is thine enemy, as purely as Christ loued thee, & that not to loue thy neighbour in thyne hart, is to haue committed already all sinne against him.

The right maner how to read the Scripture.

And therfore vntill that loue be come, thou must knowledge vnfamedly that there is sinne in the best deede thou doest.

All our deedes are made perfect in chriſtes bloud.

dockt. And it muſt ernestly greue thine hart, and thou muſt waſh all thy good dedes in Chriſtes bloud, ere they can be pure, and an acceptable ſacrifice vn to god, and muſt deſire God the father for his ſake to take thy dedes a worth, and to pardon the imperfectneſſe of them, & to geue thee power to do thē better, and with more feruent loue.

And on the other ſide, thou muſt ſerch diligently for the promiſes of mercye, which God hath promiſed thee again. which two poyntes, that is to witte, the law ſpiritually interpreted, howe that all is damnable ſynne, that is not vnfayned loue out of the ground, and bottome of the harte, after the enſample of Chriſtes loue to vs, because we be all equally created and formed of one God our father, and indifferently bought, and redemed with one bloude of our ſauiour Jeſus Chriſt: and that the promiſes be geuen vnto a repentyng ſoule, that thurſteth and longeth after thē, of the pure and fatherly mercy of God, thorow our fayth only without all deſeruyng of our dedes, or merites of our workes, but for Chriſtes ſake a lone, and for the merites and deſeruynges of hys workes, death and paſſions that he ſuffered all together for vs, and not for hymſelf: which two poyntes I ſay, if they bee written in thyne hart, are the keyes which ſo open all the Scripture vnto thee, that no creature can locke thee out, & with which thou ſhalt go in and out, & find paſture, and foode euery where. And if theſe leſſons be not written in thyne hart, then is all the ſcripture ſhut vp, as a cornel in the ſhale, ſo that thou mayeſt read it, and commen of it, and reherſe all the ſtories of it, and diſpute wittily, and be a profounde ſophiſter, and yet vnderſtand not one iot thereof.

All the promiſes made by God in Chriſt, are made to thē that repent

The two keyes that open al the Scripture

And thirdly that thou take the ſtories and lyues which are contained in the bible, for ſure and vndoubted enſamples, that god ſo wil deale with vs vnto the worldes ende.

Herewith Reader farewell, and be commended vnto God, and vnto the grace of hys ſpirit. And firſt ſee ẏ thou ſtoppe not thyne eares vnto the calling of GOD, and harden not thine hart beguiled with fleſhly interpreting of the law, and falſe imagined and hipocritiſh righteouſnes, leaſt then the Niniuites riſe with thee at the day of iudgement, and condemne thee.

And ſecondarily, if thou fynde ought amiſſe, when thou ſeeſt thy ſelfe in the glaſſe of Gods worde, thinke it neceſſary wiſdome, to amend the ſame betymes, monished and warned by the enſample of other men, rather then tary vntill thou be beaten alſo.

A very fruitfull & good leſſon

And thirdly, if it ſhall ſo chaunce, that the wylde luſtes of thy fleſh ſhall blynde thee, & cary thee cleane away wt thē for a tyme: yet at ẏ latter end, when the God of all mercy ſhall haue compaſſed thee in on euery ſyde with temtations, tribulation, aduerſities and combrance, to bryng thee home againe vnto thine owne harte, and to ſet thy ſinnes which thou wouldeſt ſo fayne couer, and put out of mynde with delectation of voluptuous paſtimes, before the eyes of thy conſcience: then cal the faythfull enſample of Jonas, and all like ſtories vnto thy remembrance, and with Jonas turne vnto thy father that smote thee, not to caſt thee away, but to lay a corroſie, and a fretting plaiſter vnto the pocke, that lay hidde and fret inward, to draw the diſeaſe out, & to make it appeare, that thou mighteſt feele thy ſickneſs, and the danger therof, and come and receiue the healyng plaiſter of mercy.

How thou mayſt at all tymes apply the ſtories of the Bible to thy great comfort.

And forget not that whatſoeuer enſample of mercy, God hath ſhewed ſince the beginnyng of the world, the ſame is promiſed thee, if thou wylt in like maner turne agayne, and receiue it as they did, and with Jonas bee aknowen of thy ſinne and confeſſe it, & knowledge it vnto thy father.

The law muſt be fulfilled with the mercy that is in Chriſt.

And as the law which fretteth thy conſcience is in thine hart, and is none outward thing, euen ſo ſeeke within thy hart the plaiſter of mercy, the promiſes of forgeuenes in our Sauiour Jeſus Chriſt, accordyng vnto all the enſamples of mercy ẏ are gone before.

And with Jonas let them that wait on vanities, and ſeke God here and there, and in euery temple ſaue in their hartes, go: and ſeke thou the teſtament of God in thyne harte. For in thyne hart is the word of the law, & in thine hart is the word of faith, in the promiſes of mercy in Jeſus Chriſt. So that if thou confeſſe with a repentyng hart and knowledge, and ſurely beleue that Jeſus is Lord ouer all ſinne, thou art ſafe.

In thy hart are the wordes of the law, & in thine hart are the promiſes and mercy of Chriſt.

And finally, when the rage of thy conſcience is ceaſed, and quieted with faſt faith in the promiſes of mercy, thē offer with Jonas the offring of prayſe and thankesgeuyng, and pay the vowe of thy Baptisme, that God onely saueth, of his onely mercy and goodnes: that is, beleue stedfastly and preach constātly, that it is God onely that smiteth, and GOD onely that healeth: ascribyng the cause of thy tribulation vnto thyne owne sinne, and the cause of thy deliuerance vnto ỹ mercy of god.

Our sinne is of our selues: but remission & forgeuenes therof commeth frely of the mercy of God for christes sake.

And beware of the leuen that sayth we haue power in our free will before the preaching of the Gospel, to deserue grace, to kepe the law of congruite, or god to bee vnrighteous. And say with John in the first, that as the law was geuen by Moses, euen so grace to fulfill it, is geuen by Christ. And when they say our deedes with grace deserue heauen, say thou with Paule. Rom. vj that euerlastyng lyfe is the gift of GOD thorough Iesus Christe, our Lorde, and that we be made sonnes by fayth. John. i. And therefore heires of GOD with Christ. Rom. viij. And say that we receaue all of God through faith, that followeth repentaunce, and that we doe not our workes vnto God, but either vnto our selues; to slay the sinne that remaineth in the flesh, and to ware perfect, either vnto our neighbours, which do as much for vs agayne in other thynges. And when a man excedeth in gifftes of grace, let him vnderstand that they be geuen him, as well for his weake brethren, as for him self: as though all the bread be committed vnto the panter, yet for his felowes with him, whiche geue thee thankes vnto their Lord, and recompence the panter agayn, with other kynde of seruice in their offices. And when they say that Christ hath made no satisfaction for the sinne we do after our Baptisme: say thou with the doctrine of Paule, that in our Baptisme we receaue the merites of Christes death through repentaunce, & faith, of which two, Baptisme is ỹ signe. And though when we sinne of frailtie after our Baptisme, we receaue the signe no more, yet we be renewed agayne through repentance, and fayth in Christes bloud, of which twaine, ỹ signe of Baptisme euen continued among vs in Baptising our young childrē, doth euer kepe vs in mind, & call vs backe again vnto our profession if we begon astray, & promiseth vs forgeuenesse. Neither cā actual sinne be washed away with our workes, but with Christes bloud: neither can there be any other sacrifice, or satisfaction to Godward for them, saue christes bloud. For as much as we can do no workes vnto God, but receiue only of his mercy, with our repenting faith, through Iesus Christ our lord, and only sauiour: vnto whom and vnto God our father thorowe hym, and vnto his holy spirite, ỹ onely purgeth, sanctifieth, and washeth vs in the innocent blonde of our redemption, be prayse for euer. Amen.

God hath no nede of our workes but we must do thē for our selues, and for the profite of our neighbors.

Christ hath satisfied for our sinnes, as well after baptisme, as before Baptisme.

Our actuall sinnes are washed away in Christes bloud.

The Prologue vppon the Gospell of S. Mathew, by M. William Tyndall.

HEre hast thou (most dere reader) the new Testamēt, or couenaunt made with vs of GOD in Christes bloud. whiche I haue looked ouer agayne (now at the last) with all diligence, & compared it vnto the Greke, & haue weeded out of it many fautes, which lacke of helpe at the begynning and ouerlight, did sow therein. If ought seme chaunged, or not altogether agreyng with the Greeke, let the finder of the faute consider the Hebrue phrase, or maner of speache left in the Greeke wordes. whose preterperfectetence and presentence is oft both one, & the futuretence is the optatiue mode also, & the futuretence oft ỹ imperatiue mode in the actiue voyce, & in the passiue euer. Likewise person for person, number for number, and interrogatiō for a cōditionall, and such lyke is with the Hebrues a common vsage.

I haue also in many places set light in the margent to vnderstand the text by. If any mā finde fautes either with the translation or ought beside (which is easier for many to do, then so well to haue translated, it thē selues of their owne pregnante wittes, at the beginnyng without an ensāple) to the same it shalbe lawfull to trāslate it them selues, and to put what they list thereto. If I shall perceaue either by my selfe, or by information of other, ỹ ought be escaped me, or might more playnly be translated: I will shortly after cause it to be amended. Howbeit, in many places, me thinketh it better to put a declaration in the margent, then to runne to farre from the text. And in many places where the text seemeth at the first choppe hard to be vnderstād, yet the circumstaunces before and after, and often readyng together, make it plaine inough.

More-

Moreouer, because the kyngdome of heauen, which is the Scripture and word of GOD, may be so locked vp, that he which readeth or heareth it, can not vnderstand it: as Christ testifieth how that the Scribes, and Pharisees had so shut it vp Math. xxiij. and had taken awaye the keye of knowledge. Luke. xj. that ỹ Jewes which thought them selues within, were yet so locked out, and are to this day, that they can vnderstand no sentence of the Scripture, vnto their saluation though they cā rehearse the textes euery where and dispute therof, as subtely as the Popish Doctours of Dunces darke learnyng, whiche with their sophistry serued vs, as the Phariseis did ỹ Jewes. Therfore, that I might be found faith full to my father, and Lord in distributyng vnto my brethren and felowes of one faith, their due and necessary fode: so dressing it and seasonyng it, that the weake stomackes may receiue it also, and be the better for it: I thought it my dutie (most deare reader) to warne thee before, and to shew thee, the right way in, and to geue thee, the true keye to open it with all, and to arme thee agaynst false Prophetes, and malicious hypocrites, whose perpetuall studie is to blind the scripture with glo'ses, and there to locke it vp, where it should saue thee soule, & to make vs shoote at a wrōg marke, to put our trust in those thinges that profite their bellyes onely, and sley our soules.

The Jewes to this day ar locked out from the vnderstanding of the scriptures.

The right way into the vnderstanding of the Scriptures.

The right way (yea, and the onely way) to vnderstand the Scripture vnto saluation is, that we earnestly and aboue all thyng search for the profession of our Baptisme, or couenantes made betwene GOD and vs. As for an ensample. Christ sayth Mat. v. Happy are the mercifull, for they shall obtayne mercy. Lo, here GOD hath made a couenaunt with vs, to be mercyfull vnto vs, if we will be mercyfull one to an other, so that the man whiche sheweth mercy vnto his neighbour: may be bold to trust in GOD for mercy, at all needes. And contrary wise, iudgement without mercy, shalbe to him that sheweth not mercy. So now, if he that sheweth no mercy, trust in GOD for mercy, his faith is carnall and worldly, and but vayne presumption. For God hath promised mercy onely to the mercyfull.

Jam. ij.

And therfore the mercyles haue not Gods word that they shall haue mercy: but contrary wise that they shall haue iudgement without mercy. And Math. vj. If ye shall forgeue men theyr fautes, your heauenly father shall forgeue you: but and if ye shall not forgeue men their faultes: no more shall your father forgeue you, your faultes.

Here also by the vertue and strēgth of this couenaunt, wherewith God of his mercy, hath bounde him selfe to vs vnworthy: he that forgeueth his neighbour may be bold, when he returneth and amendeth, to beleue and trust in GOD for remission of what soeuer he hath done amisse. And contrary wise, he that will not forgeue, can not but dispayre of forgeuenesse in the end, and feare iudgement without mercy.

The generall couenaunt wherin all other are comprehended & included, is this. If we meke our selues to god, to kepe all his lawes, after the ensample of Christ: then God hath bounde him selfe vnto vs, to kepe and make good all ỹ mercies promised in Christ, thoroughout all the Scripture.

The generall couenaunt that God hath made with vs.

All the whole law, which was geuē to vtter our corrupt nature, is comprehended in the tenne commaundementes. And the ten commaundemēts are comprehended in these two: loue God, and thy neighbour. And he that loueth his neighbour in GOD, and Christ, fulfilleth these two, and consequently the ten, and finally all the other. Now if we loue our neighbours in God and Christ, that is to witte, if we be louyng, kynde and mercyfull to them, because God hath created them vnto his likenes, and Christ hath redemed them, and bought them with his blood: thē may we be bold to trust in God through Christ and his deserning, for all mercy. For God hath promised and bounde him selfe to vs, to shew vs all mercy, and to be a father almighty to vs, so that we shall not neede to feare the power of all our aduersaries.

In these commaundements is contayned the whole law.

Now if any mā that submitteth not him selfe to kepe the cōmaundements, doe thinke that hee hath any faith in God: the same mans sayth is vayne, worldly, damnable, diuelish, & playne presumption as is aboue sayd, and is no sayth that can iustify, or be accepted before God. And that is it that James meaneth in his Epistle. For how can a man beleue (sayth Paule) without a preacher, Rom. 10. Now read all the scripture, and see where God sent any to preach mercy to any, saue vnto them onely that repente, and turne to God with all their hartes, to kepe his commaundementes. Unto the disobedient that wil not turne, is threatned wrath, vengeance, and damnation, according to all the terrible actes, and fearful ensamples of the Bible.

Where no good fruites are, there the sayth is vayne.

What sayth it is that saueth.

Faith now in God ẏ father through our Lord Jesus Christ, accordyng to the couenauntes & appointment made betwene God and vs, is our saluatiō. wherfore I haue euer noted the couenantes in the margents, & also ẏ promises. Moreouer, where thou findest a promise, and no couenaunt expressed therwith: there must thou vnderstand a couenaunt, that we when we be receyued to grace, know it to be our duty to kepe the law. As for an ensample when the scripture sayth, Mat. 7. Aske, and it shall be geuen you, seeke and ye shall fynde, knocke and it shall be opened vnto you. It is to be vnderstand, if that when thy neighbour asketh, seketh or knocketh to thee, thou thē shew hym the same mercy which thou desirest of God, then hath god bound him selfe to helpe thee agayne, and els not.

Two thinges are required to be in a christen mā. The first is a stedfast fayth, and trust in almighty God, to obtayne all the mercy that he hath promised vs, through ẏ deseruyng and merites of Christes bloude onely, without all respect to our owne workes.

Two thinges are required to be in a christian man.

And the other is, that we forsake euill, and turne to GOD to kepe hys lawes, and to fight agaynst our selues and our corrupt nature perpetually, that we may do the will of God euery day better and better.

Thys haue I sayd (most deare reader) to warne thee, least thou shouldst be deceyued, and shouldest not onely read the scriptures in vayne, and to no profite, but also vnto thy greater damnation. For the nature of gods worde is, that whosoeuer read it, or heare it reasoned and disputed before hym, it wyll begin immediately to make hym euery day better and better, till he be grown into a perfect man in ẏ knowledge of Christ, and loue of the law of God, or els make hym worse & worse, till he be hardened, that he openly resist the spirit of god, & then blaspheme, after the ensample of Pharao, Corah, Abiron, Balam, Judas, Symon Magus and such other.

What the nature of gods word is.

This to bee euen so, the woordes of Christ, John. 3. do well confirme. This is condemnation (sayth he) the light is come into the world, but the men loued darkenes more then light, for their deedes were euill. Behold, when the light of Gods worde commeth to a man, whether he reade it, or heare it preached or testified, and he yet haue no loue therto, to fashion his lyfe therafter, but consenteth still vnto hys olde dedes of ignoraunce: then begynneth hys iust damnation immediatly, and he is henceforth without excuse, in that he refused mercy offered hym, for God offreth mercy vpon the conditiō that he will mende hys liuing: but he wyll not come vnder the couenaunte. And from that houre forward he warreth worse and worse, God taking hys spirit of mercy and grace from him, for his vnthankfulnes sake.

When we heare gods will and do it not, then God withdraweth his mercy and fauour from vs.

And Paul writeth Rom. 1. that the heathen, because whē they knew god, they had no lust to honour hym wyth godly liuing, therfore God poured his wrath vpon them, and tooke hys spirit from them, and gaue thē vp to their hartes lustes to serue sinne, from iniquitie to iniquitie, till they were thorowly hardened, and past repentance.

And Pharao because when ẏ word of God was in his countrey, & Gods people scattred throughout all his lād, & yet he neither loued thē, nor it, therfore God gaue hym vp, and in takyng hys spirit of grace from hym, so hardened hys hart with couetousnes, that afterward no myracle could conuerte hym.

Hereunto pertaineth ẏ parable of the talentes. Mat. 25. The Lord commaūdeth the talent to be taken away from the euill and slouthfull seruant, and to bynde hym hand and foote, and to cast hym into vtter darkenes, and to geue the talent vnto hym that had ten, saying: to all that haue, more shall be geuen: but from hym that hath not, that he hath, shal be taken from hym. That is to say, he that hath a good harte toward the word of god, and to garnish it with godly liuyng, and to testify it to other, ẏ same shall increase daily more and more in the grace of Christ. But he that loueth it not, to lyue therafter, and to edify other, the same shall loose the grace of true knowledge, & be blinded agayne, and euery day war worse and worse, and blynder and blynder, tyll he be an vtter enemy of the worde of God, and hys hart so hardened, that it shall be impossible to conuert hym.

He that harkeneth to the word of God & doth it, the same shalbe blessed in his deede.

And Luke 12. The seruaunte that knoweth hys maisters wyll and pre-pareth not hymselfe, shall be beaten wyth many stripes: That is, shall haue greater damnation. And Mat. 7. All that heare the worde of God, and do not therafter, build on sande: that is, as the foundation laid on sand, can not resist violence of water, but is vndermyned and ouerthrowne, euen so the fayth of them that haue no lust, nor lone to the law of God, builded vpon ẏ sand of their owne imaginatiõs, and not on the rocke of Gods word, accordyng to hys couenauntes: turneth to desperation in tyme of tribulatiõ, and when God commeth to iudge.

What it is to build vpon sand.

And the vineyard Mat. 21. planted and hyred out to the husbandmen that would not render to the Lorde of the fruit in due tyme, and therfore was takẽ from them, and hyred out to other, doth confirme the same. For Christe sayth to the Iewes, the kingdome of heauẽ shalbe taken from you, and geuen to a nation that wyll bring forthe ẏ frutes therof, as it is come to passe. For the Iewes haue lost the spirituall knowledge of God, & of his cõmaundementes, and also of all the scripture, so that they can vnderstand nothyng godly. And the doze is so locked vppe, that all their knockyng is in vayne, though many of them take great payn for gods sake. And Luke 13. The figge tree that beareth no fruite, is cõmaunded to be plucked vp.

And finally, hereto pertayneth with infinyte other, the terrible parable of the vncleane spirite (Luke. 11.) which after hee is cast out, when hee commeth, and findeth hys house swept and garnished, taketh to hym 7. worse then hymselfe, and commeth & entreth in, and dwelleth there, and so is ẏ ende of the man worse then the beginnyng. The Iewes, they had cleansed themselues with gods word, from all outward idolatry, and worshipping of idols. But their hartes remayned styll faythlesse to godward, and toward his mercy and truth, and therfore without loue also, & lust to his law, & to their neighbours for hys sake, and through false trust in their owne woorkes (to which heresy, the chylde of perdition, the wicked bishop of Rome with hys lawyers, hath broughte vs christen) were more abhominable idolaters thẽ before, and become ten tymes worse in the end, then at the beginning. For the first idolatry was soone spyed and easie to be rebuked of the Prophets by the Scripture. But the latter is more subtill to beguile withall, and an hundreth tymes of more difficultie, to bee weeded out of mens hartes.

The vncleane spirite that returneth in worse sort, thẽ he was when hee was cast forth.

This also is a conclusion, nothyng more certayne, or more proued by the testimony, and ensamples of the scripture: that if any that fauoureth the worde of God, be so weake that he can not chaste hys flesh, hym wyll the lord chastice and scourge euery day sharper and sharper with tribulation, and misfortune, that nothyng shall prosper with him, but all shall go against him, what soeuer he taketh in hand, & will visite him with pouertie, with sicknesses and diseases, and shall plague him, with plague vpon plague, & the more lothsome, terrible and fearefull then other, till he be at vtter defiaunce with his flesh.

Such as are professours of the worde of God, and will not tame and scourge thẽ selues, thẽ will God plague and scourge.

Let vs therefore that haue now at this tyme our eyes opened agayne, through the tender mercy of GOD, kepe a meane. Let vs so put our trust in the mercy of GOD through Christ, that we know it our duetie to kepe the law of GOD, and to loue our neighbours, for their fathers sake whiche created them, and for their Lords sake which redemed them, and bought thẽ so dearely with his bloud. Lette vs walke in ẏ feare of God, and haue our eyes open vnto both partes of Gods couenaunts, beyng certified that none shalbe partaker of the mercy, saue hee that will fight against the flesh to kepe the lawe. And let vs arme our selues with this remembraunce, ẏ as Christs woorkes iustifie from sinne, and set vs in the fauour of GOD: so our owne dedes through woorkyng of the spirite of God, helpe vs to continue in the fauour and the grace, into which Christ hath brought vs, and that we can no longer continue in fauour and grace, then our hartes are to kepe the law.

Christes deedes set vs in the fauour of God: & our owne, helpe vs to continue in his fauour.

Furthermore concernyng the lawe of God, this is a generall conclusion, that the whole lawe, whether they be ceremonies, sacrifices, yea, or Sacramentes either, or preceptes of equitie betweene man and man, throughout al degrees of the world, all were genẽ for our profite and necessitie onely, & not for any nede that God hath of our keping thẽ, or ẏ his ioy is encreased therby: or that the dede, for the dede it selfe doth please him. That is, all that God requireth of vs, whẽ we be at one with him, and doe put our trust in him, and loue him, is that we loue, euery man his neighbour to pity hym, & to haue compassion on him in all his needes, and to be mercyfull vnto him. This to be euen so Christ testifieth, in the .vij. of Math: This is the lawe, and the Prophetes. That is, to do as thou wouldst be done to (accordyng I meane to the doctrine of the Scripture) and not to do that thou wouldest not haue done to thee, is all that the law requireth & the Prophets. And Paul to the Rom. xiij. affirmeth also ỹ loue is that fulfillyng of the law, and that he which loueth, doth of his owne accorde all that the law requireth. And .i. Tim. i. Paul sayth, that the loue of a pure hart and good conscience and faith vnfayned, is the end and fulfillyng of the law. For faith vnfained in Christes bloud, causeth ỹ to loue for Christes sake, which loue is the pure loue onely, & the onely cause of a good conscience. For then is the conscience pure, whē the eye looketh to Christ in all her deedes, to doe them for his sake, and not for her owne singular aduantage, or any other wicked purpose. And John, both in hys Gospel and also Epistles, speaketh neuer of any other law, then to loue one an other purely, affirmyng that we haue God himselfe dwellyng in vs, & all that GOD desireth, if we loue one the other.

Loue is the fulfilling of the law.

Faith is cause of loue.

Seyng then, that fayth to God and loue, and mercyfulnesse to our neighbours, is all that ỹ law requireth, therfore of necessitie the lawe must be vnderstand and interprete by them. So that all inferiour lawes are to be kept & obserued, as lōg as they be seruaūts to faith and loue: and then to be brokē immediatly, if thorough any occasion, they hurt either the fayth whiche we should haue to Godward, in the confidence of Christes bloud, or the loue whichē we owe to our neighbours for Christes sake.

And therfore when the blinde Phariseis murmured, and grudged at him and his Disciples, that they brake the Sabboth day, and traditions of the elders, and that he him self did eate with Publicanes, and sinners, he aunswered. Math. ix. allegyng Esayas ỹ Prophet: Go rather and learne what this meaneth, I require mercy, and not sacrifice. And Math. xij. Oh that ye wist what this meaneth, I require mercy and not sacrifice. For onely loue and mercyfulnesse vnderstandeth the law: and els nothyng. And he that hath not that writtē in his hart, shall neuer vnderstand the law: no, though al the angels of heauen went about to teache him. And he that hath that grauen in his hart, shal not onely vnderstand the law, but also shall do of his owne inclinatiō all that is required of the law, though neuer law had bene geuen: as all mothers do of them selues without law vnto their children, all that can be required by any law, loue ouercommyng all payne, grief, tedionsnesse or lothsomnesse: and euen so no doubt if we had continued in our first state of innocencie, we should euer haue fulfilled the law, without compulsion of the law.

God requireth mercie and not sacrifice.

Onely loue vnderstandeth the law.

And bicause the law (which is a doctrine throughe teachyng euery man his duetie, doth vtter our corrupt nature) is sufficiently described by Moses, therfore is litle mention made ther of in the new Testament, saue of loue onely, wherin all the law is included, as seldome mētion is made of the new Testament in the old law, saue here & there are promises made vnto thē, that Christ should come and bielse them, & deliuer them, and that the Gospel, and new Testamēt should be preached and published vnto all nations.

The Gospell is glad tidynges of mercy and grace, and that our corrupt nature shalbe healed again for christes sake, and for the merites of his deseruynges onely. Yet on that condition that we will turne to God, to learne to keepe his lawes spiritually, that is to say, of loue for his sake, & will also suffer the curyng of our infirmities.

Gospell.

The new Testament is as much to say as a new couenaunt. The old Testamēt is an old tempozall couenaunt, made betwene GOD, and the carnall children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, otherwise called Israell, vpon the deedes, and the obseruing of a temporall law: where the reward of the kepyng is tempozall life, and prosperitie in the land of Canaan, and the breakyng is rewarded with tēpozall death, and punishment. But the new Testamēt is an euerlastyng couenaūt, made vnto the children of GOD thorough faith in Christ, vpon the deseruynges of Christ: where eternall life is promised to all that beleue, and death to all that are vnbeleuyng. My deedes, if I kepe the law, are rewarded with tempozall promises of this lyfe. But if I beleue in Christ, Christes deedes haue purchased for me the eternall promise of the euerlastyng lyfe. If I cōmit nothyng worthy of death: I deserue to

New Testament.

my

my reward that no man kill me: if I hurt no man, I am worthy that no mā hurt me. If I helpe my neighbour, I am worthy that he helpe me agayn. &c.

Our workes extend no farther then to our neighbour.

So that with outward deedes with whiche I serue other men, I deserue that other men doe like to me in this worlde: and they extēd no further. But Christes dedes extende to lyfe euerlasting vnto all that beleue. &c. These be sufficient in this place concernyng the law and the Gospell, new Testament & old: so that as there is but one God, one Christ, one faith, & one Baptisme, euen so vnderstand thou that there is but one Gospell, thoughe many write it, and many preach it. For all preache the same Christ, & bryng the same glad tidinges. And therto Paules Epistles with the Gospell of John and his first Epistle, and the first Epistle of S. Peter, are most pure Gospell: and most playnly, and richely describe the glory of the grace of Christe. If ye require more of the law, seke in the Prologue to the Romaines, and in other places where it is sufficiently entreated of.

¶Repentaunce.

Why Tyndall vsed this worde repētaūce, rather then penaunce.

COncerning this word repētaunce, or (as they vsed) penaunce, the Hebrue hath in the old Testament generally (Sob) turne, or be conuerted. For which the translation that we take for S. Jeromes, hath most part (Conuerti) to turne, to be conuerted, and somtime (Agere pœnitentiam) And the Greeke in the newe Testament hath perpetually (Metanoeo) to turne in the hart, and minde, and to come to the right knowledge, and to a mans right wit agayn. For which (Metanoeo) S. Jeromes trāslation hath sometime (Ago pœnitentiam) I do repent: sometime (Pœniteo) I repent, sometime (Pœniteor) I am repentaunt: sometyme (Habeo pœnitentiam) I haue repentaunce: sometyme (Pœnitet me) it repenteth me. And Erasmus vseth much this worde (Respiseo) I come to my selfe, or to my right mynde againe. And the very sence and signification both of the Hebrue, & also of the Greke word is: to be conuerted and to turne to God with all the hart, to know hys will, & to liue accordyng to his lawes, and to be cured of our corrupt nature with the oyle of his spirite, and wyne of obedience to his doctrine. Whiche conuersion or turnyng if it be vnfayned, these foure do accompany it, and are included therin. Confession, not in the Priestes eare, for that is but mans inuention, but to God in the hart, and before all the congregation of GOD, how that we be sinners and sinnefull, and that our whole nature is corrupt, and inclined to sinne and all vnrighteousnes, and therfore euill, wicked, and damnable, and his law holy and iust, by which our sinnefull nature is rebuked. And also to our neighbours, if we haue offended any person particularly. Then contrition, sorowfulnes that we be such damnable sinners, and not only haue sinned, but are wholy enclined to sinne still.

The foure partes of repentance.

Thirdly, fayth (of which our olde doctours haue made no mention at all in the description of their penaunce) that God for Christes sake doth forgeue, vs and receyue vs to mercy, and is at one with vs, and will heale our corrupt nature. And fourthly, satisfaction or amendes makyng, not to god, with holy workes, but to my neighbour whom I haue hurt, and the congregation of God whome I haue offended (if any open crime be found in me) and submittyng of a mans selfe vnto the congregation or churche of Christ, and to the officers of the same, to haue his lyfe corrected and gouerned henceforth of them, accordyng to the true doctrine of ỹ church of Christ. And note this, that as satisfaction or amēdes makyng, is counted righteousnesse before the world, and a purgyng of sinne: so that the world whē I haue made a full mendes, hath no further to complayne. Euen so fayth in Christes bloud is counted righteousnesse, and a purging of all sinne before God.

What maner of satisfaction wee ought to make.

Moreouer, he that sinneth agaynst his brother, sinneth also against his father almighty God, and as the synne committed agaynst his brother, is purged before the world with makyng amendes, or asking forgeuenes: euen so is the sinne committed agaynst God, purged thorow fayth in christes bloud onely. For Christ sayth, John. 8. Except ye beleue that I am he, ye shal die in your sinnes. That is to say, if ye thinke that there is any other sacrifice, or satisfaction to Godward, than me, ye remayne euer in sinne before God, howsoeuer righteous ye appeare before the worlde. Wherfore now, whether ye call this (Metonoia) repētance, conuersion or turning agayne to god, either amendyng, &c. or whether ye say, repent, be conuerted, turne to god, amend your liuing, or what ye list, I am content, so ye vnderstande what is ment therby, as I haue now declared.

¶Elders.

Why he nameth thē Elders, & not priests.

IN the olde testament, the temporall heads & rulers of the Iewes, which had the gouernaunce ouer the laye, or common people, are called Elders, as ye may see in the foure Euangelistes. Out of which custome, Paule in his epistle, and also Peter, call the prelates, and spirituall gouernours whiche are Bishops and priestes, Elders. Nowe whether ye call them elders or priests, it is to me all one: so that ye vnderstād that they be officers, and seruaunts of the worde of God: vnto the which all men both hie and lowe, that will not rebell against Christ must obey, as lōg as they preach and rule truely, and no longer.

A Prologue made vppon the Gospell of S. Marke, by M. William Tyndall.

William Tyndals Prologue vpon the Gospell of Marke.

OF Marke read (Act. 12.) how Peter (after he was loosed out of prison by the Angell) came to Markes mothers house, where many of the Disciples were praying for hys deliuerance. And Paul and Barnabas tooke hym with them from Ierusalem, & brought hym to Antioche, Act. 12. and Acts. 13. Paule and Barnabas tooke Marke with them, when they were sente to preach, from whome he also departed, (as it appeareth in ẏ said chapter,) and returned to Ierusalem agayne. And Act. 15. Paule and Barnabas were at variaunce about hym, Paule not willing to take hym with them, because he forsoke them in their first iorney. Notwithstanding yet, when Paule wrote the epistle to the Collossians, Marke was with hym, as he sayth in ẏ fourth Chapter: of whō Paule also testifieth, both that hee was Barnabas sisters sonne, and also his fellowe worker in the kyngdome of God.

And 2. Timothie 4. Paul cōmaundeth Timothie to bring Marke wyth hym, affirmyng that he was needefull to hym, to minister to hym. Finally, he was also with Peter when he wrote hys first Epistle, and so familiar, that Peter calleth hym hys sonne, whereof ye see, of whom he learned hys gospel, euen of the very apostles, with whom he had hys continuall conuersation, & also of what authoritie his writing is, and how worthy of credence.

A Prologue made vppon the Gospell of S. Luke, by M. William Tyndall.

The Prologue of W. Tyndall vpon the Gospell of Luke.

LUcas was Paules companion, at the least way from the 16. of the Actes forth, and with hym in all his tribulation, and he went with Paule at hys last going vp to Ierusalem. And from thence he followed Paul to Cesarea, where he lay two yere in prison. And from Cesarea he went with Paul to Rome, where he lay ij. other yeares in prison. And he was with Paul whē he wrote to the Colossians, as he testifieth in the fourth chapter, saying: The beloued Lucas the Phisitian saluteth you. And he was with Paul when he wrote the second epistle to Timothie, as he sayeth in the 4. chapter, saying: Onely Lucas is with me: wherby ye see the autozitie of the man, & of what credence and reuerence hys writing is worthy of, and thereto of whome he learned the story of his Gospell, as he hymselfe sayth, how that he learned it, and searched it out with all diligence of them that saw it, and were also partakers at the doyng. And as for the Actes of the Apostles, he himselfe was at the doyng of them (at the least) of the most parte, and had his part therin, and therefore wrote of hys owne experience.

A Prologue made vppon the Gospell of S. Iohn, by William Tyndall.

The Prologue of W. Tyndall vpon the Gospell of Iohn.

IOhn, what he was, is manifest by the thre first euangelistes. First christes Apostle, and ẏ one of the chiefe. Then christes nie kinsman, and for his syngular innocency and softenesse, singularly beloued, and of singular familiaritie with Christ, and euer one of ẏ thre witnesses of most secret things. The cause of his writing was certaine heresies that arose in his tyme, namely, ij. of which one denyed Christ to be very God, and the other to be very man, and to become in the very flesshe, & nature of man. Agaynst the whiche ij. heresies, he wrote both his Gospell and also his first epistle, and in the beginning ginnyng of his gospell sayth: That the worde or thing was at the beginning, and was with God, and was also very God, and that all thinges were created by it, and that it was also made flesh: that is to say, became very man, and he dwelt among vs (sayth he) and we saw his glory.

And in the beginnyng of hys epistle he sayth: we shewe you of the thyng that was from the beginnyng, whiche also we heard, saw with our eyes and our handes handled. And agayne, we shewe you euerlastyng lyfe, that was with the father and appeared to vs, & we heard and saw, &c.

In that he sayeth, that it was from the beginning, and that it was eternal lyfe, and that it was with God, he affirmeth hym to be very God. And that he saith, we heard, saw, and felt, he witnesseth ỳ he was very man also. John also wrote last, and therefore touched not the story that the other had compiled. But writeth most of faith, and promises, and of the Sermons of Christe. This be sufficiẽt concernyng the foure Euangelistes and their authoritie, and worthines to be beleued.

A Prologue vpon the Epistle of S. Paule to the Romaines, by M. William Tyndall. *

The epistle to the Romaynes is the excellentest part of the new Testament.

Forasmuch as this epistle is the principal, and most excellent part of the new testament, and most pure Euangelion, that is to say, glad tidings, and that we call gospell, and also a light and a way in, vnto the whole scripture. I thinke it meete that euery christen man not onely know it, by roate and without the boke, but also exercise himself therin euermore continually, as with the daily bread of the soule. No man verily can read it to oft, or study it to well, for the more it is studied, the easier it is, the more it is chewed, the pleasanter it is, and the more groundly it is searched, the precioser thynges are found in it, so great treasure of spirituall thinges lyeth hid therin.

I will therfore bestow my labour & diligence, thorow this little preface or prologue, to prepare a way in, therunto, so farreforth as God shall geue me grace, that it may be the better vnderstand of euery man, for it hath ben hitherto euill darkened with glozes, and wonderful dreames of sophisters, that no man could spy out the intent, and meanyng of it, which neuertheless of it selfe, is a bright lyght, and sufficient to geue light vnto all the scripture.

Here you must note these wordes, law, sinne, &c.

First we must marke diligently the maner of speakyng of the Apostle, and aboue all thing, know what Paul meaneth by these wordes the Law, sinne, grace, fayth, righteousnes, flesh, spirite, and such lyke, or els read thou it neuer so ofte, thou shalt but loose thy labor. This word Lawe may not be vnderstand here, after the common manner, and to vse Pauls terme, after the maner of men, or after mans wayes: that thou wouldest say the law here in this place were nothyng but learnyng, which techeth what ought to be done, and what ought not to be done, as it goeth with mans law, where the law is fulfilled with outward workes only, though the harte be neuer so far of, but God iudgeth after the grounde of the harte, ye and the thoughtes and the secret mouinges of the mynde, therfore hys law requireth the grounde of the hart, and loue from the bottome therof, and is not content with the outward worke onely, but rebuketh those workes most of all, which spryng not of loue from the ground, and low bottome of the hart, though they appeare outward, neuer so honest and good, as Christ in the gospell rebuketh the pharises aboue all other that were open sinners, and calleth them hipocrites, that is to say, Simulars, and paynted Sepulchers, which Pharises yet liued no men so pure, as pertayning to the outward dedes, and workes of ỳ law, ye, and Paul in the third chapter of his epistle vnto the Philippiãs confesseth of himselfe, that as touching the lawe, he was such a one, as no man coulde complayne on, and notwithstandyng was yet a murderer of the christen, persecuted them, and tormented them so sore, that he compelled them to blaspheme Christ, & was altogether mercilesse, as many which now fayne outward goodworkes, are.

The law of God requireth the bottom of our hartes

S. Paul was a great persecutor of the christians.

For this cause the 115. psalme calleth all men lyers, because that no man kepeth the law from the ground of the harte, neither can kepe it.

For all men are naturally inclyned vnto euill, and hate the law, we fynde in our selues vnlust, and tediousnes to do good, but lust and delectation to do euill. Now where no free lust is to do

* A great part of this Prologue is translated by Tyndale from Luther in Matthew Coverdale.

If we be not willing to do good, then doth sinne raign in vs.

good, there the bottom of the hart fulfilleth not the law, and there no doute is also sinne and wrathe deserued before GOD, though there be neuer so great outwarde shew, and apparance of honest liuing.

For this cause concludeth S. Paule in the second chapter, that the Jewes all are sinners and transgressors of the law, thoughe they make men belene thorow hipocrisie of outward workes, how that they fulfill the law, & sayth, that he onely whithe doth the law is righteous before God, meanyng therby that no mā with outward workes, No man can fulfill the law, but Christ onely. fulfilleth the law.

Thou (saith he to the Jewe) teachest a mā should not breake wedlocke, and yet breakest wedlocke thy selfe. wherin thou iudgest an other man, therein condemnest thou thy selfe, for thou thy selfe doest euen the very same thynges whiche thou iudgest. As thoughe hee would say, thou liuest outwardly well in the workes of the law, and iudgest them that liue not so: thou teachest other men: and seest a mote in an other, mās eie, but art not ware of the beame that is in thyne owne eye. For though thou keepe the lawe outwardly with workes, for feare of rebuke, shame, and punishment, either for loue of reward, vantage, & vayne glory, yet doest thou all without lust and loue toward the law, and haddest leuer a great deale otherwise do, if thou diddest not feare the lawe, ye inwardly in thine harte thou wouldest that there were no law, The pure and perfect kepyng of the law is to do the same of loue. no nor yet God, the author and venger of the lawe (if it were possible) so paynefull it is vnto thee, to haue thyne appetites refrayned, and to bee kept downe.

Wherfore then it is a playne conclusion, that thou from the grounde and bottome of thyne hart art an enemy to the law. what preuayleth it now, that thou teachest an other man not to steale, when thou thyne owne selfe art a thefe in thyne hart, and outwardly wouldest fayne steale if thou durst: though that the outward dedes abyde not alway behind with such hypocrites and dissimulers, but breake forth among, euen as an euill scabbe, or a pocke can not alwayes be kept in with violence of medicine. Thou teachest an The law cannot be satisfied, but by inward loue. other man, but teachest not thy selfe, ye thou wotest not what thou teachest, for thou vnderstādest not the law a right, how that it can not be fulfilled and satisfied, but with inward loue and affection, much lesse can it be fulfilled with outward deedes, and workes onely. The law encreaseth sinne. Moreouer the law encreaseth sinne, as he sayth in the fift Chapter, because that mā is an enemie to the law, for as much as it requireth so many thinges cleane contrarie to his nature, wherof he is not able to fulfill one pointe or title, as the law requireth it. And therfore are we more prouoked, and haue greater lust to breake it.

For whiche causes sake he sayth in the seuenth Chapter, that the lawe is The law is spirituall spirituall, as though he would say, if the law wer fleshly, and but mans doctrine, it might be fulfilled, satisfied, and stilled with outward deedes. But now is the law ghostly and no man fulfilleth it, except that all that he doth spryng of loue from the bottome of the hart. Such a new hart and lusty courage vnto the law ward canst thou neuer come by of thyne owne strength & enforcement, but by the operation and worksyng of the spirite. For the spirite The spirite of god maketh a mā spirituall. of God onely maketh a man spirituall & like vnto the law, so that now hence forth hee doth nothyng of feare, or for lucre or vantages sake, or of vaine glory, but of a free hart, and of inward lust. The law is spirituall, and wilbe both loued, and fulfilled of a spirituall hart, and therefore of necessitie requireth it the spirit, that maketh a mans hart free, and geueth him lust and courage vnto the law ward. where such The law is good, righteous and holy. a spirite is not, there remaineth sinne, grudging, and hatred against the law, which law neuertheless is good, righteous, and holy.

Acquaint thy selfe therfore with the maner of speakyng of the Apostle, and let this now sticke fast in thyne hart, that it is not both one, to do the dedes and workes of the law, and to fulfill the law. The worke of ỹ law is, what workes of the law & the fulfilling of the law, are two things soeuer a man doth, or can doe of his owne free will, of his owne proper strength, and enforcing. Notwithstandyng thoughe there be neuer so great worksyng, yet as long as their remaineth in the hart, vnlust, tediousnes, grudgyng, grief, payne, lothsumnes, & compulsion toward the law, so long are all the workes vnprofitable, lost, ye and damnable in the sight of God. This meaneth Paule in the iij. Chapter, where he sayth, by the dedes of the lawe shall no flesche be iustified in the sight of God. Hereby perceauest thou, that those sophisters are but discea-uers, whiche teach that a man may and must

By the workes of the law no man can be iustified.

must prepare him selfe to grace and to the fauour of god, with good workes. How cā they prepare them selues vnto the fauour of God, & to that whiche is good, when them selues can do no good, no can not once thinke a good thought, or consent to do good, the deuill possessing their hartes, myndes, & thoughtes captiue at his pleasure? Cā those workes please GOD, thinkest thou, whiche are done with grief, payne, and tediousnes, with an euill will, with a contrary and a grudgyng mynde? O holy saint Prosperous, how mightely, with the Scripture of Paule diddest thou confound this heresie, twelue hundred yeares a goe or therupon.

As the law is spirituall so it must be fulfilled spiritually.

To fulfill the law is, to do ỹ workes therof, and what soeuer the lawe commaundeth with loue, lust, and inward affection and delectation, and to lyue godly and well, freely, willyngly, and without compulsion of the lawe, euen as thoughe there were no lawe at all. Such lust and free libertie to loue the law, commeth onely by the worke kyng of the spirite in the hart, as hee sayth in the first Chapter.

Where true fayth is, there is the spirit of God.

Now is the spirite none otherwise geuen, then by fayth onely, in that we beleue the promises of God, without wauerying how that God is true, and will fulfill all hys good promises toward vs for Christes blondes sake, as it is playne in the first Chapter, I am not ashamed, sayth Paule, of Christes glad tydynges, for it is the power of GOD vnto saluation to as many as beleue, for at once and together euen as we beleue the glad tydynges preached to vs, the holy ghost entreth into our hartes, and looseth the bondes of the deuill, whiche before possessed our hartes in captiuitie, and held them that we could haue no lust to ỹ will of God in the law, and as the spirite commeth by fayth onely, euen so fayth commeth by hearyng the word, or glad tidynges of God, when Christ is preached how that hee is Gods sonne and man also, dead and risen againe for our sakes, as he sayth in the thyrd, fourth, and tenth Chapters. All our iustifying then commeth of faith, and faith and the spirite come of God, and not of vs.

Our iustification is by fayth in Christ.

Hereof commeth it, that fayth onely iustifieth, maketh righteous, and fulfilleth the law, for it bringeth the spirit through Christes deserunges, the spirite bringeth lust, looseth the hart, maketh hun free, setteth hym at libertie, and geueth him strength to worke the deedes of the lawe with loue, euen as the law requireth, then at the last out of the same fayth, so worksyng in the hart, springing all good workes by their owne accorde. That meaneth he in the thyrd Chapter, for after he hath cast away the workes of the law, so that he sounderh as though he would breake, and disanulle the law through fayth, he answereth to that might bee layd agaynst, saying, we destroy not the law through fayth, but mayntaine, further, or stablish the law through fayth, that is to say, we fulfill the law thorough fayth.

Out of true fayth springeth all good workes.

Sinne in the Scripture is not called that outward worke onely committed by the body, but all the whole busines, and what so euer accompanyeth, moueth or stirreth vnto the outward deede, and that whence the workes spring, as vnbelefe, pronenes and readynes vnto the deede in the grounde of the hart, with all the powers, affections and appetites, wherwith we can but sinne, so that we say, that a man then sinneth when he is caried awaye headlong into sinne, all together as much as he is, of that poyson inclination and corrupt nature, wherein hee was conceiued and borne: For there is none outward sinne committed, except a mā be caried away all together, with life, soule, hart, body, lust and mynde thereunto. The Scripture loketh singularly vnto the hart, & vnto the roote and originall fountaine of all synne, which is vnbelefe in the bottom of the hart. For as fayth onely iustifieth and bringeth the spirit, and lust vnto the outward good workes. Euen so vnbelefe onely damneth and keepeth out the spirit, prouoketh the flesh, and styreth vp lust vnto the euill outwarde workes, as it fortuned to Adam & Eue in Paradise. Gene. 3.

Sinne what it is?

Sinne in ỹ scripture is onely called vnbelefe.

For this cause Christ calleth synne vnbelefe, and that notablie in the. 16. of John, the spirite (sayth he) shall reproue the world of sinne, because they beleue not in me. wherefore then before all good workes as good frutes, there must needes be fayth in the hart whence they spring, and before all bad deedes as bad frutes, there must needes be vnbelief in the hart, as in the roote, fountain, pith, and strēgth of all sinne, whiche vnbelefe is called the head of the Serpent, and of the old Dragon, which the womans seede Christ, must treade vnderfoote, as it was promised vnto Adam.

Grace and gift haue this difference. Grace properly is Gods fauour, benenolence or kynd minde, which of his owne selfe, without deseruyng of vs, he beareth to vs, whereby he was moned, and inclined to geue Christ vnto vs, with all his other giftes of grace. Gift is ẏ holy ghost, and his worcking which hee poureth into the hartes of them, on whō he hath mercy, and whō he fauoureth. Though the giftes & the spirit encrease in vs dayly, & haue not yet their ful perfection, ye and though there remaine in vs yet euill lustes & synne, which fight agaynst the spirite, as he sayth here in the 7. chapter, and in the 5. to the Galath. and as it was spoken before in the 3. chapter of Gen. of the debate betwene ẏ womans sede, & the seed of ẏ serpent, yet neuertheles gods fauour is so great, and so strong ouer vs for Christes sake, that we are counted for full whole, and perfect before God. For Gods fauour towarde vs, denideth not her selfe, encreasyng a little and a little, as do the giftes, but receiueth vs whole, & altogether in ful loue for Christes sake our intercessour and mediator, and because ẏ the giftes of the spirite, & the battell, betwene the spirite and euill lustes, are begonne in vs already.

Grace, how it is vnderstand in the scriptures.

Gift, what it is.

God for Christes sake receaueth vs.

Of this now vnderstandest thou the 7. chapter, where Paul accuseth hymselfe as a sinner, and yet in the 8. chapter, sayeth: there is no damnation to them that are in Christ, and that because of the spirite, and because the giftes of the spirite are begonne in vs. Sinners we are, because the flesh is not full killed, and mortified. Nenertheles, in as muche as we beleue in Christ, and haue the earnest and begynning of the spirite, God is so louyng & fauourable vnto vs, that he will not looke on such sinne, neither wil counte it as sinne, but will deale with vs accordyng to our belief in Christ, and according to his promises which he hath sworne to vs, vntyll the sinne be full slayne and mortified by death.

There is no damnation to the that are in Christ.

Faythe is not mans opinion and dreame, as some imagine and fayne, when they heare the story of the Gospell: but when they see that there follow no good workes, nor amendment of liuyng, though they heare, ye, & can bable many thyngs of fayth, then they fall from the right way, and say, fayth onely iustifieth not, a man must haue good workes also, if he will be righteous and safe. The cause is when they heare the gospell or glad tidinges, they fayne of their owne strength certaine imaginations and thoughtes in their hartes, saying: I haue heard the gospell, I remember the story, loe, I beleue, and that they counte right fayth, which neuertheless as it is but mans imagination and fayning, euen so profiteth it not, neither followe there any good workes, or amendmēt of liuing.

Faith, what it is?

False and fained faith

But right fayth is a thing wrought by the holy ghost in vs, which chaungeth vs, turneth vs into a new nature and begetteth vs a new in God, and maketh vs the sonnes of god, as thou readest in the first of John, and killeth the olde Adam, and maketh vs altogether new in the hart, mynde, wyll, lust, and in all our affectiōs and powers of the soule, and bringeth the holye gost with her. Fayth is a liuely thing, mighty in worcking, valiant & strong, euer doyng, euer fruitfull, so that it is vnpossible, that he whiche is endued therwith, should not worcke alwayes good workes without ceasing. He asketh not whether good workes are to be done or not, but hath done them already, ere mention be made of them, & is alway doing, for such is his nature, for quicke fayth in hys hart and liuely mouyng of the spirite, driue hym and stirre hym therunto. whosoeuer doth not good woorkes, is an vnbeleuyng person & faithles, & loketh rownd about him, groping after faith & good workes & woteth not what faith or good workes meane, though he bable neuer so many thinges of faith & good workes.

True faith is liuely.

Fayth is not idle.

Fayth is then a liuely and a stedfast trust in the fauour of God, wherewith we commit our selues altogether vnto god, & that trust is so surely grounded, and sticketh so fast in our hartes, that a mā would not once doubt of it, though he should die a thousand tymes therefore. And suche trust wrought by the holy gost through faith, maketh a man glad lusty, cheretul, & true harted vnto God, and vnto all creatures. By the meanes wherof, willingly and without compulsion he is glad, and redy to do good to euery man, to do seruice to euery man, to suffer all thinges, ẏ god may be loued and prayed, which hath geuen hym such grace, so that it is impossible to separate good workes from fayth, euen as it is impossible to separate heat and burning, from fire. Therfore take hede to thy selfe, and beware of thyne owne fantasies and imaginations

Good workes cannot be separate from true fayth.

tions, which to iudge of fayth & good workes wyll seme wyse, when in dede they are starke blind, and of all thinges most foolish. Pray God that he wyll vouchsafe to worke faith in thine hart, or els shalte thou remayne euermore faythlesse: fayne thou, imagine thou, enforce thou, wrastle with thy self, and do what thou wilt or canst.

Righteousnes & how it is to be vnderstād.

Righteousnes is euen such fayth, and is called Gods righteousnesse, or righteousnes that is of value before God. For it is gods gift, and it altereth a man, and chaungeth him into a new spiritual nature, and maketh him free and liberall, to pay euery man his duety. For through fayth a mā is purged of his sinnes, and obteyneth luste vnto the law of God, whereby he geueth God hys honor, and payeth hym that he oweth hym, and vnto men he doth seruice willingly, wherwith soeuer he can, and payeth euery man his duety. Such righteousnes can nature, freewill, and our owne strength neuer bring to passe: for as no man can geue himselfe faith, so can he not take away vnbelefe, how then can he take away any sinne at all? wherefore all is false hipocrisie & sinne, whatsoeuer is done without fayth, or in vnbelefe, as it is euident in the 14. chapter vnto the Romains, though it appeare neuer so glorious, or beautiful outwardes.

Flesh & spirite what they are, & how to vnderstande them.

Flesh and spirite mayest thou not here vnderstand, as though flesh were onely that which pertayneth vnto vnchastitie, and the spirite that which inwardly pertayneth to the harte: but Paul calleth flesh here as Christ doth, Iohn. 3. All that is borne of flesh, that is to witte, the whole man, with lyfe, soule, body, wit, will, reason, & whatsoeuer he is, or doth within and without, because that these all, and all that is in man study after the worlde, and the flesh. Call flesh therfore whatsoeuer (as long as we are without ỹ spirite of GOD) we thinke or speake of God, of fayth, of good workes, and of spiritual matters. Call flesh also all workes which are done without grace, and without the working of the spirite, howsoeuer good, holy, and spirituall they seeme to be, as thou mayest proue by the 5. chapter vnto the Galathians, where Paule numbreth worshipping of idoles, witchcraft, enuy and hate among the deedes of the flesh, and by the 8. vnto the Romaines, where he sayth, that the law by the reason of the flesh is weake, which is not vnderstand of vnchastitie onely, but of all sinnes, and most specially, of vnbelefe, which is a vice most spirituall, and grounde of all synnes.

How this word flesh is to be vnderstand in the Scripture.

Incredulitie is the chief of all sinnes.

And as thou callest him whiche is not renewed with the spirit, and borne agayne in Christ, flesh, & all his dedes, euen the very motions of his hart, and minde, his learning, doctrine and contemplation of hye thinges, his preaching, teaching, and study in the Scripture, buildyng of Churches, foundyng of Abbeyes, geuing of almes, Masse, marres, & what soeuer he doth, though it seme spiritual, and after the lawes of God: So contrarywise call him spirituall which is renewed in Christ, and all his deedes whiche spryng of fayth, seme they neuer so grose, as the washyng of the Disciples feete done by Christ, and Peters fishing after the resurrection, yea and al the dedes of matrimony are pure spiritual, if they procede of faith, and what soeuer is done with in the lawes of God, though it be wrought by the body, as the very wiping of shooes, and such like, how soeuer grose they appeare outward. Without such vnderstādyng of these wordes canst thou neuer vnderstand this Epistle of Paule, neither any other place in the holy Scripture. Take hede therfore, for who soeuer vnderstādeth these wordes otherwise, the same vnderstādeth not Paule, what soeuer he be. Now will we prepare our selues vnto the Epistle.

Flesche is here well described.

what soeuer proceadeth of faith is spirituall.

For as much as it becommeth the preacher of Christes glad tydings, first through openyng of the law, to rebuke all thinges, and to proue all thynges sinne, that procede not of the spirite, & of faith in Christ, and to proue all men sinners, and children of wrath by inheritaunce, and howe that to sinne is their nature, and that by nature they can no otherwise doe then sinne, and therewith to abate the pride of man, and to bring him vnto the knowledge of him selfe, and of his miserie & wretchednes, that he might desire helpe. Euen so doth S. Paule, and beginneth in the first Chapter to rebuke vnbelefe and grose sinnes, which all men see as the Idolatrie, and as the grose sinnes of the heathen were, and as the sinnes now are of all them, whiche liue in ignorāunce without fayth, and without the fauour of GOD, and fayth. The wrath of GOD of heauen appeareth through the Gospell vpon all men, for their vngodly, & vnholy lyuyng. For

The maner of S. Paules doctrine.

Nature is so blinde that we cā not see noꝛ vnderstand the goodnes of God & hys mercy shewed vnto vs in Chꝛist Jesu hys soune.

though it be knowē, and dayly vnderstād by the creatures, that there is but one God, yet is nature of her self, without the spirit and grace, so coꝛrupt and so poysoned, that men neither can thanke him, neither woꝛshipp him, neither gene him his due honoꝛ, but blind thē selues, and faule without cealyng into woꝛse case, euen vntill they come vnto woꝛshipping of Jmages, & woꝛkyng of shamefull sinnes whiche are abhominable and agaynst nature, and moꝛeouer suffer the shame vnrebuked in other, hauing delectation and pleasure therein.

S. Paule cōdemneth all hipocrisie.

Jn the second Chapter he pꝛocedeth further, and rebuketh all those holy people also whiche without lust, and loue to the law, liue wel outwardly in the face of the woꝛld, and condemne other gladly, as the nature of all hypocrites is, to thinke them selues pure in respect of open sinners, and yet hate the law inwardly, and are full of couetousnes and enuy, and of all vnclēnes. Math. xxiij. These are they whiche despise the goodnes of GOD, and accoꝛdyng to the hardenes of their hartes, heape together foꝛ thē selues the wꝛath of God. Furthermoꝛe S. Paule as a true expounder of the law, suffreth no man to be without sinne, but declareth that all they are vnder sinne, whiche of freewill, and of nature will liue well, & suffreth them not to be better thē the open sinners, yea he calleth them hard harted, and such as can not repent.

How S. Paul rebuketh hypocrites.

The difference betwene the Jewe & the Gentile.

Jn the thyꝛd Chapter he mingleth both together, both the Jewes and the Gentiles and sayth, that the one is as the other, both sinners, & no difference betwene them, saue in this onely, that the Jewes had the woꝛd of God committed vnto them. And though many of them beleued not thereon, yet is Gods truth and pꝛomise thereby neither hurt, noꝛ minished: And he taketh in his way, and allegeth the saying of the 50. Psalme, that God might abyde true in his woꝛdes, & ouercome when he is iudged. After that he returneth to his purpose agayn, and pꝛoueth by the Scripture, that all men without difference, oꝛ exceptiō are sinners, and that by the woꝛkes of the law no mā is iustified: but that the law was geuen to vtter, and to declare sinne onely. Thē hee begynneth, and sheweth the right way vnto righteousnes, by what meanes mē must be made righteous and safe, and sayth. They are all sinners & without pꝛayse befoꝛe God, and must

All men are sinners.

The waye howe wee must bee made righteous.

without their own deseruyng be made righteous throughe fayth in Chꝛiste, which hath deserued such righteousnes foꝛ vs, and is become vnto vs Gods mercystole, foꝛ the remission of sinnes that are past: thereby pꝛouyng that chꝛistes righteousnes which commeth on vs through fayth, helpeth vs onely: whiche righteousnes (sayth he) is now declared through the Gospell, & was testified of befoꝛe, by the lawe of the Pꝛophetes. Furthermoꝛe (sayth he) the law is holpē and furthered thorough fayth, thoughe that the woꝛkes therof, with all their boast are bꝛought to nought.

Faith obteineth the fulfillyng of the law.

Jn the iiij. Chapter (after that now by the 3. first Chapters the sinnes are opened, and the way of faith vnto righteousnes layd) he begynneth to answere vnto certain obiections and cauillations. And first putteth foꝛth those blinde reasons, whiche commonly they that wilbe iustified by their owne woꝛkes are wont to make, when they heare that faith onely without woꝛkes iustifieth, saying, shall men do no good woꝛkes, yea, and if fayth onely iustifieth, what needeth a man to studie foꝛ to do good woꝛkes? He putteth foꝛth ther foꝛe Abꝛaham foꝛ an ensample, saying, what did Abꝛaham with his woꝛkes, was all in vayne, came his woꝛkes to no pꝛofite? And so concludeth that Abꝛaham without, and befoꝛe al woꝛkes was iustified and made righteous. Jn so much that befoꝛe the woꝛke of Circumcisiō he was pꝛayed of the Scripture, and called righteous by his fayth onely. Gene. xv. So that he did not the woꝛke of Circumcision, foꝛ to bee holpen there by vnto righteousnesse, whiche yet God commaunded hym to do, & was a good woꝛke of obedience. So in likewise no doubt none other woꝛkes helpe any thyng at all vnto a mās iustifiyng, but as Abꝛahams Circumcisiō was an outward signe wherby he declared his righteousnes which he had by fayth, and his obedience and readynes vnto the will of God, euen so are all other good woꝛkes outward signes and outward frutes of fayth, & of the spirite, which iustifie not a man, but that a man is iustified already befoꝛe god inwardly in the hart, through faith, and through the spirite purchased by Chꝛistes blond.

S. Paule answereth to the caueling question that our Papistes vse agaynst iustificatiō of fauth onely.

Good woꝛkes are outward signes of true fayth.

Herewith now stablisheth S. Paul his doctrine of faith, afoꝛe rehearsed in the thyꝛd Chapter, and bringeth also testimony of Dauid in the xxxij. Psalme, which whiche calleth a man blessed, not of wozkes, in that his sinne is not rekened, and in that fayth is imputed foz righteoulnes, though he abide not afterward without good wozkes, when he is once iustified. Foz we are iusti-fied, & receiue the spirite foz to do good wozkes, neither were it otherwise pos sible to do good wozkes, except we had first the spirite.

We are first iustified, thé followeth good wozkes.

Foz howe is it possible to doe any thyng well in the sight of God, while we are yet in captiuitie and bondage vnder the deuill, and the deuill posses-seth vs all together, and holdeth our hartes, so that we can not once consent vnto the will of God: No man ther-foze can preuent the spirite in doyng good, the spirite must first come, and wake him out of his sleepe, with the thunder of the law and feare him, and shew him his miserable estate & wretchednes, and make him abhozre & hate him selfe, and to desire helpe, and then comfoze him agayne with the pleasaũt tayne of the Gospell, that is to say, with the sweete promises of God in Christ, and stirre vp faith in him to beleue the promises: then when he bele-ueth the promises, as God was mercyfull to promise, so is he true to fulfill them, and wil geue him the spirite and strength, both to loue the will of God, & to wozke there after. So see we that God onely (whiche accozdyng to the Stripture wozketh all in all thinges) wozketh a mans iustifiyng, saluation and health, yea, & poureth fayth & be-lefe, lust to loue Gods will, & strength to fulfill the same into vs, euen as water is poured into a vessell, and that of his good will and purpose, and not of our deseruynges and merites: Gods mercy in promising, and truth in fulfilling his promises saueth vs, and not we our selues, and therfoze is al laude prayse & glozy, to be geuen vnto God foz his mercy and truth, and not vnto vs, foz our merites and deseruynges.
After that he stretcheth hys example out agaynst all other good wozkes of the law, and cõcludeth that the Iewes can not be Abrahams heyres, because of bloud and kinred onely, and much lesse by the wozkes of the law, but must inherite Abrahams fayth, if they wilbe the right heyres of Abraham, foz as much as Abraham before the law, both of Moses, & also of Circumcision, was through fayth made righteous, and called the father of all them that beleue, & not of them that wozke. Moreouer the law causeth wrath, in as much as no mã can fulfill it with loue and lust, and as longe as such grudgyng, hate and indignation agaynst the law remayneth in the hart, and is not takẽ away by the spirite that commeth by fayth, so long no doubt the wozkes of the law, declare euidẽtly that the wrath of god is vpon vs, and not fauour: wherfoze fayth only receyueth the grace promised vnto Abraham. And these ensamples were not written foz Abrahams so, to whom if we beleue, fayth shallbe reckened lykewise foz ryghteousnesse, as he sayth in the end of the chapter.

Fayth onely receaueth the grace that cõmeth by Abraham.

In the 5. chapter he commendeth the fruit and wozkes of faith, as are peace, reioycing in the conscience, inwarde loue to God, and mã, moreouer boldnesse, trust, confidence, and a strong & lusty mynd, and stedfast hope in tribulation, and suffering. Foz all such fol-

The frutes & wozkes of fayth.

Now haue we then that fayth only before all wozkes iustifieth, and that it followeth not yet therfoze, that a man should do no good wozkes, but that ỹ right shapẽ wozkes abide not behind, but accompany fayth, euen as bright-nesse doth the sunne, and are called of Paul the fruites of the spirite. where ỹ spirite is, there it is alwayes sommer, and there are alwayes good fruites, that is to say good wozkes. This is Paules order, that good wozks spring of the spirite, ỹ spirit commeth by fayth, and faythe commeth by hearyng the wozde of God, when the glad tidings and promises which God hath made vnto vs in Christ are preached truely, and receiued in the ground of the hart, with out wauerying oz doubting, after that the law hath passed vpon vs, and hath damned our consciences. where the wozde of God is preached purely, and receiued in the hart, there is faith, the spirit of God, & there are also good wozkes of necessitie, whensoeuer occasiõ is geuẽ. where Gods wozd is not purely preached, but mens dreames, traditions, imaginations, inuentiõs, ceremonies, & superstition, there is no fayth, and consequently no spirite that commeth of GOD, and where Gods spirite is not, there can bee no good wozkes, euen as where an apple tree is not, there can grow no apples, but Fayth before all wozkes iustifieth.

Good wozkes are the fruites of fayth.

Where true fayth is there are good wozkes.

there is vnbeliefe the diuels spyte, and euill workes. Of this Gods spyte and hys fruites, haue our holy hipocrites not once knowen, neither yet tasted how swete they are, though they fayne many good workes of their own imaginatiō to be iustified withal, in which is not one crommе of true fayth, or spiritual loue, or of inward ioy, peace and quietnes of conscience, for as much as they haue not the worde of GOD for them, that such workes please GOD, but they are euen the rotten fruites of a rotten tree.

Where fayth lacketh there is all euill workes.

After that he breaketh forth, and runneth at large, & sheweth, whence both sinne and righteousnesse, death and life come. And he compareth Adam and Christ together, thus wise reasonyng and disputyng, that Christ must nedes come as a seconde Adam, to make vs heyres of his righteousnesse, through a new spiritual birth, without our deseruinges. Euen as the first Adam made vs heyres of synne, through the bodily generation without oure deseruyng. wherby it is euidently knowne, and proued to the vttermost, that no man can bryng himselfe out of synne vnto righteousnesse, no more then he could haue withstād, that he was borne bodily. And ẏ is proued herewith, for as much as ẏ very law of God, which of right should haue helped, if any thyng could haue holpē, not onely came and brought no helpe with her, but also encreased synne, because that the euil and poysoned nature is offēded, and vtterly displeased with the law, and ẏ more she is forbid by the lawe, the more is she prouoked, and set a fyre to fulfill & satisfie her lustes. By the law then we see clearely, that we must needes haue Christ to iustify vs, with his grace, & to helpe nature.

By Adā came sinne, so by Christ came saluation.

In the vi. he setteth forthe the chiefe and principall worke of fayth, the battayle of the spyte agaynst the flesshe, how the spyte laboureth and enforceth to kyll the remnaunt of sinne and lust: which remayne in the flesshe, after our iustifiyng. And this chapiter teacheth vs, that we are not so free from sinne through fayth, that we should henceforth go vp and down, idle, careleſſe, & sure of our selues, as thoughe there were now no more synne in vs. Yes, there is sinne remayning in vs, but it is not reckoned, because of fayth and of the spyte, which fyght agaynste it. wherefore we haue inough to doe all our lyues long, to tame our bodies, & to compell the members to obey the spyte, and not the appetites: that therby we myght be like vnto christes death and resurrection, and might fulfill our baptisme, which signifieth the mortifiyng of sinnes, and the new lyfe of grace. For this battayle ceaseth not in vs vntill the last breath, and vntyll that sinne be vtterly slayne by the deth of the body.

The principall worke of faith, and the battaile betwen the spirite and the flesh.

This thyng (I meane to tame the body, and so forth) we are able to doe (sayth he) seyng we are vnder grace, & not vnder the lawe. What it is, not to be vnder the lawe he himselfe expoundeth. For not to be vnder the lawe, is not so to be vnderstand, that euery mā may do what hym listeth. But not to be vnder the law is, to haue a fre hart renewed with the spyte, so that thou hast lust inwardly of thine owne accorde, to do that which the lawe commaundeth, without compulsion, yea, though there were no law. For grace that is to say gods fauour, bringeth vs the spyte, & maketh vs loue the lawe, so is there now no more sinne, neither is the law now any more agaynst vs, but at one, & agreed with vs, and we with it. But to be vnder the law, is to deale with the workes of the law, and to worke without the spyte and grace, for so long no doubt sinne raigneth in vs through the law, that is to say, the lawe declareth ẏ wee are vnder sinne, and that sinne hath power and dominion ouer vs, seyng we can not fulfill the law, namely within in the hart, for as much as no man of nature fauoureth the law, consenteth therunto, and deliteth therein, which thyng is exceedyng great synne, that we cannot consent to the law, which law is nothyng els saue the will of God.

What it is not to be vnder the law.

What it is to be vnder the lawe.

This is the right freedome and libertie from sinne, and from the lawe, whereof he writeth vnto the ende of this chapter, that it is a freedom to do good onely with lust, and to liue well without compulsion of the law. wher fore this freedome is a spirituall freedome, which destroyeth not the lawe, but ministreth that which the law requireth, and wherwith the law is fulfilled, that is to vnderstand, luste and loue, wherewith the law is stilled, and accuseth vs no more, compelleth vs no more, neither hath ought to craue of vs any more. Euen as thoughe thou were in debt to an other man, and wer not able to pay, two maner of wayes mightest thou be losed. One way, if he would would require nothyng of thee, and breake thine obligation. An other way, if some other good man woulde paye for thee, and gene thee as muche as thou mightest satisfie thyne obligation with all. On this wyse hath Christe made vs free from the law, & therfore is this no wylde fleshly libertie, ẏ should do nought, but that doth all thynges, and is free from the crauyng and debt of the law.

The right freedome, & libertie frō sinne, and from the law.

Example.

In the seuenth he confirmeth ẏ same, with a similitude of the state of matrimony. As whē the husband dyeth, the wyfe is at her libertie, and the one loosed and departed from the other, not that the woman should not haue power to mary vnto an other man, but rather now first of all is she free, & hath power to mary vnto an other man, which she could not do before, till she was loosed from her first husband. Euen so are our consciences bound, and in daunger to the law vnder olde Adam, as long as he liueth in vs, for the law declareth ẏ our hartes are bound, and that we cannot disconsent from hym, but when he is mortified & killed by the spirit: then is the conscience free and at libertie, not so that the conscience shall now nought doe, but nowe first of all cleaueth vnto an other, that is to witte, Christ, and bringeth forth the fruites of lyfe. So now to be vnder the lawe, is not to be able to fulfill the law, but to be detter to it, and not able to pay that, which the lawe requireth. And to be lose from the lawe, is to fulfill it, and to pay that which the lawe demaundeth, so that it can now henceforth aske thee nought.

Our consciences bound, and in daunger to the lawe by olde Adam, so lōg as he liueth in vs.

Consequently Paul declareth more largely the nature of synne, and of the law, how that through the law, synne reuiueth, moueth her selfe, and gathereth strength. For the olde man and corrupt nature, the more he is forbidden, and kept vnder of the law, is the more offended and displesed therwith, for as much as he cannot pay ẏ which is required of the lawe. For synne is his nature, and of himselfe, he cannot but sinne. Therefore is the law death to hym, torment and martirdom. Not that the lawe is euill, but because that the euill nature can not suffer ẏ which is good, & cannot abyde that the law should require of him any good thing: like as a sicke mā cannot suffer that a man should desire of hym to runne, to leape, and to doe other deedes of an whole man.

The law requireth of vs that which we cannot pay.

For which cause S. Paule concludeth, that where the law is vnderstand and perceiued in the best wise, there it doth no more, but vtter synne, & bryng vs vnto the knowledge of our selues, and therby kyl vs, and make vs bond vnto eternall damnation, and detters of the euerlastyng wrath of God, euen as he well feeleth and vnderstandeth whose conscience is truely touched of the law. In such daunger were we ere the law came, that we knew not what sinne ment, neither yet knowe we the wrath of God, vppon sinners, tyll the law had vttered it. So seest thou that a man must haue some other thyng, ye & a greater and a more mighty thing thē the law, to make hym righteous & safe. They that vnderstand not the law on this wise, are blinde, and go to worke presumptuously, supposing to satisfie the law with workes. For they know not that the law requireth a free, a willing, a lusty and a louing hart. Therfore they see not Moses right in ẏ face, the vayle hangeth betwene, and hideth his face, so that they can not behold the glorie of his countenaunce, how that the law is spiritual, and requireth the hart. I may of myne own strength refraine that I do myne enemy no hurt, but to loue him with all myne hart, & to put awaye wrath cleane out of my mind, cā I not of mine own strength. I maye refuse money of myne owne strength, but to put away loue vnto riches out of myne hart, can I not do of myne owne strength. To abstaine from adultery (as concernyng the outward dede) can I doe of myne owne strēgth, but not to desire in mine hart, is as vnpossible vnto me, as is to chose whether I will hungre or thrust, and yet so the law requireth. wherfore of a mans owne strength is the law neuer fulfilled, we must haue therunto Gods fauour and his spirite, purchased by Christes bloud.

The law doth vtter and declare what sinne is.

What we may do of our selues, and what we may not do.

Neuertheless when I saye a man may do many things outwardly clean agaynst his hart, we must vnderstand ẏ mā is but driuen of diuers appetites, and the greatest appetite ouercōmeth the lesse, and carieth the mā away violently with her.

As when I desire vengeaunce, and feare also the incōuenience that is like to folowe, if feare bee greater I abstaine, if the appetite that desireth vengeaunce be greater, I can not but prosecute the dede, as we see by experiēce in many murtherers & theeues, which though they be brought into neuer so great perill of death, yet after they haue escaped, do euen the same agayne. And common women prosecute their lustes because feare & shame are away, when other whiche haue the same appetites in their hartes, abstaine at the lest way outwardly, or worke secretly beyng ouercome of feare and of shame, and so likewise is it of all other appetites.

Where feare and shame is away, there all wickednes is committed.

Furthermore he declared, how the spirite, and the flesh fight together in one man, and maketh an ensample of him self, that we might learne to know that worke a right, I meane to kill sinne in our selues. He calleth both the spirit, and also the flesh a law, because that like as the nature of Gods law is to driue, to compell, and to craue, euen so the flesh driueth, compelleth, craueth and rageth, agaynst the spirite, and will haue her lustes satisfied. On the other side driueth the spirite, crieth and fighteth against the flesh, and will haue his lust satisfied. And this strife dureth in vs, as long as we liue, in some more & in some lesse, as the spirite or the flesh is stronger, & the very man his owne selfe is both the spirite and the flesh, which fighteth with his owne self, vntil sinne be vtterly slayne, and he all together spirituall.

The flesh is contrary to the spirite

The spirite lusteth contrary to the flesh.

In the viij. Chapter he comforteth such fighters, that they dispayre not because of such flesh, either thinke that they are lesse in fauour with God. And he shewed how that the sinne remaynyng in vs hurteth not, for there is no daunger to them, that are in Christ which walke not after the flesh, but fight agaynst it. And he expoundeth more largely what the nature of the flesh, and of the spirit is, and how the spirite commeth by Christ, whiche spirite maketh vs spirituall, tameth, subdueth, and mortifieth the flesh, and certifieth vs that we are neuertheles the sonnes of God, & also beloued, though that sinne rage neuer so much in vs, so long as we folow the spirite, and fight agaynst sinne to kill and mortifie it. And because the chastisyng of the flesh, the crosse, and sufferyng are nothyng pleasant, he comforteth vs in our passions and afflictions, by the assistance of the spirite, which maketh intercessiō to GOD for vs mightely with grounynges that passe mans vtterance, mans speach can not comprehed them, and the creatures mone also with vs of great desire that they haue, that we were loosed from sinne, and corruption of the flesh. So see we that these three Chapters, the vj. vij. viij. do none othyng so much as to drine vs vnto the right worke of faith, whiche is to kill the old man, and mortifie the flesh.

There is no daunger to thē that are in Christ.

The right worke of Fayth, is to mortify the flesh.

In the. ix. x. and. xi. Chapters he treateth of Gods predestinatiō, whēce it springeth all together, whether we shall beleue or not beleue, be loosed frō sinne, or not be loosed. By whiche predestinatiō our iustifiyng, and saluatiō, are cleane taken out of our hands, and put in the hands of God onely, which thyng is most necessary of all. For we are so weake and so vncertaine, that if it stode in vs, there would of a truth no man be saued, the deuill no doubt would deceaue vs. But now is God sure, that his predestinatiō can not deceaue him, neither can any man withstand or let him, and therefore haue we hope and trust agaynst sinne.

Predestination is in the handes of God.

But here must a marke be set vnto those vnquiet, busie, and hye climyng spirites, how farre they shall go: which first of all hyng hether their hye reasons and pregnaunt wittes, and begyn first from an hye to search the bottomlesse secretes of Gods predestination, whether they ber predestinate or not. These must nedes either cast them selues down headlong into desperation, or els commit thē selues to fre chaunce carelesse. But folow thou the order of this Epistle, and nooseil thy selfe with Christ, and learne to vnderstand what the law and ỹ Gospell meane, and the office of both two, that thou mayest in the one know thy selfe, and how that thou hast of thy selfe no strength but to sinne, & in the other the grace of Christ, and then see thou fight agaynst sinne, and the flesh as the. vij. first Chapters teach thee. After that when thou art come to the viij. Chapter, & art vnder the crosse, and sufferyng of tribulation, the necessitie of predestination will ware sweete, and thou shalt well feele how precious a thyng it is. For except thou haue borne the crosse of aduersitie, and temptation, & hast felt thy selfe brought vnto the very brimme of desperation, yea and vnto hell gates, thou canst neuer medle with the sentēce of predestination, without thyne owne harme, & without secret wrath and grudgyng inwardly agaynst God, for otherwise it shall not be possible for thee to thinke that God is righteous, & iust. Therefore must Adam be well mortified, and the fleshely wytte brought vtterly to nought, yet that thou mayest awaye

How farre we may procede in predestination.

Predestination is not rashly to be disputed of.

with

with this thyng, and drinke so strong wyne. Take hede therefore vnto thy selfe, that thou drinke not wyne, while thou art yet but a suckling. For euery learning hath her tyme measure & age, and in Christ is there a certaine childhode, in whiche a man must be content with milke for a season, vntill he ware stronge, and growe vp, vnto a perfect man in Christ, and be able to eate of more strong meate.

In the xij. Chapter, he geueth exhortations. For this maner obserueth Paul in all his Epistles, first he teacheth Christ, and the fayth, then exhorteth he to good workes, and vnto continuall mortifiyng of the flesh. So here teacheth he good workes in deede, and the true seruyng of God, and maketh all men Priestes, to offer vp, not money and beastes, as the maner was in the tyme of the law, but their own bodies with kullyng, and mortifiyng the lustes of the fleshe. After that he describeth the outward conuersation of Christen men, how they ought to behaue them selues in spirituall thinges, how to teach, preach and rule in the congregation of Christ, to serue one an other, to suffer all things patiently, and to commit wreake and vengeaunce to God: in conclusion how a Christen mā ought to behaue him selfe vnto all men to frend, foe, or whatsoeuer he be. These are the right workes of a Christen mā whiche spryng out of fayth. For fayth keepeth not holy day, neither suffreth any man to be idle, wheresoeuer she dwelleth.

Which are good workes mete to be done.

In the. xiij. he teacheth to honour the worldly and temporall sword. For though that mans law, and ordinaūce make not a man good before God, neither iustific him in the hart, yet are they ordeined for the furtheraunce of the cōmon wealth, to maintene peace, to punish the euill, and to defend the good. Therfore ought the good to honor the temporal sword, and to haue it in reuerence, though as concernyng them selues they nede it not, but would abstaine from euill of their owne accord, yea, and do good without mans lawe, but by the law of the spirite which gouerneth the hart, and guideth it vnto all that is the will of God. Finally he comprehendeth and knitteth vp all in loue. Loue of her own nature bestoweth all that she hath, and euen her own selfe on that whiche is loued. Thou nedest not to bid a kynd mother to bestowyng vnto her onely sonne, much lesse spiritual loue which hath eyes geuen her of GOD, nedeth mans law to teach her to do her duetie. And as in ỹ begynnyng he did put forth Christ as the cause, and author of our righteousnes and saluation, euen so here setteth he hym forth, as an ensample to counterfaite that as he hath done to vs, euē so should we do one to an other.

Loue is ỹ fulfilling of the law.

In the xiiij. Chapter he teacheth to deale soberly with the consciences of the weake in the fayth, whithe yet vnderstand not the liberrie of Christ perfectly enough, and to fauour them of Christen loue, and not to vse the liberrie of the faith vnto hinderāce, but vnto the furtheraunce and edifiyng of the weake. For where such consideratiō is not, there foloweth debate, and despising of the Gospell. It is better there to forbeare the weake a while, vntill they ware strong, then that the learnyng should come altogether vnder fote. And such worke is singular worke of loue, ye, and where loue is perfecte, there must nedes be such a respect vnto the weake, a thing that Christ commaunded and charged to be had aboue all thinges.

We must deale louingly with our weake brethren.

In the 15. Chapter he setteth forthe Christ agayne to be counterfaited, that we also by hys ensample should suffer other that are yet weake, as them that are fraile, open sinners, vnlearned, vnexpert, and of lothesome maners, and not to cast thē away forthwith, but to suffer thē, til they ware better & exhort them in the meane tyme. For so deire Christ in the gospel, and now dealeth with vs dayly suffering our vnperfectnes, weaknes, conuersation & maners, not yet fashioned after the doctrine of the Gospell, but smell of the flesh, ye and sometyme breake forth into outward deedes.

The weaknes of our brethren is to be considered.

After that to conclude withall, he wisheth them encrease of fayth, peace, and hope of conscience, prayseth them and committeth them to God and magnifieth his office and administration in the gospell, and soberly and with great discretion desireth succour, and ayde of them for the poore saynctes of Jerusalem, and it is all pure loue that he speketh or dealeth withall. So fynde we in this Epistle plentuously, vnto the vttermost, whatsoeuer a christen man or woman ought to know, that is to witte, what the law, the gospell, sinne, grace, fayth, righteousnes, Christ, god, good workes, loue, hope, hope, and the crosse are, and euen wherin the pith of of all that pertayneth to the Chriſten fayth ſtandeth, and how a chriſten mā ought to behaue himſelfe vnto euery man, be he perfect, or a ſinner, good or bad, ſtrong or weake, frend or foe, and in concluſiō, how to behaue our ſelues both towarde God, and toward oure ſelues alſo. And all thynges are profoundly grounded in the Scriptures, and declared with enſamples of hym ſelfe, of the fathers and of the prophets, that a man can here deſire no more.

Wherfore it appeareth euidently, that Paules mynde was to comprehende briefly in hys Epiſtle, all the whole learnyng of Chriſtes goſpell, and to prepare an introduction vnto all the olde teſtament. For without doubte, whoſoeuer hath this Epiſtle perfectly in hys harte, the ſame hath the light, & the effect of the olde Teſtament wyth hym. wherfore let euery man without exception, exercyſe himſelfe therein diligently, and recorde it night and day continually, vntill he be full acquainted therwith.

The laſt chapter is a chapiter of recommendation, wherein he yet mingleth a good monition, that we ſhould beware of the traditions and doctrine of men, which begyle the ſimple with ſophiſtry, and learnyng that is not after the Goſpell, and draw them from Chriſt, and nooſell them in weake and feble, and (as Paul calleth them in the epiſtle to the Gallathians) in beggerly ceremonies, for the entent, that they would lyue in fat paſtures, and be in authoritie, and be taken as Chriſt, ye and aboue Chriſt, and ſitte in the temple of God, that is to witte, in the conſciences of men, where God onely, his worde & his Chriſt ought to ſit. Compare therfore all maner doctrine of mē vnto ỹ ſcripture, and ſee whether they agree or not. And commit thy ſelfe whole, and all together vnto Chriſte, and ſo ſhal he with his holy ſpirite, and withal his fulnes dwell in thy ſoule. Amen.

Beware of the traditions of men

The Prologue vppon the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Corinthians, by William Tyndall.

This epiſtle declareth it ſelf.

THis Epiſtle declareth it ſelfe from chapter to chapter, that it nedeth no Prologue, or introduction to declare it, when Paul had conuerted a great number at Corinthum, as ye read, Act. 18. and was departed, there came immediatly falſe Apoſtels, and ſectmakers, and drew euery mans diſciples after hym, ſo that the people were whole vnquieted, deuided, and at variaunce among themſelues, euery man for the zeale of hys doctour, thoſe newe Apoſtles, not regardyng what diuiſion, what vncleanneſſe of liuing, or what falſe opinions were amonge the people, as long as they might bee in authoritie, and well at eaſe in theyr bellies. But Paul in the firſt foure chapiters with great wiſdom, and ſobernelſe rebuked, firſt the diuiſion & the authors therof, and calleth the people to Chriſt agayne, and teacheth howe, and for what the preacher is to be take.

In the 5. he rebuketh the vncleanes that was amongſt them.

In he 6. he rebuketh the debate and goyng to law together, pletyng their cauſes before the heathen.

In the 7. he reformeth them concernyng chaſtitie and mariage.

Weake and yong conſciences are to be ſtubborne, for the laſt ſhal receiue the equall reward with the firſt.

In the 8. 9. 10. and 11. he teacheth ỹ ſtrong to forbeare the weake, that yet vnderſtand not the libertie of the goſpell, and that with the enſample of him ſelf, which though he were an apoſtle, and had authoritie, yet of loue he abſtayned to winne other. And he feareth them with the enſamples of the olde Teſtament, and rebuketh diuers diſorders that were among them concernyng the Sacrament, and the goyng bareheded of maried women.

Loue fulfilleth the law.

In the 12. 13. and 14. he teacheth of the manifold gyftes of the ſpirite, and proueth by a ſimilitude of the bodye, that all giftes are geuen ỹ eche ſhould helpe other, and through loue do ſeruice to other, and proueth that where loue is not, there is nothing that pleaſeth God. For that one ſhould loue an other, is all that God requireth of vs: and therfore if we deſire ſpiritual gifts he teacheth thoſe giftes to bee deſired that helpe our neighbours.

In the 15. he teacheth of the reſurrection of the body. And in the laſt he exhorteth to helpe the poore ſayntes.

A Prologue vpõ the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, by W. Tyndall.

AS in the firſt epiſtle he rebuketh the Corinthians ſharpely, ſo in this he comforteth them and prayſeth them, and commaundeth him that was excommunicate, to be receiued louingly into the congregation agayne.

It is the parte of a good ſhepherd to vẽture hys life for hys ſheepe.

And in the 1. and 2. chapiters, hee ſheweth his loue to them warde, how that all that he pake, did, or ſuffered, was for their ſakes, and for their ſaluation.

Then in the 3. 4. and 5. he prayſeth the office of preaching the goſpell, aboue ẏ preaching of the law, & ſheweth that the Goſpel groweth through perſecution, & throughe the croſſe, whiche maketh a man ſure of eternall lyfe: and here and there he toucheth ẏ falſe prophetes, which ſtudied to turne the faith of the people from Chriſte vnto the workes of the law.

Tribulatiõ for the Goſpell ſake maketh vs ſure of eternall lyfe.

In the 6. and 7. chapters, he exhorteth thẽ to ſuffer with the goſpell, & to lyue as it becommeth the Goſpell, and prayſeth hym in the latter ende.

In the 8. and 9. chapters, he exhorteth thẽ to helpe the poore ſaintes that were at Jeruſalem.

In the 10. 11. and 12. he inueyegth againſt the falſe prophetes.

And in the laſt Chapter he threateneth them that had ſinned, and not amended themſelues.

A Prologue vpon the Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Gallathiars, by W. Tyndall.

AS ye read Act. 15. how certaine came from Jeruſalem to Antioche, & vexed ẏ diſciples there, affirming ẏ they coulde not be ſaued except they were circumciſed. Euen ſo, after Paul had conuerted the Galathians, & coupled them to Chriſt, to truſt in him only for the remiſſion of ſynne, and hope of grace and ſaluation, and was departed, there came falſe apoſtles vnto thẽ, (as vnto the Corinthiãs, and vnto all places where Paul had preached) and that in the name of Peter, James, and John, whom they called the hye Apoſtles, and preached circumciſion, and the keppyng of the law to be ſaued by, and minuſhed Paules authoritie.

To the confounding of thoſe, Paul magnifieth hys office and Apoſtleſhip in the two firſt chapiters, and maketh hymſelfe equall vnto the hie Apoſtels, and concludeth that euery man muſte be iuſtified without deſeruyngs, without workes, and without helpe of the law: but alone by Chriſt.

All that repent, are iuſtified thorough faith by Chriſt, and not by workes.

And in the 3. and 4. he proueth the ſame with Scripture, examples and ſimilitudes, and ſheweth that the law is cauſe of more ſinne, and bryngeth the curſe of God vpon vs: and iuſtifieth vs not, but that iuſtifiyng commeth of grace promiſed vs of GOD, through the deſeruyng of Chriſte, by whome (if we beleue) we are iuſtified without helpe of the woorkes of the lawe.

The law condẽneth, but the beleuyng of Gods promiſes iuſtifieth.

And in the 5. and 6. he exhorteth vnto the workes of loue, which folow fayth and iuſtifiyng. So that in all his Epiſtle, he obſerueth this order. Firſt he preacheth the damnatiõ of the law: then the iuſtifiyng of fayth: and thyrdly the workes of loue. For on that cõdition that wee loue henceforth and worke, is the mercy giuen vs, or els if we will not worke the will of GOD henceforward, we fall from fauour, & grace: and the inheritance that is freely geuen vs for Chriſtes ſake, through our owne fault, we loſe agayne.

A Prologue vpon the Epiſtle of Saint Paule to the Epheſians.

IN this Epiſtle, and namely in the three firſte Chapters, Paul ſheweth that the Goſpell & grace therof was foreſene and predeſtinate of God, from before the begynnyng, and deſerued through Chriſt, & now at the laſt ſent forth, that all men ſhould beleue thereon, thereby to be iuſtified, made righteous, liuyng and happy, and to bee deliuered from vnder the damnation of the law, and captiuitie of ceremonies.

In ſekyng any other ſatisfaction thẽ Chriſt, we deceaue our ſelues.

And in the fourth he teacheth to auoyde traditions, and mens doctrine, and to beware of puttyng truſt in any thyng ſaue Chriſt, affirmyng that he onely is ſufficient, and that in him we haue all thynges, and beſide him neede nothyng.

In the v. and vj. he exhorteth to exercyſe ercise the faith, and to declare it abroad through good workes, and to auoyde sinne, and to arme them with spiritual armour agaynst the deuill, that they might stand fast in time of tribulation, and vnder the crosse.

The Prologue vpon the Epistle of Saint Paule to the Philippians, by W. Tyndall.

PAule prayseth the Philippians, and exhorteth them to stād fast in the true faith, and to encrease in loue. And because that false Prophetes study alwayes to impugne, and destroy ỹ true fayth, he warneth them of such worke learners or teachers of woorkes, and prayseth Epaphroditus. And all this doth hee, in the first and seconde Chapters.

Hereby are we warned that workes sane vs not, but the word, that is the promise.

In the thyrd he reproueth faythles, and mans righteousnes, whiche false Prophetes teach and mainteyne. And he setteth him for an ensample, howe that he him selfe had lined in such false righteousnes, and holinesse vnrebukeable, that was so, that no man could complaine on him, and yet now setteth nought therby, for Christes righteousnes sake. And finally he affirmeth that such false Prophetes are the enemyes of the crosse, & make their bellyes their GOD, for further then they may safely and without all perill and sufferyng, will they not preach Christ.

Mannes righteousnes zeale or imagination without Gods worde is odious.

A Prologue vpon the Epistle of Saint Paule to the Coloſsians, by W. Tyndall.

AS the Epistle to ỹ Galathians hoideth the maner and fashion of the Epistle to the Romains, briefly comprehendyng all that is therein at length disputed. Euen so this Epistle foloweth the ensample of the Epistle to the Ephesians, conteynyng the tenour of the same Epistle with fewer wordes.

In the first Chapter he praiseth thē, and wisheth that they continue in the fayth, and grow perfecter therin, & thē describeth he the Gospell, how that it is a wisedome that confesseth Christ to be the Lord and God, crucified for vs, and a wisedome that hath bene hyd in Christ, sence afore the beginning of the world, and now first begon to be opened throughe the preachyng of the Apostles.

For fayth when it is preached bringeth ỹ spirite and power to fulfill the law.

In the ij. he warneth them of mens doctrine, and describeth the false Prophetes to the vttermost, and rebuketh them accordyng.

In ỹ thyrd, he exhorteth to be frutefull in the pure fayth with all maner of good workes one to another, and describeth al degrees, and what their duties are.

Who so hath a pure fayth, can not but abound with good workes.

In the fourth he exhorteth to pray, and also to pray for him, and saluteth them.

A Prologue vpon the first Epistle of S. Paul to the Thessalonians, by W. Tyndall.

THis Epistle did Paule write of exceding loue and care, and prayseth them in the two firste chapters, because they did receiue the Gospell earnestly, and had in tribulation and persecution, continued therin stedfastly, and were become an ensample vnto all congregations, and had thereto suffred of their owne kinsmē, as Christ and his apostles did of ỹ Iewes, puttyng them therto in mynde, how purely and godly he had lyued among thē to their ensample, and thanketh God, that hys gospel had brought forth such fruite among them.

Not the receauyng of the Gospel, but the cōtinuaunce to the latter ende, maketh vs blessed.

In the third chapter he sheweth his diligence and care, least hys so greate labor, and their so blessed a beginning should haue bene in vayne, Sathan & his apostles veryng them with persecution, and destroying their faith with mens doctrine. And therefore he sente Tymothie to them to comforte them, and strengthen them in the fayth, and thanketh GOD, that they had so constantly endured, and desireth God to encrease them.

He meaneth therby lest they should fall from the worde, they had al ready receaued.

In the fourth, he exhorteth them to kepe themselues from sinne, and to do good one to another. And thereto he informeth them concernyng the resurrection.

In the fift, he writeth of the last day, that it should come sodenly, exhortyng to prepare themselues thereafter, and to kepe a good order concernyng obedience and rule.

The

The Prologue vpon the second Epistle of S. Paule to the Thessalonians, by W. Tyndall.

BEcause in the fore epistle he had said ẏ the last day shoulde come sodenly, the Thessalonians thought that it should come shortly. wherefore in this Epistle he declareth hymselfe.

Patience in persecution for Christs sake rewarded with ẏ crowne of euerlasting ioy and felicitie.

And in the first chapter he comforteth them with euerlasting reward of their fayth and patience, in sufferyng for the Gospell, and with the punishment of their persecutours in euerlastyng payne.

Hereby haue we euident signes, that the latter day is at hand.

In the second he sheweth that ẏ last day shoulde not come till there were first a departing (as some men thinke) frō vnder ẏ obedience of ẏ Emperour of Rome, and that Antichrist shoulde set vp himselfe in ẏ same place as god, and deceyue the vnthankefull worlde with false doctrine, and with false and lying myracles, wrought by the workyng of Sathan, vntill Christ shoulde come, and slay hym with his glorious commyng, and spirituall preachyng of the worde of God,

In the third, he geueth them exhortation, and warneth them to rebuke ẏ idle that would not labour with their handes, and auoyde their company, if they would not amende.

A Prologue vpon the first Epistle of S. Paule to Tymothe, by W. Tyndall.

THis epistle writeth S. Paul to be an ensample to all Bishoppes what they shoulde teache, and how they should teache, and how they should gouerne the congregation of Christe in all degrees, that it should be no nede to gouerne christes flocke with the doctrine of their owne good meanynges.

The office of a bishop.

In the first Chapiter he commaundeth that the bishop shall maynetayne ẏ right fayth and loue, and resist false preachers, which make the lawe and woorkes equall with Christ and hys Gospell. And he maketh a shorte conclusion of all Christes learning, wherto the law serueth, and what the ende therof is, also what the Gospell is, and setteth himselfe for a comfortable ensample vnto all sinners, and troubled consciences.

In the second, he commaundeth to pray for all degrees, and chargeth that women shall not preache nor weare costly apparell, but to be obedient vnto the men.

In the third he describeth, what maner persons the Bishop or Priest and their wyues should be, & also the Deacons and their wiues, and commēdeth it, if any man desire to be a Bishop after that maner.

The Pope & his Prelates are here playnly set forth, for what Christ loosed freely, the Pope did bynd it, to lose it agayne for money.

In the fourth hee prophesieth, and sheweth before of the false Bishops & spirituall officers, that should arise among the Christen people, and be, do, and preach cleane contrary to the fore described ensample, and should depart from the fayth in Christ, and forbyd to marye, and to eate certain meates, teachyng to put trust therin, both of iustifiyng and forgiuenesse of sinnes, & also of deseruyng of eternall life.

In the fift he teacheth howe a Bishop should vse him self toward yong and old, & concernyng widowes what is to be done, & which should be found of the common cost, and teacheth also how men should honour the vertuous Bishops and Priestes, and how to rebuke the euill.

Vertuous Bishops are worthy double honor.

In the sixt he exhorteth ẏ Bishops to cleaue to the Gospell of Christ, and true doctrine, & to auoyde vayne questions, and superfluous disputynges which gēdre strife, & quench the truth, and by which also the false Prophetes get them authoritie, and seke to satisfie their insatiable couetousnesse.

The Prologue vpon the second Epistle of Saint Paule vnto Timothe. W. Tyndall.

IN this Epistle Paul exhorteth Timothe to go forward as he had begō, & to preach ẏ Gospel with all diligence, as it neede was, seyng many were fallen away, and many false spirites and teachers were sprong vp already. wherfore a Bishops part is euer to watche and to labour in the Gospell.

Bishops must be vigilant in their vocation.

In the third and fourth he sheweth before and that notablie, of the ieoperdous tyme toward the end of ẏ world, in which a false spiritual liuing should disceiue ẏ whole world, with outward hypocrisie, and apparance of holinesse, vnder which all abhominatiōs should haue their free passage and courle, as we (alas) haue sene this prophesie of S. Paule fulfilled in our spiritualtie

This hath already ben fulfilled in our spiritualtie.

The Prologue vpon the Epistle of S. Paul to Titus.

THis is a shoꝛt Epistle, wherin yet is conteyned all that is needefull foꝛ a Chꝛisten to know.

What maner a man, a Bysshop oꝛ Curate ought to be.

In the first Chapter, he sheweth what maner a man a Bysshop oꝛ Curate ought to be, that is to witte, vertuous and learned, to pꝛeach and defende the Gospell, & to confounde the doctrine of trustyng in woꝛkes and mens traditions, whiche euer fight agaynst the faith, and cary away the cõscience captine from the fredome that is in Chꝛist, into the bondage of their owne imaginations and inuentions, as though the thynges should make a man good in the sight of God, whiche are to no pꝛofite at all.

In the secõd he teacheth all degrees, old, young, men, womẽ, maisters and seruauntes, how to behaue thẽ selues, as they which Chꝛist bought with his bloud, to be his pꝛoper, oꝛ peculiar people, to gloꝛifie god with good woꝛkes.

Good deedes please god, so farre foꝛth as they are applied to the kepyng of the commaundements, but Chꝛist onely iustifieth

In the thꝛid, he teacheth to honour tempoꝛall rulers, and to obey thẽ, and yet bꝛyngeth to Chꝛist agayne, and to the grace that hee hath purchased foꝛ vs, that no man should thinke that the obedience of pꝛinces lawes, oꝛ any other woꝛke, should iustifie vs befoꝛe God. And last of all he chargeth to auoyde the company of the stubburne, and of the heretickes.

A Prologue vpon the Epistle of Saint Paule vnto Philemon, by W. Tyndall.

IN this Epistle S. Paule sheweth a godly ensample of Chꝛisten loue. Here in we see how Paule taketh pooꝛe Onesimos vnto him, and maketh intercessiõ foꝛ him vnto his master, and helpeth him with all that he may, and behaueth him selfe none otherwise then as though he him selfe were the sayd Onesimos, whiche thyng yet he doth not with power and authoꝛitie, as hee well might haue done; but putteth of all authoꝛitie, and whatsoeuer he might of right do, that Philemon might do likewise toward Onesimos, and with great mekenesse and wisedome, teacheth Philemon to see his dutie in Chꝛist Jesu.

The Prologue vpon the first Epistle of Saint Peter, by William Tyndall.

THis Epistle dyd S. Peter wꝛite to the heathen that were conuerted, and exhoꝛteth them to stãd fast in the faith, to grow therein, and ware perfect thꝛough all maner of sufferyng, and also good woꝛkes.

In the first he declareth the iustifiyng of fayth thꝛough Chꝛistes bloud, and comfoꝛteth them with the hope of the lyfe to come, and sheweth that we haue not deserued it, but that the pꝛophetes pꝛophesied it should be geuen vs, & as Chꝛist which redemed vs out of synne, and all vncleannesse is holy, so hee exhoꝛteth to lead an holy conuersation, & because we be richly bought, and made heyꝛes of a riche inheritãce, to take hede that we lose it not agayn, thꝛough our owne negligence.

Chꝛist is all to a Chꝛisten man.

In the 2. Chapter, he sheweth that Chꝛist is the foundation, and hed coꝛner stone, wheron al are built thꝛough fayth, whether it be Jew oꝛ Gentile, & how that in Chꝛist they are made pꝛiestes, to offer themselues to GOD (as Chꝛist dyd himselfe) and to slea the lustes of the flesh, that fyght againste the soule. And first he teacheth them in generall to obey the woꝛldly rulers, & than in special he teacheth ỹ seruantes to obey their maisters be they good oꝛ badde, and to suffer wꝛong of them, as Chꝛist suffred wꝛong foꝛ vs.

In the 3. he teacheth the wiues to obey their husbandes, ye, though they be vnbeleuers, and to apparell themselues godly, and as it becommeth holynes. And therto that the husbandes suffer, and beare the infirmity of their wyues, and lyue accoꝛdyng to knowledge with them. And than in generall he exhoꝛteth them to be soft, curteous, patient, and frendly one to an other, and to suffer foꝛ righteousnesse, after the ensample of Chꝛist.

Men ought to rule theyꝛ wiues with gods woꝛd.

In the 4. he exhoꝛteth to flye synne, and to tame the flesh with soberneſſe, watching, and pꝛayer, & to loue ech other, and to know that all good giftes are of God, & euery man to helpe hys neighbour, with such as he hath receiued of God, and finally not to wonder, but to reioyce though they muste suffer foꝛ Chꝛistes names sake, seeyng as they be here partakers of hys afflictions, so shall they be partakers of his gloꝛy to come.

To watch is not onely to abstaine from slepe, but also to auoyde all occasions that may dꝛawe vs to sinne.

In

In the 3. he teacheth the bishops & priestes how they should lyue and fede Christes flocke, and warneth vs of the deuil, whiche on euery side lyeth in wayte for vs.

A Prologue vppon the second Epistle of S. Peter, by William Tyndall.

THis Epistle was written agaynst thē whiche thought ỳ christen faith might be idle, and without workes, when yet the promise of Christ is made vs vpon that condition, that we henceforth worke the will of God, and not of the flesh. Therefore he exhorteth them to exercise themselues diligently in vertue and all good workes, thet by to be sure that they haue the true faith, as a man knoweth the goodnes of a tree by hys fruite. Then he commendeth and magnifieth the gospel, & willeth that men harken to that only, and to mens doctrine not at all. For as he sayth, there came no prophetical scripture by the will of man, but by the wil of the holy ghost, which onely knoweth the will of God: neither is any scripture of priuate interpretatiō, that is to say, may be otherwise expounded then agreyng to the open places, and generall articles, & to the couenantes of god, and all the rest of the scripture.

And therfore in the second, he warneth them of false teachers, that should come, and throughe preachyng confidence in false workes, to satisfie their couetousnesse withall, shoulde denye Christ, which he threatneth with thre terrible examples. with the fall of the angels, the flonde of Noe, and ouerthrowyng of Sodome and Gomorre, and so describeth them with their insatiable couetousnes, pryde, stubbornnes and disobedience to all temporall rule and authoritie, with their abhominable whoredome, and hipocrisie, that a blinde man may see, that he prophecied it of the Popes holy spiritualtie, which deuoures the whole worlde with their couetousnes, liuyng in all lust and pleasure, and raigning as temporall tyrantes.

In the third he sheweth that in the latter dayes, the people through vnbeliefe, and lacke of feare of the iudgement of the last day, shall be euen as Epicures, wholy geuen to the flesshe. which last day shall yet surely & shortly come sayth he: for a thousand yeres, and one day is with God all one. And he sheweth also how terrible that day shall be, & how sodenly it shall come, & therfore exhorteth all men to loke earnestly for it, and to prepare themselues agaynst it with holy conuersation, and godly liuyng.

Finally, the first chapiter sheweth how it shold go in the tyme of the pure and true Gospell. The second, how it should go in the tyme of the Pope and mens doctrine. The third, how at the last men shoulde beleue nothyng, nor feare God at all.

The condition of the worlde shall ware worse and worse.

The Prologue vppon the three Epistles of S. Iohn, by William Tyndall.

IN this first Epistle of Saint Iohn, is contayned the doctrine of a verye Apostle of Christ, and ought of right to follow hys Gospel. For as in his gospell he setteth out the true faythe, and teacheth by it only all men to be saued, and restored vnto the fauour of God agayne, euen so here in this Epistle, he goeth agaynst them, that boaste themselues of fayth, and yet continue without good workes, and teacheth many wayes, that where true fayth is, there the workes tary not behinde, and contrary that where the workes followe not, there is no true fayth, but a false imagination and vtter darkenes.

Where a true fayth is, there are also good workes.

And he writeth sore agaynst a sects of heretikes, which then began to deny that Christ was come in the flesshe, and calleth thē very Antichrists, which sect goeth now in her full swinge. For though they deny not openly with the mouth, ỳ Christ is come in ỳ flesshe, yet they deny it in ỳ hart & their doctrine & liuing. For he that wil be iustified, & saued through his owne workes, the same doth as much as he that denyed Christ to be come in flesshe, seyng that Christ came only therfore in the flesh, that he should iustifye vs, or purchase vs pardon of our synnes, dyyng vs in the fauour of God agayne, and make vs heyres of eternal life, with his workes only, and with his bloudshedyng, without, and before all our workes.

Christes bloud purchaseth forgeuenes of sinnes, and not mans workes.

So fighteth this epistle both against them that will be saued by their owne good workes, and also agaynst them that wyll be saued by a fayth, that hath no lust to do workes at all, and kepeth vs in ỹ middle way, that we beleue in Christ to be saued by his workes onely, and then to know that it is our duty for that kyndnes, to prepare oure selues to doe the commaundement of God, and to loue euery man his neighbor, as Christ loued hym, seking with our owne workes Gods honour and our neighbours wealth only: and trusting for eternall lyfe, and for all that God hath promised vs for Christes sake.

The two last Epistles though they be short, yet are goodly ensamples of loue and fayth, and do sauour of the spirite of a true Apostle.

A Prologue vpon the Epistle of Saint Paule to the Hebrues, by William Tyndall.

Whether this were Paules epistle or no great learned men haue doubted.

About this epistle hath euer ben much doubting & that amõg great learned men, who should be the authour thereof diuers affirmyng that it was not Paules, partly because the style so disagreeth, and is so vnlike hys other Epistles, and partly bicause it standeth in the second Chapter, this learnyng was confirmed to vs ward: that is to say, taught vs by them that heard it them selues of the Lord. Now Paule testifieth Gala. i. that he receyued not his Gospell of man, nor by mã, but immediatly of Christ, and that by reuelation. wherfore say they, seing this man confesseth that hee receiued his doctrine of the Apostles, it can not be Paules, but some Disciple of the Apostles. Now whether it were Pauls or no I say not, but permit it to other mens iudgementes, neither thinke I it to be an Article of any mans fayth, but that a man may doubt of the authour.

Some deny it to haue bene writtẽ by anye Apostle, and refuse it as not Catholike.

Moreouer, many there hath bene which not onely haue denyed this Epistle to haue bene written by any of the Apostles, but haue also refused it all together as no Catholicke or godly epistle, bicause of certaine textes written therin. For first he sayth in the sixt it is impossible that they whiche were once lighted, and haue tasted of the heauely gift, and were become partakers of the holye ghoste, and haue tasted of the good worde of GOD, and of the power of the worlde to come, if they fall, shoulde bee renewed agayne to repentaunce or conuersion. And in the tenth it sayth: if we sinne willingly after we haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sinnes, but a fearefull looking for iudgement, and violent fyre whiche shall destroy the aduersaries. And in the xij. it saith, that Esau found no way to repentaunce or conuersion, no, thoughe he sought it with teares. whiche textes say they, sound: that if a man sinne any more after he is once Baptised, he can be no more forgeuen, and that is contrary to all the Scripture, and therefore to be refused to be Catholicke and godly.

Solution of the former doubte

Unto whiche I aunswere: if we should denye this Epistle for those textes sakes, so should we deny first Mathew, which in his xij. Chapter affirmeth that he which blaspheмeth the holy Ghost, shall neither be forgiuen here, nor in the worlde to come. And then Marke, which in his thyrd Chapiter sayth, that he that blaspheмeth the holy Ghost, shal neuer haue forgiuenesse, but shalbe in daunger of eternall damnation. And thirdly Luke, which saith there shall be no remission to him that blaspheмeth the spirite of God. Moreouer John in his first Epistle saith, there is a sinne vnto death, for which a man should not pray. And ij. Pet. ij. saith if a man be fled from the vncleanesse of the world through the knowledge of our Saniour Jesus Christ, and then be wrapt in agayne, his ende is worse then the beginnyng, and that it had better for him neuer to haue knowen the truth. And Paule ij. Ti. iij. curseth Alexander the Coppersmith, desiring the lord to reward him accordyng to his deedes. whiche is a signe that either ỹ Epistle should not be good, or that Alexander had sinned past forgiuenesse, no more to be prayed for. wherfore, seyng no Scripture is of priuate interpretation, but must be expounded accordyng to the generall Articles of our fayth, and agreable to other open and euident textes, & confirmed or compared to lyke sentences, why should we not vnderstand these places with like reuerẽce as we do the other, namely when all the remnaunt of the Epistle is so godly, & of so great learnyng?

This not to be denyed to be Paules Epistle.

The first place in the vj. Chapiter, will no more then that they which know the truth, and yet willingly refuse the light, and chuse rather to dwell in darkenes, and refuse Christ, & make a mocke of him (as ẏ Pharisies, which whē they were ouercome with Scripture & miracles, ẏ Christ was the very Messias, yet had they such lust in iniquitie that they forsoke him, persecuted him, slewe him, and did all the shame that could be imagined to him) can not bee renued (εἰς μετάνοιαν) sayth the Greeke, to be conuerted: that is to say, such malicious vnkyndnesse, which is none other, then the blasphemyng of the holy Ghost, deserueth that the spirite shall neuer come more at them to conuerte them, whiche I beleue to be as true, as any other text in all the Scripture.

And what is ment by that place in the tenth Chapter, where he sayth, if we sinne willingly after we haue receiued ẏ knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice, for sinne is declared immediatly after. For he maketh a comparison betwene Moses and Christ, saying: if he which despised Moses law dyed without mercy, how much worse punishment is he worthy of, that treadeth the sonne of God vnderfoote, and counteth the bloud of the couenaunt, by whiche bloud he was sanctified, as an vnholy thyng, & blasphemeth the spirite of grace? By which wordes it is manifest that he meaneth none other by the fore wordes, then the sinne of blasphemy of the spirite.

For them that sinne of ignorannce or infirmitie, there is remedy, but for him that knoweth the truthe, and yet willingly yeldeth him selfe to sinne, & consenteth vnto the lyfe of sinne with soule and body, & had rather lye in sin, then haue his poysoned nature healed, by the helpe of the spirite of grace, and maliciously persecuteth the truth, for him I say there is no remedy, the way to mercy is locked vp, and the spirite is taken from him, for his vnthankefulnesse sake no more to be geuen him. Truthe it is, if a mā can turne to God and beleue in Christ, he must be forgiuen how deepe soeuer he hath sinned: but that wil not be without the spirite, and such blasphemers shall no more haue the spirite offred them. Let euery man therefore feare God, and beware that he yeld not him self to serue sinne, but how oft soeuer he sinne, let him be gyn agayne and fight a freshe, and no doubt he shal at the last ouercome, and in the meane tyme, yet be vnder mercy for Christes sake, because his hart worketh, and would fayne be loused from vnder the bondage of sinne.

Mercy is locked vp from hym which wil fully yeldeth his body & soule to sinne.

And there it sayth in the .xij. Esau founde no way (εἰς μετάνοιαν) to bee conuerted and reconciled vnto God, and restored vnto his byrth right agayn, though he sought it with teares, that text must haue a spirituall eye. For Esau in selling his byrthright, despised not onely that temporall promotion, that he should haue bene Lord ouer all his brethren, and kyng of that countrey: but he also refused the grace and mercy of GOD, and the spirituall blessyng of Abrahā and Isaac, and all ẏ mercy that is promised vs in Christ: which should haue bene his seede. Of this ye see that this Epistle ought no more to be refused for holy, godly, and Catholicke, then the other autentike Scriptures.

Now therfore to come to our purpose agayne, though this Epistle (as it sayth in the sixt) lay not the grounde of the fayth of Christ, yet it buildeth cunnyngly thereon pure gold, siluer, and precious stones, & proueth the Priesthode of Christ with Scriptures inuincible. Moreouer, there is no worke in all the Scripture, that so playnly declareth the meanyng and significatiōs of the sacrifices, ceremonies, and figures of the old Testament, as this Epistle: in so much that if wilful blindnes, & malicious malice were not the cause, this Epistle onely were enoughe to wede out of the hartes of the papistes, that cankred heresie of iustifiyng of workes, cōcernyng our Sacraments, ceremonies, and all maner traditions of their owne inuention.

No place in the scripture, so plainly describeth the significations & figures of the olde testament, as this epistle doth.

And finally in that ye see in the tenth that he had bene in bondes, and prison for Christes sake, & in ẏ he so mightely driueth all to Christ to be saued thorough him, and so cared for the flocke of Christ that he both wrote and sent, where hee heard that they begon to faynte, to comforte, courage, & strength them with the word of GOD, and in that also that he sent Timothe, Paules Disciple, both vertuous, well learned, and had in great reuerence, it is easy to see that he was a faythfull seruaunt of Christes, and of the same doctrine that Timothe was of, yea, and Paule hym selfe was of, and ẏ he was an Apostle or in the Apostles tyme, or nere thereunto. And seyng the Epistle agreeth to all the rest of the Scripture (if it be indifferently looked on) why should it not bee authorized and taken for holy Scripture?

This epistle for that it agreeth with the rest of the scripture ought to be of equal authoritie with the other.

The Prologue vpon the Epistle of S. Iames, by W. Tyndall.

THoughe this Epistle were refused in the old tyme, and denyed of many to be the epistle of a very Apostle, and though also it laye not the foundation of the fayth of Christe, but speaketh of a general fayth in god, neyther preacheth his death and resurrection, either the mercy that is layde vp in store for vs in him, or euerlasting couenant made vs in his blood, which is the office, and duety of a very apostle, as Christ sayeth: Iohn 15. ye shall testifye of me: yet because it setteth vp no mans doctrine, but cryeth to keepe the law of God, & maketh loue which is without parcialitie the fulfillyng of the law, as Christ and all the Apostles did, and hath thereto many good and godly sentēces in it: and hath also nothing that is agreable to the rest of the scripture: if it be loked indifferētly on, me thinketh it ought of rigt to be takē for holy scripture. For as for that place for which happely it was at the begynnyng refused of holy men (as it ought, if it had meant as they toke it, and for which place onely, for the false vnderstandyng, it hath bene chiefly receiued of the Papistes) yet if the circumstances be well pondered, it wyll appeare that the authors entent was farre otherwise then they toke for.

This epistle is to be taken as holy scripture.

The papistes alleage this text for their purpose, thorough misunderstandyng the same.

For where he saith in the 2. chapter, fayth without deedes is dead in it self, he meaneth none other thyng, then all the scripture doth: how that that fayth which hath no good dedes following, is a false fayth, and none of that fayth iustifieth, or receyueth forgeuenesse of sins. For God promised thē only forgeuenes of theyr sinnes onely, whiche turne to GOD to keepe his lawes. Wherfore they that purpose to cōtinue still in synne, haue no part in that promise, but deceyue themselues if they beleue that GOD hath forgeuen them their olde synnes for Christes sake. And after when he sayth, that a man is iustified by deedes, and not of faith only, he will no more, then that faith doth not iustify euery where, that nothyng iustifieth saue fayth. For dedes also do iustify. And as fayth only iustifieth before God, so do dedes onely iustify before the world, whereof is inough spoken, partly in ỳ Prologue on Paul to the Romaynes, and also in other places. For as Paule affirmeth, Rom. 2. that Abraham was not iustified by workes before God, but by fayth only as Gen. beareth record, so wil Iames that deedes onely iustified hym before the world, and faith wrought with his deedes: that is to say, fayth wherwith he was righteous before God in the hart, did cause hym to worke the wyll of God outwardly, whereby he was righteous before the worlde, and whereby the worlde perceiued that he beleued in God, loued and feared God. And as Hebr. 11. ỳ scripture affirmeth that Raab was iustified before God through faith, so doth Iames affirme that through workes, by whiche she sheweth her fayth, she was iustified before the world, and it is true.

Fayth only iustifieth

And as for the Epistle of Iudas, though men haue, and yet do doubt of the authour, and thoughe it seeme also to be drawne out of the second Epistle of S. Peter, and thereto alleageth scripture that is no where founde, yet seyng the matter is so godly, and agreeyng to holy Scripture, I see not but that it ought to haue the authoritie of holy Scripture.

An exposition vpō certaine wordes, and phrases of the new Testament.

INfernus and Gehenna differ much in significatiō, though we haue none interpretatiō for either of thē, thē this english word Hell: for Gehenna signifieth a place of punishment: but Infernus is taken for any maner of place beneth in the earth, as a graue, sepulchre, or a caue.

Hell it is called in Hebrue the valley of Hennon, a place by Ierusalem, where they brent their children in fyre, vnto the Idoll Moloch, and is vsurped, and taken now for a place where the wicked, and vngodly shalbe tormented both soule and body, after the generall iudgement.

Geue roume to the wrath of God: Rom. 12. wrath is there taken for vēgeaunce, and the meanyng is: let God auenge either by himselfe, or by the officers that beare hys roume.

There tary and abide till ye go out. It is Marke the 6. chap. whersoeuer ye enter into an house, there abide till ye go out thence: And Luke. 9. it is. Into whatsoeuer house ye enter, there tary, and go not out thence, that is to say, whosoeuer receiueth you, there abyde as long as you are in the citie, or towne: and go not shamefully a begging from house to house, as Friers doe.

ye

Dust, shake of the dust of your feete. Math. 10. why are they commaunded to shake of the dust? for a witnes sayth Luke, that that deede may testifye against them, in the day of iudgement, that the doctrine of saluation was offred for them, but they would not receyue thē: ye see also that such iestures and ceremonies, haue greater power with them, thē haue bare wordes onely, to moue the harte, and to stirre vp fayth, as do the laying on of handes, & annointyng with oyle, &c.

Hipocrites can ye discerne the face of heauen, and not discerne the signe of the tymes? that is to say, they could iudge by the signes of the skye what weather should follow, but they could not know Christe by the signes of the Scripture, and yet other signes might not be geuen them.

He that sayth he knoweth Christ, & kepeth not his commaundementes is a lyar. To know Christ is to beleue in Christ: Ergo, he that keepeth not the commaundementes, beleueth not in Christ.

¶ The end of such Prologues of the old Testament, and new Testament, as were made by William Tyndall.

The parable of the wicked Mammon, published in the yeare 1527. the 8. of May, by William Tyndall.

¶ That fayth the mother of all good workes iustifieth vs, before we can bryng forth any good worke: as the husband marieth his wyfe before he can haue any lawfull children by her. Furthermore, as the husbande marieth not hys wyfe, that she shoulde continue vnfruitefull as before, and as she was in the state of virginitie (wherin it was impossible for her to beare fruite) but contrariwise to make her fruitefull: euen so fayth iustifieth vs not, that is to say, marieth vs not to God, that we should continue vnfruitfull as before, but that he should put the seede of his holy sprite in vs (as S. Iohn in his first Epistle calleth it) and to make vs fruitfull. For sayth Paul, Ephe. 2. By grace are ye made safe through fayth, and that not of your selues: for it is the gifte of God, and commeth not of the workes, least any man should boast himselfe. For we are his workemanshyp created in Christ Iesu vnto good workes, which God hath ordeyned that we should walke in them.

William Tyndale otherwyse called Hitchins to the Reader.

GRace and peace with all maner spirituall feelyng and lyuyng, worthy of the kyndenes of Christ, be wyth the reader, & with all that trust the wyll of God, Amen.

The cause why I set my name before this little treatise, and haue not rather done it in the new testament, is, that then I folowed the counsell of Christ which exhorteth men. Math. 6. to doe their good deedes secretly, and to be contente with the conscience of well doyng, and that God seeth vs, and patiently to abyde the reward of the last day which christ hath purchased for vs: & now would I fayne haue done likewise, but am I compelled otherwise to do.

The cause why W. Tyndall put his name to some bokes & left it out in some.

While I abode, a faythfull companion which now hath taken another voyage vpon him, to preach Christ where (I suppose) he was neuer yet preached (God which put in hys hart thether to go, sende his spirite with hym, comforte hym and bryng hys purpose to good effecte) one William Roye, a man somewhat crafty, when he commeth vnto new acquayntance, and before he be throughknowne, and namely, when all is spent, came vnto me, and offred hys helpe. As long as he had no money, somwhat I could rule hym, but assoone as he had gotten hym money, he became lyke hymselfe agayne. Neuertheless I suffered all thynges tyll that was ended, which I coulde not doe alone without one, both to write, and to helpe me to cōpare the textes together. when that was ended, I toke my leaue and bade hym farewell for our two lyues, and as men say, a day longer. After we were departed he went, and gate him new frendes, which thyng to doe, he passeth all that euer I yet knew. And there, when he had stored hym of money, he gate hym to Argentine, where he professed wonderfull faculties, & maketh boast of no small thyngs. A yeare after that, and now xij. monthes before ỳ printyng of this worke, came one Jerome a brother of Grenewich also, thyther wormes to Argentine, saying ỳ he intended to be Christes Disciple another whyle, & to kepe (as nye as God would geue hym grace) ỳ profession of hys baptisme, & to get hys liuyng with his hades, & to lyue no lõger idelly, & of the sweate and labour of those captiues, whiche they had taught, not to beleue in Christe, but in cut shooes, and russet coats. Which Jerome with all diligence I warned of Ropes boldnes, & exhorted him to beware of hym, & to walke quietly, and wyth all patiẽce & long suffering, according as we haue Christ & hys Apostles, for an ensãple, which thyng he also promised me.

William Roye a false Disciple.

Jerome a brother of Grenewich

Neuertheles whẽ he was commyng to Argẽtine, Williã Roye (whose toung is able not onely to make fooles starke mad, but also to deceaue the wisest that is at the first sight and acquaintaunce) gate hym to hym, and set hym a worke, to make rymes, while he hym selfe translated a Dialogue out of Latin into Englishe, in whose Prologue he promiseth more a great deale, then I feare me he will euer pay. Paule sayth. 2. Timo. 2. The seruaũt of the Lord must not striue, but be peaceable vnto all men, and ready to teach, & one that can suffer the euill with mekenesse, and that can informe them that resiste: if God at any tyme will geue them repentaunce for to know the trouth. It becommeth not then the Lordes seruaunt to vse raying rymes, but Gods worde, which is the right weapon to slay sinne, vice & all iniquitie. The Scripture of god is good to teach, and to improue, ij. Timo. iij. and. ij. Thes. ij. Paule speakyng of Antechrist sayth, whom the Lord shall destroy with the spirite or breath of his mouth, that is, with the word of God. And. ij. Cor. x. The weapons of our warre are not carnall thynges (sayth he) but mighty in God to cast downe strong holdes, and so forth, that is, to destroy high buildings of false doctrine. The word of God is that day wherof Paul speaketh. i. Cor. iij.) which shall declare all thyng, & that fire which shal try euery mans worke, and consume false doctrine: With that sword ought men sharply to fight, and not to rayle with foolishe rymes. Let it not offende thee, that some walke inordinatly, let not the wickednes of Judas, cause thee to despise the doctrine of his fellowes. No man ought to thinke that Stephen was a false preacher, because that Nicolas whiche was chosen fellow with hym (Act. vj.) to minister vnto the widowes, fell after into great hereties, as histories make mention. Good and euill go alwayes together, one cã not be knowen without the other.

Marke this also aboue all thinges, that Antechrist is not an outward thyng, that is to say, a man that should sodenly appeare with wonders, as our fathers talked of hym. No verely, for Antichrist is a spirituall thyng. And is as much to say as agaynst Christ, ỳ is, one that preacheth false doctrine contrarie to Christ. Antechrist was in the old Testamẽt and fought with the Prophetes, he was also in the tyme of Christ, & of the Apostles, as thou readest in the Epistles of John, and of Paule to the Corinthians, and Galathians, and other Epistles. Antechrist is now & shall (I doubt not) endure till the worldes ende. But his nature is (when he is vttered and ouercome with the worde of God) to go out of the playe for a season, and to disguise hymselfe, and then to come in agayne with a new name, and new rayment. As thou seest howe Christ rebuketh the Scribes, and the Pharises in the Gospel (which were very Antechristes) saying, Wo be to you Pharises, for ye robbe widowes houses, ye praye long prayers vnder a colour, ye shut vp the kingdom of heauẽ, & suffer thẽ not ỳ would, to enter in, ye haue taken away the keye of knowledge, ye make men breake Gods commaundementes with your traditions, ye beguile the people with hypocrisie and such like. Which thynges all our prelates do, but haue yet gotten them new names, and other garmentes, and are otherwyse disguised. There is difference in the names betwene a Pope, a Cardinall, a bishop, and so forth, and to say a Scribe, a Pharisey, a seniour and so forth: but the thyng is all one. Euen so now when we haue vttered hym, he wyll change hymselfe once more, and turne hymselfe into an angell of lyght, 2. Cor. 11. Read the place I exhorte thee, whatsoeuer thou art that readest this, and note it well. The Jewes loke for Christ, and he is come xv. hundred yeares agoe, and they not ware: we also haue loked for Antechrist, and he hath raigned as long, and we not ware: and that because eyther of vs looked carnally for hym, and not in the places where we ought to haue sought. The Jewes had found Christ verily, if they had sought hym in the lawe and the Prophetes, whether Christ sendeth them to seke: John v. We also had spied out Antechrist long ago, if we had looked in the doctrine of Christ, & hys apostles, where, because ỳ beast seeth him selfe now to be sought for, he roareth, and seketh new holes to hyde hymselfe in, & chaungeth hymselfe into a thousand fashions with all maner wilinesse, falshode, suttletie & craft. Because that hys excommunications are come to lyght, he maketh it treason vnto the kyng, to bee acquaynted with Christe. If Christe, & they may not raigne together, one hope we haue that Christ shal liue euer. The olde Antichristes brought Christ vnto Pilate, saying by our lawe he ought to die, and whẽ Pilate bade them iudge hym after their lawe, they answered, it is not lawfull for vs to kyll any man, whiche they dyd to the intent that they whiche regarded not the shame of their false excõmunications, should yet feare to confesse Christ, because that the temporall sword had condemned hym. They do all thing of a good zeale they say, they loue you so well, that they had rather burne you, then ỳ you should haue fellowship wt Christ. They are iealous ouer you amisse (as sayth S. Paul Gal. iij.) They would deuide you from Christe and his holy Testament, and toyne you to the Pope, to beleue in his Testament and promises. Some man will aske (peraduenture) why I take the labour to make this worke, in as much as they will burne it, seyng they burnt the Gospell, I answere, in burnyng the new Testament they dyd none other thyng then that I looked for, no more shall they do, if they burne me also, if it be Gods will it shall so be.

Neuertheless, in translatyng of the Testament I dyd my dutie, and so doe I now, and will doe as much more as God hath ordeined me to do. And as I offered that, to al men to correct it, who soeuer could, euen so do I this. who soeuer therfore readeth this, compare it vnto the Scripture. If Gods word beare recorde vnto it, and thou also feelest in thine hart, that it is so, be of good comfort and geue God thankes. If Gods word condemne it, then hold it accursed, and so doe all other doctrines. As Paule counseleth his Galathians. Beleue not euery spirite sodenly, but iudge thē by the word of God, whiche is the trial of all doctrine and lasteth for euer. Amen.

The Parable of the wicked Mammon.

Luke.16. THere was a certain rich man, whiche had a steward that was accused vnto hym that hee had wasted his goodes. And called hym, and sayd vnto him. How is it that I heare this of thee? Geue accoumptes of thy stewardshyp. For thou mayst be no longer my steward. The steward sayd with in him selfe. What shall I do? for my master will take away frō me my stewardshyp. I can not digge, and to begge, I am ashamed. I wote, what to doe, that when I am put out of my stewardshyp, they may receaue me into theyr houses.

Then called he all his masters detters, and sayd vnto the first, how much owest thou vnto my master? And he sayd, an hūdred tonnes of oyle, and hee sayd to hym: take thy bill, and sit downe quickely, and write fiftie. Then sayd he to an other, what owest thou? And he sayd, an hundred quarters of wheate. He sayd to hym. Take thy bill, and write foure score. And the Lord commended the vniust steward, because he had done wisely. For the children of this world, are in their kynde, wiser then the children of light. And I say also vnto you, make you frendes of the wicked Mammon, that when ye shall haue neede, they may receaue you into euerlastyng habitations. Luke. xvi. Chapter.

For as much as with this, & diuers such other textes, many haue inforced to draw the people from the true faith, & from puttyng their trust in the truth of Gods promises, and in the merites and deseruyng of his Christ our Lord, and haue also brought it to passe (for many false Prophetes shall arise and deceaue many, and much wickednes must also be, sayth Christ Math. xxiiij. Math. 24. And Paul sayth. ij. Timo. iij. Euell mē and deceauers shall preuaile in euill, 2. Timo. 3. while they deceaue, and are deceaued them selues) and haue taught them to put their trust in their owne merites, and brought them in belefe, that they shalbe iustified in the sight of God, by the goodnesse of their owne workes, & haue corrupt the pure word of God, to confirme their Aristotle with all. For though that ỹ Philosophers, & worldly wisemen were enemyes aboue all enemyes to the Gospell of God, and though the worldly wisedome can not comprehend the wisedome of God, as thou mayst see. i. Corint. j. and. ij. And 1. Cor. 1. though worldly righteousnes can not and. 2. be obedient vnto the righteousnes of God. Rom. x. Yet what so euer they Roma. 10. read in Aristotle, ỹ must be first true. And to mainteine that, they rent and teare the Scriptures with their distinctions, and expounde them violently contrarie to the meanyng of the text, and to the circumstaunces that go before and after, and to a thousand cleare and euidente textes. wherfore I haue taken in hand to expounde this Gospell, & certaine other places of the new Testament, and (as far forth as God shall lende me grace) to bryng the Scripture vnto the right sence, and to digge agayne the welles of Abraham, and to purge & cleanse thē of the earth of worldly wisedome, where with these Philistenes haue stopped them. whiche grace graunt me God, for the loue that he hath vnto his sonne Jesus our Lord, vnto the glory of his name. Amen.

Faith onely iustifieth

THat sayth onely before all workes and without all merites, but chriſtes onely, iustifieth and setteth vs at peace with God, is proued by Paul in the first chapiter to the Roma. I am not ashamed (sayth he) of the Gospell, that is to say, of the glad tidinges and promises which God hath made, and sworne to vs in Christ. For it (that is to say the gospell) is the power of god vnto saluation, to all that beleue. And it followeth in the foresayd chapiter, ỳ iust or righteous must liue by faith.

Roma. 1.

Faith bringeth lyfe.

For in the sayth which we haue in Christ, and in Gods promises fynde we mercy, lyfe, fauour and peace. In the law we fynde death, damnation, & wrath: moreouer, the curse and vengeaunce of GOD vpon vs. And it (that is to say, the lawe) is called of Paule, 2. Corin. 3. the ministration of death and damnation. In the lawe we are proued to be the enemyes of God, and that we hate him. For how can we be at peace with God and loue hym, seing we are conceiued, and borne vnder the power of the deuill, and are his possession and kingdome, his captiues and bondmen, and ledde at his wyll, & he holdeth our hartes, so that it is impossible for vs to consent to the wil of God, much more is it impossible for a man to fulfill the lawe of his owne strength and power, seyng that we are by birth and of nature, the heires of eternall damnation. As sayth Paul Ephe 2. We (sayth he) are by nature the children of wrath. Whiche thyng the lawe doth but vtter onely, and helpeth vs not, yea requireth impossible thynges of vs. The lawe when it commaūdeth that thou shalt not lust, geueth thee not power so to doe, but damneth thee, because thou canst not so do.

The law bryngeth death.

2. Cor. 3.

Ephe. 2.

IF thou wilte therefore bee at peace with God, and loue him, thou must turne to the promises of God, and to ỳ Gospell, which is called of Paul in the place before rehearsed to the Corinthians, the ministration of righteousnes, and of the spirite. For sayth bringeth pardō, and forgeuenes freely purchased by Christes bloud, and bringeth also the spyrite, the spyrite looseth the bondes of the deuill, and setteth vs at libertie. For where the spyrite of the Lord is, there is libertie sayth Paule in the same place to the Corinthians, that is to say, there the harte is free, and hath power to loue the will of God, & there the hart mourneth that he cannot loue inough. Now is that consent of ỳ hart vnto the law of God eternall life, yea, though there bee no power yet in the members to fulfill it. Let euery man therfore (accordyng to Paules councell in the 6. chapter to the Eph.) arme himselfe with ỳ armour of god, that is to vnderstand, with gods promises, & aboue all thing (sayeth he) take vnto you the shield of sayth, wherewyth ye may be able to quenche all the fierye dartes of the wicked, that ye may be able to resist in the euill day of temptation, and namely at the houre of death.

The Gospell is the ministratiō of righteousnes.

Resiste the deuill with the shield of sayth.

See therfore thou haue Gods promises in thyne hart, and that thou beleue them without wauerying: & when temptation ariseth, and the deuill layeth the law, & thy dedes agaynst thee, aunswere him, with the promises, and turne to God and confesse thy selfe to hym, and say it is euen so, or els howe could he be mercifull? but remember that he is the God of mercy, & of truth, and cannot but fulfil his promises. Also remember that hys sonnes bloud is stronger then all the synnes and wickednes of the whole world, and therewith quiet thy self, and therunto commit thy selfe, and blesse thy selfe in all temptation (namely, at the houre of death) with that holy cādle. Or els perishest thou, though thou hast a thousand holy candels about thee, a C. ton of holy water, a shipfull of pardones, a clothe sacke full of Friers coates, and all the ceremonies in the world, and all the good workes, deseruings and merites of all the men in the worlde, bee they or were they neuer so holy, Gods worde onely lasteth for euer, and that which he hath sworne, doth abide, whē all other thynges perish. So long as thou findest any consent in thyne hart vnto the law of God, that it is righteous and good, and also displeasure that thou canst not fulfill it, dispayre not, neither doubt, but that Gods spirit is in thee, and that thou art chosen for Christes sake, to the inheritaunce of eternall lyfe.

Faith is ỳ holy candle wherewith we must bleſſe our selues at ỳ last houre.

And agayne, Rom. 3. We suppose that a man is iustified through sayth, without the deedes of the lawe. And likewyse Rom. 4. We say ỳ sayth was reckoned to Abraham for righteousnes. Also Romaynes. v. seyng that we are iustified through fayth, we are at peace with God. Also Roma. 10. with the hart doth a man beleue, to be made righteous. Also Gal 3. Receiued ye the spirite by the deeds of the law, or by hearyng of the fayth? Doth he which ministreth the spyrite vnto you, & worketh miracles among you, do it of the deedes of the law, or by hearyng of faith? Euen as Abraham beleued god, & it was reckoned to hym for righteousnes. Understand therfore (saith he) that the children of fayth are the children of Abraham. For the Scripture saw before, that God would iustify the heathen or Gentiles by fayth, & shewed before glad tidings vnto Abraham, in thy sede shall all nations be blessed. wherfore they which are of fayth are blessed, that is to witte, made righteous with righteous Abraham. For as many as are of the deedes of the law, are vnder curse. For it is written, saith he: Cursed is euery man that continueth not in all thinges, which are written in the booke of the lawe to fulfill them.

Fayth is accompted to vs for righteousnes. Gal. 3.

The children of fayth are the children of Abraham.

Item Gala. ij. where he resisted Peter in the face he sayth. We whiche are Iewes by nation, and not sinners of the Gentiles, know that a man is not iustified by the deedes of the law, but by the fayth of Iesus Christ, and haue therfore beleued on Iesus Christ, that we might be iustified by the fayth of Christ, and not by the deedes of the law: for by the deedes of the law shall no flesh be iustified. Item in the same place he sayth, touchyng ỳ I now liue, I lyue in ỳ fayth of the sonne of God, which loued me, and gaue him selfe for me, I despise not the grace of GOD. For if righteousnes come by ỳ law, thẽ is Christ dead in vayne. And of such like ensamples are all the Epistles of Paul full. Marke how Paule laboreth with him selfe to expresse the excedyng misteryes of fayth, in the epistle to the Ephesians, and in the Epistle to the Collossians. Of these and many such like textes, are we sure that the forgiuenes of sinnes, and iustifying is appropriate vnto faith onely without the addyng to of workes.

Gal. 2.

Fayth only iustifieth vs.

Take for the also the similitude that Christ maketh Math. vij. A good tree bringeth forth good frute. And a bad tree bringeth forth bad frute. There seest thou, that the frute maketh not the tree good, but the tree the frute, & that the tree must afore hand be good, or be made good: yet it can bryng forth good frute. As he also sayth Math. xij. either make the tre good, and his frute good also, either make the tree bad, and hys frute bad also. How can ye speake wel while ye your selues are euil: So likewise is this true, and nothyng more true, that a mā before all good workes must first be good, and that it is impossible that workes should make hym good, if he were not good before, yet he did good workes. For this is Christes principle & (as we say) a generall rule. How can ye speake well, while ye are euill? so likewise how can ye do good, while ye are euill.

Math. 7.

Mat. 12.

A principle taught by Christ.

This is therfore a playne, and a sure conclusion not to bee doubted of, that there must be first in the hart of a man, before he do any good worke, a greater and a preciouser thyng then all the good workes in the world to reconcile him to God, to bryng the loue and fauour of God to him, to make him loue God agayne, to make him righteous, and good in the sight of God, to do away his sinne, to deliuer him, and lose him, out of that captiuitie where in he was conceaued and borne, in whiche he could neither loue God, neither the will of God. Or els how can he worke any good worke that should please God, if there were not some supernaturall goodnes in him giuen of GOD freely, where of the good worke must spryng? euen as a licke man must first be healed or made whole, yet he can do the dedes of an whole man, and as the blind man must first haue sight geuen him, yet he can see: and he that hath his feete in fetters, giues, or stockes must first be loosed, or he can go, walke or runne, and euen as they whiche thou readest of in the Gospel, that they were possessed of the deuils, could not laude God, till the deuils were cast out.

That precious thyng which must be in the hart, yet a man can worke any good worke is ỳ word of God, which in the Gospell preacheth, proffereth & bryngeth vnto all that repent, and beleue, the fauour of God in Christ. Who soeuer heareth the word, and beleueth it, the same is thereby righteous, and thereby is geuen hym the spirite of God, which leadeth him vnto all that is the will of God, and is loosed from the captiuitie and bondage of the deuill, and his hart is free to loue God, and hath lust to do the will of GOD. Therfore it is called the word of lyfe, the word of grace, the word of health, the word of redemption, the word of forgiuenes, and the word of peace, he that heareth it not, or beleueth it not, cā by no meanes be made righteous before God. This confirmeth Peter in the xv. of the Actes, seyng that GOD through fayth doth purifie the hartes. Acts. 15. For of what nature so euer the word of God is, of the same nature must the hartes be, whiche beleue thereon and cleane thereunto. Now is the word liuyng, pure, righteous and true, & euen so maketh it the hartes of them that beleue theron.

IF it be sayd that Paul (when he saith in the iij. to the Romaines, no flesshe shalbe, or can be iustified by the deedes of the law) meaneth it of the ceremonies or sacrifices, it is an vntrue sayyng. For it foloweth immediatly, by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne. Now are they not the ceremonies that vtter sinne, but the law of cōmaundementes. In the iij. (he sayth) the law causeth wrath whiche can not bee vnderstand of the ceremonies, for they were geuen to reconcile the people to God agayne after they had sinned. The law cannot iustify vs. Ik as they say the ceremonies which were geuen to purge sinne and to reconcile, iustifie not, neither bleese, but temporally onely, much more the law of commaundementes iustifieth not. For that whiche proueth a man sick, healeth him not, neither doth the cause of wrath bring to fauour, neither can that whiche damneth saue a man. when the mother commaundeth her childe, but euen to rocke the cradle, it grudgeth, the commaundement doth but vtter the poyson that lay hid, and setteth him at bate with hys mother, and maketh hym beleue shee loueth him not.

These commaundements also (thou shalt not couet thy neighbours house, thou shalt not lust desire or wishe after thy neighbours wife, seruannt, mayde ore or asse, or what soeuer pertaineth vnto thy neyghbour) geue me not power so to doe, but vtter the poyson that is in me and damne me, because I can not so do, and proue that God is wrath with me, seing that his wil, and mine are so contrary. Therefore sayth Paul. Gal. iij. If there had ben geuen Gal. 3. such a law that could haue geuen lyfe, then no doubt righteousnes had come by the law, but the Scripture concluded all vnder sinne (sayth he) that the promise might bee geuen vnto them that beleue through the fayth that is in Jesus Christ.

The promises when they are beleued) are they that iustifie, for they bring the spirite whiche looseth the hart, giueth lust to the law, and certifieth vs of ỹ good will of God vnto vs ward. If we submit our selues vnto God, & desire him to heale vs, he wil do it, and will in the meane tyme (because of the consent of ỹ hart vnto ỹ law) count vs for full whole, & wil no more hate vs, but pitie vs, cherish vs, be tender harted to vs, & loue vs as he doth Christ him selfe. Christ is our redemer, Sauiour, peace, attonement, and satisfactiō, and hath made amendes or satisfaction to Godward for all the sinne whiche they that repēt (consentyng to the law and beleuyng the promises) do, haue done, or shal do. So that if through fragilitie we fall a thousand tymes in a day, yet if we do repent agayne, we haue alway mercy layd vp for vs in store in Jesus Christ our Lord. Fayth in christes promises doth iustify vs. Christ is the storehouse of mercy for vs.

WHat shall we say then to those Scriptures whiche go so sore vpō good workes: As we read Math. xxv. I was an hungred, and ye gaue me meate. &c. And such like. whiche all sound as though we should be iustified, and accepted vnto the fauour of God in Christ through good workes. To this I aunswere. Many there are which whē they heare or read of fayth, at once they cōsent therunto, and haue a certaine imagination or opinion of fayth, as when a man telleth a story or a thyng done in a straunge lande, that pertayneth not to thē at all. which yet they beleue, and tell as a true thyng. And this imagination or opinion they call faith. They thinke no further then that fayth is a thyng which standeth in their own power to haue, as do other naturall workes whiche men worke: but they feele no maner worksyng of the spirite, neither the terrible sentence of the law, the fearefull iudgements of God, the horrible damnation and captiuitie vnder Sathan. Therefore as soone as they haue this opinion, or imaginatiō in there hartes that fayth, verely this doctrine semeth true, I beleue it is euē so. Then they thinke that the right fayth is there. But afterward when they feele in them selues, and also see in other, that there is none alteration, and that the workes folow not, but that they are altogether euē as before, and abide in their old estate: then thinke they ỹ fauth is not sufficient, but The definition of true fayth.

that it must be some greater thing then fayth that should iustifie a man.

So faule they away from fayth agayne, and crye saying, fayth onely iustificth not a man, and maketh him acceptable to GOD. If thou aske them wherfore. They answere, see how many there are that beleue, and yet do no more then they did before. These are they whiche Judas in his Epistle calleth dreamers, which deceaue themselues with their owne fantasies. For what other thing is their imagination which they call fayth, then a dreamyng of the fayth, and an opinion of their owne imagination wrought without the grace of God? These must nedes be worse at the latter end then at the begynnyng. These are the old vessels, that rent, when new wyne is poured into them. Math. ix. that is, they heare Gods word, but hold it not, and therfore ware worse, then they were before. But the right fayth springeth not of mans fantasie, neither is it in any mans power to obtaine it, but is all together the pure gift of God poured into vs freely, without all maner doyng of vs, without deseruing and merites, yea and without seking for of vs. And is (as sayth Paul in the second to the Ephesians) euen Gods gift and grace purchased through Christ. Therfore is it mighty in operation, full of vertue and euer working, which also renueth a man and begetteth him a fresh, altereth him, chaungeth hym, and turneth him altogether into a new nature and conuersation: so that a man feeleth hys hart all together altered, chaunged, and farre otherwise disposed then before, & hath power to loue that whiche before he could not but hate, and delyteth in that, which before he abhorred, and hateth that, which before he could not but loue. And it setteth the soule at libertie, and maketh her free to folow the will of God, and doth to the soule euen as health doth vnto the body, after that a man is pined and wasted away with a long soking disease: the legges cannot beare hym, he cannot lift vp his handes to helpe hymself, his taste is corrupt, sager is bitter in hys mouth, his stomacke abhorreth longyng after slibbersause and swalthe, at which a whole stomacke is readye to cast hys gorge. when helth commeth, she changeth and altereth hym cleane, geueth hym strength in all hys members, lust & to do of his owne accord, that which before he could not do, neither could suffer that any mā erhorted hym to do, and hath now lust in holesome thynges, and hys members are free and at libertie, and haue power to do of their owne accorde all thinges, which belong to an whole man to do, which afore they had no power to do, but were in captiuitie and bondage. So likewise in all thyng doth right fayth to the soule.

Faith that bringeth not forth fruite, is but a dreame.

Mat. 9.

Faith is the gift of God.

Ephe. 2.

The spirite of God accompanieth fayth, & bringeth with her light, wherwith a man beholdeth hymselfe in the lawe of God, and seeth his miserable bondage and captiuitie, and humbleth himselfe, and abhorreth himselfe: she bringeth Gods promises of all good thinges in Christ. God worketh with his worde, and in his worde. And as his worde is preached, fayth rooteth her selfe in the harres of the elect: and as faith entreth and the worde of God is beleued, the power of God looseth the hart from the captiuitie, and bondage vnder sinne, and knitteth and coupleth him to God, and to the wyll of God: altereth hym, chaungeth hym cleane, fashioneth, and forgeth hym a new, geueth hym power to loue, and to doe that whiche before was vnpossible for hym eyther to loue or do, and turneth hym into a new nature: so ẏ he loueth that which he before hated, and hateth that which he before loued, and is cleane altered, chaunged, and contrary disposed, and is knit and coupled fast to Gods will, and naturally bringeth forthe good workes, that is to say, that which God commaundeth to do, and not thinges of hys owne imagination. And that doth he of hys owne accorde, as a tree bringeth forth fruit of her own accord. And as thou needest not to bid a tree to bryng forth fruite, so is there no law put vnto hym that beleueth, and is iustified through fayth (as sayth Paul in the first Epistle to Timothie the fyrst chapter.) Neither is it nedeful, for the law of god is written & graued in his harte, and his pleasure is therein. And as without commaundement, but euē of hys owne nature, he eateth, drinketh, seeth, heareth, talketh, & goeth, euē so of his owne nature, without coaction or compulsion of ẏ law, bringeth he forth good workes. And as a whole man when he is a thurst, tarieth but for drinke, and when he hungreth abideth but for meate, and then drinketh and eateth naturally: euē so is ẏ faithfull euer a thurst, & an hungred after the will of God, and tarieth but for occasion. And whensoeuer an occasion is geuen, he worketh naturally the will of God. For this blessing is geuen to all them that trust in Christes blood, that they thrust and hunger to do gods will. He that hath not this fayth, is but an vnprofitable babler of faith and workes, and wotteth neither what he bableth, nor what he meaneth, or wher unto his wordes pertayne. For he seeleth not the power of faith, nor ỳ working of the spirite in his hart, but enterpreteth the scriptures which speake of fayth and workes, after hys owne blynd reason & folish fantasies, & not of any feeling that he hath in his hart: as a man rehearseth a tale of an other mans mouth, and wotteth not whether it be so, or no as he sayth, nor hath any experience of ỳ thing it selfe. Now doth the scripture ascribe both fayth & workes not to vs, but to God only, to whom they belong onely, and to whō they are appropriate, whose gifte they are, and the proper worke of his spirit.

True fayth is not without good workes.

True fayth and good workes, are the gift of God, and come not of our selues.

Is it not a frowarde and peruerse blindnes, to teach how a man can do nothing of his owne selfe, and yet presumptuously take vpō them the greatest and hyest worke of God, euen to make fayth in themselues of their own power, and of their owne false imagination and thoughtes? Therfore I say we must dispayre of our selues, & pray God (as christes apostles did) to geue vs fayth, & to encrease our fayth. When we haue that, we neede no other thing more. For she bringeth the spirite with her, and he not onely teacheth vs all thinges, but worketh them also mightely in vs, and fearieth vs through aduersitie, persecution, death and hel, vnto heauen and euerlasting lyfe.

MArke diligently therfore seing we are come to answer. The Scripture (because of such dreames and fayned faythes sake) vseth such manner of speakinges of workes, not that a man should therby be made good to Godwarde or iustified, but to declare vnto other, and to take of other the differēce betwene false fayned fayth, and ryght fayth. For where right fayth is, there bringeth she forthe good workes, if there followe not good workes, it is (no doubt) but a dreame and an opinion or fained fayth.

The difference betwene false fayth, and right faith

Wherfore looke as the fruit maketh not the tree good, but declareth and testifieth outwardlye that the tree is good (as Christ sayeth) euery tree is knowen by his fruite: euen so shall ye know the right fayeth by her fruite.

As the tree is knowen by his fruit so right fayth is knowen by her fruit.

Take for an ēnsample Mary that annoynted Christes feete. Luke. 7. when Simō which had Christ to his house had condemned her, Christe defēded her, and iustified her saying: Simon, I haue a certayne thyng to say vnto thee. And he sayd maister, say on. There was a certayne lender whiche had two detters, the one ought v. C. pence, and the other fiftie. when they had nothing to pay, he forgaue bothe. which of them tell me, will loue hym most? Simon aunswered and sayd: I suppose that he to whome he forgaue most. And he said to him, thou hast truly iudged. And he turned him to ỳ womā, and sayd vnto Simon, Seest thou this womā? I entred into thine house and thou gauest me no water to my fete, but she hath washed my feet with teares, & wypte them with the heares of her head. Thou gauest me no kisse, but she since the tyme I came in, hath not ceased to kisse my feete. My heade with oyle thou haste not annoynted. And she hath annointed my feete with costly and precious oyntment. wherfore I say vnto thee, many sinnes are forgeuen her, for she loueth much. To whom lesse is forgeuen, the same doth loue lesse, &c. Hereby see we that dedes and workes are but outward signes of of the inward grace of the bounteous and plenteous mercy of God, freely receyued without all merites of deedes, ye and before all dedes. Christ teacheth to know the inward fayth and loue by the outward deedes. Deedes are the fruites of loue, and loue is the fruit of fayth. Loue and also the deedes are great or smal, according to the proportion of fayth. where fayth is mighty & strong, there is loue feruent and dedes plenteous, and done with exceedyng meknes. where fayth is weake, there is loue cold, & the dedes few, & seldom beare flowers, & blossomes in winter.

Example.

The frutes of fayth.

Symon beleued and had fayth, yet but weakly, & according to the proportion of his fayth loued coldly, and had dedes therafter: he had Christ vnto a simple and a bare feast onely, & receaued him not with any great humanitie. But Mary had a strong fayth, and therfore burning loue, & notable dedes done with exceedyng profound, & depe meknes. On the one side she saw her selfe clearely in the law, both in what daunger she was in, & her cruell bondage vnder sinne, her horrible damnation tion, and also the feareful sentence and iudgement of God vpon sinners. On the other side she heard the Gospell of Christ preached, and in the promises she saw with egles eyes the exceedyng aboundant mercy of God, that passeth all vtteraunce of speech, whiche is set foorth in Christ for all meke sinners, whiche knowledge their sinnes. And she beleued the word of God mightyly, and glorified God ouer his mercy and truth, and beyng ouercome and ouerwhelmed with ẏ vnspeakeable, yea and incomprehensible aboundat riches of the kyndnes of God, did enflame & burne in loue, yea was so swolne in loue, that she could not abide nor hold, but must breake out, and was so broke in loue that she regarded nothyng, but euen to vtter the feruent, and burnyng loue of her hart onely. She had no respect to her selfe, though she was neuer so great and notable a sinner, neither to the curious hipocrisie of the Pharisei, whiche euer disdaine weake sinners, neither the costlines of her oyntment, but with all humblenes did run vnto his feete. washed them with the teares of her eyes, and wyped them with the heares of her head, & anoynted them with her precious oyntment, yea, and would no doubt haue runne into the grou̅d vnder his feete to haue vttered her loue toward hym, yea would haue descended downe into hell, if it had bene possible. Euen as Paul in the ix. Chapter of his Epistle to the Romaines was dronke in loue, and ouerwhelmed with the plēteousnes of the infinite mercy of god (which he had receaued in Christe vnsought for) wished hym selfe banished from Christ and damned, to saue ẏ Jewes, if it might haue ben. For as a man feeleth God in hym selfe, so is he to hys neighbour.

A differēce betwene true faith & fained faith

Rom. 9.

Marke an other thyng also. we for the most part because of our grossenes, in all our knowledge procede frō that whiche is last and himmost, vnto that which is first, begynnyng at the latter end, disputyng and makyng our argumentes backeward. We begyn at the effect and worke, and procede vnto the naturall cause. As for an ensample, we first see the Moone darke, and then search the cause, and find that the puttyng of the earth, betwene the Sunne and the Moone is the naturall cause of the darknes, and that the earth stopperh the light. Then dispute we backeward saying: the Moone is darkned, therfore is the earth directly betwene the Sunne and the Moone. Now yet is not the darkenes of the Moone the naturall cause that the earth is betwen the Sunne and the Moone, but the effect therof, and cause declaratiue, declaryng and leadyng vs vnto the knowledge, how that the earth is betwene the Sunne and the Moone directly, & causeth the darknes, stopping the light of the Sunne from the Moone. And contrarywyse the beyng of the earth directly betwene the Sunne, and the Moone is the naturall cause of ẏ darknes. Likewise he hath a sonne, therfore is he a father, and yet the soone is not cause of the father, but contrarywise. Notwithstandyng ẏ sonne is the cause declaratiue, wherby we know that the other is a father. After the same maner here, many sinnes are forgeuen her, for she loueth much, thou mayst not vnderstand by the word for, that loue is the naturall cause of the forgeuyng of sinnes, but declareth it onely, and contrarywise the forgiuenesse of sinnes is the naturall cause of loue.

Backeward disputations.

The workes declare loue. And loue declareth that there is some benefite & kindnes shewed, or els would there bee no loue. why woorketh one, and an other not? Or one more then an other? Because that one loueth and the other not, or that the one loueth more then the other. why loueth one, & an other not, or one more thē an other? Because that one feeleth ẏ exceding loue of god in his hart, & an other not, or that one feeleth it more thē an other. Scripture speaketh after ẏ most grossest maner: Be diligent therfore that thou be not deceaued with curiousnes. For mē of no small reputation haue bene deceaued with their owne sophistry.

The kindnes of God moueth vs to loue god.

HEreby now seest thou, that there is great difference betwene beyng righteous, and good in a mans selfe, & declaryng and vtteryng righteousnes and goodnes. The fayth onely maketh a man safe, good, righteous and the frend of GOD, yea and the sonne and the heyre of GOD, and of all hys goodnes, & possesseth vs with the spirite of God. The worke declareth the selfe fayth and goodnes. Now vseth the Scripture the common maner of speakyng, and the very same that is among the people. As when a father sayth to his child, go, & belouing, mercyfull and good, to such, or such a poore man, he bideth him not, there with to be made mercifull, kinde and good: but Fayth onely maketh vs the sonnes and heires of God.

Fayth possessyth the spirite of God.

Workes declare fayth and Gods goodnes.

to testifie and declare the goodnes that is in him already, with the outward deede: that it may breake out to ỳ profite of other, and that other may feele it which haue nede therof.

After the same maner shalt thou enterprete the Scriptures whiche make mention of workes: that God therby wil that we shew forth, that goodnes, which we haue receaued by fayth, and let it breake forth and come to the profite of other, that the false fayth may be knowē, and weded out by the rootes.

Goddes grace is to be exercised in vs.

For God geueth no mā his grace, that he should let it lye stil, and do no good with all: but that he should encrease it, and multiplie it with lendyng it to other, and with open declaryng of it with the outward workes, prouoke & draw other to God. As Christ sayth in Mathew the v. Chapter: let your light so shine in the sight of men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your father which is in heauen. Or els were it as a treasure digged in the ground and hid wisedome, in whiche what profite is there?

Moreouer there with the goodnes, fauour, and giftes of God which are in thee, not onely shalbe knowen vnto other, but also vnto thyne owne selfe, and thou shalbe sure that thy fayth is right, and that the true spirite of God is in thee, and that thou art called, and chosen of God vnto eternall lyfe, and loosed frō the bondes of Sathā whose captiue thou wast, as Peter exhorteth in ỳ first of his second Epistle, through good workes to make our callyng and election (wherewith we are called and chosen of God) sure. For how dare a man presume to thinke, that his fayth is right, and that Gods fauour is on him, and that Gods spirite is in hym when hee feeleth not the workyng of the spirite, neither him selfe disposed to any godly thyng? Thou canst neuer know or be sure of thy fayth, but by the workes, if workes folow not, yea and that of loue, without lokyng after any reward, thou mayst be sure that thy fayth is but a dreame, and not right, & euen the same that James called in his Epistle the second Chapter dead faith, and not iustifyng.

Where true fayth is, good workes folow.

Gene. 2.

Abraham through workes Genesis. xxij. was sure of his fayth to be right, and that the true feare of God was in him, when he had offered his sonne (as the Scripture sayth.) Now know I that thou fearest God, that is to say. Now is it opē, and manifest that thou fearest God, in as much as thou hast not spared thy onely sonne for my sake.

SO now by this abyde sure and fast, that a mā inwardly in the hart and before God is righteous, & good thorough fayth onely before all workes. Notwithstandyng yet outwardly and openly before the people, ye and before him selfe, is he righteous through the worke, that is, he knoweth and is sure through the outward worke that he is a true beleuer, and in the fauour of GOD, and righteous, and good thorough the mercy of GOD: that thou mayst cal the one an open, and an outward righteousnes, & the other an inward righteousnes of the hart (so yet) that thou vnderstand by the outward righteousnes, no other thyng saue the frute that foloweth, and a declaryng of the inward iustifying and righteousnes of the hart, and not that it maketh a man righteous before God, but that he must be first righteous before hym in the hart. Euen as thou mayst cal the frute of the tree, the outward goodnes of the tree, whiche foloweth and vttereth the inward naturall goodnes of the tree.

The outward righteousnes & the inward righteousnes what they are.

This meaneth James in hys Epistle where he sayth, fayth without workes is dead, that is, if workes folow not, it is a sure & an euidēt signe, that there is no fayth in the hart, but a dead imagination and dreame, whiche they falsly call fayth.

Of the same wise is this saying of Christ to be vnderstande. Make you frendes of the vnrighteous Mammō, that is, shew your fayth openly, and what ye are within in the harte, with outward geuing and bestowyng your goodes on the poore, that ye may obtayn frendes, that is, that the poore on whome thou hast shewed mercy may at the day of iudgement testify, & witnesse of thy good woorkes. That thy fayth and what thou waste within in thy harte before God, may there appeare by thy fruites openly vnto all men. For vnto the right beleuyng shal all thinges be comfortable, and vnto consolation, at that terrible day. And contrariwyse vnto the vnbeleuing, all thing shall be vnto desperation, and confusion, and euery man shall be iudged openly, and outwardly in the presence of all men, accordyng to their dedes and workes. So that not without a cause thou mayest call them thy frendes, which testifye at that daye of thee, that thou liuedst as a true and a right right Christen man, and folowedst the steppes of Christe in shewyng mercy, as no doubt he doth which feleth God merciful in his hart. And by ẏ wozkes is the fayth knowen, that it was right and perfect. For the outward wozkes can neuer please God nor make frend, except they spring of fayth. Forasmuch as Christ himselfe, Math. 6. and 7. disalloweth and casteth away the woozkes of the Pharises, yea, prophesying and wozkyng of miracles, and castyng out of deuils, which we count and esteeme for very excellent vertues. Yet make they no frendes with their woozkes, whyle their hartes are false & vnpure, and their eye double. Now wythout fayth, is no harte true or eye single: so that we are compelled to confesse that the wozkes make not a mā righteous or good, but that the hart must first be righteous & good, ereany good wozke proceede thence.

Outward workes declare where true fayth is.

Good wor-kes are witnesses for vs be-fore God.

Math. vi. & vij.

SEcondarily all good wozkes must be done free with a single eye, without respect of any thing, and that no profite be sought therby.

Math. 10.

What commaundeth Christ, where he sayth, Mat. 10. freely haue ye receyued, freely geue agayne. For looke as Christ with all his wozkes did not deserue heauē, for that was hys already, but did vs seruice therewith, and neither looked, nor sought his owne profite, but our profite, and the honour of God the father only. Euen so we with all our wozkes may not seke our own profite, neither in this wozlde, nor in heauen, but must and ought freely to wozke, to honoure God withall, and without all maner respecte, seeke our neighbours profite, and do hym seruice. That meaneth Paul Phil. 2. saying: Be minded as Christ was, which beyng in the shape of God, equall vnto God, and euen very God, layd that a part, that is to say, hid it. And tooke on hym the forme and fashion of a seruaunt. That is, as concerning himself he had inough, that he was full, & had all plentiousnesse of the Godhed, and in all his wozkes sought our profite, & became our seruaunt.

We must of duety do good wozkes without hope of reward.

The cause is: forasmuch as faythe iustifieth and putteth away sinne in the sight of God, bringeth lyfe, health, and the fauour of God, maketh vs the heyres of God, poureth the spirite of God into our soules, and filleth vs with all godly fulnes in Christ, it wer to great a shame, rebuke, and wronge vnto the fayth, ye to christes bloud, if a man would wozke any thyng to purchase that wherwith fayth hath indued hym already, and God hath geuen hym freely. Euen as Christ had done rebuke and shame vnto hymselfe, if he would haue done good wozkes, and wrought to haue bene made thereby Gods sonne and heyre ouer all, which thing he was alredy. Now doth fayth make vs the sonnes or childrē of god. John. 1. he gaue them might or power to be ẏ sonnes of God, in that they beleued on his name. If we be sonnes, so are we also heires. Roma. viij. and Gala. iiij. How can or ought we then to wozke, for to purchase that inheritaunce withall, wherof we are heyres already by fayth?

Fayth maketh vs the sonnes and children of God.

Roma. 8. Gala. 4.

What shall we say thē to those scriptures, whiche sound as though a man should do good wozkes, and lyue well for heauens sake, or eternall reward? As these are, make you frendes of the vnrighteous Mammon. And Math. vij. Gather you treasures together in heauen. Also Math. xix. If thou wilt enter into lyfe keepe the commaundementes and such like. This say I, that they whiche vnderstand not, neither seele in their hartes what fayth meaneth, talke and thinke of the reward euen as they do of the wozke, neither suppose they ẏ a man ought to wozke, but in a respect to the reward. For they imagine that it is in the kyngdome of Christ, as it is in the wozld among mē, that they must deserue heauen with their good woozkes. Howbeit their thoughtes are but dreames and false imaginations. Of these men speaketh Malachias Chap. i. who is it among you that shutteth a dooze for my pleasure for nought, ẏ is, without respect of reward? These are seruauntes, that seke gaynes and vauntage, hyrelinges & day labourers, whiche here on earth receaue their rewardes, as the Pharisees with their prayers, and fastynges, Math. v.

Math. 7. Math. 19.

They that seeke heauē for theyr wozkes are such as vnderstand not the treasures of Christ.

Math. v.

But on this wise goeth it with heauen, with euerlastyng lyfe and eternall reward, likewise as good wozkes naturally folow fayth (as it is aboue rehearsed) so that thou nedest not to commaunde a true beleuer to wozke, or to compel him with any law, for it is vnpossible that he should not wozke, he taryeth but for an occasion, he is euer disposed of him selfe, thou nedest but to put him in remembraunce, and that to know the false fayth from the true. Euen so naturally doth eternall lyfe folow

Fs good wozkes naturally folow fayth.

So eternal life folowe-eth fayth & good ipa-yng.

low faith and good liuing, without seekyng for, & is impossible that it should not come, though no mā thought there on. Yet is it rehearsed in ỹ Scripture, alledged and promised to know the difference betwene a false beleuer, and a true beleuer, and that euery man may know what foloweth good liuyng naturally, and of it selfe, without takyng thought for it.

As good workes follow faith: So hell followeth euill workes.

Take a grosse ensample. Hell that is, euerlastyng death is threatned vnto sinners, and yet foloweth it sinne naturally without seekyng for. For no mā doth euill to be damned therfore, but had rather auoyde it. Yet there the one foloweth the other naturally, & though no man told or warned him of it, yet should the sinner finde it, and feele it. Neuertheless it is therfore threatned, that men may know what foloweth euill liuyng. Now then as after euill liuyng foloweth his reward vnsought for, euen so after good liuing foloweth his reward naturally vnsought for, or vnthought vpon. Euen as when thou drinkest wine, be it good or bad, the tast foloweth of it selfe, thoughe thou therfore drinke it not. Yet testifieth the Scripture, and it is true, that we are by inheritaunce heyres of damnation: and that ere we be borne, we are vessels of the wrath of God, & full of that poyson whence naturally all synnes spring: and wherewith we can not but sinne, which thyng the dedes that follow (whē we behold our selues in the glasse of the law of God) do declare & vtter, kill our consciences, & show vs what we were and wist not of it, & certifieth vs that we are heyres of damnatiō. For if we were of God we should cleaue to God, and lust after the wil of God. But now our dedes compared to the law, declare ỹ contrary, & by our dedes we see our selues, both what we be, and what our end shall be.

Of our selues we are the vessels of ỹ wrath of God, and the heyres of dānatiō.

So now thou seest that lyfe eternall and all good thynges are promised vnto fayth and belefe: so that he that beleueth on Christ, shalbe safe. Christes bloud hath purchased life for vs, & hath made vs the heyres of god: so that heauen commeth by Christes bloud. If thou wouldest obtaine heauē with the merites and deseruinges of thine own woorkes, so dyddest thou wrong, yea and shamedest the bloud of Christ, and vnto thee were Christ dead in vayne. Now is the true beleuer heyre of God by Christes deseruynges, yea and in Christ was predestinate and ordeined vnto eternall life, before the world began. And when the Gospel is preached vnto vs, we beleue the mercy of God, and in beleuyng we receaue the spirite of God, which is the earnest of eternal lyfe, and we are in eternal life already, & feele already in our hartes the swetnes therof, and are ouercome with the kyndnes of God and Christ, and therfore loue the will of God, and of loue are ready to woorke freely, and not to obtaine that which is geuen vs freely, and whereof we are heyres already.

To beleue in Christ is saluatiō.

To seeke heauen by good workes were to derogate the dignitie of the bloud of Christ.

Now when Christ sayth: Make you frendes of vnrighteous Mammon. Gather you treasure together in heauen and such like. Thou seest that the meanyng and entent is no other, but that thou shouldest do good, & so will it folow of it selfe naturally, without seekyng & takyng of thought, that thou shalt find frendes, and treasure in heauē, and receaue a reward. So let thyne eye be single, and looke vnto good lyuyng onely, and take no thought for ỹ reward: But be content. For as much as thou knowest and art sure that the reward & all thyng contained in gods promises, folow good liuyng naturally: and thy good woorkes do but testifie onely and certifie thee, that the spirite of God is in thee, whom thou hast receaued in earnest of Gods truth, and that thou art heyre of all the goodnes of God, and that all good thynges are thyne already, purchased by Christes bloud, and layd vp in store against that day when euery man shall receaue according to his dedes, that is, according as his dedes declare and testifie, what he is, or was. For they that looke vnto the reward, are slow, false, suttle and crafty woorkers, and loue the reward more thē the woorke, yea hate the labour, yea hate God which commaūdeth the labour, and are wery both of the commaundement, and also of the commaunder, and woorke with tediousnes. But he that woorketh of pure loue without seekyng of reward, woorketh truly.

All that is good is purchased for vs by Christ.

Thirdly, that not the saintes, but god onely receiueth vs into eternall tabernacles, is so plaine & euidēt, that it needeth not to declare, or proue it. How shall the saintes receaue vs into heauen, when euery man hath neede for him selfe that God onely receiue hym to heauen, and euery man hath scace for himself: As it appeareth by the fiue wise virgins. virgins. And Peter sayeth in the 4. of his first Epistle, that the righteous is with difficultie saued. So seest thou ỳ the saying of Christ, make you frendes and so forth, that they may receiue you into euerlasting tabernacles, pertayneth not vnto the saintes which are in heauen, but is spokē of the poore and nedy which are here presēt with vs on earth, as though he would say. What buildest thou, churches, foundest Abbeys, chauntries, and colledges in the honor of saints, to my Mother, S. Peter, Paule, and saintes that be dead, to make of them thy frendes? They nede it not, ye, they are not thy frendes, but theirs which liued then whē they did, of whome they were holpen. Thy frendes are the poore which are nowe in thy tyme, & liue with thee, thy poore neighbours which neede thy help and succour. Them make thy frendes with thy vnrighteous Mammon, that they may testify of thy faith, and thou maist know and feele that thy fayth is right and not fayned.

1. Pet. 4.

How we may make frendes of the wycked Mammon.

VNto the second, such receauing into euerlasting habitations, is not to be vnderstand, that men shall do it. For many to whom we shew mercy & do good, shall not come there, neyther skilleth it, so we meekely and louingly do our duetie, ye, it is a signe of strong fayth and feruent loue, if we do wel to the euill, and studye to drawe them to Christ in all that lyeth in vs. But the poore geue vs an occasion to exercise our fayth, and the dedes make vs feele our fayth, and certify vs ānd make vs sure that we are safe, and are escaped and translated from death vnto lyfe, & that we are deliuered and redemed frō the captiuitie and bondage of Satan, and broughte into the libertie of the sonnes of God, in that we fele lust and strength in our hart, to worke the will of god. And at that day shal our dedes appeare and comfort our hartes, witnes our faith and trust, which we now haue in Christ, which fayth shall then keepe vs from shame, as it is written. None that beleueth in him shall be ashamed, Rom. 9. So that good workes helpe our fayth, and make vs sure in our consciences, and make vs feele the mercy of god. Notwithstanding heauen, euerlasting lyfe, ioy eternal, faith, the fauour of God, the spirite of God, lust and strength vnto the wil of God, are geuen vs freely of the bounteous and plenteous riches of God purchased by Christ, without our deseruings,

To do good to such as are euill, is cōmendable

Rom. 9.

All our righteousnes commeth freely from Christ.

that no man should reioyce, but in the Lord onely.

FOr a further vnderstanding of this Gospel, here may be made 3. questions. What Mammō is, why it is called vnrighteous, and after what maner Christ biddeth vs counterfet & folow the vniust and wicked stewarde, which with his lordes dammage prouided for his owne profite and vātage, which thing no doubt is vnrighteous and sinne.

First, Mammon is an Hebrue word & signifieth riches or tēporal goods, and namely, all superfluitie, and all ỳ is aboue necessitie, & that which is required vnto our necessary vses, wherwith a man may helpe an other, without vndoyng or hurtyng himselfe. For Hamon in the Hebrew speach, signifieth a multitude, or abundance, or many. And therehence commeth Mahamon, or Mammon, aboundaunce, or plenteousnes of goodes or riches.

Mammon what it is

Secondarily, it is called vnrighteous Mammon, not because it is gottē vnrighteously, or with vsurye, for of vnrighteous gotten goods can no mā do good workes, but ought to restore them home agayne. As it is sayd, Esay 61. I am a God that hateth offeryng that commeth of robbery. And Pro. 3. sayth: Honour the Lord of thine owne good. But therfore it is called vnrighteous, because it is in vnrighteous vse As Paule speaketh vnto the Ephes. 5. how that the dayes are euill thoughe that god hath made them, and they are a good worke of gods makyng. How be it they are yet called euill, because that euill men vse them amisse, & much sinne, occasions of euill, peril of soules are wrought in thē. Euē so are riches called euill, because that euill men bestow thē amisse, and misuse them. For where riches is, there goeth it after the common prouerbe. He that hath money, hath what him listeth. And they cause fighting, stealing, laying awaite, lying, flatering, and all vnhappines against a mans neighbour. For all men holde on riches part.

Pro. 3.

Ephe. 5.

The dayes are called euil, because euill men vse them.

But singularly before God is it called vnrighteous Mammon, because it is not bestowed, and ministred vnto our neighbors nede. For if my neighbour neede and I geue him not, neyther depart liberally with him, of that which I haue: than withholde I from him vnrighteously that which is hys owne. For as much as I am bounden to helpe hym by the lawe of nature, which is, whatsoeuer thou wouldest ỹ an other did to thee, that doe thou also to hym. And Christ. Math. 5. Geue to euery mā that desireth thee. And Iohn in his first Epistle, if a man haue thys worldes good, & see hys brother nede, how is the loue of God in hym? And this vnrighteousnes in our Mammō see very few men: because it is spirituall, and in those goodes whiche are gotten most truely and iustly, whiche beguile men. For they suppose they do no man wrong in keepyng them, in that they got them not with stealyng, robbing, oppression, and vsury, neither hurt any man now with them.

We are bound by the law of nature to helpe our needye neighbour.

Thirdly many haue busied thēselues in studying what, or who, this vnrighteous steward is, because ỹ Christ so praiseth him. But shortly and plainly this is the aunswere. That Christ prayseth not the vnrighteous stuard, neither setteth him forth to vs to counterfait, because of his vnrighteousnes, but because of his wisedome onely, in that he with vnright so wisely prouided for himselfe. As if I would prouoke another to pray, or study, do say. The theeues watch all night to robbe and steale: why cāst not thou watch to pray and to study? Here prayse not I the theefe, and murderer for their euill doyng, but for their wisedome, that they so wisely and diligently wayt on their vnrighteousnes. Likewise whē I say, misse women tyre thē selues with gold and silke to please their louers: what wilt not thou garnish thy soule with fayth to please Christ? here prayse I not whoredome, but ỹ diligence which the whore misuseth.

The vnrighteous Stuard, who it is.

On this wise Paule also Roma. v. likeneth Adam & Christ together, sayyng that Adam was a figure of Christ. And yet of Adam haue we but pure sinne, and of Christ grace onely, which are out of measure contrary. But the similitude or likenes standeth in the originall byrth, and not in the vertue, & vice of the byrth. So that as Adam is father of all sinne, so is Christ father of all righteousnes. And as all sinners spryng of Adam: Euē so all righteous men and women spryng of Christ. After the same maner is here the vnrighteous stuard an ensample vnto vs, in his wisedome and diligence onely, in that he prouided so wisely for him self, that we with righteousnes should be as diligēt to prouide for our soules, as he with vnrighteousnes prouided for hys body.

Christ is the father of all righteousnes.

Likewise mayst thou soyle all other textes which sound as though it were betwene vs and GOD, as it is in the world where the reward is more looked vpon, then the labour: yea, where men hate the labour, and worke fayly with the body, and not with the hart, and no longer then they are loked vpon, that the labour may appeare outward onely.

When Christ sayth Math. v. Blessed are ye whē they rayle on you, and persecute you, and say all maner euill sayinges agaynst you, and yet lye, and that for my sake, reioyse & be glad, for your reward is great in heauen. Thou mayest not imagine that our deedes deserue the ioy and glorie that shalbe geuen vnto vs. For then (Paul saith Rom. xi.) fauour were not fauor, I cā not receaue it of fauour, & of the bounteous of God freely, and by deseruyng of deedes also. But beleue as the Gospell, glad tydynges & promises of God say vnto thee, that for Christes blondes sake onely thyrough fayth, God is at one with thee, and thou receaued to mercy, and art become the sonne of God, and heire annexed with with Christ of al the goodnes of God, the earnest wherof is the spirite of god poured into our hartes. Of whiche thynges the deedes are witnesses, and certifie our consciences that our fayth is vnfayned, and that the right spirite of God is in vs. For if I patiētly suffer aduersitie and tribulation for conscience of God onely, that is to say, because I know GOD and testifie the truth, then am I sure that God hath chosen me in Christ, and for Christes sake, and hath put in me his spirite, as an earnest of his promises, whose worlyng I feele in myne hart, the deedes bearyng witnes vnto the same. Now is it Christes blond only that deserued all the promises of God, & that which I suffer and do, is partely the curyng, healyng and mortifiyng of my members, and killing of that originall poyson, wherwith I was conceiued and borne, that I might be altogether like Christ, and partly the doyng of my dutie to my neighbour, whose debter I am of all that I haue receiued of God, to draw him to Christ with al suffring, with all patience, and euen with sheading my blond for him, not as an offering or merite for hys sinnes, but as an ensample to prouoke hym. Christes blond onely putteth away all the sinne that euer was, is or shalbe from them that that are elect and repent, beleuyng the Gospell, that is to say, gods promises in Christ.

AGayn in the same 5. chapter, loue your enmenies, bless them that curse you, doe well to them that hate you, and persecute you, that ye may be the sonnes of your father whiche is in heauē. For he maketh his sunne shine vpon euill, & on good, and sendeth his rayne vpon iust and vniust. Not that our woorkes make vs the sonnes of God, but testifie onely, and certifie our consciences, that we are the sonnes of God, and that God hath chosen vs, & washed vs in christes bloud, and hath put his spirite in vs. And it foloweth, if ye loue them that loue you, what reward haue ye? do not the Publicanes euen the same? and if ye shall haue fauour to your frendes onely, what singuler thing do ye? doe not the Publicanes euen the same? ye shalbe perfect therefore, as your father whiche is in heauen is perfect. That is to say, if that ye do nothing but that the world doth, and they which haue the spirite of the world, wherby shall ye know that ye are the sonnes of God, and beloued of God more then the world? But and if ye counterfet, and follow God in well doyng, then no doubt it is a signe that the spirite of God is in you, and also the fauour of God, which is not in the world, and that ye are inheritoures of all the promises of God, and elect vnto the fellowshyp of the bloud of Christ

We must follow Christ in well doing.

Math. 6.

ALso Math 6. Take heede to your almes, that ye do it not in the sight of men, to the entent that ye would be sene of them, or els haue ye no reward with your father which is in heauen. Neither cause a trūpet to be blowen afore thee whē thou doost thine almes, as the hipocrites do in the synagoges, and in the strectes to be glorified of the worlde, but when thou doost thine almes, let not thy lefte hande knowe what thy right hand doth, ỳ thy almes may be in secret, and thy father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. This putteth vs in remembraunce of our duetie, and sheweth what followeth good woorkes, not that woorks deserue it, but that the reward is layd vp for vs in store, and we thereunto elect through Christes bloud, which the woorkes testify. For if we be worldlye minded, and do our woorks as ỳ world doth, how shall we know that GOD hath chosen vs out of the world? But & if we woorke freely, without all maner worldly respect, to shewe mercy, and to do our duetie to our neighbour, and to be vnto him as God is to vs, then are we sure ỳ the fauour, & mercy of God is vpon vs, & that we shal enioy all the good promises of god through Christ, which hath made vs heyres thereof.

We may not do good woorkes to be prayed of the world.

We must be to our neighbour as God is to vs.

ALso, in the same chapter it followeth. when thou prayest, be not as the hipocrites, which loue to stand and pray in the synagoges, and in the corners of the streetes, for to bee sene of men. But when thou prayest enter into thy chamber, and shut thy doore to, & praye to thy father which is in secrete, and thy father whiche seeth in secrete, shal reward thee openly. And likewise when we fast (teacheth Christe in the same place) that we should behaue our selues that it appeare not vnto men how that we fast, but vnto our father which is in secret, & our father which seeth in secret, shall reward vs openly. These two textes do but declare what followeth good woorkes, for eternall lyfe commeth not by the deseruyng of woorkes, but is (sayth Paul in ỳ 6. to ỳ Rom.) the gift of God through Jesus Christ. Neither do our woorkes iustify vs. For except we were iustified by fayth which is our righteousnes, & had the spyrite of God in vs to teach vs, we could do no good woorke freely, without respect of some profit, either in this world, or in the world to come, neither coulde we haue spirituall ioye in oure hartes in time of affliction, and mortifiyng of the flesh.

Hypocrites seeke to be prayed of men.

Rom. 6.

Faith onely iustifieth vs and no good woorke can be done without Faith.

Good woorkes are the frutes of Faith.

Good woorkes are called the fruites of the spirite, Gal. 5. for the spyrite woorketh them in vs, and sometyme fruites of righteousnes, as in the second Epistle to the Cor. and 9. chapter, before all woorkes therfore, we must haue a righteousnes within the hart, the mother of all woorkes, & frō whēce they spring. The righteousnes of the Scribes and Phariles, & of them that haue ỳ spirite of this world, is ỳ glorious shew & outward shining of woorkes. But Christ sayth to vs Mat. 5. except your righteousnes, exceede the righteousnes of the scribes & Phariles, ye cānot enter into the kingdome of heauen. It is righteousnes in ỳ world, if a mā kyl not. But a Christen perceiueth righteousnesse if he loue his enemy, euen when he suffreth persecution and torment of him, and the panes of death, and mourneth more for his aduersaries blindnesse, then for his owne payne, and prayeth God to open his eyes and to forgeue hym his sinnes, as dyd Steuen in the Actes of the Apostles the vij. Chapter and Christ Luke xxiij.

True righteousnes, what it is.

Act.7. Luke.23.

A Christen considereth him selfe in the law of GOD, and there putteth of him all maner righteousnes. For the law suffereth no merites, no deseruynges, no righteousnes, neither any mā to be iustified in the sight of God. The law is spirituall and requireth ẏ hart and commaundements to be fulfilled, with such loue and obedience as was in Christ. If any fulfill all that is the will of God, with such loue and obedience, the same may be bold to sell pardons of his merites, and els not.

A Christen therfore (when he beholdeth hym selfe in the law) putteth of all maner righteousnes, deseruinges and merites, and meekely and vnfaynedly knowledgeth his sinne & miserie, his captiuitie and bondage in the flesh, his trespasse and gilte, and is thereby blessed with the poure in spirite. Math. v. Chap. Then he mourneth in his hart, because he is in such bondage that he can not do the will of God, and is an hungred, and a thyrst after righteousnes. For righteousnesse (I meane) which springeth out of christes bloud, for strength to do the wil of God. And turneth him selfe to the promises of God, & desireth him for his great mercy and truth, and for the bloud of hys sonne Christ to fulfill his promises, & to geue him strēgth. And thus his spirit euer prayeth within him. He fasteth also not one day for a weke, or a Lent for an whole yeare, but professeth in his hart a perpetuall sobernes, to tame the flesh, and to subdue the body to the spirite, vntil he waxe strong in the spirite, and grow ripe into a full righteousnes, after the fulnes of Christ. And because this fulnes happeneth not till the body be slayne by death, a Christen is euer a sinner in the law, and therfore fasteth, and prayeth to God in the spirite, the world seyng it not. Yet in ẏ promises he is euer righteous, thorough fayth in Christ, and is sure that he is heire of all Gods promises, the spirite which he hath receaued in earnest, bearyng him witnes, his hart also, and his dedes testifying the same.

True righteousnes springeth out of Christes bloud.

True fastyng, what it is.

Marke this then. To see inwardly that ẏ law of God is so spirituall, that no flesh can fulfill it. And then for to mourne and sorrow, and to desire, yea to hunger and thyrst after strength to do the wil of God, from the ground of the hart, and (notwithstandyng all the subtlety of the deuil, weakenes and feblenes of the flesh, and wondryng of the world) to cleaue yet to ẏ promises of God, and to beleue that for Christes bloud sake, thou art receaued to the inheritaūce of eternall lyfe, is a wonderfull thyng, and a thyng that the world knoweth not of: but who soeuer feleth that (though he fall a thousand tymes in a day) doth yet rise agayne a thousand tymes, and is sure that the mercy of God is vpon hym.

No flesh can fulfill the lawe.

IF ye forgeue othermen their trespasses, your heauēly father shal forgeue you yours. Mat. in the vj. Chap. if I forgeue, God shall forgeue me, not for my dedes sake, but for his promises sake, for his mercy & truth, and for the bloud of hys son Christ our Lord. And my forgeuing, certifieth my spirite that God shal forgeue me, yea ẏ he hath forgeuē me already. For if I consent to ẏ will of God in my hart, though thorough infirmitie and weakenes I can not do the will of GOD at all tymes, moreouer though I can not do the wil of God so purely, as the law requireth it of me, yet if I see my faulte & meekely knowledge my sinne, weppyng in myne hart, because I cā not do the will of God, and thyrst after strēgth, I am sure that ẏ spirite of God is in me, & his fauour vpon me. For the world lusteth not to do the will of God, neither sorroweth because he can not, though he sorrow some tyme for feare of ẏ paine, that he beleueth shall folow. He that hath the spirite of this world, can not forgeue without amendes makyng, or a greater vauntage. If I forgeue now how cōmeth it? verily because I feele the mercy of God in me. For as a man feeleth God to him selfe, so is he to his neighbour. I know by mine owne experience that all flesh is in bondage vnder sinne, and cā not but sinne, therfore am I mercyfull, and desire God to loose the bondes of sinne euen in mine enemy.

We cannot deserue forgeuenes of God, but he of hys mercy pardoneth vs.

GAther not treasure together in earth. &c. Math. vj. But gather you treasure in heauen. &c. Let not your hartes be glued to worldly thynges, studie not to heape treasure vpon treasure, and riches vpon riches, but study to bestow well that whiche is gotten already, and let your abundaunce succour the lacke, and neede of the power which haue not. Haue an eye to good workes, to which if ye haue lust, and also power to do them, then are ye sure that the spirite of God is in you, and pa-ye in Christ elect to the reward of eternal life which folowth good workes. But looke that thine eye be single and robbe not Christ of his honour, ascribe not that to ỳ deserueyng of thy workes, which is geuen the freely by the merites of his bloud. In Christ we are sonnes. In Christ we are heires. In Christ god chose vs and elected vs before the begynning of the world, created vs a new by the word of the Gospell, and put his spirite in vs, for because we should do good workes. A Christē man worketh because it is the will of his father onely. If we do no good worke, nor be mercyfull, how is our lust therin? If we haue no lust to do good workes, how is Gods spirite in vs? If the spirite of God be not in vs, how are we his sonnes? How are we his heyres, & heyres annered with Christ of the eternal life, which is promised to all them that beleue in hym? Now do our workes testifie and witnes what we are, and what treasure is layd vp for vs in heauen, so that our eye be single, and looke vpon the commaundement without respect of any thing, saue because it is Gods wil, and that God desireth it of vs, and Christ hath deserued that we do it.

In Christ we are all in all.

We must do good workes because it is Gods will that we should do them.

Math. vij. Not all they that say vnto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kyngdome of heauen, but he that doth the will of my father which is in heauen. Though thou canst laude God with thy lippes, and call Christ Lord, and canst bable, and talke of the scripture, and knowest all the stories of the Bible. Yet shalt thou thereby neuer know thyne election, or whether thy fayth be right. But & if thou feele lust in thyne hart to the will of God, and bringest forth the frutes therof, then hast thou confidence and hope, and thy dedes, and also the spirite whence thy deedes spryng certifie thyne hart that thou shal enter, yea art already entred into the kyngdome of heauen. For it folowth, he that heareth the word and doth it, buildeth his house vpō a rock, and no tempest of temptations can ouerthrow it. For the spirite of God is in his hart, and comforteth hym, & holdeth him fast to the rocke of the merites of Christes bloud, in whom he is elect. Nothyng is able to pincke hym out of the handes of God, god is strōger then all things. And contrarywise he that heareth the word & doth it not, buildeth on the sande of his own imagination, & euery tempest ouerthroweth his buildyng. The cause is, he hath not Gods spirite in him, and therfore vnderstandeth it not a right, neither worketh a right. For no ma knoweth the thyngs of God (sayeth Paul in the i. Epistle to the Corinthians in the second Chapter) saue the spirite of God: as no man knoweth what is in a mā, but a mās spirite, which is in hym. So then if the spirite be not in a man, he worketh not the wil of GOD, neither vnderstandeth it, though he bable neuer so much of the scriptures. Neuertheles such a mā may worke after his owne imagination, but Gods wil can he not worke, he may offer sacrifice, but to do mercy knoweth he not. It is easy to say vnto christ, Lord, Lord: but therby shalt thou neuer feele or be sure of the kyngdome of heauen. But and if thou do the will of God, thē art thou sure that Christ is thy Lord in dede, & that thou in him art also a Lord, in ỳ thou feleſt thy selfe loosed, and free frō the bondage of sinne, and lusty and of power to do the will of God.

We must heare the word of God and do it.

i. Cor. 2.

Where the spirite is, there is feelyng. For ỳ spirite maketh vs feele all thinges. where the spirite is not, there is no feelyng, but a vayne opinion or imagination. A Physician serueth but for sicke men, and that for such sicke mē as feele their sicknesses, & mourne therfore, and long for health. Christ lykewise serueth but for sinners onely as feele there sinne, and that for such sinners, that sorrow and mourne in theyr hartes for health. Health is power or strength to fulfill the law, or to keepe the commaundementes. Now he that longeth for that health, that is to say, for to do the law of God, is blessed in Christ, and hath a promise that his lust shalbe fulfilled, & that he shalbe made whole. Math. v. blessed are they which hunger & thurst for righteousnes sake (that is to fulfill the law) for their lust shalbe fulfilled. This lōgyng and consent of the hart vnto the law of God, is the wooryng of the spirite, which God hath poured into thine hart, to earnest that ỳ mightest be sure ỳ God will fulfil all his promises that he hath made thee. It is also the seale & marke which God putteth on all men that he choseth vnto euerlastyng life. So long as thou seest thy sinne, and mournest, & consentest to the law, & longest (though thou be neuer so weake) yet the spirite shal kepe thee in all temptatiōs, from desperatiō, and certifie thyne hart, that God for his trouth, shall deliuer thee and saue thee, yea & by thy good dedes shalt thou be saued, not whiche thou hast done, but whiche Christ hath done for thee. For Christ is thine, and all his dedes are thy dedes. Christ is in thee, and thou in him knit together inseparably. Neither canst thou be damned, except Christ be dāned with thee. Neither can Christ be saued, except thou be saued with him. Moreouer thy hart is good, right, holy and iust. For thy hart is no enemy to the law, but a frend & a louer. The law and thy hart are agreed, and at one, and therfore is God at one with thee. The consent of the hart vnto the law, is vnite and peace betwene God and man. For he is not myne enemy, whiche would fayne do me pleasure, and moyneth because he hath not wherewith. Now he that opened thy disease vnto thee, and made thee long for health, shall as he hath promised, heale thee, and he that hath loosed thy hart, shall at hys godly laysure, lose thy members. He that hath not the spirite hath no selyng, neither lusteth or longeth after power to fulfil the law, neither abhorreth the pleasures of sinne, neither hath any more certaintie of the promises of God, thē I haue of a tale of Robinhode, or of some iest that a man telleth me was done at Rome. An other man may lightly make me doubt, or beleue the contrary, seyng I haue no experience therof my selfe. So is it of them that feele not the worckyng of the spirite, & therfore in tyme of temptatiō the buildynges of their imaginations fall.

Christ is our onely Physitian to heale & deliuer vs of our sins.

Christ is our anker hold to saluation.

MAth.x. He that receaueth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, that is, because he is a Prophet, shall receaue the reward of a Prophet, & he ỳ geueth one of these litleones a cup of cold water to drinke, in the name of a Disciple, shall not lose hys reward. Note this that a Prophet signifieth as well him that enterpreteth ỳ hard places of Scripture, as him that prophesieth thyngs to come. Now he that receaueth a Prophet, a iust man, or a Disciple, shall haue the same, or lyke reward, that is to say, shal haue the same eternall lyfe, whiche is appointed for thē in Christes bloud, & merites. For except thou were elect to ỳ same eternall lyfe, & haddest the same fayth and trust in God, and the same spirite, thou couldest neuer consent to their dedes and helpe them. But thy dedes testifie what thou art, & certifie thy conscience that thou art receaued to mercy, and sanctified in Christes passions and sufferynges, and shalt hereafter with all them that folow God, receaue the reward of eternall lyfe.

Of thy wordes ỳ shalt be iustified, & of thy wordes thou shalt be condēned. Mat.xij. That is thy wordes as well as other dedes shal testifie with thee, or agaynst thee at the day of iudgemēt. Many there are whiche abstaine from the outward dedes of fornication and adulterie, neuertheles reioyce to talke therof & laugh, their wordes & laughter testifie against them, that their hart is vnpure, and they adulterers, & fornicatours in the sight of GOD. The young and other signes ofrymes vtter the malice of the hart, though a mā for many causes abstaine his hand, from the outward dede or act.

Math.xij.

The abstenyng from sinne outwardly is but hypocrisie.

IF thou wilt enter into lyfe kepe the commaundements. Math.xix. First remember that when God commaundeth vs to do one thyng, he doth it not therfore, because that we of our selues are able to do that he cōmaundeth, but that by the law we might see, & know our horrible damnation and captiuitie vnder sinne, and therfore should repēt and come to Christ, & receaue mercy & the spirite of God to loose vs, strength vs, & to make vs able to do Gods wil which is the law. Now when he sayth if thou wilt enter into lyfe kepe the cōmaundementes, is as much to say, as he that kepeth the commaundementes is entred into life, for except a mā haue first the spirite of lyfe in hym by Christes purchasyng, it is impossible for him to kepe the commaundements, or that his hart should be loose, or at libertie to lust after them, for of nature we are enemyes to the law of God.

Math.xix.

To beleue vnfaynedly in Christ is to kepe the cōmaundementes.

As touching that Christ saith afterward if thou wilt be perfect, go and sell thy substaūce, and geue it to the poore, he sayth it not, as who should say that there were any greater perfection then to kepe the law of God (for that is all perfection) but to shew the other hys blindnes, which saw not that the law is spirituall, and requireth ỳ hart. But because he was not knowyng that he had hurt any man with the outward deede, he supposed that he loued his neighbour as him selfe. But when he was bydde to shew the deedes of loue, and geue of hys aboundaunce to them that neded, he departed mournyng. whiche is an euident tokē that he loued not his neighbour as well as him self. For if he had neede hym selfe, it would not haue greued hym to haue receaued succour of an other man. Moreouer he sawe not that it was murther & theft, that a man should haue aboundaunce of riches lying by hym, and not to shew mercy therewith, and kyndly to succour hys neighbours neede. God hath geuen one man riches to helpe an other at nede. If thy neighbour nede & thou helpe him not, beyng able, thou withholdest his dutie from hym, and art a theefe before God.

If the rich helpe not ỳ poore in their nede, they are but theues before god.

That also that Christ saith, how that it is harder for a rich man (who loueth his riches so, that he can not find in his hart, liberally and freely to helpe the poore and nedy) to enter into the kingdome of heauen, then a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, declareth that he was not entred into the kingdome of heauen, that is to say, eternall life. But he that keepeth the commaundementes is entred into life: he hath life, and the spirite of life in him.

Math. 17. THis kinde of deuils goeth not out but by prayer & fasting. Math. 17. Not that the deuill is cast out by merites of fasting or praying. For he sayth before, that for theyr vnbeleefes sake, they coulde not cast him out. It is faith no doubte that casteth out the deuils, and fayth it is that fasteth and prayeth. Fayth hath the promises of God, wher unto she cleaueth, and in all thinges thyrsteth the honour of God. She fasteth to subdue the body vnto the spirit that the prayer be not let, and that the spirite may quietly talke with God: she also whensoeuer opportunitie is geuen, prayeth God to fulfil his promises vnto his prayse & glory. And God which is mercifull in promising, and true to fullfill them, casteth out the deuils, and doth all that fayth desireth, and satisfyeth her thyrste.

Faith casteth out deuils.

Faith fasteth.

Faith prayeth.

COme ye blessed of my Father, inherite the kingdome prepared for you, from the beginning of the worlde: for I was a thirst, and ye gaue me drincke. &c. Math. xxv. Not that a man with workes deserueth eternal life, as a workman or labourer his hyre or wages. Thou readest in the text, that the kingdome was prepared for vs, from the beginning of the worlde. And we are blessed & sanctified. In Christes bloud are we blessed from that bitter curse, & damnable captiuitie vnder sin, wherein we were borne and conceiued. And Christes spirite is poured into vs, to bring foorth good woorkes, and our workes are the fruites of the spirite, & the kingdome is the deserning of Christes bloud, and so is fayth, and the spirite, and good workes also. Notwithstanding the kingdome followeth good workes, and good workes testify that we are heyres thereof, and at the day of iudgement shall they testify for the elect vnto theyr comfort and glory, and to the confusion of the vngodly, vnbeleeuing, and faythlesse sinners, which had not trust in the worde of Gods promises, nor luste to the will of God: but were caryed of the spirite of theyr father the deuill vnto all abhomination, to worke wickednes with all lust, delectation, and gredienes.

Math. 25.

In Christes bloud we are blessed from ỳ curse of the law.

MAny sinnes are forgeuen her, for she loueth much. Luk. vij. Not that loue was cause of forgeuenes of sinnes. But contrariwise the forgenenes of sinnes caused loue, as it followeth, to whō lesse was forgeuen, ỳ same loueth lesse. And afore he commended the iudgement of Simon, which aunswered that he loueth most, to whom most was forgeuen: and also sayde at the last, thy fayth hath saued thee, or made thee safe, goe in peace. We can not loue, except we see some benefite, and kyndenes. As long as we looke on the lawe of God onely, where we see but sinne and damnation, and the wrath of God vpon vs, yea where we were damned afore we were borne, we can not loue God? No, we can not but hate him as a tyraunt, vnrighteous, vniust, and flee from hym as did Caine. But when the Gospell, that glad tidinges and ioyfull promises are preached, how that in Christ God loueth vs first, forgeueth vs, and hath mercy on vs, then loue we againe, and the deedes of our loue, declare our fayth. This is the maner of speaking, as we say. Sommer is nie, for the trees blossome. Nowe is the blossomyng of the trees not the cause ỳ sommer draweth nie, but the drawyng nie of sommer is the cause of ỳ blossoms, and the blossomes put vs in remembraunce that sommer is at hand. So Christ here teacheth Sunn̄ by the feruentnes of loue in the outward deedes to see a strong faith within, whence so great loue springeth. As ỳ maner is to say, do your charitie, shew your charitie, do a deede of charitie, shewe your mercy, do a deede of mercy, meanyng thereby, ỳ our deedes declare how we loue our neighbours, & how much we haue compassion on thē at their neede. Moreouer it is not possible to loue except cept we see a cause. Except we see in our hartes ỹ loue & kyndnes of God to vs warde in Christ our Lord, it is not possible to loue God aright.

Certaine phrases of speech expounded.

We say also, he that loueth not my dogge, loueth not me. For that a mā should loue my dogge first. But if a man loued me, the loue wherewith he loueth me, would compell him to loue my dogge, though the dogge deserued it not, yea, though the dogge had done him a displeasure, yet if he loued me, the same loue would refrayne hym from reuenging hymselfe, and cause him to referre the vengeaunce vnto me. Such speakinges finde we in scripture. John in the fourth of hys first epistle sayth: He that saith I loue God, and yet hateth his brother, is a lyar. For how can he that loueth not his brother whom he seeth, loue God whom he seeth not? This is not spoken that a man should first loue hys brother, and then God, but as it followeth. For this commaundement haue we of hym, that he which loueth God, should loue his brother also. To loue my neighbour is the commaundemēt, which commaundement, he that loueth not, loueth not GOD. The keeping of the commaundemēt, declareth what loue I haue to God. If I loued God purely, nothing that my neighbour coulde do, were able to make me eyther to hate him, eyther to take vengeaunce on hym my selfe, seing that God hath cōmaunded me to loue him, & to remitte all vēgeaunce vnto hym. Marke now how much I loue the cōmaundement, so much I loue God, how much I loue God, so much beleue I that he is mercifull, kynde, and good, yea, and a father vnto me, for Christes sake, how much I beleue that God is mercifull vnto me, and that he will for Christes sake fulfil all his promises vnto me: so much I see my sinnes, so much do my sins greue me, so much do I repent, and sorrow that I sinne, so much displeaseth me that poyson that moueth me to sinne, and so greatly desire I to be healed. Go now by the naturall order, first I see my sinne, then I repēt and sorrow, then beleue I Gods promises, that he is mercifull vnto me, and forgeueth me, and will heale me at the last: then loue I, and then I prepare my selfe to the commaundement.

John. 4.

Where perfect loue to God is, there are all good workes.

Luke. 10. What it is to loue god with all our hart. &c.

THis do, and thou shalt liue. Luc. x. that is to say, loue thy Lord God with all thy hart, with all thy soule, & with all thy strength, and with all thy mynde, and thy neighbour as thy self. As who should say, if thou do this, or though thou canst not do it, yet if thou kealest lust thereunto, and thy spirite sigheth, mourneth, and longeth after strength to do it, take a signe and euident token thereby, that the spirite of life is in thee, and that thou art electe to life euerlasting by Christes bloude, whose gift and purchase is thy fayth, and that spirite that worketh the will of God in thee, whose gift also are thy deedes, or rather the deedes of the spirite of christ, and not thine, and whose gift is the reward of eternal life, which foloweth good workes.

It followeth also in the same place of Luke. when he shoulde departe, he plucked out two pence, and gaue them to the host, and sayde vnto him, Take the charge or cure of him, and what soeuer thou spendest more, I wil recompēce it thee at my cōming agayne. Remember this is a parable, and a parable may not be expounded worde by worde, but the intent of the similitude must be sought out onely in the whole parable. The intent of the similitude is to shew, to whom a man is a neighbour, or who is a mans neighbour, (which is both one) & what is, to loue a mans neighbour as him selfe. The Samaritane holpe him, and shewed mercy as long as he was present, and when he could be no longer present, he left his money behind him: and if that were not sufficient, he left his credence to make good the rest, and forsoke him not, as long as ỹ other had need. The sayd Christ, goe thou and do likewise, that is, without difference or respecte of persons: whosoeuer needeth thy helpe, him count thy neighbour, & his neighbor be thou, and shew mercy on him, as long as he needeth thy succour: and that is to loue a mans neighbour as him selfe. Neighbour is a word of loue, and signifieth that a man shoulde be euer nigh and at hand, and ready to helpe in time of neede.

The true understanding of a parable.

We must euer be redy to helpe our neighbour.

They that will enterpret parables worde by worde fall into straights oftimes, whence they can not rid themselues. And preach lyes in stead of the truth: as do they whiche enterpret by the ij. pence, the old testament, and the new, and by that which is bestowed, Opera supererogationis, (howbeit Supererogantia were a meeter terme) that is to say, deedes which are more then the law requireth, deeds of perfection and of liberalitie, which a man is not bold to do, but of his free will. And for them he shal haue an higher place in heauen, and may geue to other of his merites: or of whiche the pope after his deathe may geue pardons from the paines of purgatorye.

Against whiche exposition I answere: first, a greater perfection then the law, is there not. A greater perfection then to loue God, and his will, which is the commaundementes, with all thine hart, with all thy soule, with all thy strength, with all thy minde, is there none. And to loue a mans neighbour as himselfe, is like the same. It is a wonderfull loue wherewith a man loueth himselfe. As glad as I woulde be to receiue pardon of mine owne life, (if I had deserued death) so glad ought I to be, to defend my neighbours life, without respect of my life, or of my good. A man ought neither to spare his goods, nor yet himselfe for his brothers sake, after the ensample of Christ

John. 3. 1. John 3. Herein (sayth he) perceiue we loue, in that he (ý is to say, Christ) gaue his life for vs. we ought therefore to bestowe our lines for the brethren. Mowe sayeth Christ, John xv.

John 15. There is no greater loue, then that a man bestow his life for his frend.

Moreouer no man cã fulfil the law.

1. John. 1. For (I John sayth i. Chapter of the said epistle) if we say, we haue no sinne, we deceaue our selues, and truth is not in vs. If we knowledge our sinnes, he is faithfull and righteous, to forgeue vs our sinnes, and to purge vs from all iniquitie. And in the Pater noster also we say, father forgeue vs our sins. Now if we be all sinners, none fulfilleth the lawe. For he that fulfilleth the lawe, is no sinner. In the lawe may neither Peter nor Paule, nor any other creature, saue Christ onely, reioyce. In the bloud of Christ, which fulfilled the lawe for vs, may euery parson that repenteth, beleueth, loueth the law, and mourneth for strẽgth to fulfill it, reioyce, be he neuer so weake a sinner. The two pence therefore and the credence that he left behynde him, to bestowe more (if neede were) signifieth that he was euery where mercifull, both present and absent, without fayning, cloking, complayning, or excusing, and forsoke not his neighbour as long as he had nede. which example I pray God men may followe, and let opera supererogationis alone.

Workes that the Papistes called workes, more then the lawe requireth.

MAry hath chosen a good part, which shall not be taken from her. Luk. x. She was first chosen of God, and called by grace, both to know her sin, and also to heare the worde of sayth, health, and glad tidinges of mercy in Christ, and sayth was geuen her to beleue, & the spirite of God loosed her hart from the bondage of sinne. Then consented she to the will of God againe, and aboue all thinges had delectation to heare the worde, wherein she had obtayned euerlasting health, and namely, of his owne mouth which had purchased so great mercy for her, God chuseth vs first, and loueth vs first, and openeth our eyes to see his exceeding aboundaunt loue to vs in Christ, and then loue we agayne, and accept his will aboue all thinges, and serue him in that office whereunto he hath chosen vs. Luke 10.

Sell that ye haue and geue almes. And make you bagges which ware not olde, and treasure which saileth not in heauen. Luke. xij. This & such like are not spoken that we shoulde worke as hyrelinges in respect of rewarde, and as though we shoulde obtayne heauen with merite. For he saith a little afore, feare not little flocke, for it is your fathers pleasure to geue you a kingdome. The kingdome commeth then of the good will of almighty God thorough Christ. And such thinges are spoken partly to put vs in remembraunce of our dutie to be kynde agayne. As is that saying, let your light so shine before men, that they seyng your good workes, may glorifie your father which is in heauẽ. As who shoulde say, if God hath geuen you so great giftes, see ye be not vnthankefull, but bestow them vnto his praise. Some thinges are spoken to moue vs, to put our trust in God, as are these. Beholde the Lylies of the fielde. Beholde the byrdes of the ayre. If your children aske you bread, will ye proffer them a stone? and many such lyke. Some are spoken to put vs in remẽbraunce to be sober, to watch, & pray, and to prepare our selues agaynst tẽptations, and that we should vnderstand and know, how that temptations, and occasion of euill come then most, when they are least looked for: least we should be carelesse, and sure of our selues, negligent, and vnprepared. Some thinges are spoken, that we should feare the wonderfull and incõprehensible iudgementes of God.

leſt we ſhould preſume. Some to comfort vs that we diſpayre not. And for lyke cauſes are all the enſamples of the old Teſtamēt. In concluſion the ſcripture ſpeaketh many thynges as the worlde ſpeaketh. But they may not be worldly vnderſtand, but ghoſtly and ſpiritually, yea the ſpirite of God oneſly vnderſtandeth them, and where he is not, there is not the vnderſtandyng of the Scripture. But vnfruteſull diſputyng, and braulyng about wordes.

The ſayinges of the Scriptures may not be groſſely vnderſtād.

The ſcripture ſayth, God ſeeth, God heareth, God ſmelleth, God walketh, God is with them, God is not with them, God is angry, God is pleaſed, God ſendeth his ſpirite, God taketh his ſpirite away, and a thouſande ſuch like. And yet is none of them true after the worldlye manner, and as the wordes ſound. Read the ſecond chapter of Paule to the Corinthians: The naturall man vnderſtandeth not the thinges of God, but the ſpirite of God onely, and we (ſayth he) haue receaued the ſpirite whiche is of God, to vnderſtand the thynges which are geuen vs of God. For without the ſpirite it is impoſſible to vnderſtand them. Read alſo the viij. to the Romaines. They that are led with the ſpirite of God, are the ſonnes of GOD. Now the ſonne knoweth his fathers will, and the ſernaūt that hath not the ſpirite of Chriſt (ſayth Paule) is none of his. Likewiſe he that hath not the ſpirite of GOD, is none of gods, for it is both one ſpirite, as thou mayſt ſee in the ſame place.

The naturall man vnderſtandeth not the thinges of God.

Rom. 8.

Now he that is of God, heareth the word of God. Johñ. viij. and who is of God, but he that hath the ſpirite of God? Furthermore (ſayth he) ye heare it not, becauſe ye are not of God, that is, ye haue no luſt in the word of God, for ye vnderſtand it not, & that becauſe his ſpirite is not in you.

John. 8.

The ſcripture is nothing els but that which the ſpirit of God hath ſpoken.

For as much then as the Scripture is no thyng els, but that which the ſpirite of GOD hath ſpoken by the Prophetes and Apoſtles, & can not be vnderſtand, but of the ſame ſpirite: Let euery man pray to God, to ſend him his ſpirite to looſe him from his naturall blindnes and ignorāunce, and to geue him vnderſtandyng, and feelyng of the thynges of God, & of the ſpeakyng of the ſpirite of GOD. And marke this proceſſe. Firſt we are damned of nature, ſo cōceaued and borne, as a Serpent is a Serpēt, and a tode a tode, & a ſnake a ſnake by nature. And as thou ſeeſt a yong child, which hath pleaſure in many thynges wherein is preſent death, as in fire, water and ſo forth, would ſlea hym ſelfe with a thouſand deathes, if he were not wayted vpon, and kept therfro. Euen ſo we, if we ſhould liue theſe thouſād yeares could in al that tyme delite in no other thing, nor yet ſeeke any other thyng, but that wherein is death of the ſoule.

Secondarily of the whole multitude of the nature of man, whom God hath elect and choſen, and to whom he hath appointed mercy and grace in Chriſt, to them ſendeth he his ſpirite, whiche openeth their eyes, ſheweth them their miſerie, and bryngeth them vnto the knowledge of them ſelues, ſo that they hate and abhorre them ſelues, are aſtonyed, and amaſed and at their wittes endes, neither wot what to do, or wher to ſeeke health. Then leſt they ſhould flee from God by deſperation, he comforteth thē agayne with his ſwete promiſes in Chriſt, & certifieth their harts that for Chriſtes ſake, they are receaued to mercy, and their ſinnes forgeuē, and they elect and made the ſonnes of GOD, and heyres with Chriſt of eternall lyfe: & thus through fayth are they ſet at peace with God.

By Faith in Chriſt, we are brought to the ſtate of ſaluation.

Now may not we aſke why GOD chuſeth one and not an other, eyther think that God is vniuſt to damne vs afore we do any actual dede, ſeyng that god hath power ouer all hys creatures of right, to do with thē what he lyſt, or to make of euery one of them as he liſteth. Our darknes can not perceaue his light. God wilbe feared, and not haue his ſecret iudgementes knowen. Moreouer we by the light of fayth ſee a thouſand thynges, which are impoſſible to an infidell to ſee. So likewiſe no doubt in the light of the cleare viſiō of God, we ſhal ſee things which now God will not haue knowen. For pride euer accōpanieth hye knowledge, but grace accompanyeth mekenes. Let vs therfore gine diligence rather to do the will of GOD, then to ſearch his ſecretes whiche are not profitable for vs to know.

God worketh his owne will with all his creatures.

When we are thus reconciled to God, made the frendes of GOD and heyres of eternall lyfe, the ſpirite that GOD hath poured into vs, teſtifieth that we may not lyue after our olde dedes of ignorāce. For how is it poſſible, that we ſhould repēt, and abhorre them, and yet haue luſt to liue in them? We are ſure therfore that GOD hath created, and made vs new in Chriſt, & put put his spirite in vs, that we should lyue a new lyfe, whiche is the lyfe of good workes.

If we beleue in god, we muſt put of the olde man & his workes.

That thou mayst know what are good workes, and the end and entent of good woorkes, or wherfore good woorkes serue, marke this that foloweth.

Good workes what they are, and to what ende they serue.

The lyfe of a Christen man is inward betwene hym and God, and properly is the consent of the spirite to the will of God, and to the honor of God. And Gods honour is the finall end of all good workes.

Good workes are all thynges that are done within the lawes of God, in which God is honored, and for which thankes are geuen to God.

Fasting. the true vse therof.

Fastyng is to abstaine from surfetting, or ouer much eatyng, from dronkennes, and care of the world (as thou mayst read Luke. xxi.) and the end of fastyng is to tame the body, that the spirite may haue a free course to God, and may quietly talke with God. For ouer much eatyng and drinkyng, and care of worldly busines, presse downe the spirite, choke her & tangle her that she can not lift vp her selfe to GOD. Now he that fasteth for any other entent, then to subdue the body, that the spirite may wayte on God, and freely exercise her selfe in the things of God: the same is blind, & wotteth not what he doth, erreth and shooteth at a wrong marke, and his entent and imaginatiō is abhominable in the sight of GOD.

True fasting, what it is.

when thou fastest from meate, & drinkest all day, is that a Christen fast? either to eate at one meale, that were sufficient for foure? A man at foure tymes may beare that he cā not at ones. Som fast from meate and drinke, and yet so tangle them selues in worldly busines that they can not once thinke on God. Some abstaine from butter, some from egges, some frō all maner white meate, some this day, some that day, some in the honor of this Saint, some of that, and euery mā for a sondry purpose. Some for the toth ache, some for the head ache, for feuers, pestilence, for sodein death, for hangyng, drounyng, and to be deliuered from the paynes of hell. Some are so mad that the fast one of the Thursdayes betwene the two S. Mary dayes in the worshyp of that Saint whose day is halowed, betwene Christemas and Candelmas, and that to be deliuered from the pestilence. All those mē fast without cōscience of god, & without knowledge of ỹ true entent of fastyng, and do no other then honor Saintes, as the Gentiles and heathen worshyped their Idols, & are drowned in blyndnes, and know not of the Testamēt that God hath made to mā ward in Christes bloud. In God haue they neither hope nor confidence, neither beleue hys promyses, neyther know his will, but are yet in captiuitie vnder the prince of darkenes.

Superstitious watching.

WAtch is not onely to abstaine frō sleepe, but also to be circumspect and to cast all perils: as a man should watch a Tower or a Castell. we must remember that the snares of the deuill are infinite and innumerable, and that euery moment arise new temptations, and that in all places mete vs fresh occasions. Agaynst which we must prepare our selues, and turne to God, and cōplaine to hym, and make our mone, and desire hym of his mercy to be our shield, our Tower, our Castle, and defence from all euill, to put his strength in vs (for without hym we can doe nought) & aboue all thynges we must call to minde what promises god hath made, and what he hath swoorne that he will do to vs for Christes sake, and with strong fayth cleaue vnto them, & desire him of his mercy, and for ỹ loue that he hath to Christ, & for his truthes sake to fulfil his promises. If we thus cleaue to God with strong fayth, and beleue his wordes: thē (as sayth Paul. 1. Cor. x.) God is faithfull, that he will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue that we are able, or aboue our might, ỹ is to say, if we cleaue to his promises, & not to our owne fantasies, & imaginatiōs, he will put might and power into vs, that shal be stronger then all the temptation, whiche he shall suffer to be agaynst vs.

True watching.

Prayer what it is.

PRayer is a mournyng, a lōgyng & a desire of the spirite to Godward for that whiche she lacketh, as a sicke mourneth and sorroweth in his hart, lōgyng for health. Fayth euer prayeth. For after that by fayth we are reconciled to God, and haue receaued mercy, and forgiuenes of God, the spirit longeth and thyrsteth for strēgth, to do the will of God, and that God may be honoured, his name halowed, & his pleasure & will fulfilled. The spirite wayteth, and watcheth on the will of God, and euer hath her owne fragilitie, and weakenes before her eyes, and when she seeth temptation and perill drawnye, she turneth to God, and to the testamēt that God hath made to all that beleue and trust in Christes bloud, and desireth God for his mercy, truth, and for the loue he hath to Christ, that he will fulfil his promise, that he will succour, helpe, and giue vs strength, and that he will sanctifie his name in vs & fulfill his godly will in vs, and that he wil not looke on our sinne and iniquitie, but on his mercy, on his truth, and on the loue that he oweth to his sonne Christ, and for his sake to keepe vs frō temptation, that we be not ouercome, and that he deliuer vs from euill, and what soeuer moueth vs cōtrary to his godly will.

True prayer.

Moreouer of his owne experience, he feeleth other mens neede, and no lesse commendeth to God the infirmities of other, then his owne, knowing that there is no strēgth, no help, no succour, but of God onely. And as mercifull as he feeleth God in his hart to himselfe warde, so mercifull is he to other, and as greatly as he fealeth hys owne misery, so great compassion hath he on other. His neighbour is no lesse care to him, then himselfe. He feeleth his neighbours grief, no lesse then his owne. And whēsoeuer he seeth occasion he cānot but pray for his neighbour, as well as for himselfe: his nature is to seeke the honour of God in al men, and to draw (as much as in him is) all men vnto God. This is the lawe of loue, which springeth out of Christes bloud, into the hartes of all them that haue their trust in him. No man needeth to bidde a Christen man to pray, if he see his neighbours neede: if he see it not, put him in remembraunce onely, & then he can not but do hys dutie.

Now, as touching we desire one an other to pray for vs, that do we to put our neighbour in remēbraunce of his dutie, & not that we trust in his holines. Our trust is in God, in Christ, and in the truth of Gods promises, we haue also a promise that when ij. or iij. or moe agree together in any thing according to the will of God, God heareth vs. Notwithstanding, as God heareth many, so heareth he fewe, and so heareth he one, if he pray after the will of God, and desire the honour of God. He that desireth mercy, the same feeleth his owne misery, & sinne, & mourneth in his hart for to be deliuered, that he might honour God, and God for his truth must heare him, which sayeth by the mouth of Christ.

Mat. v. Blessed are they that hunger and thyrst after righteousnes, for they shall be filled. God for his truthes sake must put ỳ righteousnes of Christ in hym, and washe his vnrighteousnes away in the bloud of Christ. And be the sinner neuer so weake, neuer so feeble and fraile, sinne he neuer so oft and so greuous, yet so long as thys lust, desire, and mourning to be deliuered remaineth in him, God seeth not his sinnes, reckoneth them not, for his truthes sake, and loue to Christ. He is not a sinner in the sight of God, that would be no sinner. He ỳ would be deliuered, hath his hart loose already. His hart sinneth not, but mourneth, repenteth, and consenteth vnto the law & will of God, and iustifieth God, that is, beareth record that God which made the lawe, is righteous & iust. And such an hart, trusting in Christes bloude, is accepted for full righteous. And his weakenes, infirmitie, and frailetie is pardoned, and his sinnes not looked vppon: vntill God put more strength in him, and fulfill his lust.

He that repenteth his sinne is no sinner before God.

When the weake in ỳ faith, & vnexpert in the misteries of Christ, desire vs to pray for them, then ought we to lead them to the truth and promises of God, and teach them to put their trust in the promises of God, in loue that God hath to Christ and to vs for hys sake, and to strength their weake consciences, shewing and prouing by the Scripture, that as long as they follow the spirite and resiste sinne, it is impossible they shoulde fall so deepe that God shall not pull them vp agayne, if they holde fast by the anker of fayth, hauing trust and confidence in Christ. The loue that God hath to Christ is infinite, and Christ did and suffered all thinges, not for himselfe, to obtaine fauour or ought els: for he had euer the full fauour of God, and was euer Lord ouer all thinges, but to reconcile vs to God, and to make vs heyres with him of his fathers kingdome. And God hath promised, that whosoeuer calleth on hys name shall neuer be confounded or ashamed. Rom. ix. If the righteous fall (sayth the Scripture) he shall not be bruised, the Lord shall put his hand vnder him. Who is righteous but he that trusteth in Christes bloude, be he neuer so weake? Christ is our righteousnes, and in him ought we to teach all men to trust, and to expound vnto all men the Testament, that God hath made to vs sinners in Christes bloud.

How we should pray for our neighbour.

Rom. 9.

Christ is our righteousnes.

This

True prayer is not without faith & charitie.

Math. 5.

This ought we to do, and not make a pray of them to leade them captiue, to lie in their consciences, and to teach them to trust in our holines, good deedes and prayers, to the entent that we would fede our idle, and slow bellies of their great labour and sweate, & so to make our selues Christes and sauiours. For if I take on me to saue other by my merites, make I not my selfe a Christ & a sauiour, & am in dede a false Prophet, and a true Antichrist, and exalt my selfe, and sitte in the temple of God, that is to wytt, the consciences of men? Among Christen mē, loue maketh all thinges common: euery man is others debter, and euery mā is bound to minister to his neighbour, and to supply his neighbours lacke, of that wherewith God hath endued hym. As thou seest in the world, how the Lordes and officers minister peace in the common wealth, punishe murtherers, theenes, and euill doers, and to maintayne their order & estate, doe the commons minister to them againe, rent, tribute, tole, and custome. So in the Gospell, the curates which in euery parishe preach the Gospell, ought of dutie to receiue an honest liuing for them, and their housholds, & euē so ought the other officers, which are necessarily required in the common wealth of Christ. We neede not to vse filthy lucre in the Gospell, to chop & chaunge, and to play the Tauernars, altering the word of God, as they do their wines to their most aduantage, and to fashion Gods worde after euery mans mouth, or to abuse the name of Christ, to obtaine thereby authoritie and power, to fede our slowe bellies. Now seest thou what prayer is, the ende thereof, and wherfore it serueth.

Loue amōg Christen mē maketh all thynges common.

If thou geue me a thousand pound to pray for thee, I am no more bound then I was before. Mans imagination can make the commaundement of God neither greater nor smaller, neither can to the lawe of God, eyther adde or minisshe. Gods commaundement is as great as himselfe. I am bounde to loue the Turke with all my might and power, yea, and aboue my power, euen from the ground of my hart, after the enlample that Christ loued me, neither to spare goods, body, or life, to winne him to Christ. And what can I doe more for thee, if thou gauest me all the world? where I see neede, there can I not but pray, if Gods spirite be in me.

Mans Imagination cannot alter the law of god, neither make it more or lesse.

Almes is a greke worde, and signifieth mercy. One Christian is debter to an other at his neede, of all that he is able to do for him, vntill his neede be sufficed. Euery Christian mā ought to haue Christ alwayes before his eyes, as an enlample to counterfaite and follow, and to do to his neighbour as Christ hath done to him, as Paule teacheth in all his epistles, and Peter in his first, and John in his first also. This order vseth Paule in all his Epistles. First he preacheth the law, & proueth that the whole nature of man is damned, in that the hart lusteth cōtrary to the will of God. For if we were of God, no doubt we shoulde haue lust in his will. Then preacheth he Christ, the Gospell, the promises, and the mercy that God hath set forth to all men in Christes bloud. which they that beleue, & take it for an earnest thing, turne themselues to God, beginne to loue God agayne, and to prepare themselues to his will, by the working of the spirit of God in them. Last of al, exhorteth he to vnitie, peace, and sobernes, to auoyde braulinges, sectes, opinions, disputing and arguing about wordes, and to walke in the plaine and single fayth, and feeling of the spirite, and to loue one an other after the enlample of Christ, euen as Christ loued vs, and to be thankefull, and to walke worthy of the Gospell, and as it becommeth Christ, and with the enlample of pure liuing to draw all to Christ.

Almes what it is.

1. Pet. 1.

1. John. 1.

Christ is Lord ouer all, and euery Christiā is heyre annexed with Christ, and therefore Lord of all, & euery one Lord of whatsoeuer an other hath. If thy brother or neighbour therfore nede and thou haue to helpe hym, and yet shewest not mercy, but withdrawest thy handes frō him: then robbest thou hym of his owne, and art a thiefe. A Christian man, hath Christes spirite. Now is Christ a mercifull thing: if therefore thou be not mercifull, after ỳ enlample of Christ, then hast thou not his spirite. If thou haue not Christes spirite, thē art thou none of his. Ro. 8. nor hast any part wyth hym. Moreouer, though thou shew mercy vnto thy neighbour, yet if thou do it not with such burning loue, as Christ did vnto thee, so must ỳ knowledge thy sinne, & desire mercy in Christ. A Christian man hath nought to reioyce in concerning his deedes. His reioycing is that Christ dyed for hym, and that he is

He that is mercyfull hath the spirite of God.

Rom. viij.

washed in Christes bloude. Of his deedes trioyceth he not, neither counteth his merites, neither geueth pardons of them, neither seeketh an hyer place in heauen of them, neither maketh himselfe a sauiour of other men, thorough his good workes. But geueth all honour to God, and in his greatest deedes of mercy, knowledgeth himselfe a sinner vnfaynedly, and is aboundauntly content with ỹ place that is prepared for him of Christ, and his good deedes are to him a signe onely that Christes spirite is in him, and he in Christ, and thorow Christ elect to eternall life.

Loue seketh not her owne profite.

The order of loue or charitie which some dreame, the Gospell of Christ knoweth not of, that a man should beginne at himselfe, and serue him selfe first, and then diserud I wot not by what steppes. Loue seketh not her own profite. ij. Cor. xiij. but maketh a man to forget him selfe, and to turne his profite to an other man, as Christ sought not him selfe, or his owne profite, but ours. This terme my selfe is not in the Gospell, neither yet father, mother, sister, brother, kinsman, that one should be preferred in loue aboue an other. But christ is all in all things. Euery Christen man to an other is Christ him selfe, and thy neighbours nede hath as good right in thy goods, as hath Christ him selfe, which is heire and Lord ouer all. And looke what thou owest to Christ, that thou owest to thy neighbours nede. To thy neighbour owest thou thine hart, thy selfe, & all that thou hast & canst do. The loue that springeth out of Christ, excludeth no man, neither putteth difference betwene one and an other. In Christ we are al of one degree, without respect of persons. Notwithstandyng though a Christen mans hart be open to all mẽ, and receaueth all men, yet because that his habilitie of goodes extendeth not so farre, this prouision is made, that euery man shall care for his owne household, as father and mother, and thine elders that haue holpen thee, wife, children and seruauntes. If thou shouldest not care, & prouide for thyne household, then were thou an infidele, seyng thou hast taken on thee so to do, and for as much as that is thy part committed to thee of the congregation. When thou hast done thy dutie to thyne household, and yet hast further aboundance of the blessyng of GOD, that owest thou to the poore that cã not labour, or would labour & can get no worke, and are destitute of frẽdes, to the poore I meane which thou knowest, to them of thyne owne parish. For that prouision ought to be had in the cõgregation, that euery parish care for there poore. If thy neighbours whiche thou knowest be serued, and thou yet haue superfluitie, and heerest necessitie to be among the brethren a thousand myle of, to thẽ art thou better. Yea, to ỹ very infidels we be debters, if they nede, as farforth as we maynteine thẽ not agaynst Christ, or to blaspheme Christ. Thus is euery man that needeth thy helpe, thy father, mother, sister, and brother in Christ: euen as euery man that doth the will of the father, is father, mother, sister, and brother vnto Christ.

Christ is all in all thynges.

Euery one must care for their owne households.

First looke to thyne owne household, and then to the poore.

Moreouer if any be an infidele and a false Christen, and forsake his household, his wife, childrẽ, and such as can not helpe them selues, then art thou bound to them, and haue wherewith, euen as much as to thyne owne household. And they haue as good right in thy goodes, as thou thy selfe. And if thou withdraw mercy from them, and hast wherewith to helpe them: then art thou a thefe. If thou shew mercy, so doest thou thy dutie, and art a faythfull minister in the household of Christ, and of Christ shalt thou haue thy reward and thanke. If the whole world were thyne, yet hath euery brother his right in thy goodes, & is heyre with thee, as we are all heyres with Christ. Moreouer the rich and they that haue wisedome with them, must see the poore set a worke, that as many as are able may feede them selues, with the labour of their owne handes, accordyng to the Scripture & commaundemẽt of God.

We must for christes sake shew our cõpassion & charitie to all men, so far as our habilitie will extend.

Now seest thou what almes deedes meaneth, and wherfore it serueth. He that seketh with his almes more then to be mercyfull to a neighbour, to succour his brothers nede, to do his dutie to his brother, to giue his brother that he oweth him, the same is blind, and seeth not what it is to be a Christen mã, and to haue felowshyp in Christes bloud.

Good workes what they are.

As pertaining to good workes, vnderstand ỹ all workes are good which are done within the law of GOD, in fayth and with thãkesgeuyng to God, and vnderstand that thou in doing thẽ pleasest God, what so euer thou doest with in the law of God, as when thou makest water. And trust me if either winde or water were stopped, thou

shouldest

shouldest feele what a preciouse thyng it were to do either of both, and what thankes ought to be geuen God therfore. Moreouer put no difference betwene workes, but what soeuer commeth into thy handes that do, as time, place, and occasion geueth, and as god hath put thee in degree hie or low. For as touchyng to please God, there is no worke better then an other. GOD looketh not fiell on thy worke as the world doth, as though the bewtyfulnes of the worke pleased hym, as it doth the world, or as though he had nede of them. But God looketh first on thy hart, what sayth thou hath to his wordes, how thou beleuest hym, trustest him, and how thou louest hym for his mercy that he hath shewed thee, he looketh with what hart thou workest, and not what thou workest, how thou acceptest the degree that he hath put thee in, & not of what degree thou art, whether thou be an Apostle, or a shoemaker. Set this ensample before thine eyes. Thou art a kechinpage and washest thy masters dilhes, an other is an Apostle, and preacheth the word of God. Of this Apostle harke what Paule sayth in the. 1. Corinth. ix. If I preach (sayth he) I haue nought to reioyce in, for necessitie is put vnto me as who should say, God hath made me so, woe is vnto me if I preach not. If I do it willingly (sayth he) then haue I my reward, that is, then am I sure that Gods spirite is me, and that I am elect to eternall lyfe. If I do it agaynst my will an office is committed vnto me, that is, if I do it not of loue to God, but to get a liuyng thereby & for a worldly purpose, and had rather otherwayes lyue, then do I that office which GOD hath put me in, and yet please not God my selfe. Note now if this Apostle preach not (as many do not, whiche not onely make them selues Apostles, but also compell men to take thē for greater then Apostles, yea for greater the Christ him selfe) the wo is vnto him, that is, his damnation is iust: If he preach & his hart not right, yet ministreth he the office that GOD hath put him in, and they that haue the spirite of God heare the voyce of God, yea though he speake in an Asse. Moreouer how soeuer he preacheth he hath not to reioyce, in that he preacheth. But and if he preach willyngly, with a true hart, and of conscience to God: then hath he his reward, that is, then feeleth he the earnest of eternall lyfe & the worckyng of the spirite of God in hym. And as he feeleth Gods goodnes and mercy, so be thou sure he feeleth his owne infirmitie, weakenes & vnworthynes, and mourneth and knowledgeth his sinne, in that the hart will not arise to worke with that full lust, & loue that is in Christ our Lord. And neuertheles is yet at peace with God, through faith and trust in Christ Iesu. For the earnest of the spirite that worketh in hym, testifieth and beareth witnes vnto his hart, that God hath chosen him, and that his grace shall suffice him, whiche grace is now not idle in hym. In hys workes putteth he no trust.

1. Cor. 9.

We must do good workes & yet put no trust in them.

Now thou that ministrest in the kechen, & art but a kechenpage, receauest all thyng of the hand of God, knowest that God hath put thee in that office, submittest thy selfe to his wil, and seruest thy master, not as a man, but as Christ him selfe with a pure hart, according as Paule teacheth vs, puttest thy trust in God, and with hym seekest thy reward. Moreouer there is not a good dede done, but thy hart reioyceth therein, yea when thou hearest that the word of God is preached by this Apostle, and seest the people turne to God, thou consentest vnto the deede, thyne hart breaketh out in ioy, springeth and leapeth in thy brest, that God is honored. And in thyne hart doest the same that ỳ Apostle doth, and happely with greater delectatiō, and a more feruent spirite. Now he that receaueth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shal receaue the reward of a Prophet. Math. x. that is, he that consenteth to the dede of a Prophet and maintaineth it, the same hath the same spirite, & earnest of euerlastyng lyfe, whiche the Prophete hath, and is elect as the Prophet is.

God is no accepter of persons, but receaueth all that submit them selues vnto him.

Math. x.

Now if thou compare dede to dede, there is difference betwixt washyng of dishes, and preachyng of the word of God, but as touchyng to please God none at all. For neither that, nor this pleaseth, but as farforth as God hath chosen a man, hath put his spirite in hym, and purified his hart by fayth and trust in Christ.

All dedes are acceptable to God, that are done in fayth, so no deede is allowed good in Gods sight (howe glorious to the world soeuer it appeare) if it be without fayth.

Let euery man therefore wayte on the office, wherin Christ hath put hym and therin serue his brethren. If he be of low degree let him pacyently therin abyde, till God promote him, and exalte hym hyer. Let kynges and head officers seke Christ, in their offices & ministre peace and quietnes vnto the brethren, punish sinne, and that with mercy, euen with the same sorow and griefe of mynde, as they would cut of a finger or ioynte, a legge, or arme of their owne body, if there were such disease in them, that either they must be cut of, or els all the body must perish.

Euery mã to walke truly in his vocatiõ, is the right seruice of God.

Let euery man of what soeuer craft or occupation he be of, whether bruer, baker, tayler, vitailer, merchaunt, or husbandman referre his craft and occupation vnto the commõ wealth, and serue hys brethren as hee would doe Christ him selfe. Let him bye and sell truly, and not set dice on his brethren, so sheweth he mercy, and his occupation pleaseth God. And when thou receauest money for thy labour, or ware, thou receauest thy dutie. For wherein so euer thou minister to thy brethren, thy brethren are debtours to geue thee wherewith to mainteine thy selfe, and household. And let your superfluities succour the poore, of whiche sort shall euer be some in all townes and cities, and villages, and that I suppose the greatest nũber. Remẽber that we are members of one body, & ought to minister one to an other mercifully. And remember that whatsoeuer we haue, it is geuen vs of God, to bestow it on our brethren. Let him that eateth, eate and geue God thankes, onely let not thy meate pull thine hart from God. And let him that drinketh do likewise. Let him ỳ hath a wife geue God thãkes for his liberty, onely let not thy wife withdraw thine hart from God, and then pleasest thou God, and hast the worde of God for thee. And in all thinges looke on the worde of God, and therein put thy trust, and not in a visure, in a disguised garment, and a cut shooe.

We must be mercyfull one to an other.

Seeke the worde of God in all thinges, and without the worde of God do nothing, though it appeare neuer so glorious. what soeuer is done without the worde of God, that count idolatry. The kingdome of heauen is within vs. Luk. xvij. wonder therefore at no monstrous shape, nor at any outward thyng without the worde. For the world was neuer drawen from God, but with an outward shewe, and glorious appearaunce, and shining of hipocrisy, and of fayned and visured fasting, praying, watching, singing, offering, sacrificing, halowing of superstitious ceremonies, and monstrous disguising.

Luke. 17.

Hypocrites are bayne glorious in in all their worckes.

Take this for an ensample. John Baptist which had testimony of Christ and of the Gospell, that there neuer rose a greater among wemens children, with his fasting, watching, praying, rayment, and straight liuing, deceaued the Iewes, and brought them in doubt, whether John were very Christ or not, and yet no Scripture or miracle testifyng it, so greatly ỳ blinde nature of man loketh on the outwarde shining of workes, and regardeth not the inwarde word, which speaketh to the hart. when they sent to John asking him whether he were Christ, he denied it. when they asked him what he was, and what he sayd of himselfe, he answered not, I am he that watcheth, prayeth, drinketh no wine, nor strong drinke, eateth neyther fishe nor flesche, but liue wyth wilde hony, and Grashoppers, and weare a coate of camels heare, and a gyrdle of a skinne: but sayd I am a voyce of a cryar. My voyce onely pertaineth to you. Those outward things which ye wonder at, perrayne to my selfe onely, vnto the taming of my bodye. To you am I a voyce onely, and that which I preach. My preaching (if it be receaued into a penitent or repenting hart) shall teach you how to liue and please God, according as God shall shed out his grace on euery man. John preached repentaunce, saying, prepare ỳ Lordes way and make his pathes straight. The Lordes way is repentaunce, and not hipocrisy of mans imagination, & inuention. It is not possible ỳ the Lord Christ should come to a man, except he know himselfe, and his sinne, & truely repent. Make his pathes straight: the pathes are the lawe, if thou vnderstãd it a right, as God hath geuen it. Christ sayth in the xvij. of Mat. Helias shall first come, that is, shall come before Christ, and restore all things, meaning of John Baptist. John Baptist did restore the law, and the Scripture vnto the right sence & vnderstanding, which the Pharises partly had darckned, and made of none effect, thorough their owne traditions. Math. xv. where Christ rebuketh them saying: why transgresse ye the commaundementes of God thorough your traditions: and partly had corrupt it with gloses, and false interpretations, that no mã could vnderstand it. wherefore Christ rebuketh them Mat. 23. saying: wo be to you Pharises, hipocrites, which shut vp the kingdome of heauen before mẽ: ye enter not your selues, neither suffer them them that come, to enter in: and partly did beguile the people and blinde their eyes in disguising themselues, as thou readest in the same 23. chap. how they made broade and large Philacteries, and did all their workes to be seene of men, that the people should wonder at their disguisinges and visuring of themselues, otherwise then God had made them: and partly mocked them with hipocrisy of false holines in fasting, praying, and almes geuing Mat. 6. and this did they for lucre to be in authoritie, to sitte in the consciences of people, and to be counted as God himselfe, that people shoulde trust in their holynes, and not in God, as thou readest in the place aboue rehearsed Mat. 23. wo be to you Pharises, hipocrites, which deuoure widowes houses vnder a colour of long prayer. Counterfet therfore nothing without ẏ worde of God, whē thou vnderstandest that it shall teach thee all thinges, how to applie outwarde thinges, and whereunto to referre them. Beware of thy good entent, good mynde, good affection or zeale as they call it. Peter of a good minde, and of a good affection or zeale chidde Christ, Math. 16. because he sayde that he must goe to Hierusalem, and there be slayne. But Christ called him Satan for his labour, a name that belongeth to the deuil. And sayde, that he perceaued not godly thinges, but worldly. Of a good entent and of a feruēt affection to Christ, the sonnes of Zebedei would haue had fire to come downe from heauen to consume the Samaritans Luk. 9. But Christ rebuked them, saying that they wist not of what spirite they were: that is, that they vnderstoode not how that they were altogether worldly & fleshly mynded. Peter smote Malchus of a good zeale: but Christ condemned his deede. The very Jewes of a good entēt, and of a good zeale slew Christ, and persecuted the Apostles, as Paule beareth them recorde, Rom. x. I beare them recorde (sayth he) that they haue a feruent mynde to Godward, but not according to knowledge. It is an other thing then to do of a good minde, and to do of knowledge. Labour for knowledge, that thou mayest know Gods will, and what he would haue thee to doe. Our mynde, entent, and affection or zeale, are blinde, and all that we do of them is damned of god, and for that cause hath God made a testament betwene him and vs, wherin is conteyned both what he would haue vs to do, and what he would haue vs to aske of him. See therefore that thou do nothing to please God withall, but that he commaundeth, neither aske any thing of him, but that he hath promised thee. The Jewes also (as it appeareth Act. vij) slew Steuē of a good zeale: because he proued by the scripture, that God dwelleth not in Churches or temples made wyth handes. The Churches at the beginning were ordeyned that the people shoulde thether resorte to heare the word of God there preached onely, and not for the vse wherein they now are. The temple wherein God will be worshipped, is the hart of man. For God is a spirite (sayth Christ Joh. 4.) and will be worshipped in ẏ spirite & in truth: that is, when a penitent hart consenteth vnto the lawe of God, and with a strong fayth lōgeth for the promises of God. So is God honored on al sides, in that we count him righteous in all his lawes and ordinaunces, and also trust in all his promises. Other worshipping of God is there none, except we make an Idoll of him.

But and we be mercifull to the poore, for conscience to God, and of compassion and harty loue, which compassion & loue spring of the loue we haue to God in Christ, for the pure mercy and loue that he hath shewed on vs: then haue we a sure token that we are beloued of God, and washed in Christes bloud, and elect by Christes deseruing vnto eternall life.

The scripture speaketh as a father doth to his young sonne, do this, or that, and then will I loue thee, yet the father loueth his sonne first, and studieth with all his power and witte to ouercome his childe with loue, and with kindnes, to make him do that which is comely, honest, and good for it selfe. A kynde father, and mother loue their children, euen when they are euill, that they would shed their bloud to make them better, and to bring thē into the right way. And a naturall childe studieth not to obtayne his fathers loue with workes, but considereth with what loue his father loueth him with all, and therefore loueth agayne, is glad to do his fathers will, and studieth to be thankefull.

The wise of this worlde do not vnderstand the speaking of God in his scriptures.

The spirit of the worlde vnderstandeth not the speaking of God, neither the spirite of the wise of thys worlde, neyther the spirite of Philosophers, neither ẏ spirite of Socrates, of Plato, or of Aristotles Ethikes, as thou mayest see in the first and second chapter of the first to the Corint. Though that many are not ashamed to rayle and blaspheme, saying, how shoulde he vnderstand the scripture, seing he is no Philosopher, neyther hath sene his metaphisike? Moreouer they blaspheme, saying, how can he be a deuine and woteth not what is subiectum in theologia? Neuertheles as a man without the spirite of Aristotell or Philosophy, may by the spirite of God vnderstand scripture: Euen so by the spirite of God, vnderstandeth he that god is to be sought in all the Scripture, and in all thynges & yet wotteth not what meaneth Subiectum in Theologia, because it is a terme of their owne makyng. If thou shouldest say to hym, that hath ẏ spirite of god, the loue of god is the kepyng of the cōmaundements, & to loue a mans neighbour is to shew mercy, he would without arguyng or disputyng vnderstand, how that of the loue of God spryngeth the keping of his cōmaundementes, and of the loue to thy neighbour spryngeth mercy. How would Aristotle deny such speakyng, & a Duns man would make xx. distinctions. If thou shouldest say (as sayth Iohn the 4. of his Epistle) how can he that loueth not his neighbour, whom he seeth, loue God whom he seeth not? Aristotle would say loe, a mā must first loue his neighbour and thē God, and out of the loue to thy neighbour spryngeth the loue to God. But he that feeleth the worcking of the spirite of God, and also from what vengeaunce the bloud of Christ hath delyuered hym, vnderstandeth how that it is impossible to loue either father or mother, sister, brother, neighbour, or his owne selfe a right, except it spryng out of the loue to God, and perceaueth that the loue to a mans neighbour, is a signe of the loue to God, as good frute declareth a good tree, and that the loue to a mās neighbour accompanieth, and followeth the loue of God, as heate accōpanieth and followeth fire.

The Papistes argumentes.

Likewise whē the Scripture sayth. Christ shall reward euery man at the resurrection or vprisyng againe accordyng to his dedes, the spirite of Aristotles ethikes would say, loe with ẏ multitude of good workes mayst thou, & must thou obtayne euerlastyng lyfe, & also a place in heauen hye or low, accordyng as thou hast many or fewe good workes, & yet wotteth not what a good worke meaneth, as Christ speaketh of good workes, as he that seeth not the hart, but outward things onely. But he that hath Gods spirite vnderstandeth it. He feeleth that good workes are nothyng but frutes of loue, compassion, mercyfulnes, and of a tendernes of hart, whiche a Christen hath to his neighbour, and that loue spryngeth of that loue which he hath to god, to his will & commaundements, and vnderstandeth also that the loue whiche man hath to God, spryngeth of the infinite loue, and bottomlesse mercy, which God in Christ shewed first to vs, as saith Iohn in the Epistle and Chap. aboue rehearsed. In this (sayth he) appeared the loue of GOD to vsward, bicause that God sent his onely begotten sonne into the worlde that we might liue thorough hym. Herein is loue, not that we loued God, but that he loued vs, & sent his sonne to make agreement for our sinnes. In conclusion a Christē mā feeleth, that that vnspeakeable loue and mercy which god hath to vs, & that spirite which worketh all thinges that are wrought accordyng to the will of God, and that loue wherewith we loue God, & that loue whiche we haue to our neighbour, and that mercy and compassion which we shew on him, & also that eternal lyfe which is layd vp in store for vs in Christ, are altogether the gift of God, through Christes purchasyng.

Aristotles and Papistes doctrine.

Good workes are the frutes of loue.

God first loued vs, and not we hym.

If the Scripture sayd alwayes Christ shall reward thee accordyng to thy fayth, or accordyng to thy hope, and trust thou hast in God, or accordyng to the loue thou hast to god, & thy neighbour, so were it true also as thou seest. 1. Pet. 1. receauyng the end or reward of your faith, ẏ health or saluatiō of your soules. But ẏ spirituall things could not bee knowen sane by theyr workes, as a tree can not be knowen, but by her frute. How could I know that I loued my neighbour, if neuer occasion

How we vnderstand the loue of God to be in vs.

occasion were giuen me to shew mercy vnto hym: how should I know that I loued GOD, if I neuer suffered for hys sake? howe should I know that God loued me, if there were no infirmitie, temptation, perill and ieoperdy whence God should deliuer me?

THere is no man that forsaketh house, either father, or mother, either brethren, or sisterne, wife, or children for the kyngdome of heauēs sake, which shall not receaue much more in this world, and in the world to come euerlastyng lyfe. Luke. xviij. Luke. 18.

Here seest thou that a Christen man in all his woorkes hath respect to nothyng, but vnto the glorie of god onely, and to the maintenyng of the truth of god, and doth and leueth vndone all thynges of loue, to the glory and honor of god onely, as Christ teacheth in the Pater noster.

Moreouer when he sayth, he shall receaue much more in this world, of a truth, yea he hath receaued much more already. For except he had felt the infinite mercy, goodnes, loue and kindnes of God, and the felowshyp of the bloud of Christ, and the comfort of the spirite of Christ, in his hart, he could neuer haue forsakē any thyng for gods sake. Notwithstāding (as saith Mark. x.) who soeuer for Christes sake & the gospels forsaketh house, brethren or sisters &c. He shall receaue an hundred fold, houses, brethren &c. that is spiritually. For Christ shalbe all thynges vnto thee. The aungels, all Christen and who soeuer doth the will of the father, shalbe father, mother, sister & brother vnto thee, and all theirs shall be thyne. And god shall take the care of thee, & minister all thynges vnto thee, as long as thou sekest but his honour onely. Moreouer if thou were Lord ouer all the world, yea of ten worldes before thou knewest god: yet was not thyne appetite quenched, thou thyrstedest for more. But if thou seeke his honour onely, then shall he slake thy thyrst, and thou shalt haue al that thou desirest, and shalbe content: yea if thou dwell among infidels, and among the most cruelest nation of the world, yet shall he be a father vnto thee, and shall defend thee, as he did Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, & all Saintes whose lyues thou readest in the Scripture. For all that are past and gone before, are but ensamples to strength our fayth, and trust in the word of god. It is the same god, and hath sworne to vs all that he sware vnto them, and is as true as euer he was, and therefore can not but fulfil his promises to vs, as wel as he dyd to them, if we beleue as they dyd.

Whosoeuer for Christes sake loseth any thyng, shal receiue an hundreth folde.

If we once possesse Christ by faith, then haue we all in all, and are content with that we haue.

The houre shal come when all they that are in the graues shall heare hys voyce, that is to say Christes voyce, & shall come forth, they that haue done good into the resurrection of lyfe, and they that haue done euil, into the resurrection of damnation, John. v. This & all lyke textes declare what followeth good woorkes, and that our dedes shall testifie with vs, or agaynst vs at that day, and putteth vs in remembraunce to be diligent, and feruent in doyng good. Here by mayst thou not vnderstand that we obtayne the fauor of god, and the inheritaunce of life thorough the merites of good woorkes, as hyrelynges do their wages. For then shouldest thou robbe Christ, of whose fulnes we haue receaued fauour for fauour, Joh. i. that is, gods fauour was so full in Christ, that for his sake he geueth vs his fauour, as affirmeth also Paule Ephe. i. he loued vs in his beloued by whom we haue (sayth Paul) redemptiō through his bloud, and forgeuenes of sinnes. The forgeuenes of sinnes then is our redēptiō in Christ, and not ý reward of woorkes. In whō (sayth he in the same place) hee chose vs before the making of ý world, that is long before we dyd good woorkes. Throughe fayth in Christ, are we also the sonnes of god, as thou readest Jo. i. in that they beleued on his name, he gaue them power to be the sonnes of god. God with all his fulnes & riches dwelleth in Christ, and out of Christ must we fetch all thynges. Thou readest also John. iij. he that beleueth on the sonne hath eternal life. And he that beleueth not, shall see no lyfe, but the wrath of god abydeth vpon him. Here seest thou that the wrath & vengeance of God possesseth euery man till fayth come. Fayth and trust in Christ, expelleth the wrath of god, and bringeth fauour, ý spirite power to do good, and euerlastyng lyfe. Moreouer vntill Christ hath geuē thee light, thou knowest not wherein stādeth the goodnes of thy woorkes, & vntill his spirite hath loosed thyne hart, thou canst not consent vnto good woorkes. All that is good in vs, both wil and woorks, commeth of the fauour of GOD, through Christ to whom be the laude. Amen.

Here note what followeth of good woorkes.

John. i.

By faith in Christ we are made the sonnes of God.

John. 3.

Faith doth expell the wrath of God.

IF any man will do his will (he meaneth the will of the father) he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of god, or whether I speake of my selfe.

John.7. John.vij. This text meaneth not that any man of his owne strength, power and free will (as they call it) can do the will of god, before he hath receaued the spirite, and strength of Christ through fayth. But here is ment that, which is spoken in the thyrd of John, when Nicodemus marueiled how it were possible, that a man should be borne agayn. Christ aunswered, that which is borne of the flesh is flesh, and that whiche is borne of the spirite is spirite, as who should say, he that hath the spirite thorough fayth, and is borne agayne, and made a new in Christ, vnderstandeth the thynges of the spirite, and what he that is spirituall meaneth. But he that is fleshly, and as Paul sayth. 1. Cor. ij. a

1. Cor. 2. naturall man, & led of his blind reason onely, can neuer ascend to the capacitie of the spirite. And he geueth an ensaple, saying, the winde bloweth where he lysteth, and thou heareſt his voyce, and wotteſt not whence he cõmeth, nor whether he will. So is euery mã that is borne of the spirite, he that speaketh of the spirite, can neuer be vnderstand of the naturall man, which is but flesh and sauoreth no more thẽ thynges of ỹ flesh. So here meaneth Christ, if any man haue the spirite, & consenteth vnto the will of God, this same at ones wotteth what I meane.

The naturall man which is but flesh, sauoureth not those thinges that are of the spirite.

John.13. If ye vnderstand these thinges, happy are ye if ye do them John. xiij. A Christen mans hart is with the wyll of God, with the lawe and commaundementes of God, and hongreth and thyrsteth after strength to fulfill them, and mourneth day and night, desiring God according to his promises, for to gene him power to fulfill the will of God with loue and lust: then testifieth his deede that he is blessed, and that the spirite which blesseth vs in Christ, is in hym, and ministreth such strength. The outward deede testifieth what is within vs, as thou

John.14. my commaundements, & keepeth thẽ, the same it is that loueth me. And agayne, he that loueth me keepeth my commaundementes, and he that loueth me not, keepeth not my cõmaundementes, the outward deede testifiing of the inwarde hart. And Joh.xv.

If ye shall kepe my commaundemẽts, ye shall cõtinue in my loue, as I kepe my fathers commaundemẽt, and continue in his loue. That is, as ye see the loue that I haue to my father, in that I keepe his commaundementes, so shal ye see the loue that ye haue to me, in that ye kepe my commaundemẽtes.

We are blessed by God onely in Christ our sauiour. and not by our workes.

Thou mayeſt not thinke that our deedes bleſſe vs first, and that we preuent God and his grace in Christ, as though we in our naturall giftes, and beyng as we were borne in Adam, looked on the lawe of God, and of our owne strength fulfilled it, and so became righteous, and then with that righteousnes obtayned the fauour of God. As Philosophers write of righteousnes, and as the righteousnes of temporall lawe is, where the lawe is satisfied with the hipocrisy of the outward deede. For cõtrarie to ỹ, readeſt thou Joh.xv. Ye haue not chosen me (sayth Christ) but I haue chosen you, that ye goe and bring forth fruite, and that your fruite remayne. And in the same chapter. I am a vine, and ye the braunches, and without me can ye do nothing. with vs therefore so goeth it. In Adam are we all as it were wilde crab trees, of which God chuseth whom he will, and plucketh them out of Adam, and planteth them in the garden of his mercy, and stocketh thẽ, and grafteth the spirite of Christ in them, which bringeth forth the fruite of the will of God, which fruite testifieth that God hath blessed vs in Christ. Note this also, that as long as we liue we are yet partly carnall, and fleshly (notwithstãding, that we are in Christ and though it be not imputed vnto vs for Christes sake) for there abideth, & remaineth in vs yet of the olde Adam, as it were the stocke of the crabe tree, and euer among when occasion is geuen hym, shooteth forth his braunches and leues, budde, blossome, and fruit. Against whom we must fight and subdue hym, and chaynge all his nature by little a and little, with prayer, fasting, and watching, with vertuous meditation and holy workes, vntill we be altogether spirite. The kingdome of heauen sayth Christ Math. 13. is like leuen which a woman taketh & hideth in three peckes of meale, till all be leuened. The leuen is the spirite, and we the meale which must be seasoned with ỹ spirite by a little & a little, till we be throughout spirituall.

Joh.xv.

We must wrestle with our olde man, that we may put on Christ.

which shall rewarde euery man ac-

Roma. 2. cording to his deede, Rom. 2. that is, according as the deedes are, so shall euery mans rewarde be, the deedes declare what we are, as the fruite the tree, according to the fruite shall the tree be praysed. The reward is geuen of the mercy and truth of God, and by the deserueng and merites of Christ. whosoeuer repenteth, beleueth the Gospell, & putteth his trust in Christes merites, the same is heyre with Christe of eternall lyfe, for assurance whereof the spirite of God is poured into his hart as an earnest, which looseth him from the bondes of Sathan, and geueth him lust and strength euery day more and more, according as he is diligent to aske of God for Christes sake. And eternall life followeth good liuing. I suppose (sayth S. Paule in Roma. 8. the same epistle the viij. chapter) that the afflictions of this worlde are not worthy of the glory which shalbe shewed on vs, that is to say, that which we here suffer, can neuer deserue that reward, which there shalbe geuen vs.

Moreouer, if the reward should depēd, and hang of the workes, no man shoulde be saued. For as much as our best deedes, compared to the lawe, are damnable sinne. By the deedes of the lawe is no flesshe iustified, as it is written in the thirde chapter to the Rom. The lawe iustifieth not, but vttereth the sinne onely, & compelleth and driueth the penitent, or repentyng sinner to flee vnto the sanctuary of mercy in the bloud of Christ. Also repent we neuer so much, be we neuer so well willyng vnto the law of God, yet are we so weake, and the snares and occasiōs so innumerable, that we fall dayly and hourely. So that we coulde not but dispeire, if the rewarde hanged of the worke. whosoeuer ascribeth eternall life vnto the deserueng, and merite of workes, must faule in one of two incōueniences, either must he be a blinde Pharisey, not seeng that the lawe is spirituall and he carnall, and looke and reioyce in the outward shining of his deedes, despising the weake and in respect of them, iustifie himselfe. Or els (if he see how that the lawe is spirituall, and he neuer able to ascend vnto ẏ which ẏ law requireth) he must nedes despaire. Let euery Christen mā therfore reioyce in Christ our hope, trust, and righteousnes, in whom we are loued, chosē, and accept vnto ẏ enheritaunce of eternall lyfe, neyther presuming in our perfectnes, neither despayring in our weakenes. The perfecter a man is, the clearer is his sight, and seeth a thousand thinges which displease him, and also perfectnes that can not be obtayned in this life. And therefore desireth to be with Christ, where is no more sinne. Let hym that is weake, & can not doe that he would fayne doe, not despayre, but turne to him that is strong, and hath promised to geue strength to all that aske of him in Christes name, and complayne to GOD, and desire hym to fulfill his promises, and to God committe hym selfe. And he shall of his mercy & truth strength him, and make him feele with what loue he is beloued for Christes sake, though he be neuer so weake.

Our best workes are damnable in the sight of god with out Christ.

Let no mā despeyre, but put his hope in Christ and he shalbe safe.

THey are not righteous before god which heare the lawe, but they which do the lawe shall be iustified. Rom. ij. This text is playner thā that it needeth to be expounded. In the chapter before, Paule proueth that the law naturall, holpe not the Gentiles, (as appeareth by the lawes, statutes, and ordinaunces which they made in their cities) yet kept they them not. The great keepe the small vnder, for their owne profite with the violence of the lawe. Euery man prayseth the lawe as farre forth as it is profitable and pleasant vnto himself. But when his owne appetites should be restrayned, then grudgeth he against the law. Moreouer he proueth that no knowledge holpe the Gentiles. For though the learned mē (as the Philosophers) came to the knowledge of God, by the creatures of the world, yet had they no power to worshippe God. In thys secōd chapter proueth he ẏ the Iewes (though they had the lawe written) yet it holpe them not: they coulde not keepe it, but were idolaters, and were also murtherers, adulterers, & whatsoeuer the lawe forbad. He concludeth therfore that ẏ Iewe, is as well dāned as the Gentill. If hearing of the lawe onely might haue iustified, thē had the Iewes bene righteous. But it required that a mā do the lawe, if he will be righteous. which because ẏ Iewe did not, he is no lesse dāned thē the Gētill. The publishing & declaring of ẏ lawe, doth but vtter a mās sin, & geueth neither strēgth, nor help to fulfill the law. The law killeth thy cōscience, & geueth thee no lust to fulfill the law. Faith in christ, geueth lust & power to do ẏ law. Now is it true, ẏ he which doth ẏ law is righteous, but ẏ doth no mā saue he ẏ

1. Cor. 3. IF any mans worke that he hath builte vpon, abide, he shall receaue a rewarde. 1. Cor. 3. The circumstance of the same chapter, that is to witt, that which goeth before, & that which followeth, declareth playnely what is ment. Paule talketh of learning, doctrine or preaching. He sayth that he himselfe hath layde the foundation, which is Iesus Christ: and that no man can laye any other. He exhorteth therfore euery man to take hede what he buildeth vpon, and borroweth a similitude of ỳ goldsmith, which trieth his metalles with fire, saying, that the fire (that is) the iudgement of ỳ scripture, shall trie euery mans worke, that is, euery mās preaching and doctrine. If any builde vpon the foundation layde of Paule, I meane Iesus Christ, golde, siluer, or precious stone, which are all one thyng, and signifie true doctrine, which when it is examined, the scripture alloweth, then shall he haue his rewarde, that is, he shall be sure that his learning is of God, & that Gods spirite is in hym, and that he shall haue the rewarde that Christ hath purchased for hym. On the other side, if any man build there on timbre, heye, or stubble, which are all one, and signifie doctrine of mans imaginatiō, traditions, and fantasies, which stand not with Christ when they are examined, and iudged by the Scripture, he shall suffer damage, but shall be saued hymselfe, yet as it were through fire, that is, it shall be paynefull vnto him, that he hath lost his labour, and to see his buildyng perish, notwithstandyng if he repent, and embrace the truth in Christ, he shall obtaine mercy and be saued. But if Paule were now a liue, & would defend his owne learnyng, he should be tried thorough fire, not thorough fire of the iudgement of Scripture (for that light men now vtterly refuse) but by the popes law, and with fire of Fagots.

Christ is ỳ sure foundation.

Mans foundation is feble.

2. Cor. 5. WE muste all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ, for to receaue euery man accordyng to the dedes of his body. 2. Corinth. v. As thy dedes testifie of thee so shal thy reward be. Thy dedes be euill, then is ỳ wrath of God vpon thee, and thyne hart is euil, and so shall thy reward be, if thou repent not. Feare therfore and crye to God for grace, that thou mayst lone hys lawes. And whē thou louest them cease not til thou haue obtained power of God to fulfill them: so shalt thou be sure that a good reward shall folow. Christ rewardeth his owne workes in vs. whiche reward not thy deedes, but christes haue purchased for thee, whose purchasing also is that iust which thou hast to Gods law, & that might where with thou fulfillest them. Remember also, that a reward is rather called that which is giuen freely, then that which is deserued. That which is deserued, is called (if thou wilt giue hym hys right name) hyre or wages. A reward is giuen freely to prouoke vnto loue and to make frendes.

Remember that what soeuer good thyng any man doth, that shall he receaue of ỳ Lord. Eph. vj. Remēbryng that ye shal receaue of the Lord the reward of inheritance. Col. iij. These iij. textes are exedyng playne. Paul meaneth as Peter doth. i. Pet. ij. that seruantes should obey their masters with all their hartes, and with good will, though they were neuer so euill. Yea he will that all that are vnder power obey, euen of hart, and of conscience to God, because God will haue it so, be ỳ rulers neuer so wicked. The children must obey father and mother, be they neuer so cruell or vnkynd, likewise the wife her husband, the seruaunt his master, the subiectes and commons their Lord or Kyng. why? For ye serue the Lord sayth he in the Collos. iij. We are Christes, and Christ hath bought vs, as thou readest. Rom. xiiij. 1. Cor. vj. 1. Pet. i. Christ is our Lord and we his possession, & his also is the commaūdement. Now ought not the cruelnesse & churlishnesse of father and mother, of husband, master, Lord, or Kyng, cause vs to hate the commaundement of our so kynde a Lord Christ, which spared not his bloud for our sakes, which also hath purchased for vs with his bloud, that reward of eternall lyfe, which lyfe shal folow the patience of good liuing, and wherunto our good dedes testifie that we are chosen. Furthermore we are so carnall, that if ỳ rulers be good, we can not know whether we keepe the commaundement for the lone that we haue to Christ, and to god through him or no. But and if thou canst finde in thine hart do good vnto him that rewardeth the euill agayne, then art thou sure that ỳ same spirite is in thee, that is in Christ. And it foloweth in the same Chapter to the Collossians. He that doth wrong shall receaue for the wrong that he hath done. That is God shall auenge thee aboundantly, which which seeth what wrong is done vnto thee, and yet suffereth it for a tyme, that thou mightest feele thy patiēce, and the worckyng of his spirite in thee, and be made perfect. Therefore see that thou not once desire vengeaunce, but remit all vengeaunce vnto GOD, as Christ did. which (sayth Peter. i. Pet. ij.) whē he was reuiled, reuiled not agayn, neither threatned when he suffered. Vnto such obedience, vnto such patience, vnto such a poore hart, and vnto such feelyng, is Paules meanyng to bryng all men, and not vnto the vaine disputyng of them, that ascribe so hye a place in heauen vnto their peelde merites. which as they feele not the worckyng of Gods spirite, so obey they no man. If the kyng do vnto them but right, they wil interdicte the whole Realme, curse, excommunicate & send thē down farre beneath the bottome of hell, as they haue brought the people out of their wittes, and made them madde to beleue.

Remit all vengeaūce vnto God.

The fury of the Papish Clergie.

Thy prayers and almes are come vp into remembraunce in the presence of GOD, (in the Actes. x.) That is God forgetteth thee not, though he come not at the first calling, he looketh on, and beholdeth thy prayers and almes. Prayer commeth from the hart. God looketh first on the hart, and then on the deds. As thou readest Gene. iiij. God beheld or looked first on Abell, & then on his offering. If the hart be vnpure, the dede verily pleaseth not, as thou seest in Cain. Marke the order. In the begynnyng of the chapter thou readest, there was a certaine man named Cornelius which feared god, gaue much almes, and prayed God alway. He feared God, that is he trembled & quaked, to breake the cōmaundemētes of god. Then prayed he alway. Prayer is the frute, effect, dede or act of fayth & is nothyng but the longing of the hart for those thyngs, which a mā lacketh & which god hath promised to geue him. He doth also almes. Almes is ỳ frute, effect or deede of compassion and pitie, which we haue to our neighbour. Oh a glorious fayth and a right, which so trusteth God, and beleueth his promises, that she feareth to breake his commaundementes, and is also mercyfull vnto her neighbour. This is that faith wherof thou readest namely in Peter, Paule and John, that we are thereby both iustified and saued. And who soeuer imagineth any other fayth, deceaueth him selfe, and is a vaine disputer, and a brauler about wordes, and hath no feelyng in his hart.

Acts. 10.

Prayer is the frute of fayth.

Lively fayth is not without workes.

Though thou consent to the law, that it is good, righteous, & holy, sorowest and repentest because thou hast broken it, mournest because thou hast no strength to fulfill it: yet art not thou therby at one with GOD. Yea thou shouldest shortly despayre, and blaspheme God, if the promises of forgiuenes and of helpe were not there by, & fayth in thyne hart to beleue them. Fayth therfore setteth thee at one with God.

Fayth maketh vs at one with God.

Fayth prayeth alway. For she hath alway her infirmities & weakenesses before her eyes, and also Gods promises, for which she alway longeth, and in all places. But blind vnbeleffe prayeth not alway nor in all places, but in the Churche onely, and that in such a Churche, where it is not lawfull to preach gods promises, neither to teach men to trust therein. Fayth when she prayeth setteth not her good dedes before her, saying: Lorde for my good dedes do this or that. Nor bargaineth with god, saying, Lord graūt me this or do this or that, and I wil do this or that for thee, as mumble so much dayly, go so farre, or fast this, or that fast, enter in this Religion or that, with such other pointes of infidelitie, yea rather Idolatrie. But she setteth her infirmities, & her lacke before her face, and Gods promises sayinge: Lorde for thy merry and truth, whiche thou hast sworne be mercyfull vnto me, and plucke me out of this prison, and out of this hell. And loose the bondes of Sathan, and gine me power to glorifie thy name. Fayth therfore iustifieth in the hart, and before GOD, and the deedes iustifie outwardly before the world, that is, testifie onely before mē, what we are inwardly before God.

Fayth prayeth alwaye and in all places.

The prayer of a faithfull man.

who soeuer looketh in the perfect law of libertie and continueth therein, (if he bee not a forgetfull hearer, but a doer of the worke) he shalbe happy in his deede. James. i. The law of liberty, that is, which requireth a free hart, or (if thou fulfill it) declareth a free hart lowsed from the bondes of Sathan. The preachyng of the law maketh no man free, but bindeth. For it is the key that byndeth all consciences vnto eternall damnation, whē it is preached: as the promises or Gospell is the keye, that lowseth all consciences that repēt, when they are bounde through preachyng of the law. Be shalbe happy in his deede, that is, by his deede shall he know, that he is happy, and blessed of God, whiche hath geuen hym a good hart, and power to fulfill the law. By hearyng the law thou shalt not know that thou art blessed, but if thou do it, it declareth ẏ thou art happy & blessed.

James. 3. WAs not Abraham iustified of hys deedes, when he offered hys sonne Isaac vpon the altar? James. ij. hys deede iustified hym before the world, that is, it declared and vttered the faith which both iustifieth him before God, and wrought that wonderfull worke, as James also affirmeth.

was not Raab the harlot iustified whē she receaued the messengers, and sent them out an other way? James. ij. that is lykewise outwardly, but before GOD she was iustified by fayth, which wrought that outward dede, as thou mayest see Iosue. ij. She had heard what God had done in Egypt, in the redde Sea, in the desert, and vnto the two kynges of the Amorreans, Seō, and Og. And she cōfessed saying: your Lord God, he is God in heauen aboue, and in earth beneath. She also beleued that God as hee had promised the children of Israell, would giue thē the land wherein she dwelt, and cōsented thereunto, submitted her selfe vnto the will of God, and holpe GOD (as much as in her was) & saued his spyes and messengers. The other feared that whiche she beleued, but resisted God with al their might, and had no power to submite themselues vnto the will of God. And therefore perished they, and she was saued, and that through fayth, as we read Heb. ij. where thou mayest see how the holy fathers were saued through fayth, and how fayth wrought in them. Fayth is the goodnes of all the deedes that are done within the lawe of God, and maketh thē good & glorious, seeme they neuer so vile, and vnbeliefe maketh thē damnable, seeme they neuer so glorious.

Fayth is ẏ goodnes of all ẏ deedes that are done within the lawe of God.

Jaco. 2. AS pertaining to that which James in this 2. chapter sayth. what auaileth though a mā say that he hath faith, if he haue no deedes? can fayth saue hym? And agayne, fayth without deedes is dead in it selfe. And the deuils beleue and tremble. And as the body without the spirite is dead, euen so fayth without deedes is dead. It is manifest and cleare, that he meaneth not of the fayth whereof Peter and Paule spake in their epistles: John in hys Gospell & first epistle, and Christ in the Gospell when he sayth, thy faith hath made thee safe, be it to thee accordyng to thy fayth, or greate is thy fayth, & so forth, and of which James himselfe speaketh in the first Chapter saying: of his owne wyll begat he vs with the worde of life, that is, in beleuing the promises wherein is life, are we made the sonnes of God.

which thing I also this wise proue. Paule sayth, how shall or can they beleue without a preacher? how should they preach except they were sēt? Now I pray you whē was it heard that god sent any mā to preach vnto ẏ deuils, or that he made them any good promise? He threatneth them oft, but neuer sent embassadours to preach any atonemēt betwene hym and them. Take an ensample that thou mayest vnderstand. Let there be two poore men both destitute of rayment in a colde winter, the one strong, that he feleth no griefe, the other grieuously mournyng for payne of the colde. I then come by and moued wyth pitie and compassion, say vnto hym that feeleth his disease, come to such a place, and I will geue thee rayment sufficient. He beleueth, commeth, & obtayneth that which I haue promised. That other seeth all this & knoweth it, but is partaker of nought. For he hath no fayth, and that is because there is no promise made hym. So is it of the deuils. The deuils haue no fayth. For fayth is but earnest beleuing of gods promises. Now are there no promises made vnto the deuils, but sore threatninges. The olde Philosophers knew that there was one God, but yet had no fayth, for they had no power to seeke his wyll, neyther to worshipp hym. The Turkes and the Sarasons know ẏ there is one God, but yet haue no fayth. For they haue no power to worshipp God in spirite, to seeke his pleasure, and to submit thē vnto his will. They made an Idoll of God (as we do for the most part) and worshipped him euery man after hys owne imagination, and for a sundry purpose. what we wyl haue done, that must God do, and to do our will worshipp we hym, and pray vnto hym: but what God will haue done, that wyll neyther Turke nor Sarason, nor the most part of vs do. what soeuer we imagin righteous, that must God admitte. But Gods righteousnes, wyll not our hartes admitte. Take an other ensample. Let there be two such as I spake of before, and I promise both,

Turkes haue no fayth & yet know there is a God.

and

and the one because he feeleth not hys disease commeth not. So is it of Gods promises. No man is holpe by them but sinners ẏ fele their sinnes, mourne and sorrow for them, and repent wyth all their hartes. For John Baptist went before Christ, and preached repẽtaunce, that is, he preached the lawe of God, right, and brought the people into knowledge of themselues, and vnto the feare of God, and then sent them vnto Christ to be healed. For in Christ and for his sake onely, hath god promised to receaue vs vnto mercy, to forgeue vs, and to geue vs power to resist sinne. How shall God saue thee, when thou knowest not thy damnation? How shall Christ deliuer thee frõ sinne, when thou wilt not knowledge thy sinne? Now I pray thee how many thousandes are there of them that say, I beleue that Christ was borne of a Virgin, that he dyed, that he rose agayne, and so forth, and thou canst not bring them in beliefe, that they haue any sinne at all? How many are there of the same sort which thou cãst not make beleue that a thousand thinges are sin, which God damneth for sinne all the scripture throughout? As to bye as good cheepe as he can, and to sell as deare as he can, to rayse the market of corne and victuale, for his owne vauntage, without respect of his neighbor, or of the poore of the common wealth, and such like. Moreouer how many hundred thousandes are there, which when they haue sinned, & knowledge their sinnes; yet trust in a balde ceremony, or in a lowsy Fryers coate and merites, or in the prayers of them that deuoure widowes houses, and eateth the poore out of house and harbour, in a thyng of hys owne imagination, in a foolishe dreame, and a false vision, & not in Christes bloud, and in the truth that God hath sworne? All these are faythlesse, for they follow their owne righteousnes, and are disobediẽt vnto all maner righteousnes of God: both vnto the righteousnes of Gods lawe, wherewith he damneth all our deedes (for though some of them see their sins for feare of payne, yet had they rather that such deedes were no sinne) and also vnto the righteousnes of the truth of God in his promises, whereby he saueth all that repent and beleue them. For though they beleue that Christ dyed, yet beleue they not that he dyed for their sinnes, and that hys death is a sufficient satisfaction for their sinnes, and that God for hys sake will be a father vnto them, and geue them power to resist sinne.

Sinnes that are accompted no sinnes.

Faithlesse frutes.

Paule sayth (to the Romaynes in Rom.10. ther. chap. if thou confesse wyth thy mouth that Jesus is the Lord, and beleue wyth thine hart that God rayled hym vp from death, thou shalt be safe. That is, if thou beleue he rayled hym vp againe for thy saluation. Many beleue that God is riche and almighty, but not vnto themselues, and that he he will be good vnto them, and defend them, and be their God.

Pharao for payne of the plague, was compelled to confesse hys sinnes, but had yet no power to submit hymselfe vnto ẏ will of God, and to let the children of Israell goe, and to loose so great profit for Gods pleasure. As our Prelates confesse their sinnes, saying, though we be neuer so euill, yet haue we the power. And agayne, the Scribes and the Pharises (say they) sate in Moyses seate, do as they teach, but not as they do, thus confesse they that they are abhominable. But to the second I aunswere, if they sate on Christes seat, they would preach Christes doctrine, now preach they their owne traditions, and therefore not to be heard. If they preached Christ, we ought to heare them though they were neuer so abhominable, as they of themselues confesse, and haue yet no power to amende, neither to let loose Christes flocke to serue God in the spirit, which they holde captiue, compelling them to serue their false lyes. The deuils felt the power of Christ, and were cõpelled against their willes to confesse that he was the sonne of God, but had no power to be contẽt therewith, neither to consent vnto the ordinaunce & eternall councell of the euerlasting God, as our Prelates feele the power of God agaynst them, but yet haue no grace to geue roome vnto Christ, because that they (as the deuils nature is) will themselues sitte in hys holy temple, that is to witte, the consciences of men.

Pharao confessed his sinnes.

The deuils confessed Christ to be the sonne of God.

Simon Magus beleued, Acts. 8. with such a fayth as the deuils confessed Christ, but had no right fayth, as thou seest in the sayd chapter. For he repented not, consenting vnto the lawe of God. Neither beleued the promises, or longed for them, but wondred onely at ẏ myracles which Philip wrought, and because that he himselfe in Philips presence had no power to Simon Magus fayth.

vse his witchcrafte, sorcery and arte magike, wherewith he mocked & deluded the wittes of ỹ people. He would haue bought the gifte of God, to haue solde it much dearer, as his successours now do, and not the successours of Simon Peter. For were they Simon Peters successours, they would preach Christ, as he did, but they are Simon Magus his successours, of which Simō Peter well proued in ỹ secōd chapter of hys second epistle, saying, there were false Prophetes among the people (meaning of the Iewes) euen as there shal be false teachers or doctours among you, which priuely shall bring in sectes damnable (sectes is part taking as one holdeth of Fraunces, another of Dominyck, which thyng also Paule rebuketh. 1. Cozin. 1. and 3.) euē denying the Lord that bought them (for they will not be saued by Christ, neyther suffer any man to preach hym to other). And many shall follow their damnable wayes (thou wilt say, shall God suffer so many to goe out of the right wayes so long? I aunswere many must folow their damnable wayes, or els must Peter be a false Prophet) by which the way of truth shalbe euill spoken of (as it is now at this present tyme, for it is heresy to preach the truth) and through couetousnes shall they wyth fayned wordes, make merchaundise of you, of their merchaundise and couetousnes it needeth not to make rehearsall, for they that be blinde see it euidently.

1. Pet. 2.

2. Cor. 1. 3.

In Epitome, or briefe recitall of that which is entreated of before.

Thus seest thou that James when he sayth faith without deedes is dead, and as the body without the spirite is dead, so is fayth without deedes: and the deuils beleue, that he meaneth not of the fayth, & trust that we haue in the truthe of Gods promises, and his holy Testament, made vnto vs in Christes bloud, whiche fayth foloweth repentaunce, and the consent of the hart, vnto the lawe of God, and maketh a man safe, and setteth him at peace with god. But speaketh of that false opinion and imagination wherewith some say, I beleue that Christ was borne of a virgine, and that he dyed, and so forth. That beleue they verily, and so stōgly that they are ready to slay who soeuer would say the contrary. But they beleue not that Christ dyed for their sinnes, and that his death hath peased the wrath of God, and hath obtained for them all that God hath promised in the Scripture. For how can they beleue that Christ dyed for their sinnes, and that he is their onely and sufficiēt Sauiour, seyng that they seeke other Sauiours of their owne imagination, & seyng that they feele not their sinnes neither repent, except that some repent (as I aboue sayd) for feare of payne, but for no loue, nor consent vnto the law of god, nor lōging that they haue, for those good promises which he hath made them in Christes bloud. If they repented, and loued the lawe of God, and longed for that helpe whiche God hath promised to giue to all that call on hym for Christes sake, then verily must Gods truth giue them power, & strength to do good workes, when so euer occasion were giuen, either must God be a false God. But let God be true, and euery man a lier as Scripture sayth. For the truth of God lasteth euer, to whom onely be all honour and glorie for euer. Amen.

The ende of the Parable of the Wicked Mammon.

¶ The obedience of a Christen man, and how Christen rulers ought to gouerne, wherein also (if thou marke diligently) thou shalt finde eyes to perceaue the craftie conueyaunce of all iugglers.

Set forth by William Tyndall. 1528. Octob. 2.

William Tyndall otherwyse called Hitchins to the Reader.

GRace, peace, and increase of knowledge in our Lord Jesus Christ, be with thee reader, and with all that call on the name of the Lord vnfaynedly, and with a pure conscience. Amen.

Let it not make thee dispayre, neither yet discourage thee (O Reader,) that it is forbidden thee in payne of life and goods, or that it is made breaking of the Kinges peace, or treason vnto his highnesse to read the worde of thy soules health: but much rather be bold in the Lorde, and comforte thy soule, for asmuch as thou art sure, and hast an euident token through suche persecution, that it is the true worde of God: which worde is euer hated of the worlde, neyther was euer without persecution, (as thou seest in all the stories of the Bible, both of the newe Testament, and also of the olde) neyther can be, no more then the Sunne can be without his light. And forasmuch as contrariwise thou art sure that the popes doctrine is not of God, which (as thou seest) is so agreable vnto the world, and is so receiued of the world, or which rather so receaueth the world, and the pleasures of the worlde, and seeketh nothing but the possessions of the worlde, and auctoritie in the world, & to beare a rule in the world, & persecuteth the worde of God, & with all wilnesse driueth the people from it, and with false and sophisticall reasons maketh them afeard of it: he curseth them, and excommunicateth them, and bringeth them in beleef that they be damned if they looke on it: and that it is but doctrine to deceaue men: and moueth the blinde powers of the world to slay with fire, water, and sworde, all that cleaue vnto it: For the world loueth that which is his, and hateth that which is chosen out of the world to serue God in the spirite, as Christ sayth to his Disciples, Joh. 15. If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne: but I haue chosen you out of the worlde, and therefore the world hateth you.

The nature of Gods word is to be persecuted.

The Pope is receaued and receaueth and persecuteth.

Lone of the world, is hatred of God and his holy Gospell.

In other comfort hast thou, that as the weake powers of the worlde defende the doctrine of the worlde: so the mighty power of God, defendeth the doctrine of God. Which thing thou shalt euidentlye perceiue, if thou call to minde the wonderfull deedes whiche God hath euer wrought for his word in extreame necessitie, since the worlde began, beyond all mans reason. Whiche are written (as Paule sayth, Roma. 15.) for our learning, (and not for our deceauing) that we through patience, and comfort of the scripture might haue hope. The nature of Gods word is to fight agaynst hypocrites. It beganne at Abell, and hath euer since continued, and shall (I doubte not) vntyll the laste daye. And the hypocrites haue alway the world on their sides, as thou seest in the time of Christ. They had the elders, that is to witte, the rulers of the Jewes, on theyr side. They had Pilate, and the Emperors power on theyr side: They had Herode also on theyr side. Moreouer, they brought all theyr worldlye wysedome to passe, and all that they coulde thinke, or imagine, to serue for theyr purpose. Fyrst, to feare the people withal, they excommunicated all that beleeued in him, and put them out of the temple, as thou seest Joh. 9. Secondly, they founde the meanes to haue him condemned by the Emperors power, and made it treason to Cesar, to beleeue in him. Thirdly, they obtayned to haue him hanged as a theefe, or a murtherer, which after theyr belly wisedome, was a cause aboue all causes, that no man should beleeue in him: For the Jewes take it for a sure token of euerlasting damnation, if a man be hanged. For it is written in theyr lawe, Deutero. 21. Cursed is whosoeuer hangeth on tree. Moyses also in the same place commaundeth, if any man be hanged, to take him downe the same day, and bury him, for feare of polluting or defiling the countrey, that is, least they shoulde bring the wrath and curse of God vpon them. And therfore the wicked Jewes themselues, which with so venemous hate persecuted the doctrine of Christ, and did all the shame, that they coulde do vnto him, (though they would fayne haue had Christ to hang still on the crosse, and there to rotte, as he shoulde haue done by the Emperors lawe, yet for feare of defiling theyr Sabboth, and of bringing the wrath and curse of God vpon them,) begged of Pilate to take him downe. Joh. 19. Which was against them selues.

Gods word fighteth agaynst hypocrites.

Howe our master Christ was entreated.

The craft of the hypocrites.

Finally, when they had done all they coulde, and that they thought sufficient, and when christ was in the hart of the earth, & so many billes and pollaxes about him, to keepe him down, and when it was past mans helpe, then holpe God. When man coulde not bring him agayne, Gods truth fetched him agayne. The oth that God had sworne to Abraha, to Dauid, & to other holy fathers & Prophetes, rayled him vp agayne, to bleese, and saue all that beleeue in him. Thus became the wisedome of the hypocrites foolishnes. Loe, thys was written for thy learning and comfort.

God defendeth his doctrine hym selfe.

Gods truth worketh wonders & maketh the wisedome of the hypocrites foolishnes.

How wonderfully were the children of Israell locked in Egipt? In what tribulation, combraunce, and aduersitie were they in? The land also that was promised them, was farre of, and full of great cities, walled with high walles vp to the skye, & inhabited with great giantes: yet Gods truth brought them out of Egipt, and planted them in the land of

The captiuitie of the Israelites vnder Pharao.

If God be with vs, who can be against vs?

the giantes. This is also written for our learning: For there is no power agaynst Gods, neyther any wisedome against Gods wisedome: he is stronger and wiser, then all his enemies. What holpe it Pharao, to drowne the men childrē? So little (I feare not) shall it at the last helpe the pope, and his byshops, to burne our men childzen, whiche manfully confesse, that Iesus Christ is the Lorde, and that there is no other name geuen vnto men, to be saued by: as Peter testifieth, Actes. 4.

If God be with vs, who can be against vs? Pharao slaieth the men childzen.

Who dryed vp the red sea? Who slew Golias? Who did all those wonderfull deedes, which thou readest in the Bible? Who deliuered the Israelites euermore from thraldom and bondage, as soone as they repented, and turned to God? Fayth verely, and Gods truth, and the trust in the promises which he had made. Read the xj. to the Hebrues, for thy consolation.

How Moses comforteth the Israelites.

When the childzen of Israell were ready to dispayre, for the greatnes & the multitude of the Giantes, Moyses comforted them euer, saying: Remēber what your Lord God hath done for you in Egipt, his wonderfull plagues, his miracles, his wonders, his mighty hand, his stretched out arme, and what he hath done for you hetherto. He shall destroye them, he shall take theyr hartes from them, and make them feare, and flye before you. He shall storme them, and stirre vp a tempest among them, and scatter them, and bring them to naught. He hath sworne, he is true, he will fullfill the promises that he hath made vnto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. This is written for our learning: for verely he is a true God, and is our God as well as theyres, and his promises are with vs, as well as with them, and he presente with vs, as well as he was with them. If we aske, we shal obtain: if we knocke, he will open: if we seeke, wee shall finde: if we thyrst, his truth shall fullfill our lust. Christ is with vs vntill the worldes ende. Math. vlt. last. Let this little flock be bold therefore: for if God be on our side, what matter maketh it who be against vs, be they byshops, cardinalles, popes, or what so euer names they will?

Gods truth fighteth for vs.

Marke this also, if God sende thee to the sea, and promise to goe with thee, and to bring thee safe to lande, he will rayse vp a tempest agaynst thee, to proue whether thou wilt abide by his worde, and that thou mayst feele thy fayth, and perceiue his goodnes. For, if it were alwayes fayre weather, and thou neuer brought into such ieoperdy, where his mercy onely deliuered thee, thy fayth should be but a presumption, and thou shouldest be euer vnthanckfull to God, and mercilesse vnto thy neighbour.

God tryeth the fayth of his childzen.

If God promise ritches, the way therto is pouertie. whom he loueth, him he chasteneth: whome he exalteth, he casteth downe: whome he saueth, he damneth first: he bringeth no man to heauen, except he send him to hell first: if he promise life, he slayeth first: when he buildeth, he casteth all downe first: he is no patcher, he can not builde on an other mans foundation: he will not woorke, vntill all be past remedy, and brought vnto such a case, that men may see, how that his hand, his power, his mercy, his goodnesse, and trueth hath wrought all together: he will let no man be partaker with him of hys prayse, and glorye: his workes are wonderful, and contrary vnto mans workes. Who euer (sauing he) deliuered his owne sonne, his onely sonne, hys deare sonne vnto the death, and that for his enemies sake, to winne his enemye, to ouercomme him with loue, that he might see loue, and loue againe, and of loue to do likewise to other men, and to ouercome them with well doing?

God worketh backward.

Joseph saw the Sunne and the Moone, and xj. starres worshipping him. Neuerthelesse ere that came to passe, God layed hym where he could neither see sunne, nor moone, neyther any starre of the skye, and that many yeares, and also vndeserued, to norture him, to humble, to meeke, and to teach him Gods wayes, and to make him apt and meet for the roome and honor, against he came to it, that he might perceiue and feele, that it came of God, and that he might be strong in the spirite to minister it godly. Joseph.

He promised the childzen of Israell a lande with riuers of milke and honny. But brought them for the space of fourty yeares, into a land, where not onely riuers of mylke and honny were not, but where so much as a drop of water was not, to nourture them, and to teach them, as a father doth his sonne, and to do them good at the latter ende, and that they might be strong in their spirite, & soules, to vse his giftes and benefites, godly, and after hys will. Israelites.

He promised Dauid a kingdome, and immediatly stirred vp king Saule against him, to persecute him, to hunt him as men do hares with greyhoundes, and to ferret him out of euery hole, & that for the space of many yeares to tame him, to meeke him, to kill his lustes, to make him feele other mens diseases, to make him mercifull, to make him vnderstand that he was made king, to minister, and to serue his brethren, and that he shou de not thincke that his subiectes were made to minister vnto his lustes, and that it were lawfull for him to take away from them life & goods, at his pleasure. Dauid.

Oh that our kinges were so nourtured now a dayes, which our holy byshops teache of a farre other maner, saying: Your grace shal take your pleasure: yea, take what pleasure you list, spare nothing: we shall dispence with you, we haue power, we are Gods vicars: and let vs alone with the realme, we shall take payne for you, and see that nothing be well: your Grace shall but defende the fayth onely. How Bishops instruct kings.

Let vs therefore looke diligently whereunto we are called, that we deceaue not our selues. We are called, not to dispute as the popes disciples do: but to dye with Christ, that we may liue with him, and to suffer with him, that we may raigne with him. We be called vnto a kingdome, that must be wonne & suffred only, as a sicke man winneth health. God is he that doth all thing for vs, and fighteth for vs, & we do but suffer onely. Christ sayth, Johan xx. As my Father sent me, so sende I you. and Johan xv. If they persecute me, then shall they persecute you. and Christ sayth Math. x. I send you forth, as sheepe among Wherunto a christian is called. Our fighting is to suffer while God fighteth for vs.

mong wolues. The sheepe fight not: but the shepheard fighteth for them, and careth for them. Be harmeles as Doues therfore, saith Christ, and wise as serpentes. The doues imagine no defence, nor seeke to auenge themselues. The serpentes wisedome is, to keepe his head, and those partes wherein his life resteth. Christ is our head, and Gods word is that wherin our life resteth. To cleaue therfore fast vnto Christ, and vnto those promises which God hath made vs for his sake, is our wisedome. Beware of men (sayth he) for they shall deliuer you vp vnto theyr counsels, and shall scourge you, and ye shall be brought before rulers, and kinges for my sake: the brother shall betray, or deliuer the brother to death, and the father, the sonne: and the children shall rise against father and mother, and put them to death. Heare what Christ sayth more, The disciple is not greater thē his master, neyther the seruaunte greater or better then his Lorde: if they haue called the goodman of the house Beelzebub, how much rather shall they call his houshold seruants so? And Luke xiiij. sayth Christ, which of you disposed to builde a tower, sitteth not downe fyrst, and counteth the cost, whether he haue sufficient to perfourme it? lest when he hath layd the foundation, and then not able to perfourme it, al that beholdit, begin to mocke him, saying: this man beganne to builde, and was not able to make an ende: so likewise none of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, can be my disciple. Whosoeuer therefore casteth not this aforehand, I must ieoberd life, goodes, honor, worship, and al that there is, for Christes sake.) deceaueth him selfe, and maketh a mocke of himselfe, vnto the gooles hipocrites & infidels. No man can serue two maisters, God, and Mammon (that is to say) wicked riches also. Mathew.vj. Thou must loue Christ aboue all thing: but that dooest thou not, if thou be not ready to forsake all for hys sake: if thou haue forsaken all for his sake, then art thou sure, that thou louest him. Tribulation is our right baptisme, and is signified by plunging into the water. Wee that are baptized in the name of Christ (sayth Paule Rom.vj.) are baptized to dye with him.

The wisedome of the Serpent.

He maketh a mocke of him selfe, that casteth not the ende ere he begin

How is the Pope sure whiche taketh all for Christes sake but forsaketh nought.

Tribulation is our Baptisme.

The spirite through tribulation purgeth vs, and killeth our fleshly witte, our worldly vnderstādyng, and belly wisedome: and filleth vs full of the wisedome of God. Tribulation is a blessing that commeth of God, as witnesseth Christ, Math.v. Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnes sake, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen. Is not this a comfortable word? who ought not rather to chuse and desire to be blessed & Christ in a little tribulation, then to be cursed perpetually with the world for a little pleasure?

Tribulation is a blessing

Prosperitie is a curse.

Prosperitie is a right curse, and a thing that God geueth vnto his enemies. Wo be to you riche: (sayth Christ, Luke.vj.) loe, ye haue your consolation: wo be to you that are ful, for ye shall hunger: wo be to you that laugh, for ye shall weepe: wo be to you when men prayse you, for so did theyr fathers vnto the false prophetes: yea, and so haue our fathers done vnto the false hypocrites. The hipocrites with worldly preaching, haue not gotten the prayse onely, but euen the possessions also, and the dominion, and rule of the whole worlde.

Tribulation for righteousnes, is not a blessing onely: but also a gift that God geueth vnto none saue his speciall frendes. The Apostles, Act.v. reioyced, that they were counted worthy, to suffer rebuke for Christes sake. And Paule in the second epistle & third chapter to Timothe, sayth: All that will liue godly in Christ Jesu must suffer persecutiō. And Philip.j. he sayth: Unto you it is geuen not onely to beleue in Christ, but also to suffer for his sake. Here seest thou, that it is Gods gift, to suffer for Christes sake. And in the 1. Pet. 4. sayth: Happy are ye, if ye suffer for the name of Christ, for the glorious spirite of God resteth in you. Is it not an happy thing, to be sure, that thou art sealed with Gods spirite vnto euerlasting life? And verily thou art sure therof, if thou suffer patiently for his sake. By suffring art thou sure: but by persecuting canst thou neuer be sure. For Paule Rom. 5. sayth: Tribulation maketh feeling, that is, it maketh vs feele the goodnesse of God, and his helpe, and the working of his spirite. 2. Cor. 12. the Lord sayd vnto Paul: My grace is sufficiēt for thee: for my strēgth is made perfect through weaknes. Lo, Christ is neuer strong in vs, till we be weake. As our strength abateth, so groweth the strength of Christ in vs: when we are cleane emptied of our own strength, then are we ful of Christes strength: & looke how much of our owne strength remayneth in vs, so much lacketh there of ẏ strength of Christ. Therfore sayth Paule, 2. Cor. 12. Very gladly will I reioyce in my weaknes, that the strength of Christ may dwell in me: therfore haue I delectation (sayth Paule) in infirmities, in rebukes, in need, in persecutions, and in anguish for Christes sake: for when I am weake, then am I strong. Meaning, that the weaknes of the flesh, is the strength of the spirite. And by flesh vnderstand, wit, wisedome, and all that is in a man, before the spirite of God come, and whatsoeuer springeth not of the spirite of God, and of Gods worde. And of like testimonies is all the scripture full.

Wherby the are the pope and bysshops sure?

The weaker to the world the stronger to Christ.

Weakenes of the flesh & the strength of the spirite

Flesh.

Behold, God setteth before vs a blessing and also a curse. A blessing verely, and that a glorious and an euerlasting, if we will suffer tribulatiō and aduersity with our Lord, and sauiour Christ. And an euerlasting curse, if for a little pleasure sake, we withdrawe our selues from the chastysing & nurture of God, wherewith he teacheth all his sonnes, and fashioneth them after his godly will, and maketh them perfect (as he did Christ,) and maketh them apte, and meete vessels to receiue his grace, and hys spirite, that they might perceaue and feele the exceeding mercy which we haue in Christ, & the innumerable blessinges, and the vnspeakeable inheritance, whereunto we are called, and chosen, and sealed in our sauiour Jesus Christ, vnto whome be prayse for euer. Amen.

In ij. things we are put to our choise

Finally, whome God chuseth to raigne euerlastingly with christ, him sealeth he with his mighty spirite, and poureth strength into his hart to suffer afflictiōs also with Christ, for bearing witnesse vnto the truth. And this is the differēce betwene the children of God and of saluation, and betwene the children of the deuyll, and of damnation: that the children of God haue power in theyr hartes, to suffer for Gods worde, which is theyr life and saluatiō, their hope, and trust, and whereby they liue in the soule, and spirite before God. And the children of the deuyll in time of aduersity flye from Christ, whome they followed fayndly, theyr hartes not sealed with hys holy & mighty spirite, and gett them to the standerde of theyr right father the Deuyll, and take his wages, the pleasures of this world, which ar the earnest of euerlasting damnation: which conclusion the xij. chap. to the Hebrues, well confirmeth saying, My sonne despise not thou the chastising of the Lord, neither faint whē thou art rebuked of him: for whom the Lord loueth, him he chastiseth: yea, & he scourgeth euery sonne whome he receaueth. Lo, persecution and aduersitie for the truthes sake is Gods scourge, and Gods rod, and pertaineth vnto all his children indifferently: for when he sayth, he scourgeth euery sonne, he maketh none exception. Moreouer sayth the text: If ye shall endure chastising, God offreth hymselfe vnto you, as vnto sonnes: what sonne is it that the father chastiseth not? If ye be not vnder correction (whereof all are partakers) then are ye bastardes, and not sonnes.

The differēce betwen the children of God & al the deuill.

The deuils wages.

All Gods children are vnder chastising.

Forasmuch then as we must needes bee baptised in tribulations, and through the red sea, and a great, and a fearefull wildernes, & a land of cruell Giantes, into our naturall cōtrey, yea, and in asmuch as it is a playne earnest, that there is no other way into the kingdome of life, then through persecution, & sufferyng of payne, & of very death, after the ensample of Christe: therefore let vs arme our soules with the comforte of the Scriptures: how that God is euer ready at hand in time of neede to helpe vs: and how that such tyrants and persecutors, are but gods scourge, and his rod to chastice vs. And as the father hath alway in time of correction the rod fast in his hand, so that the rod doth nothing, but as the father moueth it: euen so hath God all tyrantes in hys hande, and letteth them not do whatsoeuer they would, but as much onely, as he appoynteth them to do, and as far forth as it is necessarye for vs. And as when the childe submitteth himselfe vnto hys fathers correction and nurture, and humbleth himself altogether vnto the will of his father, thē the rod is taken away: euen so when we ar come vnto the knowledge of the right waye, and haue forsaken our owne will, and offer our selues cleane vnto the will of God, to walke which way soeuer he will haue vs: then turneth he the tyrantes: or els, if they enforce to persecute vs any further, he putteth them out of the way, according vnto the comfortable ensamples of the scripture.

Which way go the Bishops to hea nen then?

The tyrātes haue not power to doe what they would.

Moreouer, let vs arme our soules with the promises both of helpe and assistance, and also of the glorious rewarde that followeth. Great is your reward in heauē, sayth Christ, Math. 5. And he that knowledgeth mee before men, him will I knowledge before my father that is in heauen. Math. 10. and, Call on me in time of tribulation, and I will deliuer thee. Psal. 65. and, Beholde the eyes of the Lord are ouer them thet feare hym, and ouer them, that trust in hys mercy: to deliuer theyr soules from death, and to feede them in time of hunger. Psal. 46. And in Psal. 47. sayth Dauid, The Lorde is nygh them that are troubled in theyr hartes, and the meeke in spirite will he saue. The tribulations of the righteous are many, and out of them all will the Lord deliuer them. The Lord keepeth al the bones of them, so that not one of thē shall be bruised. The Lord shal redeeme the soules of his seruauntes. And of such like consolation are all the Psalmes full: would to God, when ye read them, ye vnderstood them. And Math. 10. When they deliuer you, take no thought what ye shall say: it shall be geuen you the same houre what ye shall say: for it is not ye that speake, but the spirite of your Father which speaketh in you. The very heares of your heades are numbred, saith Christ also Math. 10. If God care for our heares, he much more careth for our soules, which he hath sealed with his holy spirite. Therefore sayth Peter, 1. Pet. 4. Cast all your care vpon him: for he careth for you. And Paule 1. Cor. 10. sayeth: God is true, he wil not suffer you to be tempted aboue your might. And Psal. 71. Cast thy care vpon the Lord.

The promises of God are comfortable, yea they are all comfort.

A Christen mans care.

Let thy care be to prepare thy selfe with all thy strength, for to walke which way he will haue thee, and to beleue that he will goe with thee, & assist thee, and strengthen thee agaynst all tyrātes, & deliuer thee out of al tribulatiō. But what way, or by what meanes he will do it, that committe vnto him, and his godly pleasure, and wisedome, and cast that care vpon him. And though it seeme neuer so vnlikely, or neuer so impossible vnto naturall reason, yet beleue stedfastly that he will do it: and then shall he (according to his olde vse) chainge the course of the worlde, euen in the twincklyng of an eye, and come sodenly vpon our Gyantes, as a theefe in the night, and cōpasse them in their wyles, and worldly wisedome, when they crye peace, & all is safe, then shall theyr sorrowes beginne, as the panges of a woman that trauelleth with childe: and then shall he destroy them, and deliuer thee, vnto the glorious prayse of hys mercy and truth. Amen.

The despysers, persecutors & they that fall frō the word are threatened.

And as pertayning vnto them that despise Gods worde, counting it as a phantasie, or a dreame, and to them also that for feare of a little persecution fall from it, sette this before thyne eyes: how God since the beginning of the world, before a generall plague, euer sent his true prophetes, & preachers of his word, to warne the people, and gaue them time to repent. But they for the greatest part of thē, hardened theyr hartes, and persecuted the worde that was sent to saue them. And then God destroyed them vtterly, and tooke them cleane from the earth. As thou seest what followed the preaching of Noe in ỹ olde world, what folowed the preaching of Loth among the Sodomites, & the preachyng of Moses, and Aaron among the Egyptians, and that sodenly against all possibilitie of mans witte. Moreouer as ofte as the children of Israell fel from God to the worshipping of images, he sent his prophets vnto them: and they persecuted and ware harde harted: and then he sent them into all places of the world captiue.

Noe. Loth. Moses and Aaron.

The Prophetes.

Last

Chriſt.

Laſt of all he ſent his owne ſonne vnto them: and they waxed more hard harted then euer before: And ſee what a fearefull example of his wrath, and cruel vengeance he hath made of them vnto all the worlde, now almoſt fifteene hundred yeares.

Gildas.

Vnto the olde Brittaines alſo (which dwelled where our nation doth now) preached Gildas, and rebuked them of their wickednes, and prophesied both vnto the ſpirituall (as they will be called,) and vnto the lay men alſo, what vengeaunce would follow, except they repented. But they waxed hard harted: and God ſente his plagues, and peſtilences among them, and ſent their enemies in vppon them on euery ſide, & deſtroyed them vtterly.

They be ſpirituall: that is deuiliſhe: for the deuill is a ſpirite.

Marke alſo how Chriſt threateneth thē that forſake him, for whatſoeuer cauſe it be: whether for feare, eyther for ſhame, eyther for loſſe of honour, frendes, lyke, or goodes. He that denyeth me before men, him will I deny before my father, that is in heauen. He that loueth, father or mother more then me, is not worthy of me, all thys he ſayth Math. 10. And in Mark. 8. he ſayth: whoſoeuer is aſhamed of me, or my wordes, among this adulterous and ſinfull generation, of him ſhall the ſonne of man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his father, with his holy Angels. And Luk. 9. alſo: None that layeth his hande to the plowe, and looketh backe, is meete for the kingdome of heauen.

We muſt in no caſe deny Chriſt.

God reuengeth them that come agayns.

Neuertheleſſe yet, if any man haue reſiſted ignorantly as Paule did, let him looke on the truth which Paule wrote after he came to knowledge. Alſo if any man cleane againſt his hart (but ouercome with the weakneſs of the fleſh) for feare of perſecution, haue denied as Peter did, or haue deliuered his booke, or put it away ſecretly: let him (if he repente) come again, and take better hold, and not diſpayre or take it for a ſigne that God hath forſaken him: for God ofttimes taketh hys ſtrength euen frō his very elect, whē they either truſt in their own ſtrength, or are negligent to call to him for his ſtrength. And that doth hee to teach thē, & to make thē feele that in that fire of tribulatiō for his wordes ſake, nothing can endure and abide, ſaue his word, and that ſtrēgth onely, which he hath promiſed. For the which ſtrength he will haue vs to praye vnto him night and day, wyth all inſtance.

Why God letteth hys elect fall.

That the Scripture ought to bee in the Engliſh tounge.

That thou mayſt perceyue how that ỳ ſcripture ought to be in the mother tounge: and that the reaſons which our ſpirites make for the contrary, are but ſophiſtry and faiſe wiles to feare thee from the light, that thou mighteſt follow them blindfolde, and be their captiue to honor their ceremonies, and to offer to their belly.

First God gaue the children of Iſraell a law by the hande of Moſes, in their mother tounge, and all the prophetes wrote in their mother tounge, and all the Pſalmes were in the mother tongue. And there was Chriſt but figured, and deſcribed in ceremonies, in riddles, in parables, and in darck prophecies. What is the cauſe that we may not haue the olde Teſtament, with the new alſo, which is the light of the olde, and wherin is openly declared before the eyes, that there was darckly prophesied? I can imagine no cauſe verely, except it be that we ſhould not ſee the worke of Antechriſt, & iuggyng of hypocrites: what ſhoulde be the cauſe, that we which walke in the broad day, ſhould not ſee, as well as they that walked in the night, or that wee ſhoulde not ſee as well at noone, as they did in ỳ twylight? Came Chriſt to make the world more blinde? By this meanes, Chriſt is the darkneſs of the world, and not the light, as he ſaith him ſelfe, Iohn. 8.

Whette thē on thy children, that is exerciſe thy children in them, and put them in vre.

Moreouer Moſes ſaith, Deut. 6. Heare Iſraell, let theſe wordes which I cōmaunde thee thys day ſticke faſt in thine hart, & whet thē on thy children, & talke of thē as thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, & as thou walkeſt by the way, & when thou lyeſt downe, & when thou riſeſt vp, & binde them for a token to thyne hand, & let them be a remembraunce betwene thine eyes, & write thē on the poſtes & gates of thine houſe. This was commaūded generally vnto all men: How cōmeth it that gods word pertaineth leſſe vnto vs, thē vnto thē? Yea, howe commeth it, that our Moyſeſſes forbid vs, and commaund vs the contrary, & threaten vs if we do, & will not that we once ſpeake of Gods worde. How can we whette Gods word (that is, to put it in practiſe, vſe, & exerciſe) vpō our children & houſhold, whē we are violently kepte from it, and knowe it not? How can we (as Peter commaundeth) geue a reaſon of our hope, when we wot not what it is that God hath promiſed, or what to hope? Moyſes alſo commaundeth in the ſayd chapter: If the ſonne aſke what the teſtimonies, lawes, and obſeruaunces of the Lorde meane, that the father teach him. If our childrē aſke what our ceremonies (which are moe then the Iewes were) meane: no father can tell his ſonne. And in the xj. chapter, he repeteth all againe for feare of forgetting.

No nor ſyr Iohn hys ghoſtly children.

They will ſay, happely, the ſcripture requireth a pure minde, and a quiet minde. And therefore the lay man becauſe he is altogether combred with worldly buſines, can not vnderſtand them. If that be the cauſe, then it is a plaine caſe, that our prelates vnderſtand not the Scriptures them ſelues: for no lay man is ſo tangled with worldly buſines as they are. The great thinges of the worlde are miniſtred by them: neyther do the lay people any great thing, but at their aſſignement.

Holy dayes

Our Schole maſters take great wages but teach not.

If the Scripture were in the mother tongue, they will ſay, then would the lay people vnderſtande it, euery man after his owne wayes. Wherfore ſerueth the Curate, but to teach him the right way? Wherfore were the holy dayes made, but that the people ſhoulde come and learne? Are yee not abhominable ſcholemaiſters, in that ye take ſo great wages if ye will not teach? If ye would teach, how could ye do it ſo well, and with ſo great profite, as when the lay people haue the ſcripture before them in their mother tongue? for then ſhould they ſee by the order of the text, whether thou iugleſt or not: and then would they beleue it, becauſe it is ỳ ſcripture of god, thoughe thy liuyng be neuer ſo abhominable. Where now, becauſe your liuing, & your preaching are ſo contrary, and becauſe they grope out in euery ſermon your open, and manifeſt lyes, and ſmell your vnſatiable couetouſnes,

Why the preachers are not beleued when they ſaye trouth.

The curates wotte not what a Bible meaneth they beleue you not when you preach truth. But alas, the Curates them selues (for the most part) wot no more what the new or olde Testament meaneth, then do the Turkes: neither know they of any more then that they read at masse, mattens, and euensong, which yet they vnderstande not neyther care they, but euen to mumble vp so much euery day (as the Pope and Popingay speake, they wot not what) to fill vp theyr bellies withall. If they will not let the lay man haue the woorde of God in hys mother tounge, yet let the priests haue it, which for a great part of them do vnderstand no latine at all: but sing, and say, and patter all day with the lips onely, that which the hart vnderstandeth not.

The Priests vnderstand no Latin.

Search the Scriptures.

Christ commaundeth to search the scriptures. Iohn. 5. Though that miracles bare recorde vnto hys doctrine, yet desired he no fayth to be geuen eyther vnto hys doctrine, or vnto hys miracles, without recorde of the scripture. When Paule preached Act. 17. the other searched the scriptures dayly, whether they were as he alleaged them. Why shal not I likewise see, whether it be the scripture ẏ thou alleagest: yea, why shall I not see the scripture and the circumstaunces, and what goeth before and after, that I may knowe whether thine interpretation be ẏ right sence, or whether thou vsest, and drawest the scripture violently vnto thy carnall and fleshlye purpose: or whether thou be about to teache me, or to disceaue me.

Christ sayth, that there shall come false prophets in his name, and say that they them selues are Christ, that is, they shall so preache christ that mẽ must beleue in thẽ, in their holines, and thinges of their imagination about gods word: yea, & that agaynst Christ or Antechrist that shall come, is nothyng but suche false prophetes that shall iuggle with the scripture, and beguile the people with false interpretatiõs, as all the false prophetes, scribes, & pharisies did in ẏ old Testamẽt. How shall I know whether ye are agaynst Christ, or fals prophetes, or no, seing ye will not let me see how ye alleage the scriptures? Christ sayth: By theyr deedes ye shall know them. Now when we looke on your deeds, we see that ye are all swoorne together, and haue seperated your selues from the lay people, and haue a seuerall kingdome amõg your selues, and seuerall lawes of your owne making, wherewith ye violently binde the lay people that neuer consented vnto the making of them. A thousand thinges forbidde ye, which Christ made free, and dispence with them agayne for money: neyther is there any exception at all, but lacke of money. Ye haue a secret counsell by your selues. All other mens secretes & counsels know ye, and no man yours: ye seek but honour, riches, promotion, authoritie, and to raigne ouer all, and will obey no man. If the father geue you ought of curtesie, ye will cõpell the sonne to geue it violently, whether he will or not, by crafte of your owne lawes. These deedes are against Christ.

Agaynste Christ is knowen by his dedes.

A seuerall kyngdome.

Seuerall lawes.

What christ lowseth truly the Pope byndeth to lowse it agayne for money.

A secret cõsayle.

When a whole parish of vs hyre a scholemaister to teach our children, what reason is it, that we shoulde be compelled to pay thys scholemaister his wages, and he should haue licence to goe where he wil, and to dwell in an other contrey, and to leaue our children vntaught? Doth not the pope so? Haue we not geuen vp our tithes of curtesie vnto one, for to teach vs Gods worde? and commeth not the pope, and compelleth vs to pay it violently to them that neuer teach? Maketh he not one Parson, which neuer commeth at vs? yea, one shall haue v. or vj. or as many as he can get, and watteth oftentimes where neuer one of them standeth. Another is made Vicare, to whom he geueth a dispensation to goe where he will, and to set in a parishe priest which can but minister a sort of dumme ceremonies. And he because he hath most labour and least profite, polleth on hys part, and setteth here a masse peny, there a trentall, yonder dirige money, and for his beadroule with a confession peny, and such like. And thus are we neuer taught, and are yet neuertheles compelled: ye compelde to hyre many costly scholemasters. These deedes are verely agaynst Christ. Shall we therefore iudge you by your dedes, as Christ commaundeth? So are ye false Prophetes, and the Disciples of Antechrist, or agaynst Christ.

The Sermons which thou readest in the Actes of the Apostles, and all that the Apostles preached, were no doubt preached in the mother tongue. Why then might they not be written in the mother tounge? As if one of vs preach a good sermon, why may it not be written? Saint Hierome also translated the Bible into his mother tounge: why may not we also? They will say it can not be translated into our tounge it is so rude. It is not so rude as they are false lyers. For the Greeke tounge agreeth more with the English then with the Latin. And the properties of the Hebrue tounge agreeth a thousand tymes more with the Englishe, then with the Latyn. The maner of speaking is both one, so that in a thousand places thou needest not but to trãslate it into the English, worde for worde, when thou must seeke a compasse in the Latin, and yet shalt haue much worke to translate it welfauourdly, so that it haue the same grace & sweetenesse, sence & pure vnderstanding with it in the Latin, & as it hath in the Hebrue. A thousand partes better maye it be translated into the English, thẽ into the Latin. yea, and except my memory fayle me, and that I haue forgotten what I red whẽ I was a childe, thou shalt finde in the Englishe cronicle, how that kyng Adelstone caused the holy Scripture to be translated vnto the tounge that then was in Englande, and how the Prelates exhorted him thereunto.

The properties of the Hebrue toung agree with the English.

Moreouer seyng that one of you euer preacheth contrary to an other: and when two of you meete, the one disputeth & brauleth with the other, as it were two scoldes. And forasmuch as one holdeth this Doctor, and an other that: One foloweth Duns, an other Saint Thomas, an other Bonauenture, Alexãder de hales, Raymond, Lyre, Brygot, Dorbell, Holcot, Gorram, Trumbett, Hugo de sancto victore, De monte regio, De noua uilla, De media villa, and such lyke out of nũber. So that if thou haddest but of euery authour one booke, thou couldest not pyle them vp in any ware house in London, and euery authour is one contrary vnto an other. In so great diuersitie of spirites, how shall I know who lyeth, and who sayeth truth? whereby shall I trye thē and iudge them? Uerely by Gods worde which onely is true. But how shall I that do, when thou wilt not let me see scripture?

Contrary Doctours.

Nay say they, the scriptures is so harde that thou couldest neuer vnderstand it but by the Doctours. That is, I must measure the mete yarde by the cloth. Here be twenty clothes of diuers lengthes & of diuers bredthes. How shall I be sure of the length of the mete yarde by them? I suppose rather I must be first sure of the length of the mete yarde, and thereby measure, and iudge the clothes. If I must first beleue the Doctour, then is the Doctour first true, and the truth of the scripture dependeth of hys truth, & so the truth of God springeth of the truth of man. Thus Antechrist turneth the rotes of the trees vpwarde. What is the cause that we damne some of Origenes workes, and alowe some? How know we that some is heresy, and some not? By the scripture I trow. How know we that Saint Augustine (which is the best or one of the best that euer wrote vpon the Scripture) wrote many thynges amisse at the beginning, as many other Doctours doe? Uerely by the Scriptures, as he hymselfe well perceaued afterward when he looked more diligently vpon them, and reuoked many thynges agayne. He wrote of many thinges which he vnderstode not when he was newly conuerted, yer he had throughly seene the Scriptures: and folowed the opinions of Plato, and the common persuasions of mans wisedom, that were then famous.

They wyll say yet more shamefully, that no man can vnderstād the Scriptures without Phylautia, that is to say, Philosophy. A man muste first bee well seene in Aristotle, yer he cā vnderstand the Scripture say they. Aristotles doctrine is, that the worlde was wythout beginning, and shall be wythout ende, and that the first man neuer was, and the last shall neuer be. And that God doth all of necessitie, neither careth what we doe, neither wyll aske any accomptes of that we do. Wythout thys doctrine how coulde we vnderstande the Scripture that sayth, God created the world of nought, and God worketh all thyng of hys free wyll, and for a secret purpose, & that we shall all ryse agayne, and that God will haue accomptes of all that we haue done in thys lyfe. Aristotle sayth. Geue a man a lawe, and he hath power of hymselfe to doe or fulfill the lawe, and becōmeth righteous wyth worlyng rightcously. But Paule and all the scripture sayth, that the lawe doth but vtter sinne onely, and helpeth not. Neyther hath any man power to doe the lawe, tyll the spirite of God be geuen hym through fayth in Chryst. Is it not a madnes then to say that we coulde not vnderstand the Scripture wythout Aristotle? Aristotles righteousnes, and all hys vertues spring of mans free wyll. And a Turke and euery Infidell and Idolater may be righteous, and vertuous wyth that righteousnes & those vertues. Moreouer Aristotles felicitie and blessedues standeth in auoyding of all tribulatiōs, and in riches, health, honour, worshyp, frendes and authoritie, which felicitie pleaseth our spiritualty well. Now without these and a thousand such lyke pointes, couldest thou not vnderstand Scripture, which sayth that righteousnes commeth by Chryst, and not of mans will, and how that vertues are the fruites, and the gift of Gods spirite, and that Chryst blesseth vs in tribulations, persecution, and aduersitie. How, I say, couldest thou vnderstād the scripture without Philosophy, in as much as Paule in the second to the Collossians warned them to beware least any man should spoyle them (that is to say, robbe them of their fayth in Chryst) thorough Philosophy and deceitful vanities, and thorough the traditions of men, and ordinaunces after ỳ world, & not after Chryst?

By this meanes then, thou wilt that no man teach an other, but that euery man take the Scripture, and learne by hymselfe. Nay verely, so say I not. Neuertheless, seyng that ye wyll not teach, if any man thyrst for the truth, and read the Scripture by hymselfe, desiring God to open the doze of knowledge vnto him, god for his truthes sake wil, and must teach hym. Howbeit my meaning is, that as a mayster teacheth his prentice to know all the poyntes of the mete yarde, first how many inches, how many feete, and the halfe yarde, the quarter, and the nayle, and then teacheth him to mete other things therby: euen so will I that ye teach the people Gods lawe, and what obedience God requireth of vs vnto father and mother, mayster, Lord, King, and all superiours, and wyth what frendly loue he commaundeth one to loue an other. And teach them to know that naturall byname, and byrth poyson, which moueth the very harts of vs to rebell against the ordinaunces and will of God, and proue that no man is righteous in the sight of God, but that we are all damned by the lawe. And then (whē thou hast meeked them, and feared them wyth the lawe) teache them the testament, and promises which God hath made vnto vs in Chryst, and how much he loueth vs in Chryst. And teach them the principles, and the ground of the fayth, and what the sacramentes signifie, and then shall the spirite worke wyth thy preaching, & make thē feele. So would it come to passe, that as we know by naturall wit, what followeth of a true principle of naturall reasō: euē so by ỳ principles of ỳ fayth, & by ỳ plaine scriptures, & by the circumstāces of the text, should we iudge all mēs exposition, and all mens doctrine, and should receaue the best, and refuse the worst. I woulde haue you to teach them also the properties, and maner of speakinges of the scripture, and how to expound prouerbes and similitudes. And then if they goe abroad, and walke by the fieldes, and medowes of all maner doctours and Philosophers, they coulde catch no harme. They should discerne the poyson from the hoonny, and bring home nothyng, but that which is holsome.

But now do ye cleane contrary, ye driue them from Gods worde, and will let no man come therto, vntil he haue ben two yeres maister of art. First they nosel them in sophistry, and in benefundatum. And there corrupt they their iudgementes with apparent argumēts, and wyth alleaging vnto them textes of Logike, Antechrist turneth the rootes of the tree vpward.

The Scripture is the triall of all doctrine, & the right touch stone.

gike, of naturall Philosophia. of metaphisike, and mozall Philosophy, & of all maner bookes of Aristotle, and of all maner Doctours which they yet neuer sawe. Wozeouer one holdeth this, an other that. One is reall, an other nominall. What wonderfull dzeames haue they of their Predicamentes, vniuersales, second intentions, Quidities, Hecceities. and Relatiues? And whether Species fundata in chimera. be vera species. And whether this proposition be true, non ens est aliquid. Whether ens be equiuocum, oz vniuocum. Ens is a voyce onely say some. Ens is vniuocum saith an other, and descendeth into ens creatum, and into ens increatum per modos intrinsecos. Whē they haue this wise dzauled viij. x. oz xij. oz mo yeares, and after that their iudgementes are vtterly cozrupt: then they beginne their diuinitie. Not at the scripture: but euery man taketh a sundzy Doctour, which Doctours are as sundzy, and as diuers, the one cōtrary vnto the other, as there are diuers fashions and monstrous shapes, none like an other, among our sectes of religion. Euery religion, euery vniuersitie, and almost euery man hath a sundzy diuinitie. Now what soeuer opinions euery man fyndeth wyth his Doctour, that is his Gospel, and that onely is true with him, and that holdeth he all his life long, and euery man to maintaine his Doctour with all, cozrupteth the Scripture & fashioneth it after his owne imagination, as a Potter doth his claye. Of what text thou prouest hell, will an other proue purgatozy, an other Limbo patrum, and an other the assumption of our Lady: And an other shall proue of the same text that an Ape hath a tayle. And of what texte the Graye Fryer proueth that our Lady was without originall sinne, of the same shall the blacke Fryer proue that she was conceaued in originall sinne. And all this do they wyth apparent reasons, with false similitudes, and likenesses, and with argumentes and persuasions of mans wisedome. Now there is no other diuisiōn oz heresy in the wozld saue mās wisedome, and when mans foolishe wisedome interpreteth the scripture. Mans wisedome scatereth, diuideth and maketh sectes, while the wisedome of one is that a white coate is best to serue God in, & an other saith a black, an other a graye, an other a blew: And while one saith that God will heare your prayer in this place, an other saith in that place: And while one saith this place is holyer, and an other, that place is holyer, and this religion is holyer then that, and this Saint is greater with God then that, & an hundzed thousand like thinges. Mans wisedome is plaine idolatry, neither is there any other idolatry thē to imagine of God after mans wisdome. God is not mans imagination, but that onely which he saith of himselfe. God is nothyng but hys law, and his promises, that is to say, that which he biddeth thee to doe, and that which he biddeth thee beleue and hope. God is but his wozde: as Christ sayth Iohn. 8. I am that I say vnto you, that is to say, that which I preach am I. My wozds are spirite and life. God is that onely which he testifieth of himselfe, and to imagine any other thing of God then that, is damnable idolatry. Therefoze saith the 118. Psalme. Happy are they which search ỹ testimonies of the Lozd, that is to say, that which God testifieth, and witnesseth vnto vs. But how shall I that doe, when ye will not let me haue his testimonies, oz witnesses in a toūge which I vnderstand? Will ye resist God? Will ye fozbid hym to geue hys spirite vnto the laye as well vnto you? Hath he not made ỹ English tounge? why fozbidde ye hym to speake in the Englishe tounge then, as well as in the Latine?

Wzeames.

Schole diuinitie.

Yet in this they all agree, that no mā is saued by Christ, but by holy wozkes. And that Christ hath geuē vp his Godhead to the Pope & all his power: and that the Pope may geue Christes merites to whō he will and take them from whom he will.

Potters: ye mockers oz rather iugglers.

False similitudes.

Mans wisedome here sie Cotes.

Place. One religiō is holyer then an other. Mans wisedome is Idolatry. What God is.

Fynally that this threatning and fozbidding the laye people to reade the Scripture is not foz loue of your soules (which they care foz, as the Foxe doth foz the Geese) is euident and clearer then the Sunne, in as much as they permitte and suffer you to read Robbin Hode & Beuis of Hampton, Hercules, Hectoz, and Troylus, wyth a thousand histozies and fables of loue and wantones, and of rybaudzy, as filthy as hart can thinke, to cozrupt the mindes of youth withall, cleane contrary to the doctrine of Christ and of his Apostles. Foz Paule (Ephes. v.) sayth: see that foznication and all vnclennes oz couetousnes be not once named amonge you, as it becommeth Saintes: neither filthines, neither foolishe talking, noz gesting whiche are not comely. Foz this ye knowe that no whozemonger either vncleane person oz couetous person (which is the wozshipper of images) hath any enheritaunce in the kyngdome of Christ and of God. And after sayth he, thozough such thynges commeth the wzath of God vpon the children of vnbeliefe. Now seyng they permitte you freely to reade those thynges which cozrupte your myndes, and robbe you of the kingdome of God and Christ, and bzing the wzath of God vpon you, how is this fozbidding, foz loue of your soules?

Then this the pape their wicke lyke will shew it sel to theyr shame and confusion.

The Pope licenced the people to read & say what they would sau the truth.

A thousand reasons moe might be made (as thou mayst see in Paracelsus Erasmi, & in his preface to the paraphasis of Mathew) vnto which they should be cōpelled to holde their peace, oz to geue shamefull answeres. But I hope that these are sufficient vnto them that thyrst the truth. God foz his mercy and truth shall well open them moe: yea, and other secretes of hys Godly wisedome, if they be diligent to cry vnto him, which grace graunt God. Amen.

But the ca fozbiddeth not theyr pompe and belly cheare as the othe doth.

¶ The Prologue vnto the booke.

FOr asmuch as our holy Prelates and our ghostly religious, which ought to defēd gods word, speake euil of it and do all the shame they cā to it, & rayle on it & beare their captiues in hād, that it causeth insurrectiō & teacheth the people to disobey their heades & gouernours, & moueth thē to rise against their Princes, and to make all common and to make hauoke of other mēs goodes: therfore haue I made this litle treatise that foloweth cōteinyng all obedience, that is of god. In which (who soeuer readeth it) shal easly perceaue, not the cōtrary onely & that they lye: but also the very cause of such ſuch blaſphemy, and what ſtirreth thē ſo furiouſly to rage and to belye the truth?

Howbeit, it is no new thyng vnto the word of God to be rayled vpon, neither is this the firſt tyme that hypocrites haue aſcribed to Gods worde the vengeaunce where of they thē ſelues were euer cauſe. For the hypocrites with their falſe doctrine and Idolatry haue euermore ledde the wrath and vengeaunce of God vpon the people, ſo ſore that God could no lēger forbeare nor differre his puniſhmēt. Yet God, which is alwayes mercyfull, before he would take vengeaūce, hath euer ſent hys true Prophetes and true Preachers, to warne the people that they might repent. But the people for the moſt part, and namely the heades and rulers through comfort and perſuadyng of the hyopcrites, haue euer waxed more hard harted then before, and haue perſecuted the word of God and his Prophetes. Thē God whiche is alſo righteous, hath alwayes poured his plagues vppon them without delay. Which plagues the hypocrites aſcribe vnto Gods word ſaying: ſee what miſcheue is come vpō vs ſence this new learnyng came vp and this new ſect and this newe doctrine. This ſeeſt thou Hieremias. xliiij. Where the people cryed to goe to their old Idolatry agayne ſaying: ſence we left it, we haue bene in all neceſſitie and haue bene conſumed with warre and hunger. But the Prophet aunſwered them, that their Idolatry wēt vnto the hart of God, ſo that he could no lenger ſuffer the maliciouſnes of theyr owne imaginations or inuētions, & that the cauſe of all ſuch miſchieues was, becauſe they would not heare the voyce of the Lord and walke in his law, ordinaunces and teſtimonies. The Scribes and the Phariſeis layd alſo to Chriſtes charge (Luke. xxiij.) that be moued the people to ſedition. And ſayd to Pylate, we haue found this felow peruertyng the people and forbiddyng to pay tribute to Cæſar, and ſayth that he is Chriſt a kyng. And agayne in the ſame Chapter, hee moueth the people (ſayd they) teachyng throughout Iury and began at Galile euen to this place. So likewiſe layd they to the Apoſtles charge, as thou mayſt ſee in the Actes. S. Cyprian alſo and S. Auguſtine and many other mo made workes in defence of the word of God againſt ſuch blaſphemies: So that thou mayſt ſee, how that it is no new thyng, but an old and accuſtomed thyng with the hypocrites to wyte Gods word and the true Preachers of all the miſchieue which their lying doctrine is the very cauſe of.

The hypocrites lay that to Gods worde which they themſelues are cauſe of.

God warneth ere he ſtrike.

Whē God puniſheth idolatry of the hypocrites: then ſay they: that new learning is the cauſe thereof.

Chriſt was accuſed of inſurrection.

Neuer the later in very dede, after the preachyng of Gods worde, becauſe it is not truly receaued, God ſendeth great trouble into the world: partly to auenge hym ſelfe of the tyrauntes and perſecutours of his worde: and partly to deſtroye thoſe worldly people whiche make of Gods word nothyng but a cloke of their fleſhly libertie. They are not all good that folow the Goſpell. Chriſt (Math. xiij.) likeneth the kyngdome of heauen vnto a net caſt in the Sea that katcheth fiſhes both good and bad. The kyngdome of heauen is the preachyng of the Goſpell, vnto which come both good and bad. But the good are fewe. Chriſt calleth them therfore a litle flocke. Luke xij. For they are euer few that come to the Goſpell of a true entent ſeekyng therin nothyng but the glorye and prayſe of God, and offering thē ſelues frely and willingly to take aduerſitie with Chriſte for the Goſpels ſake and for bearyng recorde vnto the truth, that al men may heare it. The greateſt nomber come and euer came and folowed euen Chriſt hym ſelfe for a worldly purpoſe. As thou mayſt well ſee (Iohn vj.) howe that almoſt fiue thouſand folowed Chriſt and would alſo haue made hym a kyng, becauſe he had well fedde them. Whom he rebuked ſaying: ye ſeke me not, becauſe ye ſaw the miracles: But becauſe ye eat of the bread and were filled, and droue them away from him with hard preachyng.

Why trouble folowēth the preaching of the Goſpell.

Chriſtes flocke, a litle flocke.

As our Prelates do not take their vocation to ſeke Gods glory and honour, but to liue eaſilie, & promote themſelues to dignitie.

Euen ſo now (as euer) the moſt parte ſeke libertie. They be glad when they heare the vnſatiable couetouſnes of the ſpiritualitie rebuked: When they heare their falſehood and wiles vttered: When tyrāny and oppreſſiō is preached againſt: When they heare how kynges and all officers ſhould rule chriſtenly and brotherly, & ſeke no otherthyng ſaue the wealth of their ſubiectes: and when they heare that they haue no ſuch authoritie of God ſo to pylle and polle, as they doe and to raiſe vp taxes and gatherynges to maynteine their phantaſies and to make warre they wote not for what cauſe. And therefore becauſe the heades will not ſo rule, will they alſo no longer obey, but reſiſte and riſe agaynſt their euill heades. And one wicked deſtroyeth an other. Yet is Gods word not the cauſe of this, neither yet the preachers. For though that Chriſt hym ſelfe taught all obedience, how that it is not lawfull to reſiſte wrong (but for the officer that is appointed thereunto) and howe a man muſt loue his very enemy, & pray for them that perſecute him and bleſſe them that curſe hym, and how Libertie.

God deſtroyeth one wicked with an other.

Gods word is not the cauſe of euill.

that all vengeaunce must bee remitted to God, and that a man must forgeue, if hee wilbe forgeuen of God. Yet the people for the most part receaued it not. They were euer ready to rise, and to fight. For euer when the Scribes and Pharisеis wēt about to take Christ, they were afraide of the people. Not on the holy day (sayde they Math. xxvj.) lest any rumour arise among the people. And Math. xxi. They would haue takē him, but they feared the people. And Luke. xx. Christe asked the Pharisеis a question vnto whiche they durst not answere, lest the people should haue stoned them.

Christes Disciples were long weake, and worldly mynded.

Last of all for as much as the very Disciples and Apostles of Christ, after so lōg hearyng of Christes doctrine, were yet ready to fight for Christe cleane agaynst Christes teachyng. As Peter (Math. xxvi.) drew his sword but he was rebuked. And Luke ix. Iames and Iohn would haue had fire to come from heauen, to cōsume the Samaritanes, and to auenge the iniury of Christe: but were likewise rebuked, if Christes Disciples were so long carnall what wonder is it, if we be not all perfect the first daye? Yea in as much as we bee taught euen of very babes, to kil a Turke, to slea a Iewe, to burne an hereticke, to fight for the liberties and right of the Church as they cal it: yea, and in asmuch as wee are brought in belefe, if wee shed the bloud of our euen Christen, or if the sonne shed the bloud of hys father that begat hym, for the defence, not of the Popes Godhead onely, but also for what so euer cause it bee, yea though it be for no cause, but that his holynes commaundeth it onely, that we deserue as much as Christ deserued for vs, when he dyed on the crosse: or if we be slaine in the quarel, that our soules goe, nay flye to heauen, and be there ere our bloud be cold. In as much (I saye) as we haue sucked in suche bloudy imaginatiōs into the bottome of our harts, euen with our mothers milke, and haue ben so long hardened therein, what wonder were it, if while we be yet young in Christ, we thought that it were lawful to fight, for the true word of god? Yea and though a man were throughly persuaded that it were not lawful to resist his kyng, thoughe he would wrongfully take away lyfe and goodes: Yet might he thinke that it were lawful to resist the hipocrites and to rise, not agaynst his kyng: but with his kyng to deliuer his kyng out of bondage and captiuitie, wherin the hipocrites hold hym with wyles and falsehode, so that no man may bee suffered to come at him, to tell him the trouth.

What the Popes doctrine causeth: he cōmaundeth murther.

This seest thou, that it is the bloudy doctrine of the Pope, which causeth disobedience, rebellion and insurrectiō. For hee teacheth to fight, and to defende hys traditions, and what soeuer he dreameth with fire, water and swорde, and to disobey Father, Mother, Master, Lorde, Kyng and Emperour: Yea, and to inuade what so euer lād or natiō that will not receaue and admit his Godhead. Where the peaceable doctrine of Christe teacheth to obey, and to suffer for the word of God, & to remit the vengeaunce and the defense of the word to god, which is mighty and able to defende it, which also as soone as the worde is once openly preached, and testified or witnessed vnto the world, and when he hath geuen them a season to repent, is ready at once to take vengeaunce of his enemies, and shoteth arrowes with heades dipte in deadly poyson at them, and poureth hys plagues from heauen downe vpon them, and sendeth the moren and pestilence among them, and sinketh the Cities of them, and maketh the earth swalow them, and cōpasseth them in their wyles, and taketh them in theyr owne trappes and snares, and casteth thē into the pittes whiche they digged for other men, and sendeth them a dasyng in in the head, and vtterly destroyeth them with their owne suttle councell. Prepare thy mynde therefore vnto this litle treatise and read it discretly, and iudge it indifferently, and when I alledge any Scripture, loke thou on the text, whether I interprete it right: whiche thou shalt easely perceaue, by the circumstance and processe of thē, if thou make Christ the foundation and ground, and build all on him, and referrest all to hym, and findest also that the expositiō agreeth vnto the common Articles of the faith, and opē scriptures. And GOD the father of mercy, whiche for hys truthes sake raysed our Sauiour Christ vp agayne to iustifie vs, geue thee hys spirite to iudge what is righteous, in his eyes, and geue the strength to abyde by it, and to mayntayne it withall patience, and long sufferyng, vnto the example and edifying of his congregation, and glory of his name. Amen.

The popes doctrine is bloudy.

Christes doctrine is peaceable.

God auengeth hys doctrine him selfe.

How a man ought to behaue him selfe in readyng of doctours, and also in the Scripture.

¶ The

The obedience of all degrees proued by Gods word and first of children vnto theyr elders.

GOd (which worketh all in all thynges) for a secrete iudgement and purpose and for hys godly pleasure, prouided an houre that thy father and mother should come together, to make thee throughe them. He was present with thee in thy mothers wombe and fashioned thee & brethed lyfe into thee, and for ẏ great loue he had vnto thee, prouided milke in thy mothers brestes for thee agaynst thou were borne: moued also thy father and mother and all other to loue thee, to pitie thee and to care for thee.

And as he made thee through them, so hath he cast thee vnder the power & authoritie of them, to obeye and serue them in his stede, saying: honor thy father and mother. Exo. xx. which is not to be vnderstand in bowyng the knee and puttyng of the cappe onely, but that thou loue them with al thyne hart and feare and drede them and wayte on their commaundementes, and seke their worshyp, pleasure, will and profite in all thynges, and geue thy life for them, counting them worthy of all honour, remembryng that thou art theyr good and possession, & that thou owest vnto thē thine owne selfe, and all thou art able, yea and more then thou art able to doe.

Our fathers and mothers are to vs in Gods stede.

Understand also that what soeuer thou doest vnto thē (be it good or bad) thou doest vnto God. whē thou pleasest them, ẏ pleasest god: whē thou displeasest thē, thou displeasest God: whē they are angry with thee, god is angry w thee: neither is it possible for thee to come vnto ẏ fauour of God agame (no though all the aūgels of heaue pray for thee) vntil thou haue submitted thy self vnto thy father and mother agayne.

What we doe to our fathers & mothers, that we do to God.

If thou obey (though it be but carnally (either for feare, for vayne glorie or profite) thy blessyng shalbe long lyfe vpon the earth. For he sayth, honour thy father and mother, that thou mayest liue long vpon the earth. Exod. xx. Contrary wise if thou disobey them, thy life shalbe shorted vpon the earth. For it foloweth. Exod. xxi. He that smiteth his father or mother shalbe put to death for it. And he that curseth (that is to say, rayleth or dishonoured hys father or mother with opprobrious woordes) shalbe slayne for it. And Deut. xxi. If any man haue a sonne stubburne and disobedient, which heareth not the voyce of his father and the voyce of hys mother, so that they haue taught hym nurtoure and he regardeth them not, then let his father and mother take hym, & bryng him forth vnto the Seniours, or elders of the Citie and vnto the gate of the same place. And let them say vnto the Seniours of that Citie: this our sonne is stubburne, and disobedient. He will not harken vnto our voyce: he is a rioter, and a dronkard. Thē let the men of the Citie, stone hym with stones vnto death: so shall ye put awaye wickednesse from among you, and all Israell shall heare and shall feare.

The reward of obedience.

The reward of disobedience.

And though that the temporall officers (to their owne damnation) be negligent in punishyng such disobedience (as the spirituall officers are to teache it) and winke at it or looke on it thorough the fingers: yet shall they not scape vnpunished. For the vengeance of God shall accōpanie them (as thou mayst see Deut. xxviij.) with all misfortune and euill lucke, & shall not depart from them vntill they be murdered, drowned or hanged, either vntill by one mischaunce or an other they be vtterly brought to nought. Yea & the world often tymes hangeth many a man for that they neuer deserued, but God hāgeth them because they would not obey and harke vnto their elders: as the consciences of many well finde when they come vnto the galowes. There can they preach and teech other, that whiche they thē selues would not learne in season.

God auengeth disobedience hym selfe though the officer will not.

The Mariage also of the children perteineth vnto their elders, as thou mayst see. i. Cor. vij. and throughout all the Scripture, by the authoritie of the sayd commaundement, child obey father and mother. whiche thyng the heathen and gentiles haue euer kept and to this day keepe, vnto their great shame and rebuke of vs Christē: in as much as the weddyngs of our virgins (shame it is to speake it) are more lyke vnto the saute of a bitche, then the mariyng of a reasonable creature. Se not we dayly three or foure calengyng one woman before the Commissary or Officiall, of whiche not one hath the consent of her father and mother. And yet hee that hath most money, hath best right, and shall haue her in the despite of all her frendes and in defiaunce of Mariage.

Couetousnes maketh our spiritualtie that they cannot see that which a Turke is ashamed of.

Gods ordinaunces.

Moreouer when she is geuen by the iudge vnto ỹ one party, & also maried, euen then oft tymes shall the contrary party sue before an hyer iudge, or an other that succedeth the same, & for money deuorce her agayne. So shamefully doth the couetousnes and ambition of our Prelates mocke with the lawes of God. I passe ouer with silence how many yeares they will prolog the sentence with cauillations and suttletie, if they be well monyed on both parties, and if a damsel promise ỹ. how shamefull Councel they will geue the second, and also how the religious of Sathan do separate vnseperable matrimonie. For after thou art lawfully maryed at the commaundemẽt of father and mother, and with the consent of all thy frendes: yet if thou wilt be disgised eke vnto one of them, and sweare obediẽce vnto their traditions, thou mayst disobey father and mother, breake the othe which thou hast sworne to God before his holy congregation, and withdraw loue and charitie the hyest of Gods cõmaundements, and that dutie and seruice which thou owest vnto thy wife: wherof Christ can not dispence with thee. For Christ is not agaynst God, but with God, and came not to breake Gods ordinaunces, but to fulfill them. That is, hee came to ouercome thee wt kindnes, and to make thee to do of very loue the thyng which the law cõpelleth thee to doe. For loue onely and to do seruice vnto thy neighbour is the fulfillyng of the law in ỹ sight of God. To be a Monke or a Frier, thou mayst thus forsake thy wife before thou hast lyne with her, but not to be a seculare priest. And yet after thou art professed, the Pope for money wil dispence with thee, both for thy coate and all thy obedience, & make a seculer Priest of thee: likewise as it is simonie to sell a benefice (as they call it) but to resigne vpon a pension, and thẽ to redeme the same, is no simony at all. Oh crafty iugglers and mockers with the word of God.

Get her with child say they so shall thy cause ber best.

Gods commaundementes breake they throughe their owne traditions.

Money maketh marchaundise.

Iugglers.

¶ The obedience of wiues vnto their husbandes.

AFter that Eue was deceaued of the Serpent, God said vnto her Gene. iij. Thy lust or appetite shall perteyne vnto thy husband, and he shall rule thee or raigne ouer thee. God whiche created the woman knoweth what is in that weake vessell (as Peter calleth her) and hath therefore put her vnder the obedience of her husband, to rule her lustes and wanton appetites. i. Peter. iij. exhorteth wiues to bee in subiection vnto their husbandes, after the ensample of the holy wemen whiche in old tyme trusted in GOD, and as Sara obeyed Abraham and called hym Lord. whiche Sara before she was maried, was Abrahams sister and equall with him: but as soone as she was maried was in subiection, and became without comparison inferior. For so is the nature of wedlocke by the ordinaunce of God. It were much better that our wiues folowed the ensample of the holy wemen of old time in obeyeng their husbands, then to worshyp them with a Pater noster, an Aue and a Credo, or to sticke vp candles before their images. Paul Ephe. v. sayth: wemen submitte your selues vnto your own husbãdes, as vnto the Lord. For the husband is the wiues head, euen as Christ is the head of the congregation. Therfore as the congregation is in subiection to Christ, likewise let wiues be in subiectiõ vnto their husbãdes in all things. Let the woman therfore feare her husband, as Paul sayth in the sayd place. For her husband is vnto her in ỹ stede of God, that she obey him, and wayte on hys commaundementes. And hys commaundementes are Gods commaundements. If she therfore grudge agaynst him, or resiste hym, she grudgeth agaynst God, and resisteth God.

Mariage altereth ỹ degret of nature.

The husband is in the wiues gods stede.

¶ The obedience of Seruauntes vnto their Maisters.

SEruaunts obey your carnall masters with feare and tremblyng, in singlenesse of your hartes as vnto Christ: not with seruice in the eye sight as mẽ pleaseres: but as the seruauntes of Christ doyng the wil of God from the hart with good will, euen as thoughe ye serued the Lord, and not men. Eph. vj. And i. Pet. ij. seruauntes obey your masters with all feare not onely if they be good and curteous: but also though they be froward. For it commeth of grace, if a man for conscience towarde God endure grief suffering wrongfully. For what prayse is it if when ye be buffeted for your faultes, ye take it pacientlỹ? But and if when ye do well, ye suffer wrong and take it pacientlỹ, thẽ is there thanke with God. Hereunto vere-verely were ye called. For Christ also suffred for our sakes, leaving vs an example to follow hys steppes. In what so euer kynde therefore thou art a seruaunt, during the tyme of thy couenauntes, thy maister is vnto thee in the stede and rowme of God, and God thorough hym feedeth thee, clotheth thee, ruleth thee, and learneth thee. His cõmaundementes are Gods commaundementes, and thou oughtest to obey hym as God, and in all thinges to seeke his pleasure and profite. For thou art his good and possession, as hys Oxe or hys Horse, in so much that who so euer doth but desire thee in hys hart from him without his loue and licence, is condẽned of God, which sayth Exod. xx. See thou once couet not thy neighbours seruauntes.

In sufferynge wronges patiẽtly we folow the steppes of Christ.

The maister is vnto the seruãt in Gods stede.

Paule the Apostle sent home Onemus vnto his maister (as thou readest in the epistle of Paule to Philemon). In so much that though the sayd Philemon with his seruaunt also was cõuerted by Paul, & obeyed vnto Paule and to the worde that Paule preached, not hys seruaunt onely, but also himselfe: yea and though that Paule was in necessitie, and lacked ministers to minister vnto hym in ỹ bondes which he suffered for the Gospels sake: yet would he not retaine the seruaunt necessary vnto the furtheraunce of the Gospell, wythout the consent of the mayster.

Our spirituall retayners seruauntes not to honour God, but their traditions and ceremonies onely.

O how sore differeth the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles, from the doctrine of the Pope, and of his Apostles. For if any man wyll obeye neither father nor mother, neither Lord nor maister, neither King nor Prince, the same needeth but onely to take the marke of the beast, that is, to shaue himselfe a Monke, a Fryer, or a priest, and is then immediatly free and exempted from all seruice and obedience due vnto man. He that will obey no man (as they will not) is most acceptable vnto them. The more disobedient that thou art vnto Gods ordinaũces, the more apt & meete art thou for theirs. Neither is the professing, vowing and swearyng obediẽce vnto their ordinaunces, any other thyng, thẽ the defiyng, denying & forswearyng obedience vnto the ordinaunces of God.

Christes doctrine & the Popes differre.

If thy master please thee not shaue thy selfe a Monke a Frier or a Priest.

To obey no man is a spirituall thyng.

¶ The obedience of Subiectes vnto kinges, Princes, and rulers.

Rom. xiij. LEt euery soule submit himselfe vnto the auctoritie of the hyer powers. There is no power but of God. The powers that be, are ordayned of God. whosoeuer therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinaunce of God. They that resist, shal receaue to themselues dannation. For rulers are not to be feared for good workes, but for euill. Wilt thou be without feare of the power: Do well then, and so shalt thou be praysed of the same. For he is the minister of God, for thy wealth. But and if thou do euill, then feare. For he beareth not a swearde for nought. For he is the minister of god, to take vengeaunce on them that do euill. wherefore ye must needes obey, not for feare of vengeaunce onely: but also because of conscience. Euen for this cause pay ye tribute. For they are Gods ministers seruing for the same purpose.

Kynges, are chosen to suppresse the wicked, & support the good.

Geue to euery man therefore hys dutie: Tribute to whom tribute belongeth: Custome to whom custome is due: feare to whome feare belongeth: honour to whome honour pertaineth. Owe nothing to any man: but to loue one an other. For he that loueth an other, fulfilleth the lawe. For these commaundementes: Thou shalt not commit adultery: Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not steale: Thou shalt not beare false witnes: Thou shalt not desire, and so forth: if there be any other commaundement, are all comprehended in thys saying: Loue thyne neighbour as thy selfe. Loue hurteth not his neighbour: therfore is loue the fulfilling of the lawe.

An aptè similitude.

AS a father ouer his children is both Lorde and iudge, forbidding one brother to auenge hymselfe on an other, but (if any cause of strife be betwene them) will haue it brought vnto hymselfe or his assignes, to be iudged and correct: so God forbiddeth all men to auenge themselues, and taketh the auctoritie and office of auenging vnto himselfe, saying: Vengeance is myne, and I will rewarde. Deut. xxxij. which text Paule alleageth Rom. xij. For it is impossible that a man should be a righteous, an egall or an indifferent iudge in hys owne cause, lustes and appetites so blinde vs. Moreouer when thou auengest thy selfe, thou makest not peace, but stirrest vp more debate.

God therefore hath geuẽ lawes vnto all nations, and in all landes hath put kinges, gouerners, and rulers in hys owne stede, to rule the worlde thorough them. And hath commaunded all causes to be brought before them, as thou readest Exod. xxii. In all causes (sayth he) of iniury or wrong, whether it be Oxe, Asse, shepe or vesture, or any lost thing which an other chalengeth, let the cause of both parties be brought vnto the Gods, whome the Gods condemne, the same shall paye double vnto his neighbour. Marke, the iudges are called Gods in the Scriptures, because they are in Gods rowme, and execute the commaundements of God. And in an other place of the sayde chapter, Moses chargeth saying: see that thou rayle not on the Gods, neither speake euill of the ruler of thy people. who so euer therefore resisteth them, resisteth God (for they are in ỹ rowme of God) and they that resiste, shall receaue the damnation.

Judges are called Gods.

Such obedience vnto father and mother, mayster, husband, Emperor, King, Lordes and rulers, requireth God of all nations, yea of the very Turkes and Infidels. The blessing and rewarde of them that kepe them, is the life of thys worlde, as thou readest Leuit. xviii. Keepe my ordinaunces and lawes: which if a man keepe, he shall liue therein. which text Paule rehearseth Rom. x. proouing thereby that the righteousnes of the law is but worldly, and the rewarde thereof is the lyfe of thys worlde. And the curse of them that breaketh them, is the losse of thys life: as thou seest by ỹ punishment appointed for them.

Blessyng.

Curse.

And whosoeuer keepeth the lawe (whether it be for feare, for vayne glory or profite) though no man rewarde hym, yet shall God blesse him abundantly, and send hym worldly prosperitie, as thou readest Deut. xxviii. what good blessinges accompany the keping of the lawe, and as we see the Turkes farre exceede vs Christen men in worldly prosperity for their iust keeping of their temporall lawes. Likewise though no man punishe the breakers of the lawe, yet shall God send hys curses vpon them till they be vtterly brought to nought, as thou readest most terribly euen in the same place.

God rewardeth all obedience: though no mã els do.

God auengeth all disobedience though no mã els do.

Neither may the inferior person auenge hymselfe vpon the superior, or violently resiste hym for what so euer wrong it be. If he doe, he is condemned in the deede doyng: in as much as he taketh vpon hym that which belongeth to God onely, which sayth, Vengeaunce is mine, and I will rewarde. Deut. xxxii. And Christ sayth Mat. 26. All they that take the sworde shall perishe with the sworde. Takest thou a swoorde to auenge thy selfe? so geuest thou not rowme vnto God to auenge thee, but robbest hym of his most hye honour, in that thou wilt not let hym be iudge ouer thee.

Vengeaunce is Gods.

If any mã might haue auenged him selfe vpon his superior, that might Dauid most righteously haue done vpon kyng Saul which so wrongfully persecuted Dauid, euen for no other cause, thē that God had annointed him kyng and promised him the kyngdome. Yet when God had deliuered Saul into ỹ handes of Dauid, that he might haue done what he would with him as thou seest in the first booke of kynges the xxiiii. Chapter, how Saul came into the caue where Dauid was. And Dauid came to hym secretly, and cut of a peace of his garment. And as soone as he had done it his hart smote him because hee had done so much vnto hys Lord. And when his mē couraged him to slea him, he answered, the Lord forbid it me, that I should lay myne hand on him. Neither suffered he his men to hurt him. when Saul was gone out, Dauid folowed and shewed hym the peece of his garmēt and sayd: why beleuest thou the wordes of men that say, Dauid goeth about to do thee harme: perceaue and see that there is neither euill nor wickednesse in my hand and that I haue not trespassed against thee, and yet thou layest awayte for my lyfe. God iudge betwene thee and me and auenge me of thee, but myne hand be not vpō thee, as the old prouerbe sayth (sayd Dauid) out of the wicked shall wickednesse proceede (but myne hand be not vpō thee, meanyng that God euer punisheth one wicked by another) And agayne (sayd Dauid) GOD be iudge, and iudge betwen thee and me, and behold & pleate my cause, & geue me iudgement or right of thee.

Dauid.

God destroyeth one wicked by an other

And in the. xxvi. Chapter of the same booke, when Saul persecuted Dauid againe. Dauid came to Saul by night, as he slept and all his men, and tooke away his speare, and a cuppe of water from his head. Then sayd Abisai Dauids seruaūt, God hath deliuered thee thine enemie into thine hand this day, let me now therfore nayle hym to the ground with my speare, and geue hym but euen one stripe and no more. Dauid

God prouideth a meanes to take the enil out of the way when they haue fulfilled their wickednes why Dauid slewe not Saul.

The kyng is in the rowme of god in this worlde.

The kyng must be reserued vnto the vengeaunce of God.

It is not lawfull for a Christen subiect to resiste hys Prince, though he be an heathen man.

uid forbad him saying. Kill hym not. For who (sayd he) shall lay handes on the Lordes annoynted & be not giltie? The Lord liueth, or by the Lordes life (sayd he) he dyeth not except the Lord smite him or ẏ his day be come to dye, or els go to battaile, & there perish.

Why did not Dauid slea Saul, seyng he was so wicked, not in persecutyng Dauid onely, but in disobeying Gods commaundements, and in that he had slayne. lxxv. of Gods priestes wrongfully? Verely for it was not lawfull. For if he had done it, he must haue sinned agaynst God. For God hath made the kyng in euery Realme iudge ouer all, and ouer him is there no iudge. He that iudgeth the kyng iudgeth God, & he that layeth handes on the king, layeth hand on God, and he that resisteth the kyng resisteth God, and damneth Gods law and ordinaunce. If the subiectes sinne they must be brought to ẏ kynges iudgement. If the kyng sinne he must be reserued vnto ẏ iudgement, wrath and vengeaunce of God. And as it is to resiste the kyng, so is it to resiste his officer, whiche is set or sent to execute the kynges commaundement.

And in the first Chapter of the secõd booke of Kings, Dauid commaunded the young man to be slayne, whiche brought vnto him the crown & bracelet of Saul, and sayd to please Dauid with all, that he hym selfe had slayne Saul. And in the fourth Chapter of the same booke, Dauid commaunded those two to be slayne whiche brought vnto hym the head of Isboseth Sauls sonne, by whose meanes yet the whole kingdome returned vnto Dauid, accordyng vnto the promise of God.

And Luke xiij. when they shewed Christ of the Galileans, whose blond Pilate mingled with their owne sacrifice: he aũswered, suppose ye that these Galileãs were sinners aboue all other Galileãs, because they suffred such punishment? I tell you nay: but except ẏe repent ye shall lykewise perish. This was told Christ, no doubt, of such an entent as they asked him. Math. xxij. whether it were lawfull to geue tribute vnto Cesar? For they thought that it was no sinne to resist an Heathẽ Prince: as few of vs would thinke (if we were vnder the Turke) that it were sinne to rise agaynst him, and to ryd our selues from vnder his dominion, so sore haue our Bishops robbed vs of the true doctrine of Christ. But Christ cõdemned their dedes, and also the secrete thoughtes of all other, that consented thereunto, saying: except ye repẽt ye shall likewise perish. As who should say, I know that ye are within in your hartes, such as they were outward in their dedes, and are vnder the same damnation: except therfore ye repent betimes, ye shall breake out at the last into lyke deedes, and likewise perish, as it came afterward to passe.

Hereby seest thou that the kyng is in thys worlde without lawe, & may at his lust doe right or wrong, & shall geue acomptes, but to God onely.

Kynges must make accompt of their doynges onely to God.

An other conclusion is this, that no person, neither any degree may be exempt from thys ordinaunce of God. Neither can the profession of Monkes and Fryers, or any thyng that the Pope or Byshops can laye for themselues, except them from the swoorde of the Emperour or kings, if they breake the lawes. For it is written, let euery soule submitte hymselfe vnto the authoritie of the hyer powers. Here is no man except, but all soules must obey. The hyer powers are the temporall kynges and Princes, vnto whom God hath geuen the swoord to punishe who soeuer sinneth. God hath not geuen them swoordes to punishe one, and to let an other goe free, and sinne vnpunished. Moreouer, with what face durst ẏ spiritualtie, which ought to be the light, & an example of good lyuing vnto all other, desire to sinne vnpunished, or to be excepted frõ tribute, toll, or custome, that they would not beare paine with their brethrẽ, vnto ẏ maintenaunce of kings and officers ordayned of God to punishe sinne? There is no power but of God (by power vnderstand the authoritie of kynges and Princes.) The powers that be, are ordayned of God. Whosoeuer therfore resisteth power, resisteth god: yea though he be Pope, Byshoppe, Monke or Fryer. They that resiste shall receaue vnto themselues damnation. why? For Gods woorde is against them which will haue all men vnder the power of the temporall swoorde. For rulers are not to be feared for good woorkes, but for euill. Hereby seest thou that they that resiste the powers, or seeke to bee exempt from their authoritie, haue euil consciences, and seeke libertie to sinne vnpunished, and to be free from bearing payne wyth their brethren. wilt thou be without feare of the power? So do well, and thou shalt haue laude of the same (that is to say of the ruler) with good liuing ought ẏ spiritualtie to rid them selues frō feare of the tēporall swoꝛd, & not with craft and with blyndyng the kynges & hyngyng the vengeaūce of God vpō them, & in purchasing licence to sinne vnpunished.

The kyng hath no power but to his damnation to priuiledge the spiritualtie to sinne vnpunished.

Foꝛ he is the minister of God foꝛ thy wealth: to defend thee from a thousand inconueniences, from theeues, murderers and them that would defile thy wife, thy daughter and take from thee all that thou hast: yea life and al, if thou did resist. Furthermoꝛe though he be the greatest tyꝛaunt in the woꝛld, yet is he vnto thee a great benefit of God and a thing wheꝛfoꝛe thou oughtest to thanke God hyghly. Foꝛ it is better to haue somwhat then to be cleane stripte out of altogether: it is better to pay the tenth then to loose all: it is better to suffer one tyꝛaunt then many, and to suffer wꝛong of one then of euery mā. Yea and it is better to haue a tyꝛaunt vnto thy king then a shadow, a passiue kyng that doth nought him selfe, but suffer other to do with hym what they wil, and to lead hym whether they list. Foꝛ a tyꝛaut though he do wꝛong vnto thee good, yet he punisheth the euill and maketh all mē obey neither sufferеth any mā to polle but himself onely. A kyng that is soft as silke and effeminate, that is to say turned vnto the nature of a woman, what with his owne lustes, whiche are as the longyng of a woman with child, so that he can not resiste them, and what with the wyly tyꝛanny of thē that euer rule hym, shalbe much moꝛe greuous vnto ẏ realme then a right tyꝛaunt. Read the Cronicles and thou shalt finde it euer so.

A kyng is a great benefite though he be neuer so euill.

Pꝛinces are ordeined to punish doers.

But & if thou do euill, thē feare. Foꝛ hee beareth not a swoꝛde foꝛ nought. Foꝛ he is the minister of God, to take vengeaunce on them that do euill. If the office of pꝛinces geuen thē of God be to take vengeaunce of euill doers: then by this text and Gods woꝛd, are all pꝛinces damned, euen as many as geue libertie oꝛ licence vnto the spiritualtie to sinne vnpunished, and not onely to sinne vnpunished thē selues: but also to opē sanctuaries, pꝛiuileged places, churchyardes, S. Johns hold: yea and if they come to shoꝛt vnto all these, yet to setfoꝛth a nerkeuerse to saue all maner tresspassers frō the feare of the swoꝛd of the vengeaunce of God put in the handes of pꝛinces to take vengeaunce on all such.

The damnation of pꝛinces.

Sanctuaries.

Neckeuerse.

GOd requireth the law to be kept of all men let them keepe it foꝛ what soeuer purpose they will. wil they not keepe the law: so vouchsafeth he not that they enioy this tēpoꝛall life. Now are there thꝛee natures of men, one all togethеr beastly, which in no wise receaue the law in their hartes, but rise agaynst pꝛinces and rulers when soeuer they are able to make their partie good. These are signified by them that woꝛshypped the golden calfe. Foꝛ Moses brake the tables of the law ere he came at them.

Three natures.

The second are not so beastly, but receaue the law, and vnto them the law commeth: but they looke not Moses in the face. Foꝛ his countenaunce is to bꝛight foꝛ them, that is, they vnderstād not that ẏ law is spirituall, and requireth the hart. They looke on the pleasure, pꝛofite and pꝛomotiō that folowеth the kepyng of the law, & in respect of the reward keepe they the law outwardly with woꝛkes, but not in the hart. Foꝛ if they might obteine like honour, glozie, pꝛomotion and dignitie and also auoyde all inconueniences, if they bꝛoke the law, so would they also breake the law and folow their lustes.

What it is to looke Moses in the face.

The thyꝛd are spirituall and looke Moses in the open face, & are (as Paul sayth the secōd to the Romains) a law vnto them selues & haue the law wꝛitten in their hartes by ẏ spirite of God. These neede neither of kyng noꝛ officers to dꝛiue them, neither that any man pꝛofer thē any reward foꝛ to kepe the law. Foꝛ they do it naturally.

The fiꝛst woꝛke foꝛ feare of ẏ swoꝛd onely. The second foꝛ reward. The thyꝛd woꝛke foꝛ loue frely. They looke on the excedyng mercy, loue & kyndes which God hath shewed thē in Chꝛist, and theꝛfoꝛe loue agayne and woꝛke frely. Heauen they take of the free gift of God thꝛough Chꝛistes deseruyngs, and hope without all maner doubtyng that GOD according to his pꝛomise, wil in this woꝛld also defend them and do all thyng foꝛ them of hys goodnes and foꝛ Chꝛistes sake, and not foꝛ any goodnes that is in them. They consent vnto the law that it is holy and iust, & that all men ought to doe what soeuer God commaundeth foꝛ no other cause, but because God cōmaundeth it. And their great soꝛow is, because that there is no strength in their members to do that which their hart lusteth to do and is a thyꝛst to do.

Heauen commeth by Chꝛist.

A Chꝛistē man seketh no moꝛe but Gods will.

These of the last soꝛte keepe the law of their owne accoꝛde and that in the hart, and haue pꝛofessed perpetuall warr warre against the lustes and appetites of the flesh, til they be vtterly subdued: yet not through their owne strength, but knowyng and knowledgyng their weakenes cry euer for strength to god which hath promised assistance vnto al that call vpon him. These folow God and are led of his spirite. The other ꝛ. are led of lustes and appetites.

Lustes. Lustes & appetites are diuers and many and that in one mā: yea and one lust contrarie to an other and the greatest lust carieth a man altogether away with him. We are also chaunged from one lust vnto an other. Otherwise are we disposed when we are children, otherwise when we are youngmen, and otherwise when we are old, otherwise ouer euen, and otherwise in the mornyng: yea sometymes altered. vj. tymes in an houre. How fortuneth all this? Because that the will of man foloweth the witte, and is subiect vnto the witte & as the witte erreth so doth the will, and as the witte is in captiuitie, so is the will, neither is it possible that the will should be free where the witte is in bondage.

Free will. That thou mayst perceaue & feele ẏ thyng in thine hart and not be a vayne sophister, disputyng aboute woordes without perceauyng, marke this. The roote of all euil, the greatest damnatiō and most terrible wrath & vengeaunce of god that we are in, is natural blindnes. We are all out of the right way, euery mā his wayes: One iudgeth this best, an other that to be best. Now is worldly witte nothyng els but craft & sutletie to obteine that which we iudge falsly to be best. As I erre in my witte, so erre I in my wil. whē I iudge that to be euill, which in dede is good, then hate I that which is good. And when I suppose that good whiche is euill in deede, then loue I euil. As if I be persuaded and borne in hād that my most frende is myne enemy, then hate I my best frend: and if I be brought in belefe that my most enemy is my frend, Thē loue I my most enemy. Now when we say, euery man hath his free wil, to do what him lusteth I say verely that men do what they lust. Notwithstandyng, to folow lustes is not fredome, but captiuitie & bondage. If God opē any mans wittes to make him feele in his hart, that lustes and appetites are damnable, and geue hym power to hate and resiste them, then is he free euen with the fredome wherewith Christ maketh free, and hath power to do the will of God.

Worldly witte.

The will is bond and led.

Thou mayst hereby perceaue that all that is done in the world (before the spirite of God come & geueth vs light) is damnable sinne, and the more glorious the more damnable: so that, that which the world counteth most glorious is more damnable in the sight of GOD, then that which the whore, the theefe, and the murderer do. with blind reasons of worldly wisedome mayst thou chaunge ẏ inyndes of youth and make them geue them selues to what thou wilt either for feare, for prayse or for profite, and yet doest but chaūge thē from one vice to an other. As the persuasions of her frendes made Lucrece chast. Lucrece beleued if she were a good huswife and chast, that she should be most glorious, & that all the world would geue her honour, & prayse her. She sought her own glory in her chastitie and not gods. when she had lost her chastitie, then counted she her selfe most abhominable in the sight of all men, and for very payne and thought which she had, not that she had displeased God, but that she had lost her honour, slew her selfe. Looke how great her payne and sorrow was for the losse of her chastitie, so great was her glorie and reioysing therein, and so much despised she them that were otherwise, and pitied them not. which pride God more abhorreth thē the whoredome of any whore. Of like pride are all ẏ moral vertues of Aristotle, Plato and Socrates, and all the doctrine of the Philosophers the very Gods of our schole men.

All is sinne that springeth not of the spirite of God, and all that is not done in the light of Gods worde.

In like maner is it for the most part of our most holy Religion. For they of lyke imagination do thynges whiche they of Bedlem may see, that they are but madnes. They looke on the miracles which God did by the Saintes to moue the vnbeleuyng vnto the fayth and to confirme the trouth of his promises in Christ, whereby all that beleue are made Saintes: as thou seest in the last Chapter of Marke. They preached (sayth he) euery where, the Lord worckyng with them and confirmyng their preachyng with miracles that folowed. And in the fourth of the Actes) the Disciples prayed that God would stretch forth his handes to doe miracles and wonders in the name of Jesus. And Paul. i. Corin. xiiij. sayth, that the miracle of speakyng with diuers tounges, is but a signe for vnbeleuers, and not for them that beleue.

So do our spiritualtie in all their workes.

True miracles are wrought to cōfirme the preaching, and not the Godhead of the preacher.

Our hypocrites are blinde.

These miracles turne they vnto an other purpose saying in their blynde hartes. See what miracles God hath shewed for this Saint, he must be verely great with GOD. And at once turne them selues from Gods word, and put their trust and confidence in the Saint and his merites, and make an Aduocate or rather a GOD of the Saint, and of their blind imagination make a Testamēt or bond betwene the Saint and them, the Testament of Christes bloud cleane forgotten. They looke on the Saintes garmentes and lynes or rather lyes, which men lye on the Saintes: and this wise imagine in their hartes saying: the Saint for wearyng such a garmēt and for such dedes is become so glorious in heauen. If I do likewise, so shall I be also. They see not the fayth and trust, whiche the Saintes had in Christ, neither the the word of God whiche the Saintes preached, neither the entent of the Saintes, how that the Saintes dyd such thynges to tame their bodies and to be an ensample to the world, and to teach that such thynges are to be despised which the world most wondreth at and magnifieth. They see not also that some landes are so whote that a man can neither drinke wyne nor eate flesshe therein: neither consider they the complexion of the Saintes, and a thousand lyke thynges see they not. So whē they haue killed their bodies and brought them in that case, that scarce with any restaurative they can recouer their health agayne, yet had they leuer dye then to eate flesshe. why? for they thinke, I haue now this. xx. xxx. or xl. yeares eaten no flesh and haue obteined I doubt not by this tyme as hye a rowme as the best of them: should I now loose that? nay I had leuer dye: and as Lucretia had leuer haue bene slayne, if he had not bene to strong for her, then to haue lost her glorie, euen so had these. They attribe heauen vnto their imaginations and mad inuentions, and receaue it not of the liberalitie of God, by the merites and deseruynges of Christ.

The religious looke vpon the out side onely.

The spirituall man.

He now that is renewed in Christ, keepeth the law without any law written or compulsion of any ruler or officer, saue by the ledyng of the spirite onely: but the naturall man is entised and moued to keepe the law carnally, with carnall reasons and worldly persuasions, as for glorie, honour riches and dignitie. But the last remedy of all when all other fayle, is feare. Beate one & the rest will absteine for feare: as Moyses euer putteth in remembraunce saying: kill, stone, burne. So shalt thou put euill from thee, and all Israell shal heare and feare, and shall no more do so. If feare helpe not, then will God that they be taken out of this life.

Feare is the last remedy.

The naturall man.

Kynges were ordeined then, as I before sayd, and the sword put in their handes to take vengeaunce of euill doers, that other might feare, and were not ordeined to fight one against an other or to rise agaynst the Emperour to defende the false authoritie of the Pope that very Antechrist: Bysshops they onely can minister the temporall sword: their office, the preachyng of Gods word layd a part, which the wil neither do nor suffer any mā to do, but slay with the temporall sword (whiche they haue gotten out of the hand of all Princes) them that would. The preachyng of Gods word is hatefull and contrary vnto them: why? For it is impossible to preach Christ except thou preach agaynst Antichrist, that is to say, them whiche with their false doctrine and violence of sword enforce to quenche the true doctrine of Christe. And as thou canst heale no disease, except thou begyn at the roote: euen so canst thou preach agaynst no mischief, except thou begyn, at the Bysshops. Kynges they are but shadowes, vayne names and thynges idle, hauyng nothing to do in the world, but when our holy father needeth their helpe.

Kinges defend ỹ false authoritie of the pope, their office punishyng of sinne layd apart.

Bysshoppes minister the kinges dutie, their owne layd apart: yet they persecute their owne office.

Kynges but wayte on ỹ Popes pleasure.

The Pope contrarie vnto all conscience and agaynst all the doctrine of Christ, which sayth my kyngdome is not of this world (John. xviii.) hath vsurped the right of the Emperour. And by policie of the Bysshops of Almany and with corruptyng the Electours or choisers of the Emperor with money, bryngeth to passe that such a one is euer chosen Emperour that is not able to make his partie good with the Pope. To stoppe the Emperour that he come not at Rome, he bryngeth the French kyng vp to Milane, and on the other side bryngeth he the Venetians. If the Venetias come to nye, the Bysshops of Fraunce must bryng in the French kyng. And the Socheners are called and sent for to come and succour. And for their labour he geueth to some a Rose, to an other a cappe of mayntenaunce. One is called most Christen king: an other defender of the fayth: an other the eldest sonne of of the most holy seate. He blaseth also the armes of other and putteth in the holy crosse, the crown of thorne, or the nayles and so forth. If the Frēch kyng go to hye, and crepe vp other to Bononie or Naples: then must our English Bysshops bryng in our kyng. The craft of the Bysshops is to entitle one kyng with an others Realme. He is called kyng of Denmearke, and of England: he kyng of England and of Fraunce. Then to blinde the Lordes and the commons, the kyng must challenge his right. Then must the lande be taxed and euery man paye, and the treasure borne out of the Realme and the land beggerde. How many a thousand mens lines hath it cost? And how many an hundred thousand poundes hath it caried out of the Realme in our remembraunce? Besides how abhominable an example of gatheryng was there? such verely as neuer tyraunt sence the world began did, yea such as was neuer before heard or thought on, neither among Jewes, Sarasens, Turkes or Heathen sence God created the Sunne to shyne: that a beast should breake vp into the Temple of God, that is to say, into the hart and consciences of men, and compell them to sweare euery man what hee was worthe, to lende that should neuer be payd agayne. How many thousandes forswore thē selues? How many thousandes set them selues aboue their habilitie, partly for feare lest they should be forsworne and partly to saue their credence: when the pope hath his purpose, then is peace made, no man woteth how, and our most enemy is our most frend.

O great whore of Babylō, how abuseth she the Princes of the world, how dronke hath she made them with her wyne? How shamefull licences doth she geue them, to vse Nichromancy, to hold whores, to diuorse them selues to breake the fayth and promises that one maketh with an other: that the confessours shall deliuer vnto the kyng the confession of whom he will, and dispēceth with them euen of the very lawe of God, whiche Christ him selfe can not do.

¶ Agaynst the Popes false power.

MAthew. xxvj. Christ sayth vnto Peter, put vp thy sword into his sheth. For all that lay hand vpon the sword, shal perish with the sword, that is, who soeuer without the cōmaundement of the temporall officer to whom God hath geuē the sword layeth hand on the sword to take vengeaunce, the same deserueth death in the dede doyng. God did not put Peter onely vnder the tēporall sword, but also Christ him selfe. As it appeareth in the fourth Chapter to the Galathiās. And Christ sayth Math. iij. Thus becommeth it vs to fulfill all righteousnes, that is to say, all ordinaunces of God. If the head be then vnder the tēporall sword, how can the members be excepted? If Peter sinned in defendyng Christ against the temporall sword (whose authoritie and Ministers the Bysshops then abused agaynst Christ as ours do now) who can excuse our Prelates of sinne which will obey no man, neither kyng nor Emperour? Yea who can excuse from sinne, either the kynges that geue, either the Bysshops that receaue such exemptions contrarie to Gods ordinaunces, and Christes doctrine?

Not Peter onely but Christ also was vnder the temporall sword.

The kings sinne in geuing exēptions & the Prelates in receauyng them.

And Math. xvij. both Christ and also Peter pay tribute, where the meanyng of Christes question vnto Peter is: if Princes take tribute of straungers onely and not of their children, then verily ought I to be free whiche am the sonne of God, whose seruaūtes and Ministers, they are and of whom they haue their authoritie. Yet because they neither knew that neither Christ came to vse that authoritie, but to bee our seruaunt and to beare our burthen and to obey all ordinaunces, both in right and wrong for our sakes and to teach vs: therfore sayd he to S. Peter. Pay for thee and me lest we offend thē. Moreouer though that Christ & Peter (because they were poore) might haue escaped, yet would he not for feare of offendyng other and hurtyng their consciences. For he might well haue geuen occasion vnto the tributs gatherers to haue iudged amisse both of him and his doctrine: yea and the Jewes might happely haue bene offended thereby, and haue thought that it had not ben lawful, for them to haue payd tribute vnto Heathen Princes and Idolaters, seyng that he so great a Prophet payd not: Yea and what other thyng causeth the lay so litle to regarde their Princes, as that they see them both despised & disobeyed of the spiritualtie? But our Prelates whiche care for none offendyng of consciences and lesse for Gods ordinaunces, will pay nought: but when Princes must fight in our most holy fathers quarell and agaynst Christ. Then are they the first. There also is none so poore that then hath not somewhat to geue.

When the spiritualtie payeth tribute.

Shameles tuggiers.

Marke here how past all shame our whole Doctours are (as Rochester is in his Sermon agaynst Martin Luther) which of this text of Mathew dispute that Peter because he payd tribute, is greater then the other Apostles, and hath more authority and power then they, and was head vnto thē all, cōtrary vnto so many cleare textes, where Christ rebuketh them saying: that is an Heathenish thyng that one should clyme above an other or desire to be greater. To be great in the kingdome of heauē is to be a seruaunt, and he that most humbleth hym selfe and becommeth a seruaunt vnto other (after the ensample of Christ I meane & his Apostles, and not of the Pope and his Apostles, our Cardinals and Byshops) ý same is greatest in that kingdome. If Peter in paying tribute became greatest, how commeth it, that they will pay none at all? But to pay tribute is a signe of subiectiō verely, & the cause why Christ payed was because he had an houshold, and for the same cause payed Peter also. For he had an house, a shippe and nettes, as thou readest in the Gospell. But let vs go to Paul agayne.

Wherfore ye must needes obey, not for feare of vengeaunce onely: but also because of conscience. That is though thou be so naughty (as nowe many yeares our Pope and Prelates euery where are) that thou nedest not to obeye the temporall sword for feare of vengeaunce: yet must thou obey because of conscience. First because of thine owne conscience. For though thou be able to resiste, yet shalt thou neuer haue a good cōscience, as lōg as Gods word, law and ordinaunce are against thee. Secondarily for thy neighbours conscience. For though through craft and violence thou mightest escape and obteyne libertie or priuilege to be free from all maner dueties: yet oughtest thou neither to sue or to seeke for any such thing, neither yet admit or accept, if it were profered, lest thy fredome make thy weake brother to grudge & rebell, in that he seeth thee go emptie and he him selfe more ladē, thy part also layd on his shoulders. Seest thou not if a man fauour one sonne more then an other, or one seruaunt more then an other, how all the rest grudge, and how loue, peace and vnitie is broken? what Christenly loue is in the to thy neighbour ward, when thou canst finde in thyne hart to go vp and down empty by him all day long and see him ouer charged, yea to fal vnder his burthen, and yet wilt not once set to thyne hand to helpe him? what good conscience cā there be among our spiritualtie to gather so great treasure together, and with hypocrisie of their false learnyng to robbe almost euery man of house and landes, and yet not therewith content, but with all craft and wilenes to purchase so great liberties and exemptions from all maner bearyng with their brethren, seekyng in Christ nothyng but lucre? I passe ouer with silence how they teach Princes in euery lande to lade new exactions and tyranny on their subiectes more and more dayly neither for what purpose they do it say I. God I trust shall shortly disclose their iugglynge and bryng their falshode to light, and lay a medecine to thē, to make their scabbes breake out. Neuertheles this I say, that they haue robbed all Realmes, not of Gods word onely: but also of all wealth and prosperitie, and haue driuen peace out of all landes & withdrawen them selues from all obediēce to Princes, and haue separated them selues from the lay men, countyng thē viler thē dogges, and haue set vp that great Idole the whore of Babylō Antichrist of Rome whom they call pope, and haue conspired agaynst all common wealthes, & haue made them a seuerall kyngdome, wherin it is lawfull vnpunished to worke all abhomination. In euery Parish haue they spyes and in euery great mans house, and in euery tauerne and alehouse. And thorough confessions knowe they all secretes, so that no man may open his mouth to rebuke what soeuer they do, but that he shalbe shortly made an hereticke. In all Coūcels is one of them, yea the most part and chief rulers of the Councels are of them: But of there Councell is no man.

There is no Christē loue in thē.

What purpose euen to flatter the princes that they may abuse their authoritie to slē who soeuer beleueth in Christ and to maintein the Pope.

Confessiō.

Prelates know all mens secretes & no man theirs.

They make no conscience at any euill doyng.

They care for theyr neighbours as ý wolfe doth for the shepe.

The euill ensample of the spirituaLtie causeth the lay to beleue that they are not bound to obey.

Euen for this cause pay ye tribute, that is to witt, for consciences sake, to thy neighbour, and for the cause that foloweth. For they are Gods Ministers seruyng for the same purpose. Because God will so haue it, we must obey. we doe not looke (if we haue Christes spirite in vs) what is good profitable, glorious and honorable for vs, neither on our owne will, but on Gods will onely. Geue to euery man therefore his dutie: tribute to whom tribute belongeth: custome to whom custome is due: feare to whō feare belongeth: honour to whom honor perteineth.

Christes

That thou mightest feele the worcking of the spirite of God in thee, and lest the bewtie of the deed should deceane thee, and make thee thinke that the law of God whiche is spirituall were contēt and fulfilled with the outward and bodyly dede it foloweth. Owe nothyng to any mā: but to loue one an other. For he that loueth an other fulfilleth the law. For these commaundementes: thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not beare false witnes, thou shalt not desire, and so forth if there be any other commaūdement are all comprehended or contained in this saying: loue thy neighbour: therfore is loue the fulfillyng of the law. Here hast thou sufficient agaynst all the sophisters worckeholy & iustifiers in the world, which so magnifie their dedes. The law is spirituall and requireth the hart, & is neuer fulfilled with the dede in the sight of god. with ẏ dede thou fulfillest the law before the world & liuest thereby, that is, ẏ enioyest this prelēt life and auoydest the wrath and vengeaunce the death and punishment which the law threatneth to them that breake it. But before God thou keepest the law if thou loue onely. Now what shal make vs loue? Verely that shall fayth do. If thou behold how much God loueth thee in Christ, and from what vengeaunce he hath deliuered thee for his sake, and of what kyngdome he hath made thee heyre, then shalt thou see cause inough to loue thy very enemie without respect of reward, either in this lyfe or in the lyfe to come, but because that God will so haue it, and Christ hath deserued it: yet thou shouldest feele in thyne harte that all thy deedes to come, are abundantly recompensed all ready in Christ.

Loue fulfilleth the law before God & not the outward dede.

Agaynste worckemen.

The deede fulfilleth the law before the world.

Faith maketh a man to loue.

Thou wilt say haply, if loue fulfill the lawe, then it iustifieth. I say that that wherewith a man fulfilleth the law declareth hym iustified: but that which geueth him wherewith to fulfill the law, iustifieth hym. By iustifiyng vnderstande the forgeuenesse of sinnes and the fauour of God. Now sayth the text Roma. x. the ende of the law or the cause, wherfore the law was made is Christ, to iustifie all that beleue. That is, the law is geuen to vtter sinne, to kill the consciences, to damne our deedes, to bryng to repentaunce and to driue vnto Christ: in whō God hath promised his fauour and forgeuenesse of sinne vnto all that repente and consent to the law that it is good. If thou beleue the promises then doth Gods truth iustifie thee, that is forgeueth thee and receaueth thee to fauour for Christes sake. In a suretie wherof and to certifie thine hart, he sealeth thee with the spirite. Ephe. i. and. iiij. And. ij. Cor. v. sayth Paul. whiche gaue vs his spirite in earnest. How the spirite is geuen vs through Christ, read the viij. chapter of the Epistle to the Romaines and Gallat. iij. and. ij. Cor. iij. Neuertheles the spirit, and his frutes wherewith ẏ hart is purified, as fayth, hope, loue, pacience, long sufferyng and obedience, could neuer be sene without outward experience. For if thou were not brought sometime into combraunce, whence God onely could deliuer thee, thou shouldest neuer see thy fayth, yea except thou foughtest sometyme agaynst desperation, hell, death, sinne and powers of this worlde, for thy faythes sake, thou shouldest neuer know true fayth from a dreame. Except thy brother now and then offended thee, thou couldest not know whether thy loue were Godly. For a Turke is not angre, till he be hurt and offended, but if thou loue him that doth thee euill, then is thy loue of God: likewise if thy rulers were alway kinde, thou shouldest not know whether thyne obedience were pure or no: but & if thou canst paciently obeye euill rulers in all thyngs that is not to the dishonour of God, and when thou hurtest not thy neighbours, then art thou sure, that Gods spirite worcketh in thee, and that thy fayth is no dreame, nor any false imagination.

The office or dutie of the law.

The beleuyng of Gods promises iustifieth.

The spirite and the inward vertues are knowen by the outward dede.

Therfore counceleth Paule Rom. xij. recompense to no man euill: And on your part haue peace with all men. Dearely beloued auenge not your selues: but geue rowme vnto the wrath of God. For it is written vengeaunce is myne and I will reward, sayth the Lord. Therfore if thy enemie hungre, feede hym: If he thurst, geue hym drinke. For in so doyng thou shalt heape coales of fire on his heed (that is, thou shalt kindle loue in him.) Be not ouercome of euil (that is, let not an other mans wickednesse make thee wicked also). But ouercome euill with good, that is, with softenes, kindnesse, and all pacience winne him: euen as God with kindnesse wonne thee.

Ouercome thyne enemy with well doing.

The law. THe law was geuē in thūder, lightenyng, fire, smoke and the voyce of a trumpet and terrible sight. Exod. xx. So that the people quaked for feare and stode a farre of saying to Moyses. Speake thou to vs and we wil heare: let not the Lord speake vnto vs, lest we dye. No eare (if it be awaked and vnderstandeth the meanyng) is able to abide the voice of the law: except the promises of mercy be by. That thunder except the rayne of mercy be ioyned with it, destroyeth all and buildeth not. The law is a witnesse agaynst vs and testifieth that God abhorreth the the sinnes, that are in vs and vs for our sinnes sake.

The kyng. In like maner when God gaue the people of Israell a kyng, it thundred and rained that ỳ people feared so sore that they cryed to Samuell for to pray for them, that they should not dye. i. Reg. xii. As the law is a terrible thing: euen so is the kyng. For he is ordeined to take vengeaunce and hath a sword in his hād and not pecockes feethers. Feare him therfore and looke on hym as thou wouldest looke on a sharpe sword that hanged ouer thy head by an heare.

Rulers are Gods gift. Heades and gouerners are ordeined of God, and are euen the gifte of God, whether they be good or bad. And what soeuer is done vnto vs by them, ỳ doth God, be it good or bad. If why the rulers are euill. they be euill, why are they euill? verely for our wickednesse sake are they euill. Because that whē they were good we would not receaue that goodnesse of the hand of God and be thankefull: submitting our selues vnto his lawes and ordinaunces, but abused the goodnesse of God vnto our sensuall & beastly iustes. Therefore doth God make hys scorge of them, and turne them vnto wilde beastes, cōtrary to the nature of their names and offices, euen into Lyons, Beares, Fores, and vncleane Swine, to auenge himselfe of our vnnaturall and blind vnkindnesse, and of our rebellious disobedience.

In the lvj. Psalme thou readest, he destroyed the ruers, and dryed vp the springes of water, and turned ỳ fruitfull land into barrennesse, for the wickednesse of the inhabiters therein. whē the children of Israell had forgotten God in Egipt, God moued the hartes of the Egiptians to hate them, and to subdue them with craft and wilynes. Psal. cxiij. and Deuteronomiun. iij. Moyses rehearseth saying: God was angry wyth me for your sakes: so that the wrath of God fell on Moyses for the wickednesse of the people. And in the secōd Chap. of the second booke of kynges: God was angry with the people and moued Dauid to number them when Joab and the other Lords wondred why hee would haue them numbred, and because they feared lest some euil should folow, dissuaded the kyng: yet it holpe not. God so hardened his hart in his purpose, to haue an occasion to slay the wicked people.

Euill rulers then are a signe that God is angry and wroth with vs. Is it not a great wrath and vengeaunce that the father and mother should hate their children, euen their flesh and their bloud? or that an husband should be vnkinde vnto his wife or a master vnto the seruaunt that wayteth on his profite, or the Lordes and kynges should be tyrauntes vnto their subiectes and tenauntes which pay them tribute, tolle, custome and rente, laboring and toyling to finde them in honour, and to maintein them in their estate? is not this a fearefull iudgemēt of God and a cruell wrath that the very Prelates and shepheardes of our soules whiche were wont to feede Christes flocke with Christs doctrine, and to walke before them in lyuyng there after, and to geue their lyues for them, to their ensample and edifiyng, and to strengthē their weake faythes, are now so sore chaunged that if they smell that one of their flocke (as they now cal them and no lenger Christes) do but once long or desire for the true knowledge of Christ, they will slay hym, burnyng him with fire most cruelly? what is the cause of this, and that why the Prelates are so wod. they also teach false doctrine confirmyng it with lyes? verely it is the hād of God to auenge the wickednes of them that haue no loue nor lust vnto the truth of God, when it is preached, but reioyse in vnrighteoulnes. As thou maist see in the second Epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians: where he speaketh of the comming of Antichrist. whose commyng shalbe (sayth he) by the worckyng of Sathan with all miracles signes and wonders which are Euill rulers are a signe that God is angry with vs.

but

but lyes, and in all deceauable vnrighteousnes among them that perish, because they receaued not any loue to the truth to haue bene saued. Therefore shall God send them strong delusion, to beleue lyes. Marke how God to auenge his truth, sendeth to the vnthankefull false doctrine and false miracles to confirme them, and to harden their harts in the false way, that afterward it shall not be possible for them to admitte the truth. As thou seest in Exod. vij. and viij. how God suffered false miracles to be shewed in ỳ sight of Pharao to harden his hart, that he should not beleue the truth, in as much as hys sorcerers turned their roddes into Serpẽts, and turned water into bloud, and made frogges by their inchauntment: so thought he that Moses did all his miracles by the same craft and not by the power of GOD. And abode therfore in vnbelefe and perished in resisting God.

The cause of false miracles is: that we haue no lust vnto the truth.

Let vs receaue all thinges of God whether it be good or bad: let vs humble our selues vnder his mighty hand and submitte our selues vnto his nurture and chastising, and not withdraw our selues from his correction. Read Hebr. xij. for thy comfort: and let vs not take the stafe by the end or seke to auenge our selues on his rodde, which is the euill rulers. The child as long as he seketh to auenge him selfe vpon the rodde hath an euill hart. For he thinketh not that the correctiõ is right or that he hath deserued it, neither repenteth, but reioyseth in his wickednes. And so lõg shall he neuer be without a rodde: yea so long shall the rodde be made sharper and sharper. If he knowledge his faute and take the correction meekely and cuẽ kisse the rodde and amende him selfe with the learnyng and nurture of his father & mother, then is the rodde takẽ away and burnt.

The right way to come of bondage.

So if we resiste euill rulers seking to set our selues at libertie, we shall no doubt bring our selues into more euill bondage & wrappe our selues in much more miserie and wretchednes. For if the heades ouercome, then lay they more weight on their backes & make their yoke surer and tye them shorter. If they ouercome their euill rulers, then make they way for a more cruell natiõ, or for some tyraunt of their own nation, whiche hath no right vnto the crown. If we submitte our selues vnto the chastisyng of God and meekely knowledge our sinnes for whiche we are scourged, and kisse the rodde, and amende our liuyng: then will GOD take the rodde away, that is, he will geue the rulers a better hart. Or if they continue their malice and persecute you for well doyng, and because ye put your trust in GOD, then will God deliuer you out of their tyranny for his truthes sake. It is the same God now that was in the old time & deliuered the fathers and the Prophetes, the Apostles and other holy Saintes. And what soeuer he sware to them he hath sworne to vs. And as he deliuered them out of all temptation combraūce and aduersitie, because they consented and submitted them selues vnto his will and trusted in his goodnes and truth: euen so will he do vs if we do likewise.

Euill rulers ought not to be resisted.

God is alwayes one, alwayes true, alwayes mercifull, and excludeth no mã from his promises.

When soeuer the children of Israell fel from the way which God cõmaunded them to walke in, he gaue them vp vnder one tyraūt or an other. As soone as they came to the knowledge of thẽ selues and repented crying for mercy and leaning vnto the truth of his promises he sent one to deliuer them, as the hystories of the Bible make mention.

A Christen man in respect of God is but a passiue thing, a thyng that suffereth onely and doth nought, as the sicke in respect of the Surgion or Phisition doth but suffer onely. The Surgen launceth and cutteth out the dead flesh, searcheth the woundes, thrusteth in tentes, sereth, burneth, soweth or sticheth, and leyeth to corsies to draw out ỳ corruption, & last of all leyeth to healyng plaisters & maketh it whole. The Phisitiõ likewise geueth purgations and drinkes to driue out the disease and then with restauratiues bringeth health. Now if the sicke resiste the raser, the searching yron, and so forth, doth he not resiste his owne health and is cause of his owne death? So likewise is it of vs, if we resiste euil rulers which are the rodde & scourge wherewith God chastiseth vs, the instrumentes wherewith God searcheth our woundes and bitter drinkes to driue out the sinne and to make it appeare, and corsies to draw out by the rotes the core of the pore of the soule that freateth inward. A Christen mã therfore receaueth all thyng of the hand of God both good and bad, both sweete and sowre, both wealth & wo. If any person do me good, whether it be father mother and so forth, that receaue I of God and to God geue thankes. For he gaue wherewith, and gaue a commaundement, and moued his hart so to do. Aduersitie also receaue I of the hād of God as an wholesome medicine, though it be somewhat bitter. Temptation and aduersitie do both kill sinne, and also vtter it. For though a Christen man knoweth euery thyng how to lyue: yet is the flesh so weake, that he cā neuer take vp his crosse him selfe to kill and mortifie the flesh. He must haue an other to lay it on hys backe. In many also sinne lyeth hidde within and festereth and rotteth inward & is not sene: so that they thinke how they are good and perfect & kepe the law. As the younge man. Math. xix. sayd he had obserued all of a child, and yet lyed falsly in his hart, as the text folowing well declareth. when all is at peace and no man troubleth vs, we thinke that we are pacīēt and loue our neighbours as our selues: but let our neighbour hurt vs in woorde or deede, and then finde we it otherwise. Then fume we and rage and set vp the bristels & bend our selues to take vengeaunce. If we loued with godly loue for Christes kindnes sake, we should desire no vengeaunce, but pitie him and desire God to forgeue and amend him knowing well that no flesh can do otherwise thē sinne, except that God preserue hym. Thou wilt say what good doth such persecution and tyranny vnto the righteous? First it maketh them feele the woorkyng of Gods spirite in them, and that theyr fayth is vnfayned. Secondaryly I say that no man is so great a sinner, if he repent and beleue, but that he is righteous in Christ and in the promises: yet if thou looke on the flesh and vnto the law there is no man so perfect that is not founde a sinner. For any man so pure, that hath not somewhat to be yet purged. This shall suffice at this time as concernyng obedience.

How profitable aduersitie is.

The greatest sinner is righteous in Christ and the promises. And the perfectest and holyest is a sinner in the lawe & the flesh.

BEcause that God excludeth no degree from his mercy. But who so euer repenteth and beleueth his promises (of what soeuer degree he be of) the same shalbe partaker of hys grace: therfore as I haue described the obedience of them that are vnder power and rule, euen so will I with Gods helpe (as my dutie is) declare how the rulers whiche God shall vouchsafe to call vnto the knowledge of the truth ought to rule.

¶The office of a Father, and how he should rule.

FAthers moue not your children vnto wrath: but bring them vp in ỳ nurtour and information of the Lord. Ephe. vi. and Collos. iij. Fathers rate not your children, least they be of desperate minde, that is, least you discourage thē. For where ỳ fathers and mothers are weywarde hastie and churlishe, euer brauling and chiding: there are ỳ children anone discouraged and hartlesse, and apte for nothing, neither can they do any thyng aright. Bryng them vp in the nurtoure and information of the Lord. Teach thē to know Christ, and set Gods ordinaunce before them, saying: sonne or daughter, God hath created thee and made thee, thorough vs thy father and mother, and at his commaundement haue we so longe thus kindely brought thee vp, and kept thee from all perils, he hath commaunded thee also to obey vs, saying: childe obey thy father and mother. If thou meekely obey, so shalt thou grow both in the fauour of God & man, & knowledge of our Lord Christ. If thou wilt not obey vs at hys commaundement: thē are we charged to correct thee, yea, and if thou repent not and amende thy self, God shall slay thee by hys officers, or punishe thee euerlastingly. Nurtoure thē not worldly, & with worldly wisedome, saying: thou shalt come to honour, dignitie, promotion, and riches, thou shalt be better then such and such, thou shalt haue iij. or iiij. benefices, and be a great doctoure or a Byshop, and haue so many men wayting on thee, and do nothing but hauke and hunte, and lyue at pleasure, thou shalt not neede to sweate, to laboure or to take any payne for thy lyuing and so forth, filling thē full of pride, disdaine, and ambition, and corrupting theyr myndes wyth worldly perswasions. Let the fathers and mothers marke how they themselues were disposed at all ages, & by experience of their owne infirmities, helpe their children and keepe them from occasions. Let them teach their children to ape maryages of their fathers & mothers. And let theyr elders prouide mariages for them in season: teaching them also to know, that she is not hys wyfe which ỳ sonne taketh, nor he her husband which the daughter taketh wythout the consent and good wyll of their elders, or them that haue auctoritie ouer thē. If their frends wil not marry thē, then are they not to blame, if they marry thēselues. Let not ẏ fathers & mothers alwayes take the vtmost of their authoritie of their childzen, but at a time suffer with them, and beare theyr weaknesses, as Christ doth oures. Seeke Christ in your childzen, in your wiues, seruants, and subiectes. Father, mother, sonne, daughter, maister, seruaunt, kyng and subiect, be names in the worldly regiment. In Christ we are all one thing, none better then other, all brethren, & must all seeke Christ, and our brothers profit in Christ. And he that hath the knowledge whether he be Lorde or kyng, is bounde to submitte hymselfe and serue his brethrē, and to geue hym selfe for them, to winne them to Christ.

that

In Christ we are all seruaunts, and he that hath knowledge is bounde.

¶ The office of an husband and how he ought to rule.

HUsbandes loue your wiues, as Christ loued the congregation, and gaue hymselfe for it, to sanctifie it, and clense it. Men ought to loue their wiues, as their owne bodyes. For this cause shall a man leaue father and mother, and shall continue with his wife, and shall be made both one flesh. See that euer one of you loue his wyfe euen as hys owne bodye: All thys sayth Paul. Ephe. v. and Collo. iij. he sayth husbādes loue your wiues, and be not bitter vnto thē. And Peter in the thyrd chapter of hys first epistle sayth: men dwell with your wiues according to knowledge, (that is, according to the doctrine of Christ) geuing reuerence vnto the wife, as vnto the weaker vessell (that is, helpe her to beare her infirmities) and as vnto them that are heyres also of ẏ grace of lyfe, that your prayers be not let. In many thynges God hath made the men stronger then the women, not to rage vpon them, & to be tyrantes vnto then, but to helpe thē, but to beare their weakenesse. Be curteous thereafore vnto them, and winne thē vnto Christ, and ouercome them with kyndnes, that of loue they may obey ẏ ordinaunce that God hath made betwene man and wife.

Why the man is stronger then the woman.

¶ The office of a maister, and how he ought to rule.

PAule Ephe. vj. saith: ye maisters do euen ẏ same thinges vnto thē (that is, be maister after ẏ example & doctrine of Christ, as he before taught ẏ seruauntes to obey vnto their maisters as vnto Christ) putting away threanings (that is, geue thē fayre wordes, & exhort thē kyndely to do theyr dutie: yea nurtour them as thine own sonnes with ẏ Lords nourtour, that they may see in Christ a cause why they ought louingly to obey) and remember (saith he) that your maister also is in heauen. Neither is there any respect of persons wyth hym, that is, he is indifferent and not partiall: as great in hys sight is a seruaunt as a maister. And the third chapter to the Col. saith he: ye maisters, do vnto your seruaunts that which is iust and equal, remembring that ye also haue a maister in heauen. Geue your seruaunts kinde wordes, fode, rayment and learuyng. Be not bitter vnto them, rayle not on them, geue thē no cruell countenaunce: but according to the ensample and doctrine of Christ, deale with them. And when they labour sore, cherishe them agayne. when ye correct thē, let Gods worde be by, and do it wyth such good maner that they may see how that ye doe it to amende them onely, and to bring them vnto the way which God biddeth vs walke in, and not to auēge your selues, or to wreke your malice on them. If at a tyme thorough hastines ye exceede measure in punishyng, recompence it an other way and pardon them an other tyme.

Teach thy seruaunt to know Christ, and after Christes doctrine deale with hym.

Do all thyng with Gods worde.

¶ The dutie of Landlordes.

LEt Christen Landlordes be content wyth their rent and olde customes, not reysing ẏ rent or fynes & bringing vp new customes to oppresse their tenauntes: neither letting two or three tenauntryes vnto one man. Let them not take in their communes, neyther make parkes nor pastures of whole parishes. For God gaue the earth to men to inhabite, and not vnto sheepe and wilde deare. Be as fathers vnto your tenauntes: yea be vnto them, as Christ was vnto vs, and shew vnto them all loue, and kyndnes. what soeuer busines is among thē, be not partiall, fauouring one more thē an other. The complayntes, quarels, and strife that are among them, counte diseases of sicke people, and as a mercifull physition heale them wyth wisdome and good councell. Be pitifull and tender harted vnto them, and let not one of thy tenauntes teare out an others throte, but iudge their causes indifferently and compell them to make their diches, hedges, gates and wayes. For euē for such causes were ye made landlordes, and for such causes payde men rent at the beginning. For if such an order were not, one should slay another, and all should goe to wast. If thy tenaunt shall labour and toyle all the yeare to pay thee thy rent, and when he hath bestowed al his labour, his neighboures cattell shal deuoure his frutes, how tedyous and bitter should his life be? Se therefore that ye doe your duties agayne, and suffer no man to doe them wrong, saue the kyng onely. If he doe wrong, then must they abyde Gods iudgement.

Landlordes should withstand the wrong of the Tenauntes.

¶ The dutie of Kynges, and of the Iudges and Officers.

LEt kynges (if they had leuer be Christen in deede then so to be called) geue them selues all together to the wealth of their Realmes after the ensample of Christ: remembryng that the people are Gods & not theirs: ye are Christes inheritaunce and possession bought with his bloud. The most despised person in his Realme is the kynges brother, and felowmember with hym, and equall with him in the kyngdome of God and of Christ. Let him therfore not thinke him selfe to good to do thē seruice, neither seke any other thing in them, then a father seketh in his children, yea then Christ sought in vs. Though that the kyng in the temporal regiment be in the rowme of God and representeth God him self, and is without all comparison better thē his subiectes: yet let him put of that and become a brother, doing and leauing vndone all thinges in respect of the common wealth, that all men may see that he seketh nothing, but the profet of his subiectes. when a cause that requireth execution is brought before him, then onely let him take ỹ person of God on him. Then let him know no creature but heare all indifferently, whether it be a straunger or one of his owne Realme, & the small as well as the great and iudge righteously for the iudgemēt is the Lordes. Deut. i. In tyme of iudgement he is no minister in the kyngdome of Christ: he preacheth no Gospell, but the sharpe law of vengeance. Let him take the holy iudges of the olde Testament for an example and namely Moses which in executing the law was mercyles, otherwise more then a mother vnto them, neuer auengyng his owne wronges but suffering all thing, bearing euery mans weakenes, teachyng, warning, exhorting and euer caryng for them, and so tenderly loued them, that he desired God either to forgeue them, or to damne hym with them. Moyses.

There is no respect of person afore God.

Let the iudges also priuatly when they haue put of the person of a iudge exhort with good counsell and warne the people & helpe, that they come not at Gods iudgemēt: but the causes that are brought vnto them, when they sit in Gods stede, let them iudge, and cōdemne ỹ trespasser vnder lawfull witnesses and not breake vp into the consciences of men, after the example of Antichristes disciples, and compell thē either to forsweare them selues by the almightie God, and by the holy Gospell of his mercyfull promises, or to testifie against them selues. which abhominatiō our Prelates learned of Cayphas Math. xxvj. saying to Christ: I adiure or charge thee in the name of the liuing God, that thou tell vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of God: Let that which is secret to God onely, where of no profe cā be made nor lawfull witnesse brought, abyde vnto the commyng of the Lord which shall opē all secretes. If any malice breake forth, that let them iudge onely. For further authoritie hath God not geuen them. Iudges.

O tyranny to compell a man to accuse himselfe.

Our Prelates learned of Cayphas.

Secret sinnes pertayne vnto God to punishe, and open sinnes vnto the kyng.

Moyses Deut. xvij. warneth iudges to kepe them vpright and to looke on no mans person, that is, that they preferre not the hye before the low, the great before the small, the rich before poore, his acquaintaunce, frende, kinsman, countrey man or one of his own nation before a straūger, a frend or an aliant, ye or one of their own faith before an infidell: but that they looke on the cause onely to iudge indifferently. For the rowme that they are in, and the law that they execute are Gods, which as he hath made all, and is God of all and all are his sonnes: euen so is he iudge ouer all, and wil haue al iudged by his law indifferently, and to haue the right of his law, and will auenge the wrong done vnto the Turke or Sarcen. For though they be not vnder the euerlastyng Testament of God in Christ, as few of vs which are called Christen be, and euen no mo thē to whom God hath sent his promises and poured his spirite into their harts to beleue them, and through fayth graūen lust in their hartes, to fulfill the law of loue: yet are they vnder the Testament of ỹ law naturall, which is the lawes of euery land made for the common wealth there, and for peace and vnite that one may lyue by an other. In whiche lawes the infidels (if they kepe them) haue promises of worldly things. Who soeuer therfore hyndreth a very infidell from the right of that law, sinneth agaynst God, and of him will God be auēged. Moreouer Moyses warneth them that they receaue no giftes, rewardes or bribes. For those two pointes, fauoryng of one person more then an other, and receauyng rewardes, peruerte all right and equitie and is ỹ onely pestilence of all iudges.

Partialitie in Iudges is wicked.

Parciall-tie, & bribe takyng, is the pestilence of Iudges.

And the kynges warneth he that they haue not to many wiues, lest their hartes turne away: and that they read alway in the law of God, to learne to feare him, lest their hartes be lift vp aboue their brethren. Which .ij. pointes, women and pride the despising of their subiectes, which are in very deed their owne brethren, are the common pestilence of all Princes. Read the stories and see.

Women, pride and contempt of subiectes, are the pestilence of Princes.

The Shyriffes, Bayly arauntes, Constables and such like officers may let no man that hurteth his neighbour scape, but that they bryng them before the iudges, except they in the meane time agree with their neighbours and make them amendes.

Let Kinges defende their subiectes from the wronges of other natiōs, but picke no quarels for euery trifle: no let not our most holy father make them no more so dronkē with vayne names, with cappes of maintenaunce, and like bables, as it were poperry for childrē, to begger their Realmes and to murther their people, for defendyng of our holy fathers tyrāny. If a lawfull peace that standeth with Gods worde be made betwene Prince and Prince, and the name of God taken to recorde and the body of our Sauiour broken betwene them, vppon the bonde whiche they haue made, that peace or bonde can our holy father not dispence with, neither lowse it with all the keyes he hath: no verily Christ can not breake it. For he came not to breake the law but to fulfill it. Math. v.

Vayne names.

The holy father lenseth peace and vnite (treuth) and al honesty.

If any man haue broken the law or a good ordinaunce and repent & come to the right way agayne, then hath Christ power to forgeue hym: but licence to breake the law cā he not geue, much more his disciples and vicares (as they call them selues) can not do it.

The keyes wherof they so greatly bost them selues are no carnall things, but spirituall, and nothing els saue knowledge of the law and of the promises or Gospell: if any man for lacke of spirituall feelyng desire authoritie of men, let him read the old Doctours. If any man desire authoritie of Scripture Christ sayth (Luke. xj.) woe be to you lawyers for ye haue take away the key of knowledge, ye enter not in your selues, and them that come in, ye forbyd, that is, they had blynded ỹ Scripture whose knowledge (as it were a keye) letteth into God, with glosses and traditions. Likewise findest thou Math. xvj. As Peter answered in the name of al: so Christ promised him the keyes in the person of all: Math. xvj. And in the. xx. of John he payed them saying: receaue the holy Ghost, whose soeuers sinnes ye remitte they are remitted or forgeuen, & whose soeuers sinnes ye retaine they are retained or holden. With preachyng the promises loose they as many as repent and beleue. And for that John sayth receaue ỹ holy ghost. Luke in his last Chapter sayth: then opened he their wittes, that they might vnderstand the Scriptures and sayd vnto them: thus it is written. And thus it behoued Christ to suffre and to rise agayne the thyrd day. And that repentaunce & remission of sinnes should be preached in his name amōg all nations. At preachyng of the law repent men, and at the preachyng of the promises do they beleue & are saued. Peter in the second of the Actes practised his keyes, and by preachyng the law brought the people into ỹ knowledge of them selues, and bound their consciences, so that they were pricked in their hartes, and sayd vnto Peter and to the other Apostles, what shall we doe? Then brought they forth the keye of the swete promises saying: repent and be Baptised euery one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sinnes, and ye shall receaue the gift of the holy ghost. For the promise was made vnto you, and vnto your children, and to all that are a farre euen as many as the Lord shal call. Of like examples is the Actes full, and Peters Epistles, and Paules Epistles and all the Scripture, neither hath our holy father any other authoritie of Christ or by the reason of his predecessor Peter

What the keyes are & why they are so called.

The keyes are promised.

The keyes are payde.

To bynde and loose.

Repentaunce and forgeuenes come by preachyng.

Peter practiseth his keyes.

The popes authoritie: is to preach gods worde onely.

then to preach Gods word. As Christ cōpareth the vnderstandyng of Scripture vnto a keye, so compareth he it to a net, and vnto leuen and vnto many other thinges for certeine properties.

Beware of the net and of the leuen and of the counterfet keyes of our holy father.

I marueil therfore that they boast not them selues of their nette and leuen, as well as of their keyes, for they are all one thyng. But as Christ biddeth vs beware of ẏ leuē of the Pharisees, so beware of their counterfeted keyes and of their false nette (which are their traditiōs and ceremonies, their hypocrisie & false doctrine, wherewith they katch, not soules vnto Christ, but authoritie and riches vnto them selues.

Not to an hereticke sayth the Pope.

Let christen kynges therefore keepe their fayth and truth, and all lawfull promises and bondes, not one wyth an other onely, but euen wyth the Turke or whatsoeuer infidell it be. For so it is right before God, as the scriptures and exāples of the Bible testifie. whosoeuer voweth an vnlawful vow, promiseth an vnlawfull promise, sweareth an vnlawful oth, sinneth against God, and ought therfore to breake it. He needeth not to sue to Rome for a licence. For he hath Gods word, & not a licēce onely: but also a commaundement to breake it. They therefore ẏ are sworne to be true vnto Cardinals & Bysshops, that is to say, false vnto God, the king, and the realme, may breake their othes lawfully without grudge of conscience by the authoritie of Gods worde. In makyng them they sinned, but in repēting and breakyng them they please God highly, and receaue forgeuenes in Christ.

Vnlawfull vowes or othes men are commaunded to breake.

Let kynges take their dutie of their subiectes, and that is necessary vnto ẏ defence of the realme. Let them rule their Realmes them selues, wyth the helpe of laye men that are sage, wyse, learned, and expert. Is it not a shame aboue all shames & a monstrous thing, that no man should be founde able to gouerne a worldly kyngdome saue bysshops and prelates, that haue forsakē the worlde, and are taken out of the worlde and appoynted to preach the kyngdome of God? Christ sayth, ẏ hys kingdome is not of this world. Iohn. 18. And Luk. 12. vnto ẏ young mā that desired hym to bid his brother to gene hym part of the inheritaunce, he answered, who made me a iudge or a deuider among you. No man that layeth his hand to the plowe and looketh backe is apt for the kingdome of heauen. Luke. ix. No man can serue two maisters but he must despise the one Math. vj.

Bysshops.

Behold the face of the Pope and of the Bysshops in this glasse.

To preach Gods worde is to much for halfe a man. And to minister a temporall kingdome is to much for halfe a man also. Either other requireth an whole man. One therfore can not well do both. He that auengeth himselfe on euery trifle is not mete to preach ẏ pacience of Christ, how that a man ought to forgene and to suffer all thynges. He that is ouerwhelmed with all maner riches, and doth but seeke more dayly, is not meete to preach pouertie. He that will obey no man, is not mete to preach how we ought to obey all men. Peter saith Act. vj. It is not meete that we should leaue the word of God and serue at the tables. Paule sayth in the ix. chapter of the first Corinthe. wo is me if I preach not a terible saying, verely for Popes, Cardinals, and Bysshoppes. If he had sayd, wo be vnto me, if I fight not & moue princes vnto warre, or if I encrease not S. Peters patrimonie (as they call it) it had bene a more easy saying for them.

Peters patrimonie.

Christ forbiddeth hys disciples and that oft (as thou mayst see Math. xviij. And also xx. Mark. ix. and also x. Luk. ix. and also xxij. Euen at his last supper) not onely to clime aboue Lordes. kynges, and Emperours in worldly rule, but also to exalt themselues one aboue an other in ẏ kingdome of God. But in vayne: for the Pope would not heare it though he had commaunded it tenne thousand tymes. Gods worde should rule onely and not Bysshoppes decrees, or the Popes pleasure. That ought they to preach purely and spiritually, and to fashion their liues after, & wyth all enlample of godly liuyng & long suffering, to draw all to Christ: and not to expounde the Scriptures carnally and worldly, saying: God spake thys to Peter and I am his successour, therefore thys authoritie is myne onely: and then bring in the tyranny of their fleshly wisdome, in præsentia maioris, cessat potestas minoris, that is, in the presence of the greater, ẏ lesse hath no power. There is no brotherhod where such philosophy is taught.

The popes authoritie is improued.

Bysshops haue captiued Gods word wt they? owne decrees.

Such philosophy, and so to abuse the scriptures, and to mocke with Gods word, is after the maner of the Bysshop of Rochesters diuinitie. For he in hys Sermō of the condemnation of Martin Luther, proueth by a shadow of the olde testament, that is, by Moyses and Aaron, that Sathan and Antichrist our moſt holy father the Pope is Chriſtes vicare & head of Chriſtes cõgregation.

Moyſes (ſayth he) ſignifieth Chriſt, and Aaron the Pope. And yet the epiſtle vnto the Hebrues proueth that the hye Prieſt of the olde lawe ſignifieth Chriſt, and his offering and hys going in once in the yeare into the inner temple, ſignifie the offering wherewyth Chriſt offered hymſelfe, and Chriſtes goyng in vnto the father to be an euerlaſting mediator or interceſſor for vs. Neuerthelesse Rocheſter proueth the contrary by a ſhadow: by a ſhadow verely. For in ſhadowes they walke with out all ſhame, and the light will they not come at, but enforce to ſtoppe and quench it with all craft and falſhod, leſt their abhominable iugling ſhoulde be ſene. If any man looke in the light of ỹ new teſtament, he ſhal clearely ſee, that that ſhadow may not be ſo vnderſtãd.

They walke in ſhadowes.

Vnderſtand therfore that one thing in the Scripture repreſenteth diuers thynges. A Serpent figureth Chriſt in one place, and the Deuill in an other. And a Lyon doth lykewiſe. Chriſt by Leuen ſignifieth Gods worde in one place, and in an other ſignifieth thereby the traditions of ỹ Phareſeis which ſowred & altered Gods word for theyr auauntage. Now Moyſes verely in ỹ ſayd place repreſenteth Chriſt, and Aaron which was not yet hye Prieſt, repreſẽted not Peter onely or hys ſucceſſour, as my Lord of Rocheſter woulde haue it (for Peter was to litle to beare Chriſtes meſſage vnto all the world) but ſignifieth euery diſciple of Chriſt & euery true preacher of Gods worde. For Moyſes put in Aarons mouth, what he ſhould ſay, and Aaron was Moyſes Prophet, and ſpake not hys owne meſſage (as the Pope and Byſhoppes doe) but that which Moyſes had receaued of God and deliuered vnto hym. Exod. 4. and alſo 7. So ought euery preacher to preach Gods worde purely, and neither to adde nor minuſh. A true meſſenger muſt doe his meſſage truely, and ſay neither more nor leſſe then he is commaunded. Aaron when he is hye prieſt, and offereth and purgeth the people of their worldly ſinne, which they had falle in in touching vncleanly thynges, and in eating meates forbidden (as we ſinne in handling the chalice, and the Alter ſtone, & are purged wyth the Byſhops bleſſing) repreſenteth Chriſt, which purgeth vs from all ſinne in the ſight of God, as the epiſtle vnto the Hebrues maketh mentiõ.

Aaron is euery true preacher.

Aaron repreſenteth Chriſt.

When Moyſes was gone vp into the mounte and Aaron left behynde, and made the golden Calfe, there Aaron repreſenteth all falſe preachers, and namely, our moſt holy father ỹ Pope, which in like maner maketh vs beleue in a Bull, as ỹ Biſhop of Rocheſter ful wel alleageth the place in hys ſermon.

If the Pope be ſignified by Aaron and Chriſt by Moyſes, why is not the Pope as well content with Chriſtes law and doctrine, as Aaron was with Moyſes? what is the cauſe that our Biſhops preach the pope and not Chriſt, ſeyng the Apoſtles preached not Peter, but Chriſt. Paul. ij. Cor. iiij. ſayth of hym ſelfe and of his felowapoſtles: we preache not our ſelues but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, and preach our ſelues your ſeruauntes for Jeſus ſake. And. i. Cor. iij. Let no mã reioyſe in men. For all thynges are yours, whether it bee Paul, or Apollo, or Peter: whether it be the world, or life, or death: whether they be preſent thinges or thynges to come: all are yours & ye are Chriſtes & Chriſt is Gods. He leueth out ye are Peters, or ye are the popes. And in the Chapter folowyng he ſayth. Let men thus wiſe eſteme vs, euẽ the miniſters of Chriſt. &c. And. ij. Cor. xj. Paul was gelous ouer his Corinthians, becauſe they fell from Chriſt, to whom he had maried thẽ, & did cleaue vnto the authoritie of men (for euẽ then falſe Prophetes ſought authoritie in the name of the hye Apoſtles) Jam ſayth he gelouſe ouer you with godly gelouſie. For J coupled you to one mã, to make you a chaſt virgine to Chriſt: but J feare leſt as the Serpent deceaued Eue through his ſuttilte, euen ſo your wittes ſhould be corrupt from the ſingleneſſe that is in Chriſt. And it followeth: If he that commeth to you preached an other Jeſus, or if ye receaue an other ſpirite or another Goſpell, then might ye well haue ben content, that is, ye might haue well ſuffered him to haue authoritie aboue me. But J ſuppoſe (ſayth he) that J was not behynd the hye Apoſtles: meaning in preaching Jeſus & his Goſpell, and in miniſtring the ſpirite. And in the ſaid. xj. Chapter, he proueth by ỹ doctrine of Chriſt, that he is greater then the hye Apoſtles. For Chriſt ſayth, to be great in the kingdome of God, is to do ſeruice and take payne for other. Vpon which rule Paul diſputeth ſaying: if they be the miniſters of Chriſt J am more. In labours more abound-

Aaron addeth nothyng to Moſes law.

The Apoſtles preached not Peter: but Chriſt.

Paule is greater ths hye Apoſtles.

Paule is greater the Peter.

Paul proued his Apostleshyp with preachyng and sufferyng: The Bysshops proue there Apostleshyp & bulles & shadowes.

The Apostles were sent of Christ & lyke authoritie.

The authoritie that Christ gaue was to preache Christes word.

damnt, in stripes aboue measure in prison more plenteously, in death oft and so forth. If Paul preached Christ more then Peter and suffered more for hys congregation, then is he greater then Peter by ỹ testimony of Christ. And in the xij. he sayth. In nothing was I inferior vnto ỹ hye Apostles. Though I be nothing, yet the tokēs of an Apostle were wrought amōg you with all pacience, with signes & wōders & mighty dedes. So proued he his authority & not with a bulle frō Peter sealed with cold lead, either with shadowes of the old Testament falsly expounded.

Moreouer the Apostles were sent immediatly of Christ and of Christ receaued they their authoritie, as Paul boasteth hym selfe euery where. Christ (sayth he) sent me to preach the Gospell. i. Corint. i. And I receaued of the Lord that which I delinered vnto you i. Cor. xj. And Gal. i. I certifie you brethrē that the Gospell which was preached of me, was not after the maner of men (that is to witte, carnal or fleshly) neither receaued I it of man, neyther was it taught me: but I receaued it by ỹ reuelation of Jesus Christ. And Gal. ij. He that was mighty in Peter in the Apostleshyp ouer the circumcision, was mighty in me among the Gētiles. And i. Timoth. i. Readest thou lykewyse. And John xx. Christ sent them forth indifferently, and gaue them lyke power. As my father sent me (sayth he) so send I you: that is, to preach and to suffer, as I haue done, and not to conquer enemyes and kyngdomes, and to subdue all temporall power vnder you wyth disguised hypocrisie. He gaue thē the holy Ghost to bynde and loose indifferently, as thou seest: And afterward he sent forth Paule wyth like authority, as thou seest in the Actes. And in the last of Mathew sayth he: all power is geuen me in heauē and in earth, goe therfore and teach all naciōs, baptising them in the name of the father, & of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost, teaching them to obserue whatsoeuer I commaunded you. The authoritie that Christ gaue thē was to preach, yet not what they would imagine, but what he had commaunded. Loe sayth he, I am with you alwayes, euen vnto the ende of the world. He sayde not I goe my way, and loe here is Peter in my stede: But sent them euery man to a sundry countrey, whether soeuer the spirite caried them, and went with thē hym self. And as he wrought with Peter where he went, so wrought he with the other where they went, as Paul boasteth of him selfe vnto the Galathians. Seyng now that we haue Christes doctrine and Christes holy promises, and seyng that Christ is euer present with vs his owne selfe, how commeth it that Christ may not raigne immediatly ouer vs, as well as the Pope which commeth neuer at vs? Seyng also that the office of an Apostle is to preach onely, how can the Pope chalenge with right, any authoritie where he preacheth not? How commeth it also that Rochester will not let vs be called one congregacion be the reason of one God, one Christ, one spirite, one Gospell, one fayth, one hope, and one Baptisme, as well as because of one Pope?

If any naturall beast with hys worldly wisedome strine, that one is greater then an other, because that in congregations one is sent of an other, as we see in the Actes. I aūswere that Peter sent no man, but was sent him selfe, and Iohn was sent, and Paul, Sylas and Barnabas were sent. Howbeit such maner sendynges are not worldly, as Princes send Ambassadours, no not as Friers send their limiters to gather their brethrenhedes which must obey whether they will or will not. Here all thyng is free and willyngly. And the holy ghost bringeth thē together whiche maketh their willes free, and ready to bestow them selues vpon their neighbours profit. And they that come, offer thē selues, and all that they haue or cā do, to serue the Lord & their brethrē. And euery mā, as he is found apt and meete to serue his neighbour, so is he sent or put in office. And of the holy Ghost are they sent with the consent of their brethren and with their owne consēt also. And Gods word ruleth in that congregation, vnto which word euery man confirmeth his will. And Christ which is alway present is the head. But as our Bishops heare not Christes voyce, so see they him not present: and therfore make them a God on the earth, of the kinde (I suppose) of Aarons calfe. For he bringeth forth no other frute but Bulles.

Why Bysshops make them a God on earth.

Aarō made a calfe. And the Pope maketh Bulles.

For as much also as Christ is as great as Peter, why is not his seate as great as Peters? Had the head of the Empire ben at Ierusalem, there had ben no mention made of Peter. It is verely, as Paul sayth in the xj. Chap. of the ij. Epistle to the Corinthians.

The

The false Apostles are disceatful workers, and fashion them selues like vnto the Apostles of Christ. That is the shauen nation preached Christ falsly, yea vnder the name of Christ preached them selues, and raigne in Christes stede: haue also taken away the keye of knowledge and haue wrapped ẏ people in ignorauncę, and haue taught thē to beleue in them selues, in their traditions and false ceremonies: so that Christ is but a vayne name, and after they had put Christ out of his rowme, they gate them selues to the Emperour and kynges, and so long ministred their busines till they haue also put thē out of their rowmes, & haue got their authorities from them and raigne also in their stede: so that ẏ Emperour and kynges are but vayne names and shadowes, as Christ is, hauyng nothyng to do in the world. Thus raygne they in the stede of God and man and haue all power vnder them, and do what they list.

The shauē nation hath put Christ out of hys rowme, and all kinges and the Emperour.

Christ is but a vaine name.

Proper ministers.

Let vs see an other poynt of our great clarke. A lule after the beginning of hys Sermon, entendyng to proue that which is clearer then the sonne & serueth no more for his purpose then Ite missa est serueth to proue that our Lady was borne without originall sinne: he alledgeth a saying that Martin Luther sayth, which is this, if we affirme that any one Epistle of Paul or any one place of his Epistles pertaineth not vnto the vniuersall Church, that is, to all the congregation of them that beleue in Christ, we take away all S. Paules authoritie. wherupō sayth Rochester. If it be thus of the woordes of S. Paule, much rather it is true of the Gospels of Christ and of euery place of them. O malicious blyndnes. First note his blindnes. He vnderstādeth by this woorde Gospell no more but the foure Euangelistes, Mathew, Marke, Luke and John, and thinketh not that the Actes of Apostles and the Epistles of Peter, of Paul & of John and of other like, are also the Gospell. Paul calleth his preachyng the Gospell. Rom. v. and. i. Cor. iiij. and Gal. i. and. i. Timoth. i. The Gospel is euery where one though it be preached of diuers, and signifieth glad tidynges, that is to witte, an open preachyng of Christ and the holy Testament & gracious promises that God hath made in Christes bloud, to all that repent and beleue. Now is there more Gospell in one Epistle of Paule, that is to say,

Rochester is proued both ignorant and malicious.

The Epistles of Paule are the Gospell.

What Gospell signifieth.

Christ is more clearely preached, and more promises rehearsed in one Epistle of Paul, then in the. iij. first Euangelistes. Mathew, Marke & Luke.

Consider also his maliciousnes, how wickedly and how craftely he taketh away ẏ authoritie of Paule. It is much rather true of the Gospelles, and of euery place in them then of Paule. If that which ẏ foure Euangelistes wrote be truer then that which Paule wrote, then is it not one Gospell that they preached, neither one spirit that taught them. If it be one Gospell and one spirite, how is one truer then the other? Paule proueth his authoritie to ẏ Galathians and to the Corinthians, because that he receaued his Gospell by reuelation of Christ and not of man: & because that when he comuned wyth Peter and ẏ hye Apostles of hys Gospell & preaching, they coulde improue nothyng, neither teach hym any thing: and because also that as many were cōuerted and as great miracles shewed by his preaching, as at the preaching of the hie Apostles, and therefore will be of no lesse authoritie, thē Peter and other hie Apostles: for haue his Gospell of lesse reputation then theirs.

One Gospell, one spirite, one truth.

The authoritie of Paule, and of hys Gospell.

Fynally that thou mayst know Rochester for euer, and all the remnaunt by him, what they are within ẏ skinne, marke how he playeth bo pepe with ẏ Scripture. He allegeth the beginning of the tenth chapter to the Hebrues. Vmbram habens lex futurorum bonorum, the lawe hath but a shadow of thynges to come. And immediatly expoundeth the figure cleane contrary vnto the chapter folowing, and to all the whole epistle, making Aaron a figure of ẏ Pope, whom the Epistle maketh a figure of Christ.

Rochester playeth bo pepe.

He allegeth halfe a texte of Paule. i. Timoth. iiij. In the latter dayes some shall depart from the faith, geuing hede vnto spirites of error and deuilish doctrine: but it foloweth in the text, geuing attendaunce or hede vnto the deuelishe doctrine of them which speake false thorow hypocrisy, and haue their consciences marked with a hote yron, forbidding to mary, and commaūding to abstaine from meates which God hath created to be receaued wyth geuing thākes, which two thynges who euer did saue ẏ Pope Rochesters God, makyng sinne in the creatures which God hath created for mās vse to be receaued wyth thankes: The kyngdome of heauē is not meate and drinke sayth

S. iiij. Paul,

Paule, but rightcousnes, peace, and ioye in the holy Ghost. For whosoeuer in these thynges serueth Christ, pleaseth God, and is alowed of men. Rom. xiiij. Had Rochester therfore not a cōscience marked wyth the hote yron of malice, so that he can not consent vnto the will of God and glory of Christ, he woulde not haue so alleaged the texte which is contrary to none saue themselues.

He alleageth an other text of Paule in the second chapter of his second epistle to the Thessalonians. Erit discessio primum, that is sayth Rochester, before the comming of Antichrist, there shall be a notable departing from the sayth. And Paule sayth. The Lord commeth not except there come a departing first. Paules meaning is, that the last day commeth not so shortly, but that Antichrist shall come first and destroy the fayth, and sit in the temple of God, and make all men worship him, and beleue in hym (as the Pope doth) and then shal Gods worde come to light agayne (as it doth at thys tyme) and destroy hym and vtter his iuggling, and then cōmeth Christ vnto iudgement. what say ye of this crafty cōueyar? would he spare, suppose ye to alleage & to wrest other doctours pestilently, which feareth not for to iugle wyth ỳ holy scripture of God, expounding ỳ vnto Antichrist which Paule speaketh of Christ? No be ye sure. But euen after this maner wise peruert they the whole scripture and all doctours, wresting thē vnto their abhominable purpose, cleane contrary to the meaning of the text, & to the circumstaunces that goe before and after. Which deuelishe fashyon lest the lay men should perceaue, is the very cause why ỳ they will not suffer the Scripture to be had in the Englishe tounge, neither any worke to be made, that should bring the people to knowledge of the truth.

The cause why they will not haue the scripture in Englishe.

He alleageth for the Popes authoritie, Saint Cipryan, Saint Augustine, Ambrose, Hierome, and Origene: of which neuer one knew of any authoritie, that one Bishop should haue aboue an other. And Saint Gregory alleageth he, which would receaue no such authoritie aboue hys brethren when it was profered hym. As the maner is to call Tully chiefe of Oratours for hys singular eloquence, and Aristotle chiefe of Philosophers, and Virgill chiefe of Poets, for thir singular learnyng, and not for any authoritie that they had ouer other: so was it the maner to call Peter chiefe of the Apostles for his singular actiuitie and boldnes, and not that he shoulde be Lord ouer his brethren, contrary to hys owne doctrine. Yet compare that chiefe Apostle vnto Paule, and he is found a great way inferior. This I say not that I woulde that any man shoulde make a God of Paule, contrary vnto hys owne learning. Notwithstāding yet this maner of speaking is left vnto vs of our elders, that when we say the Apostle sayth so, we vnderstand Paule for hys excellency aboue other Apostles. I would he would tel you how Hierom, Augustine, Bede, Origene, and other doctours expound this texte vpon this rocke I wyll builde my congregation: and how they enterpret the keyes also. Thereto, Pasce, pasce, pasce, which Rochester leaueth without any Englishe, signifieth not Pole, shere, and shaue. Vpon which texte beholde the faithfull exposition of Bede.

Tully chiefe of Oratours.

Note also how craftely he would enfeoffe the Apostles of Christ with their wicked traditions and false Ceremonies, which they themselues haue fayned, alleaging Paule. ij. Thessal. ij. I aunswere that Paule taught by mouth such things as he wrote in his epistles. And his traditions were the Gospell of Christ, and honest maners & liuing, and such a good order as becommeth the doctrine of Christ. As that a woman obey her husband, haue her head couered, keepe silence, and goe womanly and christenly apparelled: that children and seruauntes be in subiection: and that the younge obey their elders, that no man eate but he that laboureth and worketh, and that men make an earnest thing of Gods word, and of hys holy Sacramentes: and to watch, fast, and pray, and such lyke, as the Scripture commaundeth. Which thynges he that woulde breake were no christen man. But we may well cōplayne and crye to God for helpe, that it is not lawful for the Popes tyranny, to teach ỳ people what prayer is, what fasting is, and wherefore it serueth. There were also certayne customes alway which were not commaunded in paine of hell or euerlasting dānatiō, as to watch all night, and to kysse one an other: which as soone as the people abused, then they brake thē. For which cause the Bysshops myght breake many thynges now in lyke maner. Paule also in many thynges which God had Rochester alleageth Paule for his blinde ceremonies contrary to Paules doctrine.

It is not lawfull for vs to tell what prayer is, what fasting is, or wherefore it serueth.

the Apostles gaue vs any blynd ceremonies wherof we should not know the reason that I denye and also defie, as a thyng cleane contrary vnto the learnyng of Paul euery where.

For Paul commaundeth that no man once speake in the Church, that is, in the congregation, but in a toung that all men vnderstand, except that there be an interpreter by: he cõmaundeth to labour for knowledge, vnderstandyng, and feelyng and to beware of superstition, & persuasions of worldly wisedome, philosophy, and of hypo-crisie and ceremonies, and of all maner disguising, & to walke in ỹ playne and open truth. Ye were once darkenes (sayth he) but now are ye light in the Lord, walke therefore as the children of light. Ephe. v. how doth Paul also wish them encrease of grace in e-uery Epistle? How crieth he to God to augment their knowledge, that they should be no more children wauering with euery winde of doctrine, but would vouchsafe to make them full men in Christ, and in the vnderstandyng of the mysteries or secretes of Christ? so that it should no be possible for any man to disceaue them with any entilyng reasons of worldly wisedom, or to beguile them with blind cerimonies, or to lead them out of the waye with superstitiousnes of disguised hy-pocrisie: vnto which ful knowledge are the spirituall officers ordeined to bring them. Ephes. iiij. So farre it is away that Christes Apostles should geue them traditions of blind cerimonies without signification, or of whiche no man should know the reason as Rochester whiche loueth shadowes and darkenes lyeth on them: God stoppe his blasphemous mouth.

Consider also how studiously Rochester alledgeth Origene, both for his Pope, and also to stablish his blind ceremonies with all: which Origene of all heretickes is condemned to be the greatest. He is an auncient Doctour sayth he, yea and to whõ in this point great fayth is to be geuen: yea verely Aristotle and Plato and euen very Ro-bynhode is to beleued in such a point, that so greatly maintaineth our holy fathers authoritie, and all his disguisinges.

Last of all as once a craftie theefe whẽ he was espied and folowed, cryed vnto the people. Stoppe the theef, stop the theefe. And as many to begyn with all, cast first in an other mans teth that which he feareth should be layd to his owne charge: euen so Rochester layeth to Martin Luthers charge the slaying & murtheryng of Christen men, because they will not beleue in his doctrine, which thing Rochester and his brethrẽ haue not ceased to do now certein hundred yeares, with such malice that whẽ they be dead, they rage burnyng their bodies, of which some they them sel-ues of lickelyhode killed before secretly. And because that all the worlde knoweth that Martin Luther slayeth no mã, but killeth onely with the spirituall sword, the word of God, such can-kred cõsciences as Rochester hath. Neither persecuteth, but suffereth persecution: yet Rochester with a goodly Argument proueth that he would do it if he could. And marke I pray you what an Oratour he is, and how vehement-ly he persuadeth it. Martin Luther hath burned the Popes decretals: a manifest signe, sayth he, that he would haue burnt the Popes holmes also, if he had had him. A like Argument (which I suppose to be rather true) I make. Rochester and his holy brethrẽ haue burnt Christes Testament: an euident signe verely that they woulde haue burnt Christ him selfe also if they had had him.

I had almost verely left out the chiefest point of all. Rochester both abhominable and shameleſſe, yea & sterke mad with pure malice, and so adased in the braines with spite, that he cã not o-uercome the truth that he seeth not, or rather careth not what he sayth: in the ende of his first destruction, I would

Payne of cursing, damnatiõ, and so forth.

Paule had none authoritie: thẽ had Peter none, where had then the Pope this authoritie?

Rochester is vnpro-ued.

Wherefore the spiritu-all officers are ordayned.

Rochesters alleageth heretikes for his purpose for lacke of scripture.

Robyn-hode is of authoritie enough to proue the Pope withall.

Rochester is an Ora-toure.

Rochester is cleane beside hymselfe.

say instructiō as he calleth it, intēding to proue that we are iustified thorough holy workes, allegeth halfe a texte of Paule of the fift to the Galathians (as his maner is to iuggle and cōuey craftely) fides per dilectionem operans. which texte he thus wise Englisheth: fayth which is wrought by loue, and maketh a verbe passiue of a verbe deponent. Rochester will haue loue to goe before and fayth to spring out of loue. Thus Antichrist turneth the rotes of the tree vpward. I must first loue a bitter medicine (after Rochesters doctrine) and then beleue that it is wholsome. when by naturall reason, I first hate a bitter medicine, vntill I be brought in belief of the phisition, that it is holesome, & that the bitternes shall heale me, and then afterward loue it of that beliefe. Doth the childe loue the father first, & thē beleue that he is his sonne or heire, or rather because he knoweth that he is his sonne or heire and beloued, therfore loueth agayne? John sayth in the third of his first epistle. See what loue the father hath shewed vpon vs, that we should be called his sonnes. Because we are sonnes therefore loue we. Now by fayth are we sonnes as John sayth in the fyrst chapter of his Gospel. He gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, in that they beleued on hys name. And Paule sayth, in the thyrd chapter of hys Epistle to the Galathians, we are all the sonnes of God by the faith which is in Jesus Christ. And John in the sayd chapter of hys epistle sayth. Hereby perceaue we loue, that he gaue hys life for vs. we coulde see no loue nor cause to loue agayne, except that we beleued that he dyed for vs, and that we were saued thorough his death. And in the chapter folowing sayth John. Herein is loue: not that we loued God: but that he loued vs, and sent his sonne to make agreement for our sinnes. So God sent not hys sonne for any loue that we had to hym: but of the loue, that he had to vs, sent he hys sonne, that we myght so loue & loue agayne. Paule lykewise in the 8. chapter to the Romaynes, after that he hath declared the infinite loue of God to vs ward, in that he spared not hys owne sonne, but gaue hym for vs, cryeth out saying: who shall separate vs from the loue of God? shall persecution, shall a sworde? &c. No, sayth he, I am sure that no creature shall separate vs from the loue of God, that is, in Christ Jesus our Lord: as who should say, we see so great loue in God to vs warde in Christes death, that though all misfortune should fall on vs, we can not but loue agayne. Now how know we that God loueth vs? verely by fayth. So therefore, though Rochester be a beast faythlesse, yet ought naturall reason to haue taught hym, that loue springeth out of fayth and knowledge: and not fayth and knowledge out of loue. But let vs see the text. Paule sayth thus. In Christ Jesu, neither circumcision is any thyng worth, nor incircumcision: but fayth which worketh thorow loue, or which thorow loue is strōg or mighty in working, & not which is wrought by loue, as the iuggler sayth. Faith that loueth Gods cōmaundemēts iustifieth a mā. If thou beleue gods promises in christ, and loue his commaūdementes, then art thou safe. If thou loue ẏ commaūdemēt, then art thou sure ẏ thy fayth is vnfained, & that gods spirit is in thee.

How fayth iustifieth before God in the hart, & how loue springeth of fayth, and compelleth vs to worke, and how the workes iustifie before the worlde, & testifie what we are, & certifie vs that our fayth is vnfayned, and that ẏ right spirit of God is in vs, see in my booke of ẏ iustifiyng of faith, and there shalt thou see all thyng aboundantly. Also of the controuersie betwene Paul and James see there. Neuer the later, whē Rochester sayth, if faith onely iustified, then both the deuils and also sinners that lie still in sinne should be saued, hys argument is not worth a strawe. For neyther the deuils nor yet sinners that continue in sinne of purpose & delectation, haue any such fayth as Paul speaketh of. For Paules fayth is to beleue Gods promises. Fayth (sayth he) Rom. x. cōmeth by hearing, and hearing commeth by the worde of God. And how shall they heare wythout a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is writtē (saith he) how beautifull are the feete that bring glade tydinges of peace, and bringe tydynges of good thynges. Now when sent God any messengers vnto the deuils to preach them peace, or any good thyng: The deuill hath no promise: he is therefore excluded from Paules fayth. The deuill beleueth that Christ dyed, but not that he dyed for hys sinnes. Neither doth any that cōsenteth in the hart to continue in sinne, beleue that Christ dyed for him. For to beleue that Christ dyed for vs, is to see

If Rochester be such a iuggler: What suppose ye of the rest? let Rochester be an example therfore to iudge them all.

Faith is the roote: and loue springeth of fayth.

Though Rochester haue not the spirit to iudge spirituall thinges, yet ought reason to haue kept him from so shamefully lying. So God hath blynded him to bring them falshod to light.

The controuersy betwene James & Paule.

Why deuils haue none of Paules fayth, no sinners that repent not.

A mā may beleue that Christ dyed and many other thynges not hauing in Christ our horrible damnation, and how we were appointed vnto eternall paines, and to feele, and to be sure that we are deliuered therefro thorough Christ: in that we haue power to hate our sins, and to loue Gods commaundements. All such repent and haue their hartes loosed out of captiuitie and bondage of sinne, and are therefore iustified thorough fayth in Christ. Wicked sinners haue no fayth, but imaginations and opinions about Christ, as our schole men haue in their principles, about whiche they braule so fast one with an other. It is an other thyng to beleue ỳ the kyng is rich, & that he is rich vnto me, and that my part is therein: and that he will not spare a peny of his riches at my neede, when I beleue that the king is rich I am not moued. But when I beleue that he is rich for me, & that he will neuer faile me at my nede, then loue I, and of loue am ready to worke vnto the vttermost of my power: But let vs returne at the last vnto our purpose agayne.

Why lay men can not rule.

WHat is the cause that laye men can not now rule, as well as in times past, and as the Turkes yet doe? Verely because that Antichrist wyth the miste of hys iugglyng hath beguiled our eyes, and hath cast a superstitious feare vpon the world of christen men, & hath taught thē to dread, not God & his worde, but hymselfe and his word: not Gods law and ordinaunces, princes and officers which God hath set to rule the world, but his owne law and ordinaunces, traditions and ceremonies, and disguised disciples, which he hath set euery where to deceaue the world, and to expell the lyght of Gods worde, that his darcknes may haue roome. For we see by dayly experience of certayne hundred yeares lōg, that he which feareth neyther God nor hys worde, neyther regardeth father, mother, mayster, or Christ hymself, which rebelleth against God ordinaunces, riseth agaynst the kynges, and resisteth hys officers, dare not once lay handes on one of the Popes annoynted: no though he sley hys father before hys face, or do violence vnto his brother, or defile his sister, wife or mother. Like honour geue we vnto his traditions & ceremonies. what deuotion haue we when we are blessed (as they call it) with the chalice, or when the Bysshop lifteth vp his holy hand ouer vs? who dare handle the chalice, touch the Alter stone, or put his hand in the fount, or hys finger into the holy oyle? what reuerence geue we vnto holy water, holy fyre, holy bread, holy salt, halowed belles, holy ware, holy bowes, holy candels, and holy ashes? And last of all vnto the holy cādle commit we our soules at our last departyng. Yea and of the very cloute which the Bysshop or his chapplen that standeth by, smitteth about childrens neckes at confirmatiō, what lay person durst be so bold as to vnloose the knot? Thou wilt say, do not such thinges bring the holy Ghost and put away sinne and driue away spirites? I say that a stedfast fayth or belefe in Christ & in the promises that God hath sworne to geue vs for hys sake, bringeth the holy Ghost as all the Scriptures make mention, & as Paul sayth (Actes. xix.) haue ye receaued the holy Ghost through fayth or beleuing? Fayth is the rocke where on Christ buildeth hys congregation, agaynst whiche sayth Christ Math. xvj. heli gates shall not preuaile. As soone as thou beleuest in Christ, the holy Ghost commeth, sinne falleth away and deuils flye: when we cast holy water at the deuill or ryng the belles, he fleeth, as men do from young children, and mocketh with vs, to bring vs from the true fayth that is in Gods word vnto a superstitious, and a false belefe of our owne imagination. If thou haddest fayth & threwest an vnhalowed stone at his head, he would earnestly flee and without mockyng, yea though thou threwest nothyng at all, he would not yet abyde.

Fayth driueth ỳ deuils away.

Why dos not the Bysshops make hym flee from shotyng of gunnes.

Though that at the beginnyng miracles were shewed through such ceremonies, to moue the infidels to beleue the word of God. As thou readest how the Apostles annoynted the sicke with oyle and healed them, and Paul sent his pertelet or kirkyn to the sicke and healed them also. Yet was it not the ceremonie that did the miracle, but fayth of the preacher and the truth of God, which had promised to confirme and stablish his Gospell with such miracles. Therfore as soone as the gift of miracles ceased, ought the ceremonie to haue ceased also: or els if they will needes haue a ceremonie to signifie some promise or benefite of G O D (whiche I prayse not but would haue Gods word preached euery Sonday, for which entent Sondayes and holy dayes were ordeined) then let them tel the people what it meaneth: and not set vp a baulde and a naked ceremonie Ceremonies dyd not the miracle but fayth.

Let them tell what the ceremony meaneth.

without significatiō, to make the people beleue therein, and to quenche the fayth that ought to be geuen vnto the word of God.

The priest disguiseth hym selfe with the passion of Christ.

What helpeth it also that the Priest whē he goeth to Masse disguiseth him selfe with a great part of the passion of Christ, and playeth out the rest vnder silence with signes and profers, with noddyng, beckyng and mowyng, as it were Jacke an apes, when neither he him selfe neither any man els woteth what he meaneth? not at all verely, but hurteth and that exceedyngly. For as much as it not onely destroyeth the fayth & quencheth the loue that should be geuen vnto the commaundements, and maketh the people vnthankefull, in that it bringeth them into such superstition, that they thinke that they haue done aboundantly ynough for God, yea & deserued aboue measure, if they be present once in a day at such mummyng: But also maketh the infidels to mocke vs and abhorre vs, in that they see nothyng but such apes play among vs, where of no man can geue a reason.

Dommie ceremonies quench fayth and loue and make the infidels to mocke vs.

The prophesie of Christ is fulfilled.

All this commeth to passe to fulfill the prophesie which Christ prophesied. Marke. xiij. And Luke. xxj. that there shall come in his name which shall say that they them selues are Christ. That do verely the Pope and our holy orders of Religion. For they vnder the name of Christ preach thē selues, their own word, and their own traditions, and teach the people to beleue in them. The Pope geueth pardons of his full power, of the treasure of the Church and of the merites of Saintes. The Friers lykewise make their benefactours (which onely they call their brethren and sisters) partakers of their masses, fasting, watchynges, prayings and wolward goynges. Yea and whē a nouice of the obseruauntes is professed, the father asketh him, will ye kepe the rules of holy S. Fraunces? and he sayth yea: will ye so in dede sayth he? the other aunswereth: yea forsoth father. Then sayth the father, and I promise you agayne euerlastyng lyfe. O blasphemy. If eternall life be due vnto the pilde traditions of lowsie Friers, where is the Testament become that God made vnto vs in Christes bloud? Christ sayth Math. xxiiij. And Mark. xiij. that there shal come Pseudo-Christi. which though I, for a consideration haue translated false Christes, keppyng the Greeke word: yet signifieth it in the English false annoynted and ought so to be translated. There shall come (saith Christ) false annoynted and false Prophetes, and shall do miracles and wonders, so greatly that if it were possible, the very elect or chosen should be brought out of the way. Compare the Popes doctrine vnto the word of GOD, and thou shalt finde that there hath ben, and yet is a great goyng out of the way, and that euill men and deceauers (as Paul prophesied. ij. Tino. iij.) haue preuailed and waxed worse and worse, beguiling other as they are beguiled them selues. Thou trembleste and quakeste saying: shall God let vs go so lose out of the right way? I aunswere it is Christ that warneth vs, which as he knew all that should follow, so prophesied he before and is a true Prophet, and his prophesie must nedes be fulfilled.

The tes-tament of the obseruaun-tes.

False annoynted.

Christes prophesie: be it neuer so terrible must be yet fulfilled.

GOd annoynted hys sonne Jesus with the holy Ghost, and therfore called him Christ, which is as much to say as annoynted. Outwardly he disguised him not but made hym like other mē and sent him into the world to blesse vs, and to offer him selfe for vs a sacrifice of a swete sauour, to kill the stench of our sinnes, that God hence forth should smell them no more, nor thinke on them any more: and to make full & sufficient satisfaction or amendes for all them that repent, beleuyng the truth of god, and submitting them selues vnto his ordinaūces both for their sinnes that they do, haue done and shal do. For sinne we through fragilitie neuer so oft, yet as soone as we repente and come into the right way agayne, and vnto the Testament whiche God hath made in Christes bloud, our sinnes vanish away as smoke in the winde, and as darkenes at the commyng of light, or as thou cast a litle bloud or milke into ỹ mayne see. In so much that who soeuer goeth about to make satisfactiō for his sinnes to God ward, saying in his hart, this much haue I sinned, this much will I doe agayne, or this wise will I lyue to make amendes with all, or this wil I do to get heauen with all, the same is an infidell, faythlesse and damned in his deede doing, and hath lost his part in Christes bloud: because he is disobedient vnto Gods Testamēt, and setteth vp an other of his owne imagination, vnto which he will compell God to obey. If we loue God we haue a cōmaundemēt to loue our neighbour also, as Christ was neither ston-ed nor shorne nor annoynted with oyle.

Euery man that doth ought to make satisfactiō or to get heauen hath lost his parte of Christes bloud.

so, as sayth John in his Epistle. And if we haue offended him to make him amendes, or if we haue not wherewith, to aske him forgeuenesse, and to doe and suffer all thynges for his sake, to wynne him to God & to norish peace and vnitie: but to Godward Christ is an euerlastyng satisfaction and euer sufficient.

To our neighbour make we amendes.

The Apostles were neither shauē nor shoren nor annoynted with ople.

Christ when he had fulfilled hys course, annoynted hys Apostles and disciples with the same spyrite, and sent them forth without all maner disguising, like other men also, to preach the attonemēt and peace which Christ had made betwene God and man. The Apostles likewise disguised no man, but chose men annoynted wyth the same spirit: one to preach the worde of God, whom we call after the greeke tounge a Byshop or a Priest, that is, in English, an ouersear and an Elder. How he was annointed, thou readest. i. Timothe. iij. A Bishoppe or an ouersear must be faultlesse, the husband of one wife. (Many Jewes and also Gentils that were conuerted vnto the faith, had at that tyme diuers wines, yet were not compelled to put any of thē away, which Paule because of ensāple would not haue preachers for as much as in Christ we returne agayne vnto ẏ first ordinaunce of God, that one man and one woman should goe together) he must be sober, of honest behauiour, honestly apparelled, harbarous (that is, ready to lodge straungers, apte to teach, no dronckard, no fighter, not geuen to filthy lucre: but gentle, abhorring fyghting, abhorring couetousnes, and one that ruleth hys owne household honestly, hauing children vnder obedience wyth all honestie. For if a man can can not rule hys owne house, how can he care for the congregation of God? he may not be younge in the fayth, or as a man would say a Nouice, least he swell and fall into ẏ iudgement of ẏ euill speaker, that is, he may not be vnlearned in the secretes of the fayth. For such are attonce stubburne, and headstrong, and set not a little by themselues. But alas, we haue aboue twenty thousand that know no more scripture then is written in their portoues, and among them is he exceding well learned that can turne to his seruice. He must be well reported of thē ẏ are without: least he fal into rebuke, and into the snare of the euill speaker, that is, least the infidels which yet beleue not, should be hurt by hym, and driuen from the fayth, if a man that were defamed were made head or ouerseer of the congregation.

Byshop: an ouerseer.

The true annoynting of a Priest.

This ople is not among our Byshops.

He must haue a wife for two causes, one, that it may therby be knowē who is mete for the rowme. He is vnapt for so chargeable an office, which had neuer household to rule. An other cause is, that chastity is an exceeding seldom gift, and vnchastitie exceding perilous for that degree. In as much as ẏ people looke as well vnto the liuyng as vnto the preachyng, and are hurte at once if the liuing disagree, and fall frō the fayth, and beleue not the worde.

Priestes ought to to haue wiues & why.

This ouerseer, because he was takē from hys owne busines and labour, to preach Gods word vnto the parishe, hath right by the authoritie of hys office, to chalenge an honest liuyng of ẏ parishe, as thou mayst see in ẏ Euangelistes, and also in Paule. For who will haue a seruaunt and will not geue hym meate, drinke, and rayment, and all things necessary? How they would pay hym, whether in money, or assigne hym so much rent, or in tithes, as the guise is now in many countreies, was at their libertie.

What the Priestes dutie is to do: & what to haue.

Men are not bound to pay the Priest in tithes, by Gods law.

Likewise in euery congregation chose they an other after the same ensample, and euen so annointed, as it is to see in the sayd chapter of Paule, and Act. vj. whom after the Greeke word we call Deacon, that is to say in English, a seruaunt or a minister, whose office was to helpe and assiste ẏ Priest, and to gather vp his dutie, and to gather for the poore of the parishe, which were destitute of frends and could not worke, common beggers to runne frō doze to doze, were not thē suffered. On ẏ Saintes dayes, namely, such as had suffered death for the worde sake, came men together into the church, and the Priest preached vnto them, and exhorted them to cleane fast vnto the worde, and to be strong in the fayth, and to fight against the powers of the world, wyth suffering for their faythes sake, after the ensample of the Saintes. And taught thē not to beleue in the saintes and to trust in their merites, and to make Gods of them: but tooke the saintes for an example only, and prayed God to geue them lyke fayth and trust in hys worde, and lyke strength and power to suffer therefore, and to geue them so sure hope of the lyfe to come, as thou mayst see in the collectes of Saint Laurence and of Saint Stephen in our Lady matens. And in such dayes, as we now offer, so gaue they euery mā his portion according to his abilitie, and as God put in his hart, to the maintenaunce of the priest, Deacō, and other common ministers, and of the poore, and to finde learned men to teach, and so forth. And all was put in the handes of the Deacon, as thou mayst see in ỹ lyfe of Saint Laurence, and in the histories. And for such purposes gaue men landes afterwarde to ease the parishes, and made hospitals, and also places to teach their children, and to bring them vp, and to nourtour them in Gods worde, which landes our Monkes now deuour.

Why landes were geuē vnto the spirituall officers before we tell from the fayth.

Antichrist.

Antichrist of an other maner hath sent forth his disciples, those false annointed of which Christ warneth vs before, that they should come & shewe miracles and wonders, euen to bring the very elect out of the way, if it were possible. He annointeth them after the maner of ỹ Jewes, and shaueth them & shoreth them after the maner of the Heathen Priestes, whiche serue the Idoles. He sendeth them forth not with false oyle onely, but with false names also. For compare their names vnto their deedes, and thou shalt finde them false. He sendeth them forth as Paule prophesied of them. ij. Thess. ij. wyth lying signes & wonders. what signe is the annointing? that they be full of the holy ghost. Compare them to the signes of the holy ghost which Paule reckoneth, and thou shalt fynde it a false signe. A Bishop must be faultles, the husband of one wyfe. Nay sayth ỹ Pope, the husband of no wife, but the holder of as many whores as he listeth. God commaundeth all degrees, if they burne, and can not liue chast, to marry. The Pope saith, if thou burne take a dispensation for a Concubine, and put her away when thou art olde, or els as our Lawyers say, si non caste tamen caute, that is, if ye liue not chaste, see ye cary cleane, and play the knaue secretly. Barbarous, yea to whores and baudes, for a poore man shall as soone breake his necke as dis fast with them, but of the scraps and wyth the dogges, when dinner is done. Apt to teach, and as Peter sayth. j. Pet. iij. ready alwayes to geue an answere to euery man that axeth you a reason of the hope that ye haue, and that wyth meekenes, which thing is signified by the bootes which doctours of diuinitie are created in, because they should be ready alwayes to goe thorough thicke and thinne, to preach Gods worde, & by the Byshoppes two horned miter, which betokeneth the absolute & perfect knowledge that they ought to haue in the new Testamēt and the olde. Be not these false signes? For they beare onely and teach not. Yea saith ỹ Pope if they will not be ruled, cite them to appeare, and pose them sharply, what they hold of the Popes power, of hys Pardons, of his Bulles, of Purgatory, of ceremonies, of confession and such like creatures of our most holy fathers. If they misse in any point, make heretickes of them and burne them. If they be of mine annoynted and beare my marke, disgrese them, I would say disgraduate them and (after the example of noble Antiochus. ỹ. Mach. vij.) pare the crownes and the fingers of them, and torment them craftly, and for very payne make them deny the truth. But now say our Bishops, because the truth is come to farre abroad, and ỹ lay people begyn to smell our wiles, it is best to oppresse them with craft secretly, & to tame them in prison. Yea let vs finde the meanes to haue them in the kyngs prison, and to make treason of such doctrine: Yea we must styre vp some warre one where or an other, to bring the people into an other imagination. If they be Gentlemen abiure them secretly.

Make the people beleue, that it shall grow the better. It is verely as good to preach it to swyne as to men, if thou preach it in a toung they vnderstand not. How shall I prepare my selfe to Gods commaundementes? How shal I be thankefull to Christ for his kindnes? How shall I beleue the truth and promises which GOD hath sworne, while thou tellest them vnto me in a toung which I vnderstand not?

What then saith me Lord of Canterbury to a Priest that would haue had the new Testament gone forth in Englishe: what (sayth he) wouldest thou that the lay people should wete what we do?

Crosse.

No fighter, which I suppose is signified by the crosse that is borne before the hye Prelates and borne before thē in procession: Is that also not a false signe? what Realme can be in peace for such turmoylers? what so litle a Parishe is it, but they will picke one quarell or an other with them, either for some syrplis, cresome or mortuary, either for one trifle or other, and cyte them to the arches? Traytors they are to all creatures and haue a secret conspiration betwene them selues. One craft they haue, to make many kyngdomes and small, and to norish olde titles or quarels, that they may euer mone them to warre at their pleasure. And if much landes by any chaunce, fall to one man, euer to cast a bone in the way, that he shall neuer be able to obteine it, as we now see in y Emperour. Why? For as lōg as the kyngs be small, if God would open the eyes of any to set a reformation in his Realme, then should the Pope interdict his land, and send in other Princes to conquere it.

Not geuen to filthy lucre, but abhorryng couetousnes. And as Peter sayth. i. Pet. v. Takyng the ouersight of them, not as though ye were compelled thereunto: but willingly. Not for desire of filthie lucre, but of a good minde: not as though ye were Lordes ouer the Parishes (ouer the Parishes quoth he) O Peter Peter thou wast to long a fisher, thou wast neuer brought vp at the arches, neither wast master of the Rolles, nor yet Chaunceler of England. They are not content to raigne ouer kyng and Emperour and the whole earth: but chalenge authoritie also in heauen and in hell. It is not inough for them to raigne ouer all that are quicke, but haue created them a Purgatory, to raigne also ouer the dead, and to haue one kyngdome more then God him selfe hath. But that ye be an ensample to the flocke (sayth Peter.) And whē the chief shepheard shal appeare ye shall receaue an incorruptible crowne of glory. This abhorring of couetousnes is signified as I suppose by shauyng and sheryng of the of the heare, that they haue no superfluitie. But is not this also a false signe? yea verely it is to them a remēbraunce to shere and shaue, to heape benefice vpon benefice, promotion vpon promotion, dignitie vpon dignitie, Bysshoprycke vppon Bisshoprycke, with pluralities, vnions and Tot quots.

First by the authoritie of the Gospell they that preach the word of God in euery Parish and other necessary ministreys, haue right to chalenge an honest liuyng like vnto one of the brethren, and therewith ought to be content. Bishops and prestes that preach not, or that preach, ought saue Gods word, are none of Christes, nor of hys annoyntyng: but seruauntes of the beast whose marke they beare, whose worde they preache, whose law they mainteine cleane agaynst Gods law, and with their false sophistry geue him greater power then God euer gaue to his sonne Christ.

Bishops that preach not.

But they as vnsatiable beastes not vnmindfull why they were shauen and shoren, because they will stand at no mans grace, or bee in any mans daunger, haue gotten into their owne handes, first the tyth or tenth of all the realme. Then I suppose with in a litle or all together the third foote of all the temporall landes.

his backe by his owne authoritie, tyll God pull it of which layd it on for our deseruinges, yet ought the kynges euery where to defend their realmes frō such oppression, if they were Christen, which is seldom seene: and is an harde thyng verely, though not impossible. Kinges are in captiuitie. For alas they be captiues or euer they be kynges, yea almost er they be borne. No man may be suffered about hym but flatterers, and such as are fyrst swoorne true vnto our most holy fathers the Bysshops, that is to say, false to God and man.

If any of the nobles of the realme be true to the kyng, and so bolde that he dare councell him that which should be to hys honour, and for the wealth of the realme. They will waite a seasō for hym (as men say) They wyll prouide a ghostly father for hym. God bring their wickednes to light. There is no mischife wherof they are not the roote, nor bloudshedde, but thorough their cause, either by their counsell, or in that they preach not true obedience, and teach not the people to feare God. If any faythfull seruaunt be in all the courte, he shall haue twēty spies wayting vpon him, he shalbe cast out of the courte, or (as the saying is) conuayed to Callice, and made a captayne, or an Ambassadoure, he shalbe kepte farre inough from the kynges presence.

The dutie of kynges. The kinges ought I say to remember that they are in Gods steede, & ordayned of God, not for themselues, but for the wealth of their subiectes. Let them remember that their subiectes are their brethren, their flesshe & bloud, members of their owne body, and euē their owne selues in Christ. Therefore ought they to pitie them, & to rid them from such wylye tyrāny which encreaseth more and more dayly. And though that the kynges by the falshod of the Bysshops and Abbottes, be swoorne to defend such liberties: yet ought they not to keepe their othes, but to breake them. For as much as they are vnright and cleane against Gods ordinaunce, and euen but cruell oppression, contrary vnto brotherly loue and charitie. Vnlawfull othes ought to be broken, and may without dispensation. Moreouer the spirituall officer ought to punish no sinne, but and if any sinne breake out the kyng is ordained to punishe it, and they not: but to preach & exhort thē to feare God, and that they sinne not. The kyng only ought to punish sinne: I meane that is broken forth, the hart must remaine to God.

And let the kinges put downe some of theyr tyrānny, and turne some vnto a common wealth. If the tenth part of such tyrānny were geuen the kyng yearely, & laide vp in the shyre townes agaynst the realme had neede, what would it grow to in certayne yeares: Moreouer one kyng, one lawe, is Gods ordinaunce in euery realme. Therefore ought not the king to suffer them to haue a seuerall lawe by themselues, and to draw hys subiectes thether. It is not mete will they say, that a spirituall man should be iudged of a worldly or a temporall man. O abhomination: see how they deuide and separate themselues: If the laye man be of the worlde, so is he not of God. If he beleue in Christ, then is he a mēber of Christ, Christes brother, Christes flesshe, Christes bloud, Christes spouse, coheyre wyth Christ, and hath his spirite in earnest, and is also spirituall. If they woulde robbe vs of the spirite of God, why should they feare to robbe vs of worldly goodes? Because thou art put in office to preach Gods word, art thou therefore no more one of the brethren? is the Maior of London no more one of the Citie, because he is the chiefe officer? Is the kyng no more of the realme because he is head therof? The king is in the roome of God, and hys lawe is Gods lawe, and nothyng but the lawe of nature and naturall equitie, which God graued in the harts of men. Yet Antichrist is to good to be iudged by the lawe of God, he must haue a new of hys owne making. It were mete verely that they went to no lawe at all. No more needed they, if they woulde studie to preach Gods worde truely, and be contented wyth sufficient, and to be lyke one of theyr brethren. The spyrite pertayneth vnto the shauen onely. The kings law is Gods law.

If any question arose about ỳ fayth, or of the scripture, that let them iudge by the manifest and open scriptures, not excluding the laye men. For there are many fonnde among the laye men, which are as wise as the officers. Or els when the officer dyeth, how coulde we put an other in hys roome: wylt thou so teach xx.xxx.xl. or fifty yeares, that no man shall haue knowledge or iudgement in Gods worde saue thou onely? Is it not a shame that we Christē come so oft to Church in vaine, whē he of foure score yeare olde knoweth no more then he that was borne yesterday. How men ought to iudge, questions of the scripture. We come oft to schole. But are neuer taught.

Moreouer when the spirituall officers haue excommunicate any man, or haue condemned any opinion for heresy: Let not the kyng nor temporall officers punish & slay by & by at their commaundement. But let them looke on Gods worde, and compare their iudgement vnto the scripture, and see whether it be right or no, and not beleue them at the first choppe, whatsoeuer they say, namely in thynges that pertayne vnto their owne authorities and power. For no mā is a right iudge in his owne cause. why doth Christ cōmaunde the Scripture to be preached vnto all creatures, but that it pertaineth vnto all mē to know them? Christ referreth him selfe vnto the scriptures John. v. And in the .xj. Chapter of Mathew, vnto the question of John Baptistes Disciples her aunswered. The blind see, the lepers are clensed, the dead arise againe &c. meanyng that if I do the workes which are prophesied that Christ should do when he cōmeth, why doubt ye whether I be hee or no, as who should say, aske ẏ scripture whether I be Christ or no, & not my selfe. How happeneth it then that our Prelates wil not come to the light also that we may see whether their workes be wrought in GOD or no? why feare they to let the lay men see what they do? why make they all their examinations in darkenes? why cramine they not their causes of heresie openly, as the lay men do their fellons and murtherers? wherfore did Christ and his Apostles also warne vs so diligently of Antichrist, and of false Prophetes that should come? Because that we should slomber or sleepe careles, or rather that we should looke in the light of the Scripture with all diligēce to spie them when they came, and not to suffer our selues to be disceaued and led out of ẏ way? John biddeth iudge the spirites. whereby shall we iudge them but by the Scripture? How shalt thou know, whether the Prophet be true or false, or whether her speake Gods word of his owne head, if thou wilt not see the Scriptures? why sayd Dauid in the second Psalme be learned ye that iudge the earth, lest the Lord be angry with you, and ye perish frō the right way?

Kinges ought to see what they doe and not to beleue the Byshoppes, namely, seing their kyng is so sore suspect.

It perteineth vnto all men to know the scriptures.

Be learned ye that iudge the earth.

A terrible warnyng verely: yea and looke on the stories well, & thou shalt finde very few kinges sence the beginning of the world that haue not perished from the right way, and that because they would not be learned.

The kings are become Antichrists hangmen.

The Emperour and kynges are nothyng now a dayes but euen hangmen vnto the Pope and Byshops, to kill who soeuer they condemne, without any more a do, as Pylate was vnto the Scribes and Pharisees and the hye Byshops, to hang Christ. For as those Prelates aunswered Pylate (whē he asked what he had done) if he were not an euill doer, we would not haue brought him vnto thee. As who should say, we are to holy to do any thyng amisse, ẏ mayst beleue vs well inough: yea and his blonde on our heades, sayd they, kill him hardly, we will beare the charge, our soules for thyne: we haue also a law by which he ought to dye, for he calleth him selfe Gods sonne. Euen so say our Prelates, he ought to dye by our lawes, he speaketh agaynst the Church. And your grace is sworne to defend the liberties and ordinaunces of the Church, and to mayntaine our most holy fathers authorite: our soules for yours, ye shall do a meritorious dede therin. Neuertheles as Pylate escaped not the iudgement of God, euen so is it to be feared lest our temporall powers shall not. wherfore be learned ye that iudge the earth lest the Lord be angry with you and ye perish from the right way.

Who slew the Prophetes? who slew Christ? who slew his Apostles? who the martirs and all the righteous that euer were slayne? The kynges and the temporall sword at the request of the false Prophetes. They deserued such murther to do, and to haue their part with ẏ hypocrites, because they would not be learned, and see the truth them selues. wherfore suffered ẏ Prophets? because they rebuked the hypocrites which beguiled the world, and namely Princes and rulers and taught them to put their trust in thynges of vanitie and not in Gods word. And taught them to do such deedes of mercy as were profitable vnto no man but vnto the false Prophetes them selues onely, makyng marchaūdise of Gods word. wherfore slew they Christ? euen for rebuking the hipocrites: because he said, wo be to you Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites, for ye shut vp the kyngdome of heauē before men Math. xxiij. that is, as it is writtē. Luke. xj. ye haue taken away the keye of knowledge. The law of God whiche is the keye wherewith men bynde, and the promises which are the keyes wherewith men loose, haue our hypocrites also taken away. people begyn to smell their falsehode they make it treason to the kyng and breakyng of the kynges peace to haue so much as their Pater noster in English. And in stede of Gods law, they bynde wt their owne law. And in stede of Gods promises they lose & iustifye with pardons and ceremonies, which they them selues haue imagined for their owne profite. They preach it were better for thee to eate flesshe on good Friday then to hate thy neighbour: but let any man eate flesh but on a Saterday or breake any other tradition of theirs, and he shalbe bounde & not losed, till hee haue payd the vtter most farthing, either with shame most vyle, or death most cruell, but hate thy neighbour as much as thou wilt and thou shalt haue no rebuke of them, yea robbe him, murther him, and thē come to them and welcome. Moyses taketh recorde of God that he tooke not of any of the people so much as an Asse, neither vexed any of them. Numeri. xvj. Samuell in yᵉ fyrst booke of kynges the xij. chapter, asked all Israell whether he had taken any mans Oxe, or Asse, or had vexed any man, or had taken any gift or rewarde of any man. And all the people testified nay, yet these two both taught the people, and also prayed for them as much as our prelates doe. Peter. j. Peter. v. exhorteth the elders to take the ouerlight of Christes flocke, not for filthy lucre: but of a good will euen for loue. Paul. Act. xx. taketh the Priestes or elders to recorde, that he had taught repentaunce and fayth, and all yᵉ councell of God. And yet had desired no mans golde, siluer, or vesture: but fedde himselfe with the labour of hys handes. And yet these two taught and prayed for the people as much as our Prelates doe, wyth whom it goeth after the common saying, no penny, no Pater noster. which Prelates yet as they teach not, but beate onely, so wote they not what prayer meaneth.

The craft that helpeth other helpeth not his owne master.

Prayer was not sold in the old tyme.

Moreouer the lawe of loue which Christ left among vs, is to geue and not to receaue. What prayer is it then that thus robbeth all the world cōtrary to that great commaundemēt which is the ende of all commaundementes, and in which all other are conteyned. If men should continue to buie prayer foure or fiue hundred yeares moe, as they haue done, there would not be a foote of grounde in Christendome, neither any worldly thyng, which they yᵉ will be called spirituall onely shoulde not possesse. And thus all shoulde be called spirituall.

Their prayer breaketh the great commaundement of God. It is tyme that they were tyed vp therfore.

wo be to you Lawyers, for ye lade men wyth burdēs, which they are not able to beare, & ye yours selues touch not the packes wyth one of your fingers saith Christ Luke. xj. Our Lawyers verely haue laden vs a thousand tymes more. What spirituall kynred haue they made in baptyme, to let matrimonie, besides that they haue added certaine degrees vnto the law naturall for the same purpose. What an vnbearable burthen of chastitie do they violently thrust on other mēs backes, and how easely beare they it themselues? How sore a burden: How cruell a hāgman? How greuous a torment? yea & how paynefull an hell is this eare confession vnto mens consciences. For the people are brought in beliefe, that without that they can not be saued. In so much that some faste certayne dayes in the yeare, and pray certayne superstitious prayers all their lyues longe, that they may not die without confession. In perill of death, if the Priest be not by, the shippemen shrine themselues vnto the Mast. If any be present, they runne then euery mā into his eare, but to gods promises fye they not: for they know them not. If any man haue a deathes wounde, he cryeth immediatly for a Priest. If a man die without shrift many take it for a signe of damnation. Many by reason of that false beliefe die in desperation. Many for shame keepe backe of their confession xx. xxx. yeares, and thinke all the while that they be damned. I knew a poore woman with childe which longed, and being ouercomen of her passion, eate flesshe on a Friday, which thing she durst not confesse in the space of xviii. yeares, and thought all that while that she had ben damned, and yet sinned she not at all. Is not this a sore burden that so weyeth downe the soule vnto the bottome of hell? what shoulde I say? A great booke were not sufficient to rehearse y snares which they haue layde to robbe men both of their goodes, and also of the trust which they shoulde haue in Gods worde.

The burdens of our spirituall lawyers.

Confession tormenteth the conscience & robbeth the purse of money, and the soule of fayth.

The Scribes and Pharisei's do all their workes to be sene of men. They set abroade their Philacteries, & make long borders on their garmentes, and loue to sit vppermost at feastes, and to haue the chiefe seates in the synagoges, that, is in the congregations or councels, and to be called Rabby, that is to saye maisters sayth Christ. Math. xxiii. Beholde the deedes of our spiritualtie, and how many thousand fashions are among them to be knowen by? which as none is like an other, so loueth none an other. For euery one of them supposeth that all other polle to fast and make to many captiues: yet to resiste Christ, are they all agreed least they shoulde be all compeld to deliuer vp their prisoners to hym. Beholde the monsters how they are disguised, with miters, croses, and hatts, with crosses, pillers, and poliares, and wyth thre crownes. what names haue they? my Lord Prior, my Lord Abbot, my Lord Bysshop, my Lord Archbishop, Cardinall and Legate: if it please your fatherhod, if it please your Lordshyp, if it please your grace, if it please your holines, and innumerable such like. Beholde how they are esteemed, and how hie they be crept vp aboue all, not into worldly seates onely: but into the seate of God, the hartes of men, where they sit aboue God himselfe. For both they & whatsoeuer they make of their owne heades is more feared and dread then God and his commaundements. In them and their deseruinges put we more trust, then in Christ and hys merites. To their promises geue we more fayth, then to the promises which God hath swore in Christes bloud.

Wagges or babies to be knowen by.

Glorious names.

How are they esteemed?

The hypocrites say vnto the kings and Lordes, these heretickes would haue vs downe first, and then you, to make of all cōmon. May ye hypocrites & bad right heretickes approued by open Scripture, the kinges and Lordes are downe already, & that so low that they can not go lower. Ye treade them vnder your feete, and lead thē captiue and haue made them your bonde seruaunts to waite on your filthy lustes, and to auenge your malice on euery man, contrary vnto the right of Gods word. Ye haue not onely robbed them of their lād, authoritie honour and due obediēce, which ye owe vnto them, but also of their wittes, so that they are not without vnderstādyng in Gods word onely: but euē in worldly matters that pertaine vnto their offices, they are more then childzen. Ye beare them in hand what ye will, and haue brought them euē in case like vnto them which when they daunce naked in nettes, beleue they are inuisible. we would haue them vp agayne, and restored vnto the rowme and authoritie which GOD hath geuen them, and whereof ye haue robbed them. And your inward falsehode we do but vtter onely with the light of Gods word, that your hypocrisie might be sene. Be learned therfore ye that iudge the world, lest God be angry with you, and ye perish from the right way.

Kinges on down: they can not go lower.

wo

Our hypocrites lyue by theft.

Consciences that are so narrow about traditions, haue wyde mouthes about gods commaundements.

As the Iewes are the children of Abrahã: so are the Bysshops the successours of the Apostles.

The spiritualty haue taught to feare their traditions.

They wynne somewhat alwayes.

They that seke honor haue no fayth, neither can they do Gods message.

Be learned.

wo be to you Scribes and Pharisceis, hypocrites. For ye make cleane ỹ vtterside of the cuppe and of the platter, but within they are full of bribry & excesse, saith Christ. Mat. xxiij. Is that which our hypocrites eate and drinke and all their riotous excesse any other thyng saue robbery, & that which they haue falsly gotten with their lying doctrine? Be learned therefore ye that iudge the world, and compell them to make restitution agayne.

Ye blinde guides sayth Christ, ye strayne out a gnat & swalow a camell. Math. xxiij. do not our blinde guides also stomble at a straw, and lepe ouer a blocke, makyng narow consciences at trifles, and at matters of weight none at all? If any of them happen to swalow hys spitle or any of the water wherewith he washeth his mouth, ere he goe to Masse: or touch the Sacramẽt with his nose, or if the Asse forget to breath on him, or happen to handle it with any of his fingers whiche are not annoynted, or say Alleluia in stede of Laus tibi Domine, or Ite Missa est in stede of Benedicamus Domino, or poure to much wine in the chalice, or read the Gospell without light, or make not his crosses a right, how trembleth he? how feareth he? what an horrible sinne is committed? I cry God mercy, sayth he, and you my Ghostly father. But to hold an whore or an other mans wife, to bye a benefice, to set one Realme at variaunce with an other, and to cause xx. thousand mẽ to dye on a day is but a trifle and a pastime with them.

The Iewes boasteth them selues of Abraham. And Christ sayd vnto them. Iohn. viij. If ye were Abrahams children, ye would do the deedes of Abraham. Our hypocrites boast them selues of the authoritie of Peter, and of Paul & the other Apostles, cleane contrary vnto the deedes and doctrine of Peter, Paul and of all the other Apostles. which both obeyed all worldly authoritie and power, vsurpyng none to them selues, and taught all other to feare the kynges and rulers, and to obey them in all things not contrary to the commaundement of God, and not to resiste them, though they tooke away life and goodes wrongfully, but patiently to abyde Gods vengeaunce. This did our spiritualtie neuer yet, nor taught it. They taught not to feare God in his commaundementes, but to feare them in their traditions. In so much that the euill people which feare not to resist a good kyng and to rise against him, dare not lay handes on one of them, neither for defilyng of wife daughter or very mother. When all men lose lyfe & landes, they remaine alwayes sure and in safetie, and euer wynne somewhat. For who soeuer cõquereth other mens landes vnrightfully, euer geueth thẽ part with them. To them is all thyng lawfull. In all Councels and Parlamentes are they the chief. Without them may no kyng be crowned, neither vntil he be swoorne to their liberties. All secretes know they, euen the very thoughtes of mens hartes. By them all thinges are ministred. No kyng nor Realme may thorough their falsehode line in peace. To beleue they teach not in Christ, but in them and their disguised hypocrisie. And of them compell they all men to buy redemptiõ & forgeuenes of sinnes. The peoples sinne they eate & thereof waxe fat. The more wicked the people are, the more prosperous is their common wealth. If kinges and great men do amisse, they must builde Abbayes & Colledges, meane men builde chauntreis, poore finde trẽtals and brotherhodes and beggyng Friers. Their owne heyres do men disherite to endote them. All kynges are compelled to submitte them selues to them. Read the story of kyng Iohn, and of other kynges. They will haue their causes auenged, though whole Realmes should therefore perishe. Take from them their desguising, so are they not spirituall. Compare that they haue taught vs vnto the Scripture, so are we without fayth.

Christ sayth Iohn. v. Chapter: how can ye beleue which receaue glory one of an other. If they that seke to be glorious, can haue no fayth, then are our Prelates faythlesse verely. And Iohn. vij. he sayth: he that speaketh of hym selfe, seeketh his owne glory. If to seke glorie and honour be a sure token, that a man speaketh of his owne selfe, and doth his owne message & not his masters: then is the doctrine of our Prelates of them selues, and not of God. Be learned therefore ye that iudge the earth, lest God be angry with you and ye perish from the right way.

Be learned lest the hypocrites bring the wrath of God vppon your heades & compel you to shed innocent blould: as they haue compelled your predecessours to slay the Prophetes, to kill Christ & his Apostles and all the righteons ẏ sente were slayne. Gods word pertaineth vnto all men: as it perteineth vnto all seruaunts to know their masters will and pleasure: and to all subiectes to know the lawes of their prince. Let not the hypocrites do all thing secretly. what reason is it that myne enemy should put me in prison at his pleasure and their diet me, and handle me, as he listeth, and judge me him selfe and that secretly, and condemne me by a law of his owne making, and then deliuer me to Pylate to murther me? Let Gods word try euery mans doctrine, and whom so euer Gods word proueth vncleane let him be taken for a leper. One Scripture will helpe to declare an other. And the circumstaūces, that is to say, the places that go before and after, wil geue light vnto the middle text. And the opē and manifest Scriptures will euer improue the false and wrong exposition of the darker sentences. Let the temporall power to whō God hath geuen the sword to take vengeaunce, looke or euer that they leape, & see what they do. Let the causes be disputed before them, and let him that is accused haue rowme to aunswere for him selfe. The powers to whom God hath committed the sword shall geue acountes for euery droppe of bloud that is shed on the earth. Then shall their ignorāunce not excuse them, nor the saying of the hypocrites helpe them, my soule for yours, your grace shall do a meritorious deede, your grace ought not to heare them, it is an old heresy cōdemned by the Church. The king ought to looke in the Scripture, and see whether it were truly condemned or no, if he will punish it. If the king or his officer for him, will slay me, so ought the kyng or his officer to judge me. The kyng can not, but vnto his damnatiō, lend his sword to kill whom he iudgeth not by his owne lawes. Let hym that is accused stand on the one syde and the accuser on the other syde, and let the kynges judge sit and judge the cause, if the kyng will kill and not be a murtherer before God.

Gods wordought all men to know.

They do all secretly.

Gods wordought to judge.

The right way to vnderstād the scripture.

The kings haue a judge before whom my soule for yours helpeth not.

Preach what thou wilt but rebuke not hypocrisie.

Hereof may ye see, not onely that our persecution is for the same cause that Christes was, and that we say nothing that Christ sayde not: but also that all persecution is onely for rebuking of hypocrisy, that is to say, of mās righteousnes, and of holy dedes which man hath imagined to please God, & to be saued by, without Gods worde, and beside the testamēt that God hath made in Christ. If Christ had not rebuked ẏ Pharesees because they taught the people to beleue in their traditions and holynes, and in offerinnges that came to their auantage, and that they taught the widowes and thē that had their frendes dead, to beleue in their prayers, & that through their prayers the dead should be saued, and thorough that meanes robbed them both of their goodes, and also of the testament and promises that God had made, to all that repented, in Christ to come, he might haue bene vncrucified vnto this day.

If Saint Paule also had not preached against circumcision, that it iustified not: and that vowes, offerinnges, and ceremonies iustified not: and that righteousnes and forgeuenes of sinnes came not by any deserning of our deedes, but by faith or beleuing ẏ promises of God, and by the deseruing & merites of Christ onely, he might haue liued vnto this houre. Likewise if we preached not against pride, couetousnes, lechery, extorcion, vsury, symony, and against the euill lyuing both of the spiritualtie as well of the temporalitie, and against inclosings of parkes, reising of rent and fines, and of the carying out of wolle out of the realme, we might endure long enough. But touch the scabbe of hipocrisie or popeholynes, and goe about to vtter their false doctrine wherewith they reigne as Gods in the hart and consciences of men, and robbe them not of landes, goodes, and authoritie onely, but also of the testament of God, and saluation that is in Christ: then helpeth thee neither Gods worde, nor yet if thou diddist miracles, but that thou art not an heretike onely, and hast the deuill within thee, but also a breaker of the kinges peace, and a traytor. But let vs returne vnto our lying sygnes agayne.

*W*Hat signifieth that the Prelates are so bloudy, and clothed in red? that they be ready euery houre to suffer martyrdome for the testimony of Gods worde. Is that also not a false signe? when no man dare for them once open his mouth to aske a question of Gods worde, because they are ready to burne him.

The Prelates are clothed in red.

what signifieth the pollares that are borne before hye Legates A Latere: what so euer false signe they make of them, I care not: but of this I am sure, that that as the olde hypocrites when they had slayne Christ, set pollaxes to keepe him in his sepulcre that he should not rise againe: euē so haue our hypocrites buried the testament that God made vnto vs in Christes blood and to kepe it downe, that it rise not againe, is all their studie: wherof these pollaxes are the very signe.

Is not that shepardes hoke the Bishopes crose a false signe? Is not that white rochette that the Byshops and Chanons weare so like a Nunne, and so effeminatly, a false signe? what other thinges are their sandals, gloues, myters, & all the whole pompe of their disguising, then false signes in which Paule prophelied that they shoulde come? And as Christ warned vs to beware of wolues in lambes skinnes, & bad vs looke rather vnto their fruites and deedes, then to wonder at their disguisinges. Runne throughout all our holy religions, and thou shalt finde them likewise all clothed in falshod.

Judge the tree by his fruite, and not by his leaues.

¶ Of the sacramentes.

Forasmuch as we be come to signes, we wil speake a word or two of the signes which God hath ordeined, that is to say, of the sacramentes which Christ left amongest vs for our comfort, that we may walke in light and in truth, & in feling of the power of God. For he that walketh in ỳ day, stumbleth not, when contrariwise he that walketh in the night stumbleth. Joh. xi. And they that walke in darknes wote not whether they goe. Joh. xij.

Sacramentes are signes of Gods promises.

This worde sacrament is as much to say as an holy signe, and representeth alway some promise of God. As in the olde Testament God ordeined that the raynebowe should represent and signifie vnto all men an oth that God sware to Noe, & to all men after hym, that he woulde no more drowne the worlde thorough water.

¶ The sacrament of the body and blood of Christ.

SO the Sacrament of the body and blonde of Christ, hath a promise annexed, which the Priest should declare in the Englishe tonge. This is my body that is broken for you. This is my blond that is shed for many vnto the forgeuenesse of sinnes. This do in remembrance of me sayth Christ. Luk. xx. And 1. Cor. xi. If when thou seest the Sacrament, or eatest his body, or drinkest his blond, thou haue thys promise fast in thine hart (that his body was slayne, and his blond shed for thy sins) and beleuest it, so art thou saued and iustified therby. If not, so helpeth it thee not, though thou hearest a thousand masses in a day, or though thou doest nothing els all thy life long then eate his body or drinke his blonde: no more thē it should helpe thee in a dead thyrst, to beholde a bushe at a tauerne dore, if thou knewest not thereby that there were wine within to be solde.

The promise which the Sacrament preacheth, iustifieth onely.

¶ Baptime.

BAptime hath also his worde and promise, which the Priest ought to to teach the people, and Christen them in the Englishe tounge, and not to play ỳ popengay with Credo say ye, Volo say ye, and Baptismum say ye, for there ought to be no mummyng in such a matter. The Priest before he baptiseth, asketh saying: beleuest thou in God the father almighty, and in his sonne Jesus Christ, and in the holy ghost, and that the congregation of Christ is holy? And they say, yea. Then the Priest vppon thys fayth baptiseth the childe in ỳ name of the father, and of ỳ sonne, and of the holy ghost, for the forgetuenes of sinnes, as Peter saith. Act. ij.

The washyng without the worde helpeth not: but thorough the worde it purifieth and cleuseth vs. As thou readest Ephe. v. How Christ cleuseth the congregation in the fountayne of water thorough the worde. The word is the promise that God hath made. Now as a preacher, in preaching the worde of God saueth the hearers that beleue, so doth the washing, in that it preacheth and representeth vnto vs the promise that God hath made vnto vs in Christ. The washing preacheth vnto vs, that we are cleesed with Christes bloudshedding, which was an offering and a satisfaction for the sinne of all that repent and beleue, consenting and submitting themselues vnto the will of God. The plunging into the water signifieth that we die, and are buried with Christ, as concerning the olde life of sinne which is Adam. And the pulling out againe, signifieth that we rise againe with Christ in a newe life full of the holy ghost, which shall teach vs & guide vs, & worke the will of God in vs, as thou seest. Rom. vj.

How the sacramētes ꝑfitte.

MAtrimony or wedlocke is a state or a degree ordeined of God, and an office wherein the husband serueth the wife, and the wife the husband. It was ordeined for a remedy and to encrease the worlde, and for the man to helpe the woman, and the woman the man with all loue and kyndnes, and not to signifie any promise that euer I heard or redde of in ỳ scripture. Therfore ought it not to be called a Sacrament. It hath a promise that we sinne not in that state, if a man receaue hys wife as a gift geuen to him of God, & the wife her husband likewise: as all maner meates and drinkes haue a promise that we sinne not, if we vse them measurably with thankes geuing. If they call matrimony a Sacrament because the scripture vseth the similitude of matrimonie, to expresse the mariage or wedlocke that is betwene vs and Christ. (For as a woman though she be neuer so poore, yet when she is maried, is as rich as her husband: euen so we whē we repent and beleue the promises of God in Christ, though we be neuer so poore sinners, yet are as rich as Christ, all his merits are ours with all that he hath). If for that cause they call it a sacrament; so will I muster de scede, leuen, a net, keyes, bread, water, and a thousand other things which Christ and the Prophetes, and all the scripture vse, to expresse the kingdome of heauen and Gods worde wythall. They prayse wedlocke wyth their mouth, and say it is an holy thyng, as it is verely: but had leuer be sanctified wyth an whore, then to come wythin the sanctuary.

Matrimony was not ordeined to signifie any promise.

If wedlocke be holy, why had they leuer haue whores thē wiues?

¶ of Order.

SUbdeacon, Deacō, Priest, Bysshop, Cardinall, Patriarch and Pope, be names of offices and seruice, or should be, and not Sacraments. There is no promise coupled therwith. If they minister their offices truly, it is a signe that Christes spirite is in them, if not, that the deuill is in them. Are these all Sacramentes, or which one of them? Or what thyng in them is that holy signe or Sacrament? The shauyng or the annoynting? what also is the promise that is signified thereby? But what word printeth in them that character: that spirituall seale? O dreamers and naturall beastes without the seale of the spirite of God: but sealed with the marke of the beast and with cankred consciences.

Character.

There is a word called in Latine Sacerdos in Greeke Hiereus, in Hebrue Cohan, that is, a Minister an officer, a sacrificer or a Priest, as Aaron was a Priest and sacrificed for the people and was a mediator betwen God & them. And in the English should it haue had some other name then Priest: But Antichrist hath deceaued vs with vnknowen and straūge termes, to bring vs into confusion and superstitious blyndnes. Of that maner is Christ a Priest for euer, and all we Priests thorough hym and neede no more of any such Priest on earth to be a meane for vs vnto god. For Christ hath brought vs all into the inner temple within the vayle or forehanging, and vnto the mercy stoole of God. And hath coupled vs vnto God, where we offer euery man for hymselfe ỳ desires & petitions of his hart, & sacrifice and kil the lustes & appetits of his flesh with prayer, fasting, & all maner godly liuing.

Sacerdos.

An other worde is there in Greeke called Presbiter, in latin, Senior, in englishe an elder, and is nothing but an officer to teach, and not to be a mediator betwene God and vs. This needeth no annointing of man. They of ỳ olde testament were annointed with oyle, to signifie the annointing of Christ and of vs thorough Christ with the holy ghost. This wise is no man Priest but he that is chosen, saue as in time of necessitie euery parson Christeneth, so may euery man teach his wife & housholde, and the wife her children. So in time of neede if I see my brother sinne, I may betwene hym and me rebuke him, and damne his deede by the lawe of God. And may also comfort them that are in dispayre with the promises of God, and saue them if they beleue.

Presbiter.

Priestes now ought not to be annointed with oyle.

By a Priest then in the new testament vnderstand nothing but an elder to teach the younger, and to bring thē vnto the full knowledge and vnderstanding of Christ and to minister the Sacramentes which Christ ordeyned, which is also nothyng but to preach Christes promises. And by them that geue all their studie to quench the light of truth, and to holde the people in darcknes, vnderstand the disciples of Sathan and messengers of Antichrist, what soeuer names they haue, or what soeuer they call themselues. And as concerning that our spiritualtie (as they will be called) make themselues holyer

The office of a Priest.

They will be holier, but their deedes be not holy at all.

holyer then the lay people, and take so great landes and goodes to pray for them, and promise them pardons and forgevenes of sinnes, or absolution, without preachyng of Christes promises, is falsehode and the woorkyng of Antichrist: and (as I have sayd) the ravenyng of those wolues which Paul (Act. xx.) prophesied, should come after hys departyng not sparyng the flocke. Their doctrine is that marchaundise wherof Peter speaketh saying: through couetousnes shall they with fayned wordes make marchaundise of you. ij. Pet. ij. And their reasons wherewith they proue their doctrine are (as sayth Paul. i. Timo. vj.) superfluous disputynges, arguynges or braulyngs of men with corrupt mindes and destitute of truth, whiche thinke that lucre is godlynes. But Christ sayth. Math. vij. by their frutes shalt thou know them, that is by their filthy couetousnes and shameleße ambition and dronken desire of honor, contrary vnto the example & doctrine of Christ and of his Apostles. Christ sayd to Peter, the last Chapter of John. Fede my sheepe, and not shere thy flocke. And Pet. sayth. i. Pet. v. Not being Lordes ouer the Parishes: but theße shere, and are become Lordes. Paul saith. ij. Cor. ij. Not that we be Lordes ouer your faith: but theße will be Lordes & compel vs to beleue what soeuer they lust, without any witnes of Scripture, yea cleane contrary to the Scripture, whē the opē text rebuketh it. Paul sayth, it is better to geue, thē to receaue. Act. xx. But theße do nothyng in the world but lay snares to katch and receaue what so euer cōmeth, as it were the gapyng mouth of hell. And. ij. Cor. xij. I seeke not yours but you: but theße seeke not you to Christ, but yours to thē selues, and therfore leſt their dedes should be rebuked will not come at the light.

Compare their dedes to the doctrine and deedes of Christ, and of his Apostles, and iudge their frutes.

Neuertheleße the truth is, that we are all equally beloued in Christ, and God hath sworne to all indifferently. Accordyng therfore as euery man beleueth Gods promißes, longeth for thē, and is diligent to pray vnto GOD to fulfill them, so is his prayer heard, and as good is the prayer of a cobler, as of a Cardinall: and of a bocher, as of a Byshop: & the blessing of a baker that knoweth the truth, is as good as the blessyng of our most holy father the Pope. And by blessing vnderstand not the wagging of the popes or Bishops hand ouer thyne head, but prayer, as when we say, God make thee a good man, Christ put his spirite in thee, or geue thee grace and power to walke in the truth, & to folow hys cōmaūdementes &c. As Rebeccas frendes blessed her whē she departed, Gene. xxiiij. saying. Thou art our sister: grow vnto thousand thousandes, and thy seede possesse the gates of their enemies. And as Isaac blessed Iacob Gene. xxvij. saying. God gene thee of the dew of heauen, and of the fatnes of the earth, aboundaunce of corne, wyne and oyle &c. And Gene. xxviij. Almighty God blesse thee and make thee grow, and multiply thee, that thou mayst be a great multitude of people, and gene to thee and to thy seede after thee the blessings of Abraham, that thou mayst possesse the land wherin thou art a straūger which he promised to thy graundfather and such lyke.

What blessing meaneth.

Last of all one singular doubt they haue: what maketh the Priest, the annoynting or puttyng on of the handes or what other ceremonie or what wordes. About which they braule and scolde one ready to teare out an others throte. One sayth this, & an other that, but they cā not agree. Neither cā any of them make so strong a reason which an other can not improue. For they are all out of the way, and without the spirite of God to iudge spirituall things. Howbeit to this I aūswere, that whē Christ called. xij. vp into the moūtaine and chose them, then immediatly without any annointing or ceremony were they his Apostles, that is to witte, ministers chosen to be sent to preach his Testament, vnto all the whole world. And after the resurrection whē he had opened their wittes, and geuen them knowledge to vnderstand the secretes of hys Testament, & how to bynde & loose, and what he would haue thē to do in all thynges, then he sent them forth with a commaundemēt to preach and bynde the vnbeleuyng that continue in sinne, and to loose the beleuyng that repent. And that commaundemēt or charge made thē Byshops, priestes, Popes and all thyng. If they say that Christ made thē priestes at his Maundey or last Supper when he sayd, do this in the remembraūce of me. I aunswere, though the Apostles wist not then what her ment, yet I will not striue nor say that agaynst. Neuer the latter the commaundement and the charge which he gaue them made thē Priestes.

The commaundement maketh Priestes.

And Actes the first, when Mathias was chosē by lotte, it is not to be douted but that the Apostles, after their common maner, prayed for him that God would geue him grace to minister his office truely, and put their handes on him, and exhorted him and gaue him charge to be diligent & faithfull, and then was he as great as the best. And Actes. vj. when the Disciples that beleued had chosen. vij. Deacons to minister to the widdowes, the Apostles prayed and put their handes on them, and admitted them without more adoe. Their putting on of handes was not after the maner of the dome blessing of our holy byshops with two fingers: but they spake vnto them, and tolde them their dutie and gaue them a charge and warned them to be faythfull in the Lordes busines: as we chuse temporall officers and read their duty to them, and they promise to be faythfull ministers, and then are admitted. Neither is there any other maner or ceremonie at all required in makyng of our spirituall officers, then to chuse an able person, and thē to rehearse him his dutie and geue him his charge and so to put him in his rowme. And as for that other solemne doubte, as they call it whether Iudas was a Priest or no, I care not what he then was: but of this I am sure, that he is now not onely Priest, but also Byshop, Cardinall and Pope.

Putting on of hāds.

What Iudas is now.

¶ Of Penaunce.

PEnaunce is a word of their owne forgyng to disceaue vs with all, as many other are. In the Scripture we finde panitentia repentaunce. Agite panitentiam, do repent: Panitеat vos, let it repēt you. Metanoyte in Greeke, forthinke ye, or let it forthinke you. Of repentaunce they haue made penaunce, to blinde the people and to make them thinke that they must take payne and do some holy dedes to make satisfaction for their sinnes, namely such as they enioyne them. As thou mayst see in the Cronicles, when great kynges and tyrauntes (which with violence of sword conquered other kynges landes and slew all that came to hand) came to them selues, and had conscience of their wicked dedes, then the Byshops coupled them, not to Christ: but vnto the Pope, and preached the Pope vnto them, and made them to submit them selues and also their realmes vnto the holy father the Pope, and to take penaunce, as they call it, that is to say, such iniunctions as the Pope and Bishops would commaund them to do, to build Abbays, to endote them with liuelode, to be prayed for for euer: and to geue them exemptions and priuilege and licence to do what the lust vnpunished.

A point of practise.

Repentaunce goeth before faith and prepareth the way to Christ, and to the promises. For Christ, commeth not, but vnto them that see their sinnes in the law and repent. Repentaunce that is to say, this mornyng and sorrow of the hart lasteth all our liues long. For we finde our selues all our liues long to weake for Gods law, and therfore sorrow & morne longyng for strength. Repentaunce is no Sacrament: as faith, hope, loue, and knowledge of a mans sinnes are not to be called Sacramentes. For they are spirituall and inuisible. Now must a Sacrament be an outward signe that may be sene to signifie, to represent, and to put a man in remēbraunce of some spirituall promise which can not be sene but by faith onely. Repentaunce and all the good dedes which accompanie repentaunce to slay the lustes of the flesh are signified by Baptisme. For Paule sayth Roma. vj. (as it is aboue rehearsed.) Remember ye not (saith he) that all we whiche are baptised in the name of Christ Iesus, are baptised to dye with him: we are buryed with him in Baptisme for to dye, that is, to kil the lustes and the rebellion which remayneth in the flesh. And after that he sayth, ye are dead as concernyng sinne but lyue vnto God, through Iesus Christ our Lord. If thou looke on the profession of our harts, and on the spirit and forgeuenes which we haue receaued thorough Christes merites, we are full dead: but if thou looke on the rebellion of the flesh we do but begyn to dye and to be baptised, that is, to drowne and quench the lustes, and are full baptised at the last minute of death. And as cōcernyng the worckyng of the spirite we begyn to lyue, & grow euery day more and more both in knowledge and also in Godly lyuyng, accordyng as the lustes abate. As a child receaueth ỹ full soule at the first day, yet groweth dayly in the operations & workes therof.

Repentaunce.

Repentaunce is signified by Baptime.

¶ Of Confession.

COnfession is diuers: One foloweth true fayth inseparably. And is the con-

One confession is to knowledge wherein thou puttest thy trust.

confessing and knowledging with the mouth, wherein we put our trust and confidēce. As when we say our Credo: confessing that we trust in God the father almighty, and in his truth & promises: & in his sonne Jesus our Lord, and in his merites and deserninges: & in the holy Ghost, and in his power, assistance and guiding. This confession is necessary vnto all men that wyll be saued. For Christ saith Mathew.x. he that denyeth me before men, hym will I deny before my father that is in heauen. And of this confession sayth the holy Apostle Paule in the x. chapter. The beliefe of the hart justifieth: and to knowledge wyth the mouth maketh a man safe. This is a wonderfull text for our Philosophers or rather sophisters, our worldly wyse enemies to the wisdome of God, our deepe & profounde welles wythout water, our cloudes wythout moysture of rayne, that is to say, naturall soules without the spirite of God, and feeling of godly thynges. To justifie and to make safe are both one thing. And to confesse with the mouth is a good worke, and the frute of a true fayth, as all other workes are.

If thou repent and beleue the promises, then Gods truth justifieth thee, that is, forgeueth thee thy sinnes, and sealeth thee with hys holy spirite, and maketh thee heyre of euerlastyng lyfe through Christes deserninges. Now if thou haue true fayth, so seest thou the exceeding and infinite loue and mercy which God hath shewed thee freely in Christ: then must thou needes loue agayne: and loue can not but compell thee to worke, and boldly to confesse & knowledge thy Lord Christ, and the trust which thou hast in his word. And this knowledge maketh thee safe, that is declareth that thou art safe already, certifieth thine hart, and maketh thee feele that thy fayth is right, and that Gods spirite is in thee, as all other good workes doe. For if when it commeth vnto the point, thou hast no lust to worke, nor power to confesse, how couldest thou presume to thinke that Gods spyre were in thee?

If when tyrannes oppose thee thou haue power to confesse then art thou sure that thou art safe.

An other confession is there which goeth before faith, and accompanieth repentaunce. For who so euer repenteth doth knowledge his sinnes in his hart. And who soeuer doth knowledge his sinnes, receaueth forgeuenes (as sayth John in the first of his first Epistle.) If we knowledge our sinnes he is faythfull and iust to forgeue vs our sinnes, and to clense vs from all vnrighteousnes, that is, because he hath promised, he must for his truthes sake doe it. This confession is necessary all our liues long, as is repentaunce. And as thou vnderstandest of repentaunce, so vnderstand of this confession, for it is likewise included in the sacrament of Baptime. For we alwayes repent and alwayes knowledge or cōfesse our sinnes vnto God, and yet dispayre not: but remember that we are washed in in Christes bloud, which thing our baptime doth represēt, and signifie vnto vs.

An other confession is to knowledge thy sinnes in thyne hart vnto God.

Shrift in the eare is verely a worke of Sathan, and that the falsest that euer was wrought, and that most hath deuoured the fayth. It began among the Greekes, and was not as it is now, to recke all a mās sinnes in the prestes eare: but to aske coūcell of such doubtes as men had, as thou mayst see in S. Dierome, and in other authors. Neither were they to Prestes onely which were very fewe at that tyme, no moe then preached the worde of God, for this so great vantage in so many masses saying, was not yet founde: but went indifferently, where they saw a good and a learned man. And for because of a litle knauery which a Deacō at Constantinople plaide thorough cōfession with one of the chiefe wines of the citie, it was layde downe agayne. But we Antichristes possession, the more knauery we see growe thereby dayly, the more we stablishe it. A christen man is a spirituall thing, and hath Gods word in his hart, and gods spirite to certifie him of all thing. He is not bound to come to any eare. And as for the reasons which they make are but persuasions of mans wisedome. First as perteining vnto the keyes & maner of bynding and loosing is enough aboue rehearsed, & in other places. Thou maist also see how the Apostles vsed them in the Actes, and in Paules Epistles, how at the preaching of fayth the spirite came, and certified their harts that they were iustified thorough beleuing the promises.

Shrift.

Shrift was put downe for knauery among the Greekes: But is stablished there by among vs.

When a man feeleth that his hart consenteth vnto the law of God, and feeleth hymselfe meeke, pacient, curteous and mercifull to hys neighbour, altered and fashioned like vnto Christ, why shoulde he doubt but that God hath forgeuen him and chosen him and put his spirite in hym, though he ne-

How a mā shall know that hys sinnes are forgeuen.

uer cronme hys sinne into the priestes care?

Blind reason is their guide and not Gods spirite.

One blynde reason haue they saying. How shall the Priest vnbynde, loose and forgeue the sinne which he knoweth not? How did the Apostles? The Scripture forsake they and runne vnto their blinde reasons, and draw the Scripture vnto a carnall purpose. When I haue tolde thee in thyne eare all that I haue done my life long, in order and with all circumstances after the shamefullest maner, what cāst thou doe more then preach me the promises, saying: if thou repent & beleue, Gods truth shall saue thee for Christes sake? Thou seest not myne hart, thou knowest not whether I repent or no, neyther whether I consent to the law, that it is holy, righteous, and good. Moreouer whether I beleue the promises or no, is also vnknowen to thee. If thou preach the law and the promises, (as the Apostles did) so should they that God hath chosen repent and beleue and be saued: euen now as well as then. How beit Antichrist must know all secretes to stablish his kingdom, & to worke his misteries withall.

Learne to know them for they are verely lepers in theyr hartes.

They bryng also for them the storie of the x. lepers, whiche is written in the .xvij. Chapter of Luke. Here marke their falsehoode, and learne to knowe them for euer. The fourtene Sonday after the feast of the Trinitie, the begynnyng of the vij. lesson is the sayd Gospell and the viij. & the ix. lessons with the rest of the seuenth is the exposition of Bede vpon the sayd Gospell. where, saith Bede, of all that Christ healed, of what so euer disease it were, he sent none vnto the Priestes, but the lepers. And by the lepers enterpreteth the folowers of false doctrine onely, which the spirituall officers, and the learned men of the congregation ought to examine, and rebuke their learning with Gods word, and to warne the congregation to beware of them. which, if they were afterward healed by the grace of Christ, ought to come before the cōgregation, and there openly confesse theyr true fayth.

But all other vices (saith he) doth God heale within in the conscience.

Though they this wise reade at mattens, yet at hie masse, if they haue any sermon at all, they lie cleane contrary vnto this open truth. Neither are they ashamed at all. For why they walke altogether in darcknes.

¶ of Contrition.

Contrition and repētaunce are both one and nothyng els but a sorowful & a mournyng hart. And because that God hath promised merry vnto a contrite hart, that is, to a sorowfull and repentyng hart, they to beguile Gods word and to stablish their wicked tradition, haue fayned that new word attrition saying: thou canst not know whether thy sorrowe or repentaunce be contrition or attrition, except thou be shriuen. when thou art shriuen, thē it is true contritiō. Oh fory Pharisay, that is thy leuen, of which Christ so diligētly bad vs beware. Math. vj. And the very prophesie of Peter thorough couetousnes with fayned wordes shall they make marchaūdise of you. ij. Pet. ij. with such gloses corrupt they Gods word, to sit in the consciences of ỹ people, to lead them captiue, and to make a praye of thē: byeng and sellyng their sinnes, to satisfy their vnsatiable couetousnes. Neuertheles the truth is, when any man hath trespased agaynst God. If he repēt and knowledge his trespasse, God promiseth him forgenenesse without eare shrift.

Attritiō is of the leuen of the pharisees.

If he that hath offended his neighbour repente and knowledge his fault askyng forgeuenes, if his neighbour forgeue him, God forgeueth him also, by his holy promise. Mat. xviij. Likewise if he that sinneth openly, when he is openly rebuked, repent and turne, then if the congregation forgeue hym God forgeueth him. And so forth who soeuer repenteth and when he is rebukes knowledgeth his fault is forgeuē.

He also that doubteth or hath hys consciences tangled, ought to open his minde vnto some faythfull brother that is learned, and he shall geue hym faythful counceil to helpe him withall.

whom a man offendeth to him must he confesse.

To whom a man trespasseth, vnto him he ought to confesse. But to confesse my selfe vnto thee O Antichrist, whom I haue not offended, am I not bounde.

They of the old law had no confession in the eare. Neither the Apostles nor they that folowed many hundred yeares after knew of any such whisperyng. wherby then was their attritiō turned vnto contrition? yea why are we whiche Christ came to loose, more bound thē the Iewes. Yea and why are we more bounde without Scripture? For Christ came not to make vs more bounde, but to loose vs and to make a thouthousand thynges no sinne which before were sinne, and are now become sinne agayne. He left none other law with vs, but the law of loue. He loosed vs not frō Moyses to bynde vs vnto Antichristes eare. God had not tyed Christ vnto Antichristes eare, neither hath poured all his mercy in thether, for it hath no recorde in the old Testament, that Antichristes eare should be Propiciatorium, that is to witte, Gods mercy stole, and that God should crepe into so narow a hole, so that hee could no where els be founde. Neither dyd God write his lawes neither yet hys holy promises in Antichristes eare: but hath graued them with his holy spirite in the hartes of them that beleue, that they might haue them alwayes ready at hand to be saued therby.

It hath no recorde in in ẏ Scripture that God shuld crepe in, & hyde him selfe in Antichristes eare.

¶ Satisfaction.

AS pertainyng vnto satisfactiō, this wise vnderstād, that he that loueth God hath a commaundement (as S. Iohn sayth in the fourth Chap. of his first Epistle) to loue his neighbour also: whom if thou haue offended thou must make him amendes or satisfactiō, or at the lest way if thou be not able, aske him forgeuenes, & if he will haue mercy of God, he is bound to forgeue thee. If he will not: yet God forgeueth thee, if thou thus submit thy selfe. But vnto Godward Christ is a perpetuall and an euerlastyng satisfaction for euermore.

Christ is an euerlastyng satisfaction.

As oft as thou fallest through frailtie, repent & come agayne and thou art safe & welcome, as ẏ mayst see by ẏ similitude of the riotous sonne, Luke. xv. If thou be lopen out of sanctuary come in agayne. If thou be fallen from the way of truth come thereto agayne and thou art safe, if thou be gone astray come to ẏ folde againe & the shepheard Christ shall saue thee, yea and the aungels of heauen shal reioyce at thy commyng, so farre it is of that any mā shal beate thee or chide thee. If any Pharisey enuye thee, grudge at thee, or rayle vpon thee, thy father shall make aunswere for thee, as thou seist in the fore rehearsed likenes or parable. Who soeuer therfore is gone out of the way by what soeuer chaūce it be, let him come to his Baptisme agayne and vnto the profession therof and he shalbe safe.

Baptisme lasteth euer.

For though that the washyng of Baptisme be past, yet the power therof, that is to say, ẏ word of God which Baptisme preacheth lasteth euer and saueth for euer. As Paul is past and gone, neuertheless ẏ word that Paul preached lasteth euer and saueth euer as many as come therto with a repentyng hart and a stedfast faith.

Hereby seest thou that when they make penaunce of repentaunce and cal it a Sacrament and deuide it into contrition, confession and satisfaction they speake of their owne heades and lye falsely.

THeir absolution also iustifieth no man from sinne. For with the hart do men beleue to be iustified with all, sayth Paul. Roma. 10. that is, through fayth and beleuyng the promises, are we iustified, as I haue sufficiently proued in other places with ẏ Scripture. Fayth (sayth Paul in the same place) commeth by hearyng, that is to say, by hearyng the preacher that is sent from God and preacheth Gods promises. Now when thou absolues in Latine, the vnlearned heareth not. For how, saith Paul. i. Cor. xiiij. when thou blessest in an vnknowen toung, shall the vnlearned say Amen vnto thy thankes geuing? for he wotteth not ẏ sayst. So likewise the lay wotteth not whether thou loose or bynde, or whether thou blesse or curse. In like maner is it if the lay vnderstād Latine or though the Priest absolue in English. For in hys absolution he rehearseth no promise of God: but speaketh his owne wordes saying: I by the authoritie of Peter and Paul absolue or loose thee from all thy sinnes. Thou sayst so, which art but a lying man and neuer more then now verely.

Thou sayst I forgene thee thy sinnes, and the Scripture (Iohn the first) that Christ onely forgeueth & taketh away ẏ sinnes of the world. And Paul and Peter and all the Apostles preache that all is forgeuen in Christ and for Christs sake. Gods word onely looseth and thou in preachyng that mightest loose also and els not.

Who soeuer hath eares let him heare and let him that hath eyes, see. If any man loue to be blinde, his blindnes on his owne head and not on mine.

Of bynding and loosing and of the Popes authoritie or power.

THey alledge for thē selues the sayyng of Christ to Peter Math. xvj. what soeuer thou byndest on earth, it shalbe bounde, & what soeuer thou looseth, and so forth. Lo say they, what soeuer euer we bynde & what soeuer we loose here is nothing excepted. And an other text lay they of Christ in ỳ last of Mathew. All power is geuen to me sayth Christ, in heauen and in earth: go therfore and preach &c. Preachyng leaueth the Pope out, and sayth loe all power is geuen me in heauen & in earth. And thereupon taketh vpon him temporall power aboue kyng and Emperour, & maketh lawes and bindeth them. And like power taketh he ouer gods lawes and dispenseth with them at his lust, makyng no sinne of that whiche God maketh sinne, & maketh sinne where God maketh none: yea & wypeth out Gods lawes cleane and maketh at his pleasure, & with him is lawful what he lusteth. He bindeth where God looseth & looseth where God bindeth. He blesseth where G O D curseth and curseth where God blesseth. He taketh authoritie also to bynde & loose in Purgatory. That permit I vnto him: for it is a creature of his owne makyng. He also bindeth the aungels. For we read of Popes that haue commaũded the aungels to fet diuers out of Purgatory. Howbeit I am not yet certified whether they obeyed or no.

The Pope chalengeth power not ouer man onely but ouer God also.

Purgatory is the Popes creature: he may therfore be bold there.

The Pope bindeth the aungels.

Understand therfore that to bynde and to loose, is to preach the lawe of God and the Gospell or promises, as thou mayst see in the third chapter of the second epistle to the Corinthians: where Paule calleth the preaching of the law the ministration of death, and damnation, and the preaching of the promises then ministring of the spirite and of righteousnes. For when the law is preached, all men are found sinners, and therefore damned: and when the Gospell & glad tydinges are preached, then are all that repent and beleue, founde righteous in Christ. And so expounde it all the olde doctours. Saint Hierome sayth vpon this text, whatsoeuer thou bindest, the Bishops and Priestes sayth he, for lacke of vnderstanding, take a litle presumption of the Pharisees vpon thẽ. And thinke that they haue authoritie to bynde innocentes, and to loose the wicked, which thing our Pope and Byshops doe. For they say the curse is to be feared, be it right or wrõg. Though thou haue not deserued, yet if ỳ Pope curse thee, thou art in perill of thy soule as they lie: yea and though he be neuer so wrongfully cursed, he must be fayne to buy absolution. But Saint Hierome sayth as ỳ Priest of the olde law made the lepers cleane or vncleane, so bindeth and vnbindeth the Priest of the new law.

The true byndyng & loosing.

S. Hierome agaynst Bishops and Priestes.

The curse is to bee feared.

The right maner of loosing.

The Priest there made no man a leper, neither cleansed any mã, but God: and the Priest iudged onely by Moyses law, who was cleane, & who was vncleane, whẽ they were brought vnto hym.

So here we haue the law of God to iudge what is sinne, and what is not, and who is bounde, and who is not. Moreouer if any man haue sinned, yet if he repent and beleue the promise, we are sure by Gods word that he is loosed & forgeuen in Christ. Other authoritie then this wise to preach, haue the Priests not. Christes Apostles had no other thẽ selues, as it appeareth throughout all the new testamẽt. Therfore it is manifest that they haue not.

Saint Paule sayth i. Corinth. xv. when we say all thinges are vnder Christ, he is to be excepted that put all vnder hym. God the father is not vnder Christ, but aboue Christ, and Christes head. i. Corinth. vi.

Christ vnderstode this texte all power is geuẽ me in heauen & in earth: also vnderstand farre otherwise then the Pope.

Christ sayth John. xiv. I haue not spoken of myne owne head, but my father which sent me, gaue a commaundement what I should say, and what I should speake. what soeuer I speake therefore, euen as my father bad me so I speake. If Christ had a law what he should doe, how happeneth it, that the Pope so runneth at large lawlesse? Though that all power were geuen vnto Christ in heauen and in earth: yet had he no power ouer his father, nor yet to raigne temporally ouer temporall Princes: but a commaundemẽt to obey them. How hath the Pope thẽ such temporall authoritie ouer king & Emperour? How hath he authoritie aboue Gods lawes, and to cõmaunde the Angels, the saintes, and God himselfe?

What authoritie Christ gaue hys Apostles.

Christes authoritie which he gaue to his Disciples, was to preach the lawe and to bring sinners to repentaunce, and then to preach vnto them the promises which the father had made vnto all men for his sake. And the same to preach onely sent he his Apostles. As a kyng sendeth forth his Iudges, and geueth them his authoritie, saying: what ye doe, that doe I. I geue you my full power. Yet meaneth he not by that full power, that they should destroy any towne or Citie, or oppresse any mã or doe what they list, or should raigne ouer the Lordes and Dukes of his his Realme and ouer hys owne selfe. But geueth them a lawe with them & authoritie to bynde and loose, as farforth as the law stretcheth and maketh mention: that is, to punishe the euill, that doe wrong, and to auenge ẏ poore that suffer wrong. And so farre as the law stretcheth, will the king defend his Judge agaynst all men. And as the tẽporall iudges binde & loose temporally, so doe the prestes spiritually, and no other wayes. How be it by falshod and subtilcie the Pope reigneth vnder Christ, as Cardinals and Byshops do vnder kinges lawlesse.

How the Pope reigneth vnder Christ.

A pœna et a culpa is a proper vrcame.

THe Pope (say they) absolueth or looseth a pœna et culpa, that is from the faulte or trespasse, and from the payne due vnto the trespasse. God if a man repent forgeueth the offence onely, and not the paine also, say they, saue turneth the euerlasting payne vnto a temporall payne. And appointeth senẽ yeares in purgatory for euery deadly sinne. But the Pope for money forgeueth both, and hath more power thẽ God, and is more mercifull thẽ God. This doe I saith the Pope of my full power and of ẏ treasure of the Church, of deseruinges of martyrs, cõfessours, and merites of Christ.

The Pope is more mighty & more mercifull for money, thẽ God is for the death of his onely sonne.

The merites of saintes.

The merites of Christ.

First the merites of the Saintes did not saue themselues, but were saued by Christes merites onely.

Secondarily God hath promised Christes merites vnto all that repent: so that whosoeuer repenteth is immediatly heire of all Christes merites and beloued of God as Christ is. How thẽ came this foule monster to be Lord ouer Christes merites, so that he hath power to sell that which God geueth freely. O dreamers, yea O deuils and O venimous scorpians, what poyson haue ye in your tayles? O pestilẽt leauen, that so turneth the sweete bread of Christes doctrine into the bitternesse of gall.

The Pope selleth that which God geueth freely.

Fryers.

The Friers runne in the same spirite and teach, saying: do good deedes and redeeme the paines ẏ abide you in purgatory, yea geue vs somewhat to doe good workes for you. And thus is sinne become the profitablest marchaundise in the worlde. O the cruell wrath of God vpõ vs because we loue not the truth.

Sinne is ẏ best marchaundise that is.

For this is the damnation & iudgement of God, to send a false prophet vnto him that wil not heare the truth. I know you saith Christ, I John. v. that ye haue not the loue of God in you. I am come in my fathers name and ye receaue me not, if an other shall come in his own name, him shall ye receaue. This doth God auenge him selfe on the malicious hartes whiche haue no loue to his truth.

Christ prophesied of Antichrist and telde why he shoulde come.

All the promises of God haue they either wypte cleane out, or thus leauened them with open lyes to stablishe their confession with all. And to kepe vs from knowledge of the truth, they do all thyng in Latin.

The promises are either put out or leauened, and why.

They pray in Latin, they Christen in Latine, they blesse in Latine, they geue absolution in Latin, onely curse they in the English toung. Wherein they take vpon them greater authoritie then euer God gaue them. For in their curses as they call them, with booke bell and candle, they commaũde God and Christ and the aungels and all Saintes to curse them: curse them God (say they) father, sonne and holy ghost, curse them virgine Mary. &c. O ye abominable, who gaue you authoritie to commaũde God to curse? God commaundeth you to blesse, and ye cõmaunde him to curse. Blesse them that persecute you: blesse but curse not, saith S. Paul Roma. xij. what tyranny wil these not vse ouer men, which presume and take vpon them to be Lordes ouer God and to commaunde him: If God shall curse any man, who shall blesse and make him better? No man can amende him selfe, except God poure his spirite vnto him. Haue we not a commaundemẽt to loue our neighbour as our selues? How can I loue him and curse him also? James sayth, it is not possible that blessing & cursing should come both out of one mouth. Christ cõmaundeth Math. v. saying: loue your enemies. Bless them that curse you. Do good to them that hate you. Pray for them that do you wrong and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your heauenly father.

All is full is in Latin.

The Pope commaundeth God to curse.

In the marches of wales it is the maner if any man haue an Oxe or a Cow stollẽ, he commeth to the Curate and desireth him to curse the stealer. And he commaundeth the Parish to geue him euery man Gods curse and his. Gods curse & myne haue he, sayth euery man in the Parish. O mercyfull God what is blasphemy, if this be not blasphemy & shamyng of the doctrine of Christ?

A custome that is vsed in the marches of wales.

Vnderstand therfore, the power of excommunication is this. If any man sinne openly and amendeth not when he is warned: then ought he to be rebuked openly before all the Parish. And the Priest ought to prove by the Scripture, that all such have no part with Christ. For Christ serueth not but for them that loue the law of God, and consent that it is good holy and righteous. And repēt sorrowing & mourning for power and strength to fulfill it. And all the parish ought to be warned, to auoyde the company of all such, and to take them as heathen people. This is not done that he should perish, but to saue him, to make him ashamed & to kill the lustes of the flesh, that the spirite might come vnto the knowledge of truth. And we ought to pitie hym, and to haue compassion on him, and with all diligence to pray vnto God for him, to geue him grace to repent and to come to the right way agayne, and not to vse such tyranny ouer God and man commaūdyng God to curse. And if he repent we ought with all mercy to receaue him in agayn. This mayst thou see Mat. xviij. and, 1. Cor. v. and ij. Cor. ij.

¶ Confirmation.

If confirmation haue a promise, then it iustifieth, as farre as the promise extendeth. If it haue no promise, then is it not of GOD as the Bysshops be not. The Apostles and Ministers of God preach Gods word: and Gods signes or Sacramentes signifie Gods word also, and put vs in remēbraunce of the promises which God hath made vnto vs in Christ. Contrarywise Antichristes Bysshops preach not & their Sacramentes speake not, but as the disguised Bysshops mum, so are their superstitious Sacramentes domme. After that the Bysshops had left preachyng, then fayned they this domme ceremonie of cōfirmation to haue somwhat at the lest way, whereby they myght raigne ouer theyr Dioceses. They reserued vnto them selues, also the Christenyng of Belles and conuntring or hallowyng of Churches and Churchyardes, and of Altares and superaltares, and holowyng of Chalices and so forth, what socuer is of honor or profite. which cōfirmation and the other conjurations, also they haue now committed to their Suffragans: because they them selues haue no leysure to minister such things, for their lustes and pleasures and aboundance of all thinges, and for the combraunce that they haue in the kynges matters and busines of the Realme. One kepeth the priuey seale, an other ỹ great seale, the thyrd is confessour, that is to say, a priuey traytor and a secreat Iudas, he is President of the Princes Counsaile, he is an Ambassadour, an other sort of the Kynges secret Counsaile. wo is vnto the Realmes where they are of ỹ counsell. As profitable are they verely vnto the Realmes with their Counsell, as the wolues vnto the Shepe, or the Foxes vnto the Geese.

Gods sacramentes preach Gods promises.

The popes sacraments are domme.

Christening of belles.

Why Suffragās are ordeined.

The Bysshops deuide all among thē.

They will say that the holy Ghost is geuen thorough such ceremonies. If God had so promised, so should it be, but Paule saith Galat. iij. that the spirite is receaued thorough preaching of the fayth. And Actes tenth, while Peter preached the faith, the holy Ghost fell on Cornelius and on hys housholde. How shall we say then to that which they will lay against vs, in the eight chapter of the Actes of the Apostles. where Peter and John put their handes on the Samaritans, and the holy Ghost came? I say that by putting or with putting, or as they put their handes on them, the holy Ghost came. Neuertheless the putting on of the hāds did neither helpe nor hinder. For the text sayth they prayed for them that they might receaue the holy ghost.

Ceremonies bring not the holy Ghost.

Putting on of hāds.

God had made the Apostles a promise, that he woulde wyth such miracles cōfirme their preaching, and moue other to the fayth. Mar. the last. The Apostles therefore beleued and prayed God to fulfill his promise, and God for his truthes sake euen so did. So was it the prayer of fayth that brought the holy Ghost, as thou mayst see also in the last of Iames. If any man be sicke saith Iames, call the elders of the congregation, and let them pray ouer hym, annointing hym with oyle, in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of fayth shall heale the sicke. where a promise is, there is fayth bolde to pray, and God true to geue her her petition. Putting on of the handes is an indifferent thing. For the holy Ghost came by preaching of the fayth, and myracles were done at the prayer of fayth as well without putting on of thē hands, as with, as thou seest in many places. Putting on of the hands was the maner of that nation, as it was to rent their clothes, & to put on sackecloth, & to sprinkle themselues with ashes and earth, when they heard of or saw any sorowful thing, as it was Paules maner ner to stretch out his hand, when he preached: And as it is our maner to holde vp our handes, when we pray, and as some kisse their thome nayle, and put it to their eyes, and as we put our handes on childrens heades, when we blesse thē, saying: Christ blesse thee my sonne, and God make thee a good man: which gestures neither helpe nor hinder. This mayst thou well see by the xiij. of the Actes, where the holy Ghost commaunded to separate Paul and Barnabas, to go and preach. Thē the other fasted and prayed, and put their handes on their heades, and sent them forth. They receaued not the holy Ghost thē, by putting on of hands, but the other as they put their handes on their heades prayed for them, that God would goe with them & strength them, and corraged them also, bidding them to be strong in God, and warned them to be faythfull and diligent in the worke of God, and so forth.

¶ Anoyling.

LAst of all commeth the anoyling wythout promise, and therefore without the spirite and without profet, but altogether vnfruitfull and superstitious. The sacramentes which they haue imagined are all wythout promise, and therefore helpe not. For whatsoeuer is not of fayth is sinne. Rom. xiiij. Now without a promise can there be no fayth. The sacraments which Christ himselfe ordeined, which haue also promises, and would saue vs if we knew them and beleued them, them minister they in the latine tong. So are they also become as vnfruitfull as the other. Yea they make vs beleue that the worke it self without the promise saueth vs, which doctrine they learned of Aristotle. And thus are we become an hundred tymes worse then the wicked Iewes which beleued that the very worke of their sacrifice iustified them. Against which Paul fighteth in euery epistle, proouing that nothyng helpeth saue the promises which God hath sworne in Christ. Aske the people what they vnderstand by their Baptime or washing. And thou shalt see that they beleue, how that the very plunging into the water saueth them: of the promises they know not, nor what is signified thereby. Baptime is called volowing in many places of England, because the priest sayth, Volo say ye. The childe was well volowed (say they) yea and our Vicare is as fayre a volower as euer a priest within this twenty miles.

What soeuer is not of fayth, is sinne.

The latine tounge destroyeth the fayth.

That the worke without ỹ promise saueth, is impyoued.

The people beleue in ỹ worke without ỹ promise.

Volowing.

Beholde how narowly the people looke on the ceremony. If ought be left out, or if the childe be not altogether dipt in the water, or if, because ỹ childe is sicke, ỹ priest dare not plunge him into the water, but poure water on his head, how tremble they? how quake they? how say ye sir John say they, is this childe christened enough? hath it his full christendome? They beleue verely that the childe is not christened: yea I haue knowen Priestes that haue gone vnto the orders againe supposing that they were not priestes, because that the Bishop left one of his ceremonies vndon. That they call cōfirmation, the people call Bishoping. They thinke that if the Bishop butter the childe in ỹ forehead, that it is safe. They thinke that the worke maketh safe, and likewise suppose they of anoyling. Now is this false doctrine verely. For James sayth in ỹ fyrst chapter of hys Epistle. Of his good wyll begat he vs with ỹ word of life, that is, with the worde of promise. In which we are made Gods sonnes & heires of the goodnes of god before any good workes. For we can not worke Gods will tyll we be hys sonnes and know hys wyll and haue hys spirite to teach vs. And Saint Paule sayth in ỹ fyft chapter of hys Epistle to the Ephesians. Christ clensed the congregation in the fountayne of water thorough the worde. And Peter saith in the first of his first epistle. Ye are borne anew, not of mortall seede, but of immortall seede, by the worde of God which liueth and lasteth euer. Paule in euery Epistle warneth vs that we put no trust in workes, and to beware of perswasions or arguments of mans wisdome, of superstitiousnes, of ceremonies, of Pope holynes, and of all maner disguising. And exhorteth vs to cleaue fast vnto the the naked and pure worde of God. The promise of God is the Anker that saueth vs in all tēptations. If all ỹ world be against vs, Gods word is stronger then ỹ world. If the world kill vs, that shall make vs aliue agayne. If it be possible for the worlde to cast vs into hell, from thence yet shall Gods worde bring vs agayne. Herby seest thou that it is not the worke, but the promise that iustifieth vs thorough fayth. Now where no promise is, there can no fayth be,

The worke saueth not, but the worde, that is to say, ỹ promise.

Workes, be they neuer so glorious iustifie not.

and therefore no iustifiyng though there be neuer so glorious workes. The Sacrament of Christes body after this wise preach they. Thou must beleue that it is no more bread, but the very body of Christ, flesh, bloud, and bone, euen as he went here on earth, saue his coate. For that is here yet, I wot not in how many places. I pray thee what helpeth all this? Here is no promise. The deuils know that Christ dyed on a Fryday, and the Iewes also. what are they holpe thereby? we haue a promise that Christ and his body and his bloud, and all that he did and suffered, is a sacrifice, a raunsome, and a full satisfaction for our sinnes: that God for his sake wyll thinke no more on them, if they haue power to repent and beleue.

In all thing they leaue out the promises.

Holy worke men thinke that God reioyceth in the deede selfe, without any further respecte. They thinke also that God as a cruell tyrant, reioyceth and hath delectation in our payne takyng without any further respect. And therefore many of them marry themselues wythout cause, after the ensample of Baals Priestes which (iij. Reg. xviij. cut themselues to please theyr God with all, and as the olde heathen pagans sacrificed their children in the fyre vnto their Gods. The Monkes of the Charterhouse thinke that ỹ very eating of fishe in it selfe pleaseth God, and referre not the eating vnto the chastening of the body. For when they haue slayne their bodyes wyth colde fleme of fisheating: yet then will they eate no flesh, and sley themselues before their dayes. we also when we offer our sonnes or daughters, and compell or perswade them to vowe & professe chastitie, thinke that ỹ very payne and that rage and burning which they suffer in abstemming from a make, pleaseth God, and so referre not our chastitie vnto our neighbours profet. For when we see thousandes fall to innumerable diseases therby, and to die before their dayes: yea though we see thē breake the commaundementes of God dayly, and also of very impatiency worke abhominations against nature, to shamefull to be spoken of: yet wyll we not let them marry, but compell them to continue still wyth violence. And thus teach our deuines as it appereth by their argumentes. He that taketh most payne, say they, is greatest and so forth.

The people are throughly brought in beliefe that the deede in it selfe without any further respect saueth them, if they be so long at Church, or say so many Pater nosters, and reade so much in a toung whych they vnderstand not, or goe so much a pilgrimage, and take so much payne, or fast such a superstitious fast, or obserue such a superstitious obseruaūce, neither profitable to himselfe nor to hys neyghbour: but done of a good entent onely say they, to please God withall, ye to kille the pare they thinke it a meritorious deede, when to loue their neyghbour, and to forgeue hym, which thyng is signified thereby, they studie not to doe, nor haue power to doe, nor thinke that they are bounde to doe it, if they be offended by hym. So sore haue our false prophets brought ỹ people out of their wittes, & haue wrapped thē in darcknes, and haue rocked them a sleepe in blyndnes and ignorauncy. Now is all such doctrine false doctrine, and all such fayth false fayth. For the deede pleaseth not, but as farre forth as it is applyed vnto our neyghbours profet, or the taming of our bodyes to keepe the commaundement.

How farre forth the deede is acceptable to God.

Now must the body be tame onely, and that wyth the remedies that God hath ordeined, and not kylled. Thou must not forswere the naturall remedy which God hath ordened, and bryng thy selfe into such case that thou shouldest eyther breake Gods commaundement or kyll thy selfe, or burne nyght and day wythout rest, so that thou cāst not once thinke a godly thought: neyther is it lawfull to forsake thy neyghbour, and to withdraw thy selfe from seruing him, and to get thee into a den, and lyue idely profitable to no man, but robbing all men, first of fayth, and then of goodes and land, and of all he hath, wyth makyng hym beleue in the hypocrisy of thy superstitious prayers and Popeholy deedes. The prayer of fayth, and ỹ deedes thereof that spring of loue are accepted before God. The prayer is good accordyng to the proportion of fayth, and the deede accordyng to the measure of loue. Now he that bideth in the world, as Monkes call it, hath more fayth then the cloysterer. For he hangeth on God in all thynges. He must trust God to sende hym good speede, good lucke, fauour, helpe, a good maister, a good neyghbour, a good seruaunt, a good wyfe, a good chapman marchaunt, to send hys marchaundice sale to land, and a thou-stand like. He loueth also more, which appeareth in that hee doth seruice alwayes vnto his neighbour. To pray one for an other are we equally bound, and to pray is a thyng that we may alwayes doe, what so euer we haue in hand, and that to do may no man hyre an other: Christes blood hath hyred vs all ready. Thus in the deede deliteth God as farforth as we do it either to to serue our neighbour with all, as I haue sayd: or to tame the flesh, that we may fulfill the commaundement from the bottome of the hart.

And as for our payne takyng God reioyseth not therin as a tyraunt: but pitieth vs & as it were moueth with vs, and is alway ready and at hand to helpe vs, if we call, as a mercyfull father and a kynd mother. Neuer the later hee suffereth vs to fall into many temptations and much aduersitie: yea him selfe layeth the crosse of tribulatiō on our backes, not that he reioyseth in our sorrow, but to drive sinne out of ỹ flesh, which can none otherwise be cured: as the Phisition and Surgion do many thinges which are paynefull to the sicke, not that they reioyse in the paynes of the poore wretches: but to persecute and to drive out the diseases which can no otherwise be healed.

When the people beleue therfore if they doe so much woorke or suffer so much payne, or go so much a pilgrimage, that they are safe, is a false fayth. For a Christen man is not saued by woorkes, but by fayth in the promises before all good woorkes, though that the woorkes (when we worke Gods commaūdement with a good wil, and not workes of our own imagination) declare that we are safe and that the spirite of him that hath made vs safe is in vs: yea and as God through preachyng of fayth doth purge and iustifie the hart, euen so thorough worckyng of deedes, doth he purge and iustifie the members, makyng vs perfect both in body and soule after the lykenesse of Christ.

Neither nedeth a Christen man to runne hether or thether, to Rome, to Hierusalem, or S. Iames: or any other pilgrimage farre or nere, to be saued thereby, or to purchase forgeuenes of his sinnes. For a Christen mās health and saluation is with in him: euen in his mouth. Roma. x. The word is nye thee, euen in thy mouth and in thyne hart that is the word of faith which we preach sayth Paul. If we beleue the promises with our hartes and confesse them with our mouthes, we are safe. This is our health with in vs. But how shall they beleue that, they heare not? And how shal they heare without a preacher sayth Paul Roma. x. For looke on the promises of God, and so are all our preachers domme. Or if they preach them they so sauce thē and leuen thē, that no stomacke can brooke them nor finde any sauor in them. For they paynte vs such an eare confession as is impossibile to be kept, and more impossible that it should stand with the promises and Testament of God. And they ioyne them penaunce, as they call it, to fast, to go pilgrimages, and geue so much to make satisfaction with all. They preach their Masses, their merites, their pardons, their ceremonies, and put the promise cleane out of possession. The word of health and saluation is nye thee, in thy mouth & thyne hart sayth Paul. Nay say they, thy saluation is in our faythfull eare. This is their hold, thereby know they all secretes, thereby mocke they all men and all mens wines, and beguile Knight, and Squier, Lord, and Kyng, and betray all Realmes. The Byshops with the Pope haue a certaine conspiration and secret treason agaynst the whole world. And by confession know they what Kings and Emperours thinke. If ought be agaynst them, do they neuer so euill, then moue they their captiues to warre and to fight, and geue them pardons to slay whom they will haue taken out of the way. They haue with falsehode taken from all Kynges and Emperours their right and duties, whiche now they call their freedomes, liberties, & priuileges & haue peruerted the ordinaunces that God left in the world, and haue made euery Kyng sweare to defend their falsehode against their own selues. So that now if any man preach Gods worde truly and shew the fredome and libertie of the soule whiche we haue in Christ, or entende to restore the Kynges agayne vnto their duties and right, and to the rowme and authoritie which they haue of God, and of shadowes to make thē Kynges in deede, & to put the world in his order agayne: then the Kynges deliuer their swordes and authoritie vnto the hypocrites to slay him. So dronken are they with the wine of the whore.

Confession.

Lo

Byshops worke there treason thorough confession.

Kynges be sworne to the bishops and not the Byshops vnto the kynges.

¶ The text that foloweth in Paule wil they happely lay to my charge and others. How shall they preach except they be sent, sayth Paul in the sayd. x. to the Romaines. We wil they say, the Pope, Cardinals and Bysshoppes: all authority is ours. The Scripture perteineth vnto vs and is our possession. And we haue a law, that who soeuer presume to preach without the authoritie of the Bishops is excommunicate in the deede doyng. whence therefore hast thou thine authoritie wil they say. The old Phariseis had the Scripture in captiuitie likewise, and asked Christ by what authoritie doest thou these thynges? as who should say: we are phariseis & thou art none of our order, nor hast authoritie of vs. Christ asked them an other question, and so will I do our hypocrites. who sēt you? God? May hee that is sent of God, speaketh Gods word John. iij. Now speake ye not Gods worde, nor any thyng saue your own lawes made cleane contrary vnto Gods worde. Christes Apostles preached Christ, & not themselues. He that is of the truth, preacheth the truth. Now ye preach nothyng but lyes, and therefore are of the deuill the father of all lyes, & of hym are ye sent. And as for mine authoritie or who sent me: I report me vnto my workes as Christ John. v. and. x. If Gods word beare recorde that I say truth, why should any man doubt, but that God the father of truth and of lyght hath sent me as the father of lyes & of darknes hath sent you, and that the spirite of truth, and of light is with me, as the spirite of lyes and of darkenes is with you? By this meanes thou wilt that euery man be a preacher will they say. May verely. For GOD will that not, and therfore will I it not, no more then I would that euery man of London were Mayre of London, or euery man of the Realme kyng therof. God is not the author of dissention and strife, but of vnitie and peace and of good order. I will therefore that where a congregation is gathered together in Christ one be chosen after the rule of Paul, and that hee onely preach, and els no mā openly: but that euery man teach hys houshold after the same doctrine. But if the preacher preach false: then whosoeuers harte God moueth, to the same it shalbe lawfull to rebuke and improue the false teacher, with the cleare and manifest Scripture, and that same is no doubt a true Prophet sent of GOD. For the Scripture is gods, and theirs that beleue and not the false Prophet.

How shall they preach except they be sent is expounded.

How to know who is sent of God and who is not.

No man may preach but he that is called & sent of god.

SAcrament is then as much to say as an holy signe. And the Sacramentes which Christ ordeined preach Gods word vnto vs, and therfore institie and minister the spirite to them that beleue, as Paul thorough preachyng the Gospell was a minister of righteousnes, & of the spirite, vnto all that beleued his preachyng. Domme ceremonies are no Sacramentes, but superstitionsnes. Christes Sacramēts preach the sayth of Christ as his Apostles did & thereby iustifie. Antichristes domme ceremonies preach not ỹ sayth that is in Christ, as his Apostles our Bysshops and Cardinals do not. But as Antichristes Bishops are ordeined to kill who soeuer preach the true faith of Christ: so are his ceremonies ordeined to quench the faith which Christes Sacramētes preach. And hereby maist thou knowe the difference betwene Christes signes or Sacramentes, and Antichristes signes or ceremonyes, that Christes signes speake, and Antichristes be domme.

The difference betwene true Sacraments and false.

Hereby seest thou what is to be thought of all other ceremonies, as halowed water, bread, salt, bowes, belles, waxe, ashes, and so forth, and all other disguisinges and Apesplay, and of all maner coniurations, as the coniuring of church and churchyardes and of alter stones & such like. where no promise of God is, there can be no sayth nor iustifiyng, nor forgeuenes of sinnes. For it is more then madnes to looke for any thing of god, saue that he hath promised. How farre he hath promised, so farre is he bodū to them that beleue, and further not. To haue a sayth therefore or a trust in any thing, where god hath not promised is plaine idolatry, and a worshipping of thyne own imagination in stede of God. Let vs see the pith of a ceremony, or two, to iudge the rest by. In coniuring of holy water they pray, that whosoeuer be sprinckled therewith may receaue health as well of body as of soule, and likewise in makyng holy bread and so forth in the coniurations of other ceremonies. Now we see by dayly experience that halfe their prayer is vnheard. For no man receaueth health of body thereby. No more of likelihode do they of soule. Yea we see also by experience that no man receaueth health of soule thereby. For no man by sprinckling himselfe with holy water, and wyth eating holy bread, is more mercifull

A sayth without Gods promise is idolatrie.

then

then before, or forgeueth wrong, or becommeth at one with his enemy, or is more patient and lesse couetous, and so forth. which are the sure tokens of the soule health.

The Byshops blessing.

They preach also that the wagging of the Byshops hand ouer vs blesseth vs, and putteth away our sinnes. Are these workes not against Christ: How can they do more shame vnto Christes blond? For if the wagging of the Byshops hand ouer me be so precious a thyng in the sight of God that I am thereby blessed, how then am I full blessed wyth all spirituall blessinge in Christ as Paul saith Ephe. i: Or if my sinnes be full done away in Christ, how remayneth there any to be done away by such phantasies? The Apostles knew no wayes to put away sin, or to blesse vs but by preaching Christ.

How the Apostles blessed vs.

Paule sayth Gal. ij. If righteousnes come by the law, then Christ dyed in vayne. So dispute I here. If blessing come by the wagging of the Byshops hand, then dyed Christ in vayne, and his death blesseth vs not. And a little afore, sayth Paule, if while we seeke to be iustified by Christ, we be yet found sinners (so that we must be iustified by the law or ceremonies) is not Christ then a minister of sinne? So dispute I here. If while we seeke to be blessed in Christ we are yet vnblessed, and must be blessed by the wagging of the Byshoppes hand, what haue we then of Christ but curse? Thou wilt say: when we come first to the fayth, then Christ forgeueth vs and blesseth vs. But the sinnes which we afterward commit are forgeuen vs through such thinges.

Repentāce and sure fayth in in Christ purgeth our sinnes.

I aunswere: If any man repent truely and come to the fayth and put hys trust in Christ, thē as oft as he sinneth of frayltie, at the sygh of the hart is his sinne put away in Christes bloud. For Christes bloud purgeth euer and blesseth euer. For Iohn sayth in the second of his first epistle. This I write vnto you that ye sinne not. And though any man sinne (meaning of frailtie and so repent) yet haue we an aduocate with the father, Iesus Christ which is righteous, and he it is that obteineth grace for our sinnes, and Heb. vij. it is written. But this man (meaning Christ) because he lasteth or abideth euer, hath an euerlasting priesthod. Therefore is he able also euer to saue thē that come to God through hym, seing he euer liueth to make intercession for vs. The Byshops therefore ought to blesse vs in preaching Christ, and not to deceaue vs and to bring the curse of God vpon vs, wyth wagging their handes ouer vs. To preache is their dutie onely, and not to offer their feete to bee kissed, or testicles or stones to be groped. We feele also by experience that after the Popes, Byshoppes or Cardinals blessing we are no otherwise disposed in our soules then before.

The protestacion of the author.

Let this be sufficient as concerning the sacramentes and ceremonies, with this protestation, that if any cā say better or improue this with Gods word, no man shall be better content therewith then I. For I seeke nothing but the truth and to walke in the light. I submit therefore this worke and all other that I haue made or shall make (if God will that I shall more make) vnto the iudgements, not of them that furiously burne all truth, but of them which are ready with Gods worde to correct, if any thing be sayde amisse, & to further Gods worde.

Confession robbeth the Sacraments and maketh thē fruteles.

I will talke a worde or two after the worldly wisdome with them, and make an ende of this matter. If the sacramentes iustifie, as they say, I vnderstand by instifiyng forgeuenes of sinnes. Then do they wrong vnto the sacraments, in as much as they robbe the most part of them through confession of their effect, & of the cause wherfore they were ordeined. For no man may receaue the body of Christ, no mā may marry, no man may be oyled or aneiled as they call it, no man may receaue orders, except he be fyrst shriuen. Now when the sinnes be forgeuen by shrift afore hand, there is nought lefte for the sacramentes to doe. They will aunswere, that at the least way they encrease grace, and not the sacramētes onely, but also hearing of masse, matens and euensong, and receauing of holy water, holy bread, and of the Bishops blessing, and so forth by all ceremonies.

What grace is.

By grace I vnderstand the fauour of God, and also the giftes and working of his spirite in vs, as loue, kyndnes, patience, obedience, mercifulnes, despising of worldly thynges, peace, concorde, and such like.

Howe to knowe what iustifieth: and what not: or what bringeth grace and what not.

If after thou hast heard so many masses, matens and euensonges, and after thou hast receaued holy bread, holy water, and the Byshops blessing, or a Cardinals or the Popes, if thou wilt, be more kinde to thy neighbour, and loue him better then before, if thou be more obediēt vnto thy superiors, more mercifull, more ready to forgeue wrong done vnto thee, more despisest the world, and more a thyrst after spirituall thynges, if after that a Priest hath taken orders he be lesse couetous then before: if a wife after so many and oft pilgrimages be more chast, more obedient vnto her husband, more kynde to her maydes and other seruauntes: if Gentlemen, knightes, Lordes, and kinges, and Emperours, after they haue sayd so often dayly seruice wyth their Chappellaynes, know more of Christ then before, and can better skill to rule their tenauntes, subiectes, and realmes christenly then before, and be content with their duties, then do such thinges encrease grace: if not, it is a lie. whether it be so or no, I report me to experience. If they haue any other enterpretations of iustifiyng or grace, I pray them to teach it me. For I would gladly learne it. Now let vs goe to our purpose agayne.

With their Chaplayns quoth hee: God geue grace their Chaplayns at the last make them not so mad to say seruice alone while they.

¶Of miracles and worshipping of Saintes.

Antichrist shal not only come with lying signes, and disguised wyth falshod, but also wyth lying miracles and wonders, saith Paule in the said place .ij. Thess. .ij. All the true miracles which are of God, are shewed (as I aboue rehearsed) to moue vs to heare Gods word, and to stablishe our fayth therin: and to confirme the truth of Gods promises, that we might without all doubting beleue thē. For Gods worde thorough fayth bringeth the spirite into our hartes, and also life, as Christ sayth John. vj. The wordes which I speake are spirite and lyfe. The worde also purgeth vs and clenseth vs, as Christ sayth John. xv. ye are cleane by the meanes of the word. Paul sayth. i. Timo. .ij. One God, one Mediatour (that is to say, aduocate, intercessor, or an atonemaker) betwene God & man: the man Christ Jesus which gaue him selfe a raunson for all men Peter sayth of Christ Actes. iiij. Neither is their health in any other: neither yet also any other name geuen vnto men wherin we must be saued. So now Christ is our peace, our redemption or raunsom for our sinnes, our righteousnes, satisfactiō and all the promises of God are yea & Amen in him. .ij. Cor. i. And we for ỳ great and infinite loue whiche God hath to vs in Christ, loue him again, loue also his lawes, & loue one an other. And the deedes whiche we henceforth doe, do we not to make satisfaction or to obteine heanen: but to succour our neighbour to tame ỳ flesh that we may ware perfect and strong men in Christ, and to be thankefull to God againe for his mercy, and to glorifie his name.

True miracles draw to Christ.

The effect and force of our good deedes.

Contrarywise the miracles of Antichrist are done to pull thee from the worde of God, and from beleuyng his promises and from Christ, and to put thy trust in a man, or a ceremonie wherin Gods word is not. As soone as Gods woorde is beleued, the fayth spread abroad, then cease the miracles of god. But the miracles of Antichrist, because they are wrought by the deuil, to quench the fayth, grow dayly more and more: neither shall cease vntill the worldes end among them that beleue not Gods worde and promises. Seest thou not how God loosed & sent forth all the deuils in the old world among the Heathen or Gētiles? And how the deuils wrought miracles, & spake to them in euery image? Euen so shal the deuill woorke falshode by one craft or an other, vntill the worldes end amōg them that beleue not Gods word. For the iudgement and damnation of hym that hath no lust to heare the truth, is to heare lyes, and to be stablished and grounded therein through false miracles, and he that will not see, is worthy to be blind, and he that biddeth the spirite of God go from him, is worthy to be without him.

False miracles driue from Christ.

Paul, Peter, and all true Apostles preached Christ onely. And the miracles did but confirme and stablish their preachyng, and those euerlastyng promises & eternall Testament that God had made betwene man and hym in Christes bloud, and the miracles dyd testifie also that they were true seruauntes of Christ. Paul preached not him selfe, he taught not any mā to trust in him or his holynes, or in Peter or in any ceremonie, but in the promises which God hath sworne onely, yea he mightyly resisteth all suche false doctrine both to the Corinthians, Galathians, Ephesiās and euery where. If this be true (as it is true and nothyng more truer) that if Paul had preached him self, or taught any mā to beleue in his holynes or prayer or in any thyng, saue in the promises that GOD hath made and sworne to geue vs for Christes sake, he had bene a false Prophet:

He that teacheth to trust in a saint is a false Prophet.

why

why am not I also a false Prophet, if I teach thee to trust in Paule or in hys holines or prayer, or in any thing saue in Gods word as Paul dyd.

What he should pray that prayeth for his neighbour.

If Paule were here and loued me (as he loued them of his tyme of whō he was sent and to whō he was a seruaunt to preache Christ, what good could he doe for me or wisshe me, but preach Christ and pray to God for me, to open myne hart, to geue me his spirite, & to bring me vnto the full knowledge of Christ? vnto which porte or hauen, when I am once come, I am as safe as Paule, felow with Paule, ioyntheyre with Paul of all the promises of God, and gods truth heareth my prayer as well as Paules, I also now could not but loue Paul & wish him good, and pray for him, that God would strength him in all his temptations & geue him victory, as he would do for me. Neuertheless there are many weake, and young consciences alwayes in the congregation which they that haue the office to preach ought to teach, and not to disceaue them.

The weake should be taught and not deceaued.

What prayers pray our Clergy for vs which stoppe vs and exclude vs frō Christ and seke all the meanes possible to kepe vs from knowledge of Christ? They compell vs to hyre Friers, Monkes, Nunnes, Chanons, and Prieستes, & to buye their abhominable merites, and to hyre the Saintes that are dead to pray for vs, for the very Saintes haue they made hyrelynges also: because that their offerynges come to their profite. What pray all those: that we might come to the knowledge of Christ, as the Apostles did? Nay verely. For it is a plaine case, that all they which enforce to kepe vs from Christ, pray not that we might come to the knowledge of Christ. And as for the Saintes (whose prayer was whē they were a lyue that we might be grounded, stablished and strēgthed in Christ onely) if it were of God that we should this wise worshyp them contrary vnto their owne doctrine, I dare be bold to affirme that by the meanes of their prayers, we should haue bene brought long a go vnto the knowledge of God and Christ agayne, though that these beastes had done their worste to let it. Let vs therefore set our hartes at rest in Christ and in Gods promises, for so I thinke it best, and let vs take the Saintes for an example onely, and let vs do as they both taught and dyd.

The spiritualtie pray not that we might come to ỹ knowledge of Christ.

The saintes are but an ensample.

Let vs set Gods promises before our eyes, and desire him for his mercy and for Christes sake to fulfill them. And he is as true as euer he was, and will do it, as well as euer he dyd, for to vs are the promises made as well as to them.

Moreouer the end of Gods miracles is good, the ende to these miracles are euill. For the offerynges which are the cause of the miracles do but minister and maynteine vice, sinne and all abhomination, and are geuen to them that haue to much, so that for very aboundance, they come out their owne shame, and corrupt the whole worlde with the stynch of their filthines.

Offerings cause of the miracles.

Therto what soeuer is not of fayth is sinne, Roma. xiiij. Fayth commeth by hearyng Gods woorde Roma. x. when now thou fastest or doest any thyng in the worshyp of any Saint beleuyng to come to the fauour of God or to bee saued thereby if thou haue Gods worde, then is it true fayth and shall saue thee. If thou haue not Gods woorde, then is it a false fayth superstitiousnes and Idolatry, and damnable sinne.

Also in the Collectes of the Saintes with whiche we pray God to saue vs through the merites or deseruynges of the Saintes (which Saintes yet were not saued by their owne deseruynges them selues) we say Per Christū Dominū nostrum, that is for Christ our Lordes sake. we say saue vs good Lord thorough the saintes merites for Christes sake. How can he saue vs through the Saintes merites for Christes sake and for hys deseruyng merites and loue? Take an example. A Gentleman sayth vnto me I will do the vttemost of my power for thee, for the loue whiche I owe vnto thy father. Though thou hast neuer done me pleasure, yet I loue thy father well, thy father is my frend and hath deserued that I doe all that I can for thee &c. Here is a Testament and a promise made vnto me in the loue of my father onely. If I come to the sayd Gentleman in the name of one of his seruauntes whiche I neuer saw, neuer spake with, neither haue any acquaintaunce at all with and say: Syr I pray you be good master vnto me in such a cause. I haue not deserued that he should so do. Neuertheless I pray you doe it for such a seruauntes sake: yea I pray you for the loue that you owe to my father doe that for me for such a seruauntes sake. If I this wise made my petition, would not me

God ỹ father fulfilleth his promises to vs for Christes sake, & not for the merites of saintes as ỹ Papistes taught.

thinke that I come late out of S. Patrikes Purgatory, & had left my wittes behinde me. This do we. For the Testamēt and promises are all made vnto vs in Christ. And we desire God to fulfill hys promises for the Saintes sake: yea that he will for Christes sake do it for the Saintes sake.

All such Martyrs are the popes martyrs & not Gods. For martyr signifieth a witnes bearer: now is he not Gods witnes that testifieth not his worde.

They haue also martyrs which neuer preached Gods worde, neither dyed therefore: but for priuileges and liberties which they falsely purchased contrary vnto Gods ordinaunces. Yea & such Saintes though they be deade, yet robbe now as fast as euer they did, neither are lesse couetous now then when they were aliue. I doubt not but that they will make a Saint of my Lord Cardinall, after the death of vs that be aliue, and know his iuggling and crafty conueiaunce, and will shrine him gloriously, for his mightily defending of the right of holy Church, except we be diligent to leaue a commemoration of that Nimroth behind vs.

The reasons which they make for ỹ worshipping of Saintes are solued.

The reasons wherewith they proue their doctrine are but fleshly: and as Paule calleth them, entising wordes of mans wisdome, that is to witte, sophistry and brauling argumentes of men with corrupt mindes and destitute of the truth, whose God is their bellye, vnto which idole whosoeuer offereth not, the same is an heretike, and worthy to be brunt.

The Saint was great wyth God when he was aliue, as it appeareth by the myracles which God shewed for him, he must therfore be great now say they. This reasō appeareth wisdome, but it is very folishnes wyth God. For the myracle was not shewed that thou should put thy trust in the Saint, but in the worde which the saint preached, which worde if thou beleuest, would saue thee, as God hath promysed and sworne, & would make thee also great wyth God, as it dyd ỹ Saint.

It is not like wyth kynges and God.

If a mā hane a matter wyth a great man, or a kyng, he must goe fyrst vnto one of hys meane seruauntes, and thē hyer and hyer till he come at the kyng. This entising argumēt is but a blinde reason of mans witte. It is not like in the kingdome of the worlde, and in the kingdome of God and Christ.

With kynges for the most part we haue none acquaintaunce, neither promise. They be also most cōmonly mercilesse. Moreouer if they promise, they are yet mē as vnconstant as are other people, & as vntrue. But with God, if we haue beliefe, we are accompted, and haue an open way in vnto hym by the doore Christ, which is neuer shutte, but through vnbeliefe, neither is there any porter to keepe any man out. By him saith Paul Ephe. ij. that is to say, by Christ we haue an open way in vnto the father. So are ye now no more straungers and forreiners (sayth he) but citizens wyth the Saintes, and of the housholde of God. God hath also made vs promises and hath sworne: yea hath made a testament or a couenaunt, and hath bounde hymselfe, and hath sealed his obligation wyth Christes bloud, and confirmed it wyth miracles. He is also mercifull and kinde, and cōplayneth that we wyll not come vnto hym. He is mighty and able to performe that he promiseth. He is true and can not be but true, as he can not be but God. Therefore is it not lyke with the kyng and God.

We be sinners say they, God wyll not heare vs. Beholde how they flee from God as from a tyraunt mercilesse. whom a mā counteth most mercifull vnto hym, he soneste flyeth. But these teachers dare not come at God. why? For they are ỹ childrē of Caine. If the Saintes loue whome God hateth, then God and his Saints are deuided. when thou prayest to ỹ saintes, how doe they know, except that God whom thou counteste mercilesse, tell them? If God be so cruell and so hateth thee, it is not likely that he wyll tell the Saintes that thou prayest vnto them.

Christ is no sinner.

when they say we be sinners: I answere, that Christ is no sinner, saue a satisfaction, and an offering for synne. Take Christ frō the saintes and what are they? what is Paule wythout Christ: is he any thing saue a blasphemer, a persecuter, a murtherer, and a shedder of Christen bloude? But as soone as he came to Christ he was no more a sinner, but a minister of righteousnes, he went not to Rome to take penaunce vpon him, but went & preached vnto his brethren the same mercy which he had receaued free, wythout doing penaunce or hiering of Saintes or of Monkes or Fryers. Moreouer if it be Gods worde that thou shoulde put thy trust in the saintes merites or prayers, then beholde. For Gods worde shall defend thee and saue thee. If it be but thine owne reason, then feare. For God commaundeth by Moyses Deut. xij. saying: what I cō-maund you, that obserue and do, and put nothing to, nor take ought therefro: yea and Moses warneth straitly in an hundred places, that we do that onely which God commaundeth, and which seemeth good and righteous in hys sight, and not in our owne sight. For nothing bringeth the wrath of god so sone and so sore on a man, as the idolatry of his owne imagination.

Nothyng bringeth a man sooner to confusiō then the Idolatry of his owne imaginatiō

Last of all these arguments are contrary to the argumentes of Christ and of his Apostles. Christ disputeth, Luk. 11. saying: If the sonne aske the father bread, will he geue him a stone? or if he aske him fish, will he geue him a serpent? and so forth. If ye then (saith he) which are euill can geue good giftes to your children, how much rather shall your heauenly father geue a good spirite vnto them that aske him? And a little before in the same chapter he sayeth: If a man came neuer so out of season to his neighbour to borow bread: euen when he is in his chamber, & the dore shut, and all his seruantes wyth him: neuertheless yet if he continue knocking and praying, he will rise and geue him asmuch as he nedeth, though not for loue, yet to be rid of him, that he may haue rest: As who should say: what will God do if a man pray him, seing that prayer ouercommeth an euill man? Aske therfore (sayth he) and it shall be geuen you, seeke, and ye shal finde, knocke and it shalbe opened vnto you. And Luke 18. he putteth forth the parable or similitude of the wicked Iudge which was ouercome with the importunate prayer of ỳ widow. And concludeth, saying: Heare what the wicked Iudge did. And shall not God auenge his elect which cry vnto hym night and day? whether therefore we complaine of the intollerable oppression and persecution that we suffer, or of the flesh that combreth & resisteth the spirite, God is mercifull to heare vs, & to helpe vs. Seest thou not also how Christ cureth many, and casteth out deuyls out of many vnspoken too, how shall he not helpe, if he be desired and spoken to?

When the old pharisies (whose nature is to driue sinners from Christ) asked Christ why he did eat with publicanes and sinners. Christ aunswered that the whole neded not the phisition but the sicke. that is, he came to haue cōuersation with sinners to heale thē. He was a gift geuē vnto sinners, and a treasure to pay theyr debtes. And Christ sent the complayning and disdayning pharisies to the Prophet Oseas saying, Go and learne what thys meaneth, I desire or require mercy, and not sacrifice. As who should say, Ye pharises loue sacrifice and offring, for to feed that God your bellies withall, but God commaundeth to be mercifull. Sinners are euer captiues and a pray vnto the Pharises and hypocrites, for to offer vnto theyr bellies, & to buy merites, pardons, and forgenenes of sinnes of them. And therefore feare they them away from Christe, with argumentes of theyr belly wysedome. For he that receaueth forgeuenes free of Christ, will buy no forgenenes of them. I came (sayth Christ) to call, not the righteous, but the sinners vnto repentaunce. The pharisies are righteous, and therefore haue no part with Christ, neither need they: for they are Gods themselues & sauiours. But sinners that repent partaine to Christ. If we repent, Christ hath made satisfaction for vs already.

Christ is a gift geue to sinners.

God loueth mercy.

Hypocrites loue offerynges.

God so loued the world, that he gaue hys onely sonne, that none that beleue on him should perish, but should haue euerlasting life. For God sent not hys sonne into the world, to condemne the world, but that the world through him might be saued. He that beleueth on him shall not be damned, but he that beleeueth not is damned alreadye. Iohn. iij.

Paule Rom. 5. sayth: Because we are iustifyed through fayth, we are at peace with God through our lord Iesus Christ, that is, because that God, which can not lye, hath promised and sworne to be mercyfull vnto vs, and to forgeue vs for Christes sake, we beleue and are at peace in our consciences, we run not hither and thither for pardon, we trust not in thys fryer, nor that monke, neyther in any thing, saue in the woord of God onely. As a childe when his father threateneth him for his faut, hath neuer rest til he heare the worde of mercy and forgenenes of his fathers mouth againe, but assone as he heareth his father say, Goe thy wayes, do me no more so, I forgeue thee this fault: then is his hart at rest, then is he at peace, then runneth he to no man to make intercession for him. Neyther though there come any false marchant saying, what wilt thou geue me, and I will obtayne pardon of thy father for ther. Will he suffer him selfe to be beguiled? No, he will not buy of a wilie for, that which his father hath geuen him freely.

It foloweth: God setteth out hys loue that he hath to vs. that is, he maketh it appeare, that men may perceiue loue, if they be not more then stocke blinde. In almuch (sayth Paule) as while we were yet sinners, Christ dyed for vs. Much more now (sayth he) seeing we are iustifyed by hys bloud, shall we be preserued from wrath thorough him: for if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God, by the death of hys sonne, much more seeing we are reconciled we shall be preserued by hys life. As who should say, If God loued vs when we knew him not, much more loueth he vs now we know him. If he were mercifull to vs while we hated his Lawe, how much more mercifull will he be now seeing we loue it, and desire strength to fulfill it. And in the viij. he argueth: If God spared not his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all, how shall he not wyth him geue vs all thinges also?

Christ prayed, John xvij. not for the Apostles onely, but also for as many as should beleue thorough theyr preaching and was heard, whatsoeuer we aske in his name the Father geueth vs John.xvj. Christ is also as mercifull as the saintes. why go we not straight way vnto him? Verely because we feale not the mercy of God neyther beleue his truthe. God will at the least way (say they) heare vs the sooner for the saintes sake. Then loueth he the saintes better then Christ and his own truth. Heareth he vs for the saintes sake? so heareth he vs not for his mercye: For merites and mercye can not stand together.

Why we come not to Christ.

Finally if thou put any trust in thine owne deedes, or in the deedes of any other man, of any saint, then minishest thou the truth, mercy, and goodnes of God. For if God looke vnto thy workes, or vnto the workes of any other man, or goodnes of the saint, then doth he not all thinges of pure mercy, and of his goodnesse, and for the truthes sake which he hath sworne in Christ. Now sayth Paule Tit. 3. Not of the righteous deedes which we did, but of his mercy saued he vs.

Our blinde disputers will say: If our good deedes iustify vs not, if God looke not on our good deedes, neither regard them nor loue vs the better for them, what need we to do good deedes? I answer, God looketh on our good deedes, and loueth them, yet loueth vs not for their sakes. God loueth vs first in Christ of his goodnes and mercy, and poureth his spirit into vs, and geueth vs power to do good deedes. And because he loueth vs, he loueth our good deedes: yea because he loueth vs he forgeueth vs our euill deedes, which we do of frailtie and not of purpose or for the nonce. Our good deedes do but testifie onely that we are iustifyed and beloued. For except we were beloued, and had Gods spirite, we could neyther do, nor yet consent vnto any good deed. Antichrist turneth the rootes of the trees vpwarde. He maketh the goodnes of God the braunches, and our goodnes the rootes. We must be first good after Antichristes doctrine, and moue God, and compell him to be good againe for our goodnesses sake: so must Gods goodnesse spring out of our goodnes. Nay verely Gods goodnesse is the root of al goodnes and our goodnes, if we haue any, springeth out of his goodnes.

God looketh on our good deedes

Antichrist turneth the rootes of the trees vnward.

Prayer.

OF Prayer and good deedes, and of the order of loue or charitie I haue aboundantly written in my booke of the iustifying of fayth. Neuer the later that thou maist see, what the prayers and good workes of our monkes and friers and of other ghostly people are worth, I will speake a woord or two, and make an end. Paule sayth Gal. 3. All ye are the sonnes of God thorough fayth in Jesu Christ: for all ye that are baptized haue put Christ on you. that is, ye are become Christ himself. There is no Jew (sayth he) neither Greeke, neither bond nor free, neither man nor woman, but ye are all one thing in Christ Jesu. In Christ there is neither french nor english, but the frenchman is the englishmans owne selfe, and the english the frenchmans owne self. In Christ there is neither father nor sonne neyther maister nor seruaunt, neyther husband nor wife, neither king nor subiect: but the father is the sonnes selfe, and the sonne the fathers owne selfe: and the king is the subiects owne self, and the subiect is the kinges own self, and so forth. I am thou thy selfe, and thou art I my selfe, and can be no nearer of kyn. We are all the sonnes of God, all Christes seruauntes bought with hys bloud, and euery man to other Christ his owne selfe. And Col. 3.

In Christ we are one as good as an other equally beloued & indifferently heard.

ye

Ye haue put on the new man which is renued in the knowledge of God after the image of him that made him (that is to say, Christ) where is (sayth he) neyther Greke nor Iew, circumcision nor vncircumcision, barbarous or Scithian, bond or free: but Christ is all in all thinges. I loue thee not now because thou art my father, and hast done so much for me, or my mother, and hast borne me, and geuen me sucke of thy brestes (for so do Iewes and saracens) but because of the greate loue that Christ hath shewed me. I serue thee not because thou art my maister, or my king, for hope of rewarde, or feare of payne, but for the loue of Christ: for the children of fayth are vnder no law (as thou seest in the Epistles to the Romanes, to the Galathians, in the first to Timothe) but are free. The spirit of Christ hath writte the liuely law of loue in their hartes, whiche driueth the to worke of theyr owne accord freely & willingly, for the great loues sake onely which they see in Christ, & therfore neede they no law to cõpell them. Christ is all in all things to them that beleue, and the cause of all loue. Paule sayth Ephes. 6. Seruantes obay vnto your carnall or fleshly maisters wyth feare and trembling, in singlenes of your hartes as vnto Christ: not wyth eye seruice as menpleasers, but as the seruantes of Christ, doing the wyll of God from the hart, euen as though ye serued the Lord and not men. And remember that whatsoeuer good thing any man doth, that shall he receiue againe of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. Christ thus is all in all thinges and cause of all to a christen man. And Christ sayth Math. 25. In as much as ye haue done it to any of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it to mee. And in as much as ye haue not done it vnto one of the least of these, ye haue not done it to me. Here seest thou that we are Christes brethren, and euẽ Christ him selfe, and what so euer we do one to another that do we to Christ. If we be in Christ we worke for no worldly purpose, but of loue. As Paul saith 2. Cor. 5. The loue of Christ compelled vs (as who shoulde say) wee worke not of a fleshly purpose: For (sayeth hee) we knowe henceforth no man fleshly: no though we once knew Christ fleshly we do so now no more. We are otherwise minded, then when Peter drewe hys swoorde to fight for Christ, we are now ready to suffer with Christ, and to lose life and all for our very enemies to bring them vnto Christ. If we be in Christ, we are minded like vnto Christ, which knew nothing fleshly, or after the will of the flesh, as thou seest Math. 12. when one sayd to him: Lo, thy mother and thy brethren stande without, desiring to speake with thee. Hee aunswered, who is my mother, and who are my brethren? And stretched hys hande ouer hys Disciples saying: see my mother and my brethren: for whosoeuer doth the will of my Father which is in heauen, the same is my brother, my sister, and my mother. He knew not his mother in that she bare him, but in that she did the will of his Father in heauen. So now as God the Fathers will and commaundement is all to Christ, euen so Christ is all to a Christen man.

Christ is all to a Christen man.

The children of fayth worke of loue and nede no law to cõpell them.

We are all Christes seruantes and serue Christ.

The contempt or loue, we shewe one to another, the same shewe we to Christ.

Christ is the cause why I loue thee, why I am ready to do the vttermost of my power for thee, and why I pray for thee. And as long as the cause abideth, so long lasteth the effect: euen as it is alwayes day, so long as the Sun shineth. Do therefore the worst thou canst vnto me, take away my goodes, take away my good name: yet as long as Christ remaineth in my harte, so long I loue thee not a whit the lesse, and so long art thou as deare vnto me as mine owne soule, and so long am I ready to doo thee good for thine euill, and so long I pray for thee with al my hart: for Christ desireth it of me, and hath deserued it of me. Thine vnkindnes compared vnto his kindnes is no thing at all, yea it is swallowed vp as a little smoke of a mightie winde, and is no more seene or thought vppon. Moreouer that euill which thou didst to me, I receaue not of thy hande, but of the hande of God, and as Gods scourge to teach me pacience & to norture me. And therfore haue no cause to be angry with thee, more thẽ the child hath to be angry with his fathers rod, or a sicke man with a soure or bitter medecine that healeth him, or a prisoner with hys fetters, or he that is punished lawfully with the officer that punisheth him. Thus is Christ all and the whole cause why I loue thee. And to all can nought be added. Therefore cannot a litle mony make me loue thee better, or more bound to pray for thee, nor make Gods cõmaundement greater. Last of all, if I be in Christ, then the loue of Christ compelleth me. And Christ knoweth nothyng worldly as not his very mother.

As long as Christ abyde th so long a Christen mã loueth.

Money byndeth not Christes people to pray.

therfore I am ready to geue thee mine & not to take thyne from thee. If I be able I will do thee seruice frely: if not, then if thou minister to me againe, that receiue I of the hande of God, which ministreth it to me by thee: For God careth for his and ministreth all thinges vnto them, and moueth Turkes and Saracenes, and all maner infidels to do them good as thou seest in Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, and how God went with Ioseph into Egipt, and gat him fauour in the prison, and in euery place, which fauour Ioseph receiued of the hand of God, and to God gaue the thankes. This is God and Christ all in all, good and bad receiue I of God. Them that are good I loue because they are in Christ, and the euill to bring them to Christ. when any mā doth well I reioyce, that God is honoured, and when any man doth euill I sorow because that God is dishonored. Finally in as much as God hath created all, and Christ bought all with his bloud, therefore ought all to seeke God & Christ in all, & eis nothing.

God careth for his.

The belly is a God & cause of all vnto our spiritualty.

But contrariwise vnto monkes, friers, and to ỹ other of our holy spiritualtie the belly is all in all, & cause of all loue. Offer thereto, so art thou father, mother, sister, and brother vnto them. Offerest thou not, so know they thee not, thou art nether father mother sister brother, nor any kynne at all to them. She is a sister of ours, hee is a brother of ours say they, hee is verily a good man, for he doth much for our religion. She is a mother to our couent: we be greatly bound to pray for them. And as for such and such (say they) we know not whether they be good or bad, or whether they be fish or flesh, for they do nought for vs: we be more bounde to pray for our benefactours (say they) and for them that geue vs, thē for them that geue vs not. For them that geue little are they little bound, and them they loue little: and for them that geue much they are much bound, and them they loue much. And for them that geue nought are they naught bound, and them they loue not at al. And as they loue thee when thou geuest: so hate they thee when thou takest away from them, and run all vnder a stoole, and curle thee as black as pitch. So is cloyster loue belly loue, cloyster prayer belly prayer, and cloyster brotherhode belly brotherhode. Moreouer loue that springeth of Christ seeketh not his owne selfe (1. Cor. 13.) but forgetteth her selfe, and bestoweth hir vpon hir neighbours profite, as Christ sought our profite and not hys owne. He sought not the fauour of god for himselfe, but for vs, yea he toke the wrath and vengeance of God from vs vnto himself, and bare it on his owne backe to bring vs vnto fauour. Likewise doth a Christen man geue to hys brethren, & robbeth them not as friers and monkes do: but as Paule commaundeth Ephes. 4. laboureth wyth his handes some good worke to haue wherewith to helpe the needy. They geue not but receiue onely. They labour not, but liue idely of the sweat of the poore. There is none so poore a widow, though she haue not to finde hir self and her children, nor any mony to geue: yet shall the frier snatch a chese or somewhat. They preach, sayst thou, and labour in the woorde. First I say, they are not called and therefore ought not: for it is the Curates office. The Curate can not (saist thou.) what doth the theefe there then? Secondarily a true preacher preacheth Christes testament only and maketh Christ the cause and reward of all our deedes, and teacheth euery man to beare hys crosse willingly for Christes sake. But these are enemies vnto the crosse of Christ, and preach theyr belly which is theyr God: Ephes. 3. and they thinke that lucre is the seruing of God. 1. Tim. 6. that is, they thinke them christen onely which offer vnto their bellies, which when thou hast filled, then syne they out prayers for thee, to be thy reward, and yet wot not what praier meaneth. Prayer is the longing for Gods promises, which promises as they preach them not, so long they not for them, nor wish them vnto any man. Theyr longing is to fill theyr paunch whom they serue, & not Christ: and through sweet preaching and flattring woordes deceaue the hartes of the simple and vnlearned. Rom. 16.

Christes loue forgetteth her selfe: but Monkes loue thinketh on the belly.

Friers and Monkes ought not to preach.

All is of the belly & nothyng of Christ.

Finally as Christ is the whole cause why we do all thing for our neighbor, euen so is he the cause why God doth all thyng for vs, why he receaueth vs into his holy Testament, and maketh vs heyres of al his promises, and poureth his spirit into vs, and maketh vs his sonnes, and fashioneth vs like vnto Christ, and maketh vs such as he would haue vs to be. The assurance that we are the sonnes, beloued, and heires with Christ, & haue Gods spirite in vs, is the consent of our hartes,

Christ is the whole cause why God loueth vs.

Howe to know that we are Godes sonnes.

vnto the law of God. which law is all perfection, and the marke whereat all we ought to shoot. And he that hitteth that marke, so that he fulfilleth the law with all his hart, soule, and might, and with full loue and lust, without all let or resistance is pure gold and needeth not to be put any more in the fire, he is straight and right, & needeth to be no more shaven: he is full fashioned like Christ, and can haue no more added vnto him. Neuertheless there is none so perfect in this life that findeth not let & resistance by the reason of our riginall sinne, or birth poyson that remayneth in him, as thou maist see in the lines of all the saintes throughout all the scripture, and in Paul Rom. 7. The will is present (sayth he) but I fynde no meanes to perfourme that whiche is good. I doo not that good thing which I would: but that euill do I which I would not. I finde by the law that when I would do good, euill is present with me. I delite in the law as concerning the inner man, but I finde an other law in my members rebelling against the law of my minde, & subduing me vnto the law of sinne.

Our byrth poyson that remayneth in vs. resisteth the spirite ☞ which law of sinne is nothing but a corrupt and a poysoned nature which breaketh into euill lustes, and from euill lustes into wicked deedes, & must be purged with the true purgatory of the crosse of Christ: that is, thou must hate it with all thine hart, and desyre God to take it from thee. And then whatsoeuer crosse God putteth on thy backe, beare it pacientlỹ, whether it be pouertie sickenes or persecution or what soeuer it be, and take it for the right Purgatory and thinke that God hath nailed thee fast to it, to purge thee therby. For he that loueth not the law and hateth hys sinne, & hath not professed in his hart to fight against it, and mourneth not to god to take it away & to purge him of it, ỹ same hath no part with Christ. If thou loue the law and fyndest that thou hast yet synne hangyng on thee, where of thou sorowest to be deliuered and purged: as for an example, thou hast a couetous mynde and mistrustest God and therfore arte moued to begyle thy neighbour & arte vnto him mercyles, not caring whether he sinke or swymme so thou maist winne by him or get from him that he hath: then get thee to the obseruaunce which is so purged frō that sinne that he will not once handle a peny & with that wyle doth the suttle fox make the goose come flying into his hole ready prepared for his mouth without hys labour or swet, & buy of his merites, which he hath in store, & geue thy money not into his holy hāds but to offre him that he hath hired either with part of his prayers or part of his praye to take the sinne vpon him and to handle his money for him. In like maner if any parson that is vnder obediēce vnto Gods ordinaunce (whether it be sonne or daughter, seruaunt, wife or subiect) consent vnto the ordinaunce, & yet finde contrary motions: let him go also to thē that haue professed an obedience of their owne making, and bye part of their merites. If thy wife geue the iv. wordes for three, go to the charterhouse and bye of their silence: And so if the abstemyng of the obseruaunt from handling money heale thine hart from desiryng money, & the obedience of them that will obey nothyng but their owne ordinaunce, heale thy disobedience to Gods ordinaunce, and the silēce of the charterhouse Monke tame thy wines toung, thē beleue that their prayers shall deliuer thy soule from the paines of that terrible and feareful Purgatory which they haue fayned to purge thy purse withall.

The right crosse of Christ.

He that loueth not the law & hateth sin hath no part with Christ.

Howe to try the doctrine of our spiritualtie.

If the prayers & merites of our religious men purge our lustes then are they of value and els not.

The spiritualtie encreaseth dayly. ☞ Mo prelates, mo Priestes, mo mōkes, friers, chanons, nunnes and mo heretikes, I would say heremites with lyke dyatte, Set before the ỹ encrease of S. Frasites disciples in so few yeares. Rekē how many thousands, yea how many twenty thousādes, not disciples onely: but whole cloisters are sprong out of hell of them in so litle space. Pateryng of prayers encreaseth dayly. Their seruice as they call it, waxeth longer and longer and the labour of their lippes greater, new Saintes, new seruice, new testes, and new holy dayes. what take all these away? Sinne? Nay. For we see the contrary by experience & that sinne groweth as they grow. But they take away first Gods word with fayth, hope, peace, vnitie, loue & concorde then house and lād, rent & fee, tower & towne, goodes and cattell, and the very meate out of mens mouthes. All these lyue by Purgatory. when other weepe for their frendes they sing merely when other loose their frendes, they get frendes. The Pope with all his Pardons is grounded on Purgatory. Priestes Monkes, Chanons, Friers with all other swermes of hypocrites do but empty Purgatory and fill hell. Euery Masse, say they, deliuereth one soule out of Purgatory. If that were true, yea if ten Masses were nough for one soule, yet were the Parish Priests and Curates of euery Parish sufficient to scoure Purgatory. All the other costly workemen might be well spared.

All is of Purgatory. These Philitions gene none other medicines saue purgations onely.

¶ The foure senses of the Scripture.

They deuide the Scripture into foure senses, the litterall, tropological, allegoricall and anagogicall. The litterall sese is become nothing at all. For the pope hath taken it cleane away & hath made it his possession. He hath partly locked it vp with the false and counterfayted keyes of his traditions ceremonies & fayned lyes. And partly driueth men from it with violence of sword. For no man dare abide by the litterall sense of the text, but vnder a Protestation, if it shall please the Pope. The chopologicall sense perteineth to good maners (say they) and teacheth what we ought to do. The allegory is appropriate to fayth, and the anagogicall to hope and thinges aboue. Tropologicall and anagogicall are termes of their own fayning and all together vnnecessary. For they are but allegories both two of thē and this word allegorie comprehēdeth them both & is inough. For tropologicall is but an Allegory of maners & anagogicall an Allegorie of hope. And Allegory is as much to say as straūge speakyng, or borowed speach. As whē we say of a wanton child, this sheepe hath magottes in his tayle, he must be annoynted with byrchin salue, which speach I borow of the shepheardes.

Allegory, & what it signifieth.

The scripture hath but one sence.

Thou shalt vnderstand therefore that the Scripture hath but one sence, which is the litterall sense. And that litterall sense is the roote and grounde of all, and the ancre that neuer fayleth wherunto if thou cleaue thou canst neuer erre or go out of the way. And if thou leane the litterall sense thou canst not but go out of the way. Neuer the latter the Scripture vseth prouerbes, similitudes, redels, or allegories as all other speaches do, but that which the prouerbe, similitude, redell, or allegory signifieth is euer the litterall sense which thou must seke out diligently. As in the English we borow wordes and sentences of one thyng and apply them vnto another and gene thē new significations. we say let the sea rise as hye as he will, yet hath God appointed how farre he shall goe: meanyng that the tyrauntes shall not do what they would, but that only which God hath appointed them to doe, looke ere thou lepe, whose litterall sense is, do nothing sodēly or without aduisemēt. Cut not the bowe that thou standest vpon: whose litterall sence is, oppresse not the comyns & is borowed of hewers. when a thing speedeth not wel, we borow speach and say, the bishop hath blessed it, because that nothing speedeth well that they medle with all. If the porage be burned to, or the meate ouer rosted, we say, the Bishop hath put his foote in the potte or the Bishop hath playd the Cooke, because the Bishops burne who they lust & wholsomer displeaseth them. He is a pontificall fellow, that is, proud and stately. He is Popish, that is, superstitious and faithlesse. It is a pastime for a Prelate. It is a pleasure for a Pope. He would be free & yet will not haue his head shauen. He would that no man should smite him and yet hath not the Popes marke. And of him ẏ is betrayd & woteth not how, we say, he hath bene at shrifte. She is master Persons sisters daughter. He is the Bishops sisters sonne, he hath a Cardinall to his vncle, she is a spirituall whore, it is the Gentlewoman of the Personage, he gaue me a Kyrieleyson. And of her that answereth her husbād vi. words for one we say, she is a sister of ẏ charter house, as who should say, she thinketh that she is not bounde to kepe silence, their silence shalbe a satisfaction for her. And of him that will not be saued by Christes merites, but by the workes of his owne imagination we say it is a holy worke man. Thus borow we and fayne new speach in euery toūg. All fables prophesies and redles are allegories as Ysopus fables & Marliens prophesies and the interpretation of them are the litterall sense.

Borowed speach.

So in like maner the Scripture boroweth woordes and sentences of all maner thinges and maketh prouerbes & similitudes or allegories. As Christ sayth Luke. iiij. Physition heale thy selfe. whose interpretation is do that at whom which thou doest in straūge places, & that is the litterall sense. So whē I say Christ is a lambe, I meane not a lambe that beareth woll, but a meke & a patiente lambe which is beaten for other mens faultes. Christ is a vine, not that beareth grapes: but out of whose roote the braunches that beleue, sucke the spirit of life, and mercy, & grace, and power to be the sonnes of God & to do his will. The similitudes of ỳ Gospel are allegories borowed of worldly matters to expresse spirituall things. The Apocalipse or reuelatiõs of Iohn are allegories whose litterall sense is hard to finde in many places.

The right vse of allegories.

Beyond all this, when we haue found out the litteral sense of ỳ Scripture by the processe of the text or by a like text of another place. Then go we and as the Scripture borroweth similitudes of worldly thinges euen so we agayne borow similitudes or allegories of the Scripture and apply them to our purposes, which allegories are no sense of the scripture: but fre things besides the Scripture and all together in the libertie, of the spirite. which allegories I may not make at all the wilde aduentures: but must keepe me with in the compasse of the faith & euer apply mine allegory to Christ and vnto the fayth. Take an ensample, thou hast the story of Peter how he smote of Malchuses eare and how Christ healed it agayne. There hast thou in the playne text great learnyng, great frute and great edifieng which I passe ouer because of tediousnes. Then come I, whẽ I preach of the law and the Gospell, & borow this example to expresse the nature of the law and of the Gospell and to paynt it vnto thee before thine eyes. And of Peter & his sword make I the law and of Christ the Gospell saying, as Peters sword cutteth of the eare so doth the law. The law damneth, the law killeth, and mangleth the conscience.

Allegories are no sense of Scripture.

There is no eare so righteous that can abyde ỳ hearyng of the law. There is no deede so good but that the law damneth it. But Christ, that is to say the Gospell, the promises and Testament that God hath made in Christ healeth the eare and conscience which the law hath hurt. The Gospell is life, mercy & forgeuenes frely, and all together an healing plaister. And as Peter doth but hurt & make a wounde where was none before: euẽ so doth the law. For when we thinke that we are holy & righteous & full of good deedes if ỳ law be preached a right, our righteousnes and good dedes vanish away, as smoke in the winde and we are left damnable sinners onely. And as thou seest how that Christ healeth not till Peter had wounded, and as an healyng plaister helpeth not till ỳ corrosie hath troubled the wounde, euẽ so the Gospell helpeth not, but whẽ the law hath wounded ỳ conscience and brought the sinner into ỳ knowledge of his sinne. This allegory proueth nothyng neither cã do. For it is not the Scripture, but an exãple or a similitude borowed of the Scripture to declare a text or a conclusion of the Scripture more expresly and to roote it and graue it in the hart. For a similitude or an example doth printe a thing much deper in the wittes of a man then doth a plaine speakyng and leaueth behynd him as it were a stinge to pricke him forward and to awake him with all. Moreouer if I could not proue with an open text that which the Allegory doth expresse, then were the Allegory a thyng to be gested at and of no greater value then a tale of Robyn hode. This allegory as touching his first part is proued by Paul in ỳ. iij. chap. of his Epistle to the Romanes, where he sayth. The law causeth wrath. And in ỳ vij. chapter to the Romanes. When the law or commaundement came, sinne reuiued, and I become dead. And in the ij. Epistle to the Cor. in the third chap. the law is called the minister of death and dãnation. &c. And as concernyng the second part Paul sayth to the Rom. in the v. chap. In that we are iustified by faith we are at peace with God. And in the ij. Epistle to the Corinthiãs in the. iij. The Gospell is called the ministratiõ of iustifying and of the spirite. And Gala. iij. The spirite cõmeth by preaching of the faith &c. This doth the litterall sence proue the allegory & beare it, as the foundatiõ beareth the house. And because that allegories proue nothyng therfore are they to be vsed soberly and seldome & onely where the text offereth thee an allegory.

Allegories proue nothyng.

If thou cã not proue the allegory with an open text then is it false doctrine.

The litterall sense proueth the allegory.

And of this maner (as I aboue haue done) doth Paul borow a similitude, a figure or allegory of Genesis to expresse the nature of the law and of the Gospell, and by Agar & her sonne declareth the propertie of the law and of her bonde children which wilbe iustified by deedes, and by Sara and her sonne declareth the propertie of the Gospell and of her free children which are iustified by faith, and how the children of the law which beleue in their workes persecute the children of the Gospel which beleue in the mercy and truth of God and in the Testament of his sonne Jesus our Lord. And likewise do we borow likenesses or allegories of the Scripture, as of Pharao and Herode and of the Scribes and Pharisees, to expresse our miserable captiuitie and persecution vnder Antichrist the Pope.

They that iustifie theimselues by their workes are the bond children of the law.

The. fayth was lost thorough Allegories

The greatest cause of which captiuitie and the decay of the fayth & this blindnes wherin we now are, sprang first of allegories. For Origene and the doctours of his time drew all ỳ Scripture vnto allegories. whose ensample they that came after folowed so lõg, till at the last they forgat ỳ order, and processe of the text, supposing that ỳ scripture serued but to faine allegories vppõ. In somuch that twenty doctours expounde one text xx. wayes, as children make descant vpon playne song.

Chopologicall sophisters.

Then came our sophisters with their Anagogicall and Chopologicall sence & with an antetheme of halfe an inch, out of whiche some of them drawe a threde of ix. dayes long. Yea thou shalt synde inough that will preach Christ, and proue what soeuer poynte of thee fayth that thou wilt, as well out of a fabell of Ouide or any other Poet, as out of S. Johns Gospell or Paules Epistles. Yea they are come vnto such blyndnes that they not onely say the litterall sence profiteth not, but also that it is hurtful and noysome and killeth the soule. which damnable doctrine they proue by a text of Paule ỳ. Corinth. iij. where he sayth the letter killeth but the spirit geueth life. Lo say they the litterall sence killeth and the spirituall sence geueth life. We must therfore, say they, seeke out some choplogicall sence.

Poetry is as good diuinitie as the Scripture to our schole men.

The litterall sense killeth say sophisters.

Here learne what sophistrie is, and how blind they are, that thou mayest abhorre them and spue them out of thy stomake for euer. Paule by the letter meaneth Moyses law, which the processe of the text folowyng declareth more bright then the sunne. But it is not their guise to looke on the order of any text, but as they find it in their doctours so alledge they it, and so vnderstãd it. Paule maketh a comparisõ betweene the law and the Gospell, & calleth the law the letter, because it was but letters grauen in two tables of cold stone. For the law doth but kill and damne the consciences, as long as there is no lust in the hart to doe that which the law commaundeth. Contrary wise he calleth the Gospell the administration of the spirite & of righteousnes or iustifying. For whẽ Christ is preached and the promises whiche God hath made in Christ are beleued, the spirit entereth the hart, and looseth the hart, and geueth lust to do the law, and maketh the law a liuely thyng in the hart. Now as soone as the hart lusteth to do the law, then are we righteous before God, & our sinnes forgeuen. Neuertheless the law of the letter graued in stone, and not in the hartes was so glorious, and Moyses his face shone so bryght that the children of Israell could not behold his face for brightnes. It was also geuen in thunder and lightning and terrible signes, so that they for feare came to Moses & desired him that he would speake to them & let God speake no more. Lest we dye (sayd they.) If we heare him any more: as thou mayst see. Exod. xx. wherupon Paule maketh his comparison saying: if the ministratiõ of death thorough the letters figured in stones was glorious, so that the childrẽ of Israell could not behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenaunce: why shal not the administration of the spirite be glorious? And agayne: if the administration of damnation be glorious: much more shall the administration of righteousnes excede in glory: That is, if the law that killeth sinners & helpeth thẽ not to be glorious: then the Gospel which pardoneth sinners and geueth them power to be the sonnes of God & to ouer come sinne, is much more glorious. And the text that goeth before is as cleare.

To loue the law is righteousnes.

The letter killeth expound this

For the holy Apostle Paule sayth, ye Corinthians are our Epistle, which is vnderstand and read of all men, in that ye are knowen how that ye are the Epistle of Christ ministred by vs and written: not with ynke (as Moyses law) but with the spirite of the lyuing God: not in tables of stone (as the ten commaundementes) but in the fleshy tables of the hart, as who should say, we writ not a dead law with inke and in parchement, nor graue that which damned you in tables of stone: but preache you that which bringeth the spirite of lyfe vnto your breastes, which spirite writeth and graueth the law of loue in your hartes and geueth you lust to do the will of God. And furthermore, sayth he our ablenes cõmeth of God which hath made vs able to minister the new Testamẽt, not of the letter (ỳ is to say not of the law) but of the spirite. For the letter (that is to say the law) killeth: but the spirite geueth life (that is to say the spirite of God) whiche entreth your hartes whē ye beleue the glad tydinges that are preached you in Christe, quickeneth your hartes and geueth you life & lust and maketh you to do of loue and of your owne accorde without compulsiō, that which the law compelled you to do and dāned you, because ye could not doe with loue, and lust, and naturally. Thus seest thou that the letter signifieth not the litterall sence and the spirite the spirituall sence. And Rom. vij. Paul vseth this terme Littera for the law. And Rom. vij. where he setteth it so playne, that if the great wrath of God had not blinded them they could neuer haue stombled at it.

The litterall sense is spirituall.

God is a spirite and all his wordes are spirituall. His litterall sence is spirituall, and all his wordes are spiritual. When thou readest Math. j. she shall beare a sonne & thou shalt cal his name Jesus. For he shall saue his people frō their sinnes. This litteral sence is spiritual and euerlasting life vnto as many as beleue it. And the litterall sence of these wordes, Math. v. blessed are the mercyfull, for they shall haue mercy, are spirituall and life. wherby they that are mercyfull may of right by the truth and promise of God challenge mercy. And like is it of these wordes, Math. vj. If you forgeue othermen their sinnes your heauenly father shall forgeue you yours. And so is it of all the promises of God. Finally all gods wordes are spiritual, if thou haue eyes of God to see the right meanyng of the text, & whereunto ỹ Scripture perteyneth, & the final end and cause therof.

What is to be sought in ỹ Scripture and in the litterall sense.

All the Scripture is either the promises and Testamēt of God in Christ and stories perteining thereunto, to strength thy faith, either the law and stories perteining therto to feare thee from euil doing. There is no story nor gest, seme it neuer so simple or so vyle vnto the worlde, but that thou shalt finde therein spirite and life and edifieng in the litterall sense. For it is gods Scripture written for thy learnyng and comforte. There is no cloute or ragge there that hath not precious relyques wrapt therein of fayth, hope, pacience and long sufferyng and of the truth of God, and also of hys righteousnes. Set before thee the storie of Ruben which defiled his fathers bed. Marke what a crosse God suffered to fal on the necke of his elect Jacob. Consider first the shame among the heathē, when as yet there was no moe of the whole world within the Testament of God but he and his household. I report me to our Prelates which sweare by their honor whether it were a crosse or no. Seest thou not how our wicked bylders rage, because they see their bildynges burne, now they are tryed by the fire of Gods word, and how they stirre vp the whole world, to quench the word of God, for feare of loosing their honour: Then what busines had he to pacifie his children? Looke what a do he had at ỹ defiling of his daughter Dina. And be thou sure that the brethren there were no more furious for the defiling of their sister, then the sonnes beare for defiling of their mother. Marke what folowed Ruben, to feare other that they shame not their fathers and mothers. He was cursed and lost the kyngdome and also the Priesthode, and his tribe or generatiō was euer few in number as it appeareth in the stories of the Bible.

Swears they by their honour? there are they not ready to suffer shame for Christes sake.

The adultery of Dauid with Barsabe is an ensample, not to move vs to euill: but if (while we folow the way of righteousnes) any chaunce driue vs aside, that we despayre not. For if we saw not such infirmities in Gods elect, we which are so weake and fall so oft should vtterly dispaire & thinke that God had cleane forsaken vs. It is therfore a sure and an vndoubted conclusion, whether we be holy or vnholy, we are all sinners. But the differēce is, that Gods sinners consent not to their sinne. They consent vnto the law that it is both holy and righteous and mourne to haue their sinne taken away. But the deuils sinners consent vnto their sinne and would haue the law and hell taken away and are enemies vnto the righteousnes of God.

The adultery of Dauid.

The difference betwen gods sinners & the deuils.

Likewise in the whomely gest of Noe, when he was dronke, and lay in his tente with hys priuy members open, hast thou great edifyeng in the litteral sence? Thou seest what became of the cursed children of wicked Ham which saw his fathers prime members and gested therof vnto his brethren. Thou seest also what blessing fell on Sem and Japhet which went backward and couered their fathers members & saw them not. And thirdly thou seest what infirmitie accompanieth Gods elect be they neuer so holy, which yet is not imputed vnto thē. For the fayth & trust they haue in God

Noe.

The story of Ruben.

swallowyth vp all their sinnes.

The Pope is likened to Ham.

Notwithstandyng this text offereth vs an apte and an handsome allegory or similitude to describe our wicked Ham, Antichrist the Pope, which many hundred yeares hath done all the shame that hart cā thinke vnto the priuey mēber of God which is the word of promise or ỹ word of faith as Paule calleth it Rom. x. and the Gospell and Testamēt of Christ wherewith we are begotten, as thou seest. i. Peter. i. and James. i. And as the cursed children of Ham grew into gyauntes so mightie and great that the children of Israell semed but greshoppers in respect of them: so the cursed sonnes of our Ham the Pope his Cardinals, Bysshops, Abbots, Monkes, and Friers are become mighty gyauntes aboue all power and authoritie, so that the children of faith in respect of them, are much lesse then greshoppers. They heape mountayne vppon mountayne & will to heauē by their own strength by away of their owne making & not by the way Christ. Neuer the latter those gyaltes for the wickednes & abhominatiōs which they had wrought, did God vtterly destroy, part of them by the childrē of Loth, and part by the children of Esau and seuen nations of them by the children of Israell. So no doubt shall he destroy these for like abhominations & that shortly. For their kyngdome is but the kyngdome of lyes and falshead which must needes perish at the commyng of the truth of Gods word, as the night vanisheth away at the presence of day. The childrē of Israell slew not those gyauntes, but the power of God, Gods truth & promises as thou mayst see in Deut. So it is not we that shal destroy those gyauntes, as thou mayst see by Paule. ij. Thess. ij. speakyng of our Ham Antichrist. whom the Lord shall destroy (saith he) with the spirite of his mouth that is, by the wordes of truth) and by the brightnes of his comming (that is, by the preachyng of his Gospell.)

They will to heauen by away of their owne makyng.

The vse of similitudes

AND as I haue sayd of allegories, euen so it is of worldly similitudes which we make either whē we preach either when we expound the Scripture. The similitudes proue nothyng, but are made to expresse more playnly that which is contayned in the Scripture and to lead thee into the spirituall vnderstanding of the text. As the similitude of Matrimony is taken to expresse the Mariage that is betwene Christ and our soules and what exceadyng mercy we haue there, wherof all the Scriptures make mention. And the similitude of the members, how euery one of them careth for other is taken to make thee feele what it is to loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. That preacher therfore that bringeth a naked similitude to proue that which is contayned in no text of Scripture nor folowyth of a text, count a deceauer, a leader out of the way and a false Prophet, and beware of his Philosophie and persuasions of mās wisedome as Paul. i. Corinth. ij. sayth: my wordes and my preachyng were not with entysing wordes & persuasions of mans wisedome but in showyng of the spirit and power, that is, he preached not dreames confirmyng them with similitudes: but Gods word confirmyng it with miracles and with worckyng of the spirite the which made them feele euery thing in their hartes. That your fayth, sayth he, should not stand in the wisedome of man: but in the power of God. For the reasons and similitudes of mans wisedome make no fayth, but waueryng & vncertaine opiniōs onely: one draweth me this way with his argumēt, another that way, & of what principle thou prouest blacke an other proueth white, and so am I euer vncertaine, as if thou tell me of a thyng done in a farre land and an other tell me the contrarie, I wote not what to beleue. But fayth is wrought by the power of God, that is, when Gods word is preached, the spirite entereth thyne hart and maketh thy soule feele it and maketh thee so sure of it, that neither aduersitie nor persecution, nor death, neither hell, nor the powers of hell, neither yet all the paynes of hell could ones preuayle agaynst thee or moue thee frō the sure rocke of Gods word, that thou shouldest not beleue that which God hath sworne.

A similitude without Scripture is a sure token of a false Prophet.

Paul preached not worldly wisedome.

Similitudes and reasons of mans wisedome make no fayth but waueryng opinions onely.

Gods word maketh sure fayth for God can not lye.

And Peter. ij. Pet. i. sayth we folowed not deceauable fables, when we opened vnto you the power and commyng of our Lord Jesus Christ: but with our eyes we saw his maiestie. And agayne, we haue (sayth he) a more sure word of prophelie, wherunto if ye take hede, as vnto a light shynyng in a darke place, ye do well. The word of prophelie was the old Testamēt which beareth record vnto Christ in euery place, without which records the Apostles made neither similitudes nor argumēts of worldly witte. Hereof seest thou, that all the allegories, similitudes, persuasions & argumentes which they bryng without Scripture, to proue praying to Saintes, Purgatory, eare confession and that God will heare thy prayer more in one place thē in another, and that it is more meritorious to eate fish then flesh, and that to disguise thy selfe & put on this or that maner cote is more acceptable then to go as God hath made thee, and that widowhode is better then matrimony and virginitie then widowhode, and to proue the Assumption of our Lady and that she was borne without originall sinne, yea & with a kisse say some, are but false doctrine.

Peter preached not fables and false similitudes but the playne Scripture.

Scholc doctrine.

Take an example how they proue that widowhode and virginitie excede matrimony they bryng this worldly similitude. He that taketh most payne for a man deserueth most and to him a man is most bound, so likewise must it be with God and so forth: now the widow and virgine take more payne in resisting their lustes then the maryed wife, therfore is their state holier. First I say, that in their owne sophistry a similitude is the worst and feblest argument that can be and proueth lest and soonest deceaueth. Though that one sonne doe more service for hys father then another, yet is the father free and may with right reward thē all a like. For though I had a thousand brethren and did more thē they all, yet do I not my dutie. The fathers and mothers also care most for the lest and weakest and them that can doe lest: ye for the worst care they most and would spend, not their goodes onely: but also their bloud to bryng them to the right way. And euen so is it of the kyngdome of Christ as thou mayst well see in the similitude of the riotous sonne. Luke. xv. Moreouer Paul sayth. i. Cor. vij. It is better to marie then to burne. For the person that burneth can not quietly serue God in as much as hys mynde is drawē away & the thoughts of his hart occupyed with wonderfull and monstrous imaginations. He can neither see, nor heare, nor read but that his wittes are rapt and he cleane from him selfe. And agayne, sayth he, Circumcision is nothyng vncircumcision is nothyng: but the kepyng of the cōmaundementes is all together. Looke wherein thou canst best kepe the commaundemētes thether get thy selfe and therin abyde, whether thou be widow wife or mayde, and then hast thou all with God. If we haue infirmities that draw vs from the lawes of God, let vs cure them with the remedyes that God hath made. If thou burne mary. For God hath promised ther no chastitie, as long as thou mayst vse the remedy that hee hath ordeyned: no more then hee hath promised to slake thine honger without meate.

Similitudes are no good argumentes among the sophisters owne selfe.

We must cure our infirmities with the remedies that God hath ordeined & not tempt god.

Now to aske of God more then he hath promised commeth of a false faith and is playne Idolatry: and to desire a miracle where there is naturall remedy, is temptyng of God. And of payne takyng this wise understand. He that taketh payne to kepe the commaundementes of God is sure therby that he loueth God and that hee hath Gods spirite in hym. And the more paine a man taketh (I meane patiently and without grudgyng) the more he loueth God and the perfecter hee is & nearer vnto that health which ỳ soules of all Christen mē long for & the more purged from the infirmitie and sinne that remaineth in the flesh: but to loke for any other reward or promotion in heauen or in the life to come then that which God hath promised for Christes sake and which Christ hath deserued for vs with his payne takyng, is abhominable in the sight of God. For Christe onely hath purchased the reward, and our payne takyng to kepe the commaundemētes doth but purge the sinne that remayneth in the flesh, and certifie vs that we are chosen and sealed with Gods spirite vnto the reward ỳ Christ hath purchased for vs.

What temptyng of god is.

I was once at the creatyng of Doctours of diuinitie, where the opponēt brought the same reason to proue that the widow had more merite then the virgine, because she had greater payne for as much as she had once proued the pleasures of Matrimony. Ego nego Domine Doctor said the respōdent. For though the virgine hane not proued, yet she imagineth that the pleasure is greater then it is in deede and therfore is more moued & hath greater temptation and greater paine. Are not these disputers they that Paule speaketh of in the sixt chapter of the first Epistle to Timot. That they are not content with the wholesome woordes of our Lord Jesus Christ, & doctrine of godlinesse. And therefore know nothyng: but wast their braynes about questiōs & strift of woordes, whereof spryng enuy, strife and rayling of men with corrupt mindes destitute of the truth.

As

As pertaynyng to our Ladyes body, where it is or where the body of Elyas, of Johñ the Euangelist and of many other be, pertayneth not to vs to know. One thing are we sure of, that they are where God hath layd them. If they be in heauē, we haue neuer the more in Christ: If they be not there, we haue neuer the lesse. Our dutie is to prepare our selues vnto the commaundemētes and to be thankefull for that which is opened vnto vs, and not to search the vnsearchable secretes of God. Of Gods secretes can we know no more then he openeth vnto vs. If God shut, who shall open? How then can natural reason come by the knowledge of that which God hath hyd vnto him selfe?

Yet let vs see one of their reasons wherewith they proue it. The chief reason is this, euery mā doth more for his mother, say they, then for other, in like maner must Christ do for his mother, therefore hath she this preheminence, that her body is in heauen. And yet Christ in the xij. chapter of Math. knoweth her not for his mother: but as farreforth as she kept his fathers commaundementes. And Paule in the ij. Epistle to the Corinthians v. chap. knoweth not Christ himselfe fleshly or after a worldly purpose. Last of all God is free & no further bounde then he bindeth him selfe: if hee haue made her any promise he is bounde, if not, then is he not. Finally if thou set this aboue rehearsed chapter of Math. before thee where Christe wouldе not know his mother, and the ij. of John where he rebuked her, and the ij. of Luke where she lost him and how negligent she was to leaue him behinde her at Jerusalem vnwars and to go a dayes iorney ere she sought for hym ỹ mightest resolue many of their reasons which they make of this matter, and that she was without originall sinne: read also Erasmus annotations in the sayd places. And as for me I cōmit all such matters vnto those idle belyes which haue nought els to doe, then to moue such questions and geue them free libertie to holde what they lyst, as long as it hurteth not the faith, whether it bee so or no, exhortyng yet with Paule all that will please God and obtayne that saluation that is in Christe, that they geue no hede vnto vnnecessary and braulyng disputations, & that they labour for the knowledge of those thinges without which they can not be saued. And remember that the sunne was geuen vs to guide vs in our way and woorkes bodyly. Now if thou leaue the naturall vse of the sunne and will looke directly on hym to see howe bright he is and such like curiositie then wil the sunne blind thee. So was the Scripture geuen vs to guide vs in our way and woorkes ghostly. The way is Christ & the promises in hym are our saluation if we long for them. Now if we shall leaue that right vse and turne our selues vnto vayne questions and to searche the vnsearchable secretes of God: then no dout shall the Scripture blinde vs as it hath done our schole men and our subtle disputers.

And as they are false Prophetes which proue with allegories, similitudes and worldly reasōs that which is no where made mention of in the Scripture. Euen so counte them for false Prophetes whiche expounde the scriptures drawing thē vnto a worldly purpose cleane contrary vnto the example, lyuyng, and practisyng of Christ and of hys Apostles and of all the holy Prophetes. For sayth Peter. ij. Pet. i. no prophesie in the Scripture hath any priuate interpretation. For the Scripture came not by the will of man: but the holy men of God spake, as they were moued by the holy ghost. No place of the Scripture may haue a priuate exposition, that is it may not be expounde after the will of man or after the wil of the flesh or drawen vnto a worldly purpose cōtrary vnto the open textes, and the generall articles of the faith, and the whole course of the Scripture and contrary to the lyuyng and practising of Christ and the Apostles and holy Prophetes. For as they came not by the will of mā so may they not bee drawen or expounde after the will of man: but as they came by the holy ghost, so must they expoūd & vnderstād by the holy ghost. The Scripture is that wherewith God draweth vs vnto hym and not wherewith we should be leade from him. The Scriptures spring out of God and flow vnto Christ, and were geuen to leade vs to Christ. Thou must therfore go alōg by the Scripture as by a lyne, vntill thou come at Christ, which is ỹ wayes end and resting place. If any mā therfore vse the Scripture to draw thee frō Christ and to noseil thee in any thyng saue in Christ, the same is a false Prophet. And that thou mayst perceaue what

In expoundyng of the Scripture we must haue a respect vnto the lyuyng and practisyng of Christ and of his Apostles and Prophetes.

The scripture was geuen to leade vs vnto Christ what Peter meaneth, it foloweth in ẏ text. There were false Prophetes among the people (whose prophesies were bely wisedome) as there shalbe false teachers among you: which shall priuely bryng in dammable sectes (as thou seest howe we are diuided into monstrous sectes or orders of Religion) euen denying the Lord that hath bought them. (For euery one of them taketh on hym to sell thee for money, that whiche God in Christ promiseth thee freely) and many shall folow their dammable wayes, by whom the waye of trouth shalbe euill spokē of (as thou seest how the way of trouth is become heresie, seditious, or cause of insurrectiō, & breaking of ẏ kyngs peace, & treason vnto his hyghnes.) And through couetousnes with fayned wordes shal they make marchaundise of you. Couetousnes is the conclusion: for couetousnes and ambitiō that is to say, lucre and desire of honor is the finall end of all false Prophetes and of all false teachers. Looke vpon the Popes false doctrine, what is the end thereof and what seeke they thereby? wherefore serueth Purgatory? but to purge thy purse, and to polle thee, & robbe both thee and thy hayres of house and lāds, and of all thou hast, that they may be in honour. Serue not Pardons for the same purpose? whereto pertemeth praying to Saintes, but to offer vnto their belies? wherfore serueth confessiō, but to sit in thy conscience and to make thee feare and tremble at what soeuer they dreame, and that thou worshipe them as Gods: and so forth in all their traditions, ceremonies, and conmirations they serue not the Lord: but their belies. And of their false expoundyng the Scripture and drawyng it contrary vnto the example of Christ, and the Apostles and holy Prophetes vnto their dammable couetousnes and filthy ambition take an example.

Sectes or orders.

Couetousnes & desire of honour is the ende of all false doctrine, and that which false prophets seke.

Purgatory

Pardons.

Praying to saintes.

Confession.

Math. xvj. when Peter sayth to Christ, thou art the sonne of the liuyng God, and Christ annswered, thou art Peter and vpō this rocke I will build my congregation. By the rocke interpret they Peter. And thē commeth the Pope & wilbe Peters successour, whether Peter will or will not, yea whether God will or will not, and though all the Scripture say nay to any such successiō, and saith, loe I am the rocke, the foundation, and head of Christes Church. Now sayth all the Scripture that the rocke is Christ, the sayth and Gods word. As Christ sayth Math. vij. he that heareth my wordes & doth therafter is like a man that buildeth on a rocke. For the house that is build on Gods worde will stand, though heauen should fall. And John. xv. Christ is the wine and we the braunches, so is Christ the rocke, the stocke and foūdation wheron we be built. And Paul i. Cor. iij. calleth Christ our foundatiō, and all other, whether it be Peter or Paule, her calleth them seruauntes to preach Christ, and to build vs on hym. If therfore the Pope be Peters successour, his dutie is to preach Christ onely and other authoritie hath he none. And. ij. Paule marieth vs vnto Christ and driueth vs from all trust & confidence in man. And Ephe. ij. sayth Paule. Ye are build on the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes, that is on ẏ word which they preached, Christ beyng, sayth he, the head corner stone, in whom euery buildyng coupled together groweth vp into an holy temple in the Lord, in whom also ye are built together & made an habitatiō for God in the spirit. And Peter in ẏ ij. of his first Epistle buildeth vs on Christ, contrary to the Pope, whiche buildeth on hymselfe. Hell gates shall not preuaile agaynst it, that is to say, agaynst the congregation that is builde vppon Christes sayth and vpon Gods word. Now were the Pope the rocke, hell gates could not preuayle agaynst him. For the house could not stand if the rocke and foundation wheron it is builte did perish: but the contrary see we in our Popes. For hell gates haue preuayled agaynst them many hūdred yeares, and haue swalowed them vp: if Gods word be true and the storyes that are written of them: yea or if it be true that we see with our eyes. I will geue thee the keyes of heauen sayth Christ, and not I geue. And John. xx. after ẏ resurrectiō payed it, and gaue ẏ keyes to them all indifferently. what soeuer thou byndest on earth, it shalbe bounde in heauen, & what soeuer thou louest on earth it shalbe louse in heauen. Of this text maketh the Pope what he will, and expoundeth it contrary to all the Scripture, contrary to Christes practising, and the Apostles, and all the Prophetes. Now the scripture geueth record to himselfe and euer expoundeth it selfe by an other open text. If the Pope thē can not bryng for his expolition the practising of Christ or of the Apostles and prophetes or an open text, then is his expolition false

An example of false expoūding ẏ scriptures.

Christ the sayth, and Gods word is the rocke and not the Pope.

The auctority of Peters successour is but to preach.

That expositiō is false which is agaynst the open scripture or agaynst the practising of Christ and of hys Apostles.

doctrine. Christ expoundeth him selfe. Math. xviij. saying: If ỳ brother sinne agaynst the rebuke him betwixt him & thee alone. If he heare thee thou hast wonne thy brother: but if he heare thee not, thē take with thee one or two and & so forth as it standeth in the text. He concludeth saying to them all, whatsoeuer ye bynde in earth it shalbe bound in heauen, and what soeuer ye louse on earth it shalbe louse in heauē. where byndyng is but to rebuke them that sinne and lousing to forgeue them that repent. And John. xx. whose sinnes ye forgeue they are forgeuen and whose sinnes ye hold they are holden. And Paul. i. Cor. v. byndeth, and ij. Cor. ij. louseth after the same maner.

Binding & lowsing is one power.

Also this byndyng and lousyng is one power, and as he byndeth so louseth he: yea and byndeth first ere he cā louse. For who can louse that is not bound. Now what soeuer Peter byndeth or his successour (as he wilbe called and is not, but in dead ỳ very successour of Sathan) is not so to be vnderstood, that Peter or the Pope hath power to commaunde a man to be in deadly sinne or to bee damned or to go into hell saying: bee thou in deadly sinne, be thou damned, go thou to hell, go thou to Purgatory. For that exposition is contrary to the euerlastyng Testament that God hath made vnto vs in Christ. He sent his sonne Christ to louse vs from sinne and damnation and hell, and that to testifie vnto the world sent he his Disciples Actes. i. Paule also hath no power to destroy, but to edifie. ij. Cor. x. and. xiij. How can Christ geue his Disciples power agaynst him selfe and against his euerlastyng Testament? Can he send them to preach saluation & geue them power to damne whom they lust? what mercy and profite haue we in Christes death and in his Gospell, if the Pope which passeth all men in wickednesse hath power to sende whom he will to hell, and to damne whom he lusteth: we had thē no cause, to call him Jesus, ỳ is to say sauiour: but might of right call him destroyer. wherfore then this byndyng is to be vnderstood as Christ interpreteth it in the places aboue rehearsed, & as the Apostles practised it and is nothyng but to rebuke men of their sinnes by preachyng the law. A man must first sinne agaynste Gods law ere the Pope can bynde hym: yea and a man must firste sinne agaynste Gods lawe ere hee neede to feare the Popes curse. For cursing and binding are both one, & nothyng sauing to rebuke a mā of his sinnes by Gods law. It foloweth also then that the lousyng is of like maner, and is nothing but forgeuing of sinne to them that repent throughe preachyng of the promises whiche God hath made in Christe in whom onely we haue all forgeuenes of sinnes, as Christ interpreteth it, and as the Apostles and Prophetes practised it. So is it a false power that the Pope taketh on hym to louse Gods lawes, as to geue a man licence to put awaye hys wife to whom God hath bound him, and to bynde them to chastitie which God commaūdeth to mary, that is to wite, thē that burne and can not liue chaste. It is also a false power to bynde that whiche Gods worde maketh free, makyng sinne in the creatures whiche God hath made for mans vse.

What Jesus signifieth.

What byndyng meaneth.

What cursing meaneth.

What lowsing meaneth.

The Pope which so fast lowses and purgeth in Purgatory, can not with all the lousinges and purgations that he hath, either louse or purge our appetites and lust and rebellion that is in vs agaynst the law of God. And yet the purging of them is the right Purgatory. If he can not purge them that are alyue, where with purgeth he thē, that are dead? The Apostles knew no no other wayes to purge, but through preachyng Gods word which worde onely is that that purgeth the hart, as thou mayst see John. xv. Ye are pure, sayth Christ, through the word. Now the pope preacheth not to them whom they fayne to lye in Purgatory, no more then he doth to vs that are a liue. How thē purgeth he them? The pope is kynne to Robin good fellow which swepeth the house, washeth the dishes and purgeth all by night. But when day commeth there is nothyng found cleane.

The Pope is Robyn goodfelow.

Some man will say the Pope byndeth them not, they binde them selues. I aunswere hee that byndeth him selfe to the pope and had leuer haue his life and soule ruled by the Popes will thē by the will of God, and by the Popes word then by the worde of God, is a foole. And he that had leuer be bonde then free is not wise. And he that will not abyde in the freedome wherein Christ hath set vs, is also mad. And he that maketh deadly sinne where none is and seeketh causes of hatred betwene him and God is not in his right wittes. Furthermore no man cā bynde him

Of our selues we can performe nothyng, further thē God will geue vs power.

hym selfe further then hee hath power ouer hym selfe. He that is vnder the power of an other man can not bynde him selfe without licence, as sonne, daughter, wife, seruaunt and subiect. Neither canst thou geue God that which is not in thy power. Chastitie canst thou not geue further then God lendeth it thee, if thou can not lyue chast thou art bounde to mary or to be damned. Last of all for what purpose thou byndest thy selfe must be seue. If thou doe it to obtayne thereby that whiche Christ hath purchased for thee freely, so art thou an infidell, and hast no part with Christ, and so forth. If thou wilt see more of this matter loke in Deut. and there shalt thou finde it more largely entreated.

Another ensample.

Take an other ensample of there false expounding the Scripture. Christ saith Math. xxiij. The Scribes and the Pharisees sit on Moyses seate, what soeuer they byd you obserue, that obserue and do: but after their workes do not. Lo say our sophisters or hypocrites, lyue we neuer so abhominably, yet is our authority neuer the lesse. Do as we teach therfore (say they) and not as we do. And yet Christ sayth they sit on Moyses seate, that is as long as they teache Moyses doe as they teach. For the law of Moyses is the lawe of God. But for their owne traditions & false doctrine Christ rebuked thē, and disobeyed them, and taught other to beware of their leuen. So if our Pharisees sit on Christes seate and preache him, we ought to heare them: but whē they sitte on their owne seate, then ought we to beware as well of their pestilent doctrine as of their abhominable liuing.

To sit on Christes seate, is to preach and confesse Christ.

Likewise where they finde mention made of a sword, they turne it vnto the Popes power. The disciples sayd vnto Christ Luke. xxij. Loe here be two swordes. And Christ aunswered two is inough. Loe, say they the Pope hath ij. swordes, the spirituall sword & the tēporall sword. And therfore is it lawfull for hym to fight and make warre.

Christ a litle before he went to hys passion, alaed hys Disciples saying: when I sent you out without all prouision lacked ye any thyng. And they sayd nay. And he aunswered, but now let hym, that hath a walet take it with hym & he that hath a scrippe likewise, and let hym that hath neuer a sword sell his cote and by one: As who should say, it shall go otherwise now then thē. Then ye went forth in fayth of my word, and my fathers promises, and it fed you and made prouision for you, & was your sword and shilde and defender: but now it shall go as thou readest Zacharias. xiij. I will smyte the shepheard and the sheepe of the flocke shalbe scattered. Now shall my father leaue me in the handes of the wicked, and ye also shalbe forsaken and destitute of faith, and shall trust in your selues, and in your owne prouisiō, and in your owne defence. Christ gaue no cōmaundement, but prophesied what should happen. And they because they vnderstode hym not, aunswered here are two swordes. And Christ (to make an ende of such babblyng) aunswered two is inough. For if he had commaunded euery man to by a sword, how had two bene inough? Also if two were inough, & pertained to the Pope onely, why are they all commaunded to buy euery man a sword? By the sword therefore Christ prophesied that they should be left vnto their own defence. And two swordes were inough yea neuer a one had bene inough. For if euery one of them had had ten swordes they would haue fled ere mydnight.

Christ rebuked desire of preheminence in his Disciples, but the Pope chalengeth it above all men as hys owne inheritaunce.

In the same chapter of Luke not. xij. lines from the forsayd text. The Disciples euen at the last Supper asked who should be the greatest. And Christ rebuked them and sayd it was an heathenish thyng and there should be no such thing among them, but that the greatest should be as the smallest, and that to be great was to do seruice as Christ did. But this text because it is brighter then the sunne, that they cā make no sophistrie of it, therfore will they not heare it nor let other know it.

For as much now as thou partly seest the falshed of our prelates, how all their study is to disceaue vs and to keepe vs in darknes, to sit as Gods in our cōsciēces, & hādle vs at their pleasure, and to leade vs whether they lust: therfore, I read thee, get thee to Gods word, and therby trye all doctrine and agaynst that receaue nothyng. Neither any exposition contrary vnto the open textes, neither contrary to the generall articles of the fayth: neither contrary to the liuyng & practisyng of Christ and of his Apostles. And when they cry fathers fathers, remeber that it were the fathers that blynded & robbed the whole world and brought vs into this captiuitie wherein these enforce to keepe vs still. Furthermore as they of the old tyme are fathers to vs, so shall these foule monsters bee fathers to them that come after vs, and the hypocrites that folow vs will cry of these and of their doynges fathers, fathers, as these cry fathers, fathers, of thē that are past. And as we feele our fathers, so dyd they that are past feele their fathers: neither were there in the world any other fathers then such as we both see and feele this many hundred yeares, as their Decrees beare recorde and the stories and Chronicles well testifie. If Gods word appeared any where they agreed all agaynst it. when they had brought that a sleepe, then stroue they one with an other about their owne traditions and one Pope condemned an others Decrees and were sometyme .v. yea three Popes at once. And one Bishop went to law with an other and one curied an other for their owne fantasies, & such things as they had falsly gotte. And the greatest Saints are they that most defēded the liberties of the church (as they call it) which they falsly gote with blynding kings, neither had the world any rest this many hundred yeares for reformyng of Friers and Monkes and healyng of schismes that were among our Clergy. And as for the holy Doctours as Augustine, Hierome, Cyprian, Chrisostomus and Bede, will they not heare. If they wrote any thyng negligently (as they were men) that drawe they cleane contrary to their meanyng and therof triumphe they. Those Doctours knew of none authorite that one Byshop should haue abone another, neither thought or once dreamed that euer any such should be, or of any such whisperyng or of Pardons, or scouryng of Purgatory, as they haue fayned.

Miracles miracles.

And when they cry miracles miracles remember that God hath made an euerlasting Testament with vs in Christes blond, against which we may receaue no miracles no neither ỳ preachyng of Paule him selfe if he came agayn, by his own teaching to the Galathians, neither yet the preachyng of the aungels of heauen. wherefore either they are no miracles, but they haue fayned thē (as is the miracle that S. Peter halowed Westminster) or els if there be miracles that confirme doctrine contrary to Gods word, thē are they done of the deuill (as the mayd of Ipswich & of Kent) to proue vs whether we will cleaue fast to Gods word and to deceaue them that haue no loue to the truth of Gods word nor lust to walke in his lawes.

The woma of Kemster was a solempne miracle.

And for as much as they to deceaue with all, arme them selues against thē with argumentes and persualions of fleshly wisedome, with worldly similitudes with shadowes, with false Allegories, with false expositions of the Scripture contrary vnto the liuyng & practisyng of Christ and the Apostles, with lyes and false miracles, with false names, domme ceremonies, with disguising of hypocrisie, with the authorities of the fathers and last of all with the violence of the temporall sworde: therfore do thou contrariwise arme thy selfe, to defende thee with all, as Paule teacheth in the last chapter to ỳ Ephesians Gyde on thee the sworde of the spirite which is Gods word and take to thee the shilde of fayth, which is not to beleue a tale of Robynhode or Gestus Romanorum or of the Chronicles, but to beleue Gods woorde that lasteth euer.

The armour of the spirituall.

The armour of a Christē man is Gods word and fayth.

And when the Pope with his falshead chalengeth temporall authoritie abone King and Emperour: set before thee ỳ xxv. chapter of S. Math. where Christ commaundeth Peter to put vp his sword. And set before thee Paul. ỳ. Cor. x. where he sayth the weapons of of our warre are not carnall thynges, but myghty in God to bryng all vnderstandyng in captiuitie vnder the obedience of Christ, that is, the weapōs are Gods word and doctrine and not swordes of yron and stele, & set before thee the doctrine of Christ and of hys Apostles and their practise.

And when the Pope chalengeth authoritie oner his fellow Byshops and ouer all the congregation of Christ by succession of Peter set before thee ỳ first of the Actes where Peter for all hys authoritie put no man in the rowme of Judas, but all the Apostles chose two indifferently and cast lottes desiring God to temper them that the lot might fall on ỳ most ablest. And Actes. vii. the Apostles sent Peter, and in the .xi. call him to rekening and to geue accomptes of that he hath done.

And when the Popes law cōmaundeth saying: though that the Pope liue neuer so wickedly and draw with hym through his euill ensample innumerable thousādes vnto hell, yet see that no man presume to rebuke him, for he is head ouer all and no man ouer hym: set before thee Gallates. ỳ. where Paule rebu-rebuketh Peter openly. And see how both to the Corinthiās, and also to the Galathians he will haue no superiour but Gods word, & hee that could teach better by Gods worde. And because when he rehearsed his preachyng and hys doynges vnto the hygh Apostles, they could improue nothyng, therfore will he be equall with the best.

Gods woorde aboue all mens iudgmentes.

And when the Friers say, they do more thē their dutie, whē they preach, and more thē they are bound to: to say our seruice are we bold (say they) and that is our dutie, & to preach is more then we are bound to. Set thou before thee how that Christes bloud shedyng hath bounde vs to loue one an other withall our might and to do the vttermost of our power one to an other. And Paul sayth. i. Cor. ix. wo be vnto me if I preach not: yea wo is vnto him ỳ hath wherewith to helpe his neighbour and to make him better and do it not. If they thinke it more then their dutie to preache Christ vnto you then they thinke it more then their dutie to pray that ye should come to the knowledge of Christ. And therefore it is no marueil though they take so great labour: yea and so great wages also to kepe you still in darkenes.

Fryers be not bound to preach.

And when they crye furiously hold the heretikes vnto the wall, and if they will not reuoke, burne them without any more a do, reason not with thē, it is an Article condēned, by the fathers. Set thou before thee the saying of Peter. i. Pet. iij. To all that aske you, be ready to geue an aunswere of the hope that is in you, and that with meekenes. The fathers of the Jewes and the Bishops, whiche had as great authoritie ouer them as ours haue ouer vs, condemned Christ & his doctrine. If it be inough to say the fathers haue condēned it, thē are ỳ Jewes to be holdē excused: yea they are yet in the right way and we in the false. But & if the Jewes be bound to loke in the Scripture and to see whether their fathers haue done right or wrong, then are we likewise bound to looke in the Scripture whether our fathers haue done right or wrong, and ought to beleue nothyng without a reason of the Scripture and authoritie of Gods word.

And of this maner defend thy selfe agaynst all maner wickednes of our spirites, armed alway with Gods woorde & with a strong and a stedfast fayth thereunto. without Gods word do nothing. And to his word adde nothyng neither pull any thyng therfrō, as Moyses euery where teacheth thee. Serue God in the spirite, & thy neighbour with all outward seruice. Serue God as he hath appoynted thee & not with thy good intent and good zeale. Remember Saul was cast awaye of God for euer for his good intent. God requireth obediēce vnto his woorde & abhorreth all good intentes and good zeales which are without Gods word. For they are nothyng els then playne Idolatry and woorshyppyng of false Gods.

How God ought to be serued.

And remēber that Christ is the end of all thyng. He onely is our restyng place & he is our peace. Ephe. ij. chap. For as there is no saluatiō in any other name, so is there no peace in any other name. Thou shalt neuer haue rest in thy soule neither shall ỳ worme of conscience euer cease to gnaw thyne hart till thou come at Christ: till thou heare the glad tydings, how that God for his sake hath forgeuen thee all freely. If thou trust in thy workes there is no rest. Thou shalt thinke, I haue not done inough. Haue I done it with so great loue as I should do? was I so glad in doyng as I would be to receaue helpe at my neede? I haue left this or that vndone and such like. If thou trust in confessiō, then shalt thou thinke. Haue I told all? Haue I told all the circumstances? Did I repent inough? Had I as great sorow in my repentaunce for my sinnes as I had pleasure in doyng them? Likewise in our holy Pardōs & pilgrimages, getest thou no rest. For thou seest that the very Gods thē selues which sell their pardon so good cheape or some whiles geue thē freely for glory sake, trust not therein them selues. They build Colledges and make perpetuities to be prayed for, for euer, & ladey lyppes of their beadmen, or chaplaynes with so many Masses, & Dirigts, and so lōg seruice, that I haue knowen some that haue byd the deuill take their founders soules, for very impaciencie and werines of so paynefull labour.

In Christ is rest of conscience onely.

As pertaunyng to good deedes therfore, do the best thou canst, and desire God to geue strength to do better dayly, but in Christ put thy trust and in the Pardon & promises that God hath made thee for his sake, & on that rocke build thine house and there dwell. For there onely shalt thou be sure from all stormes and tēpestes & from all wyly assaultes of our wicked spirites which study with all falshead to vndermyne vs. And the God of all mercy geue the grace so to do, vnto whom be glory for euer. Amen.

Do good deedes and trust in Christ.

¶A compendious rehearsall of that which goeth before.

Gods worde is the rule of childrē, seruauntes, wyues & subiectes.

I Haue described vnto you the obedience of children, seruauntes, wines, & subiectes. These iij. orders are of Gods makyng & ỳ rules thereof are Gods word. He that keepeth thē shalbe blessed: yea is blessed all ready and he that breaketh them shalbe cursed. If any person of impaciency or of a stubburne and rebellious mynde withdraw hym selfe from any of these, and get him to any other order: let hym not thinke thereby to auoyde the vengeaunce of God in obeying rules and traditions of mans imaginatiō. If thou poullest thine head in the worshyp of thy father and breakest his commaundementes, shouldest ỹ so escape? Or if thou paintedst thy masters image on a wall and stickedst vp a cādle before it, shouldest thou therewith make satisfaction, for the breaking of his cōmaundementes. Or if thou warest a blew coate in the worshyp of the kyng and brakest hys lawes shouldest thou so go quyte. Let a mans wife make her selfe a sister of the charterhouse and answere her husband when he byddeth her hold her peace, my brethren kepe silence for me, and see whether she shal so escape. And be thou sure God is more gelouse ouer his commaundementes then man is ouer hys, or then any man is ouer his wife.

To please God is to beleue hys promises, & to loue hys commaundementes.

Because we be blynd, God hath appointed in ỹ Scripture how we shuld serue him & please him. As perteynyng vnto his owne person he is aboundātly pleased when we beleue his promises and holy Testament which he hath made vnto vs in Christ, & for the mercy which he there shewed vs, loue his commaundements. All bodyly seruice must be done to mā in Gods stede. We must geue obedience, honour, tolle, tribute, custome, and rent vnto whō they belong. Then if thou haue ought more to bestow, geue vnto ỹ pore which are left here in Christes stede that we shew mercy on them. If we kepe the commaundements of loue thē are we sure that we fulfill the law in the sight of God and that our blessing shalbe euerlastyng life. Now when we obey patiently and without grudgyng euill Princes that oppresse vs, & persecute vs and be kinde and mercyfull to them that are mercylesse to vs, and doe the worst they cā to vs, and so take all fortune patiently, and kysse what soeuer crosse God layeth on our backes: then are we sure that we keepe the commaundementes of loue.

He that will auēge, robbeth God of his honour.

I declared that God hath taken all vengeaunce into his own handes, and will auēge all vnright him selfe: either by the powers or officers whiche are appointed thereto or els, if they be negligent, he will send his curses vppon the trāsgressours & destroy them with his secret iudgementes. I shewed also that whosoeuer auengeth him selfe is damned in the deede doing and falleth into the hādes of the temporall sword, because he taketh the office of God vpon him and robbeth God of his most high honour, in that he wil not patiētly abide his iudgement. I shewed you of the authoritie of Princes, how they are in Gods stede and how they may not be resisted, doe they neuer so euill, they must be reserued vnto the wrath of God. Neuer the latter if they commaunde to do euill we must then disobey and say we are otherwise cōmaūder of God: but not to rise agaynst thē. They wil kil vs thē sayest thou. Therfore, I say is a Christen called, to suffer euen the bitter death for hys hopes sake, and because he will do no euill. I shewed also that the Kynges and rulers (be they neuer so euill) are yet a great gift of the goodnes of God, and defende vs from a thousand thynges that we see not.

How euill soeuer the kyng is, yet is he vnto the a great gift of God.

I proued also that all men without exception are vnder the temporall sword, what soeuer names they geue them selues. Because the Priest is chosen out of the lay men, to teach this obedience, is that a lawfull cause for him to disobey? Because he preacheth that the lay mā should not steale, is it therfore lawfull for hym to steale vnpunished? Because thou teachest me that I may not kill, or if I do, the kyng must kill me agayn, is it therfore lawfull for thee to kil and go free? Either whether is it rather mete that thou whiche art my guide to teache me the rightwaye shouldest walke therin before me? The Prickes of the old law with their high bishop Aaron, and all his successours, though they were annoynted by Gods commaundement and appoynted to serue God in his temple and exempte from all offices & ministering of worldly matters, were yet neuertheless vnder the temporall sword, if they brake ỹ lawes. Christ sayth to Peter, all that take ỹ sword, shal perish by the sword. Here is none exception. Paul saith, all soules must obey. Here is none exception. Paule hym selfe is here not exempt. God sayth Gene. ix. who soeuer sheddeth mans bloud, by man shall his bloud be shed agayn. Here is none exception.

Moreouer Christ became poore to make other men riche, and bound to make other free. He left also with his Disciples the law of loue. Now loue seketh not her owne profite: but her neighbours, loue seeketh not her own fredome, but becommeth suretie and bonde to make her neighbour fre. Dāned therfore are the spiritualtie by all the lawes of God, which through falshead & disguised hipocrisie haue sought so great profit, so great riches, so great authoritie and so great liberties, and haue so bedgerd the lay, & so brought them in subiectiō and bondage and so despised thē, that they haue set vp trāchises in all townes and villages for who soeuer robbeth, murthereth or slayeth them, and euen for traytours vnto the kynges person also.

The Pope hath a law that none of his sp ites may be suerey.

I proued also that no kyng hath power to graūt them such libertie: but are as well damned for their geuyng, as they for their false purchasing. For as God geueth the father power ouer his children: euen so geueth he hym a commaundement to execute it, and not to suffer them to do wickedly vnpunished but vnto his damnation, as thou mayst see by Hely the hygh Priest. &c. And as the master hath authoritie ouer his seruauntes: euen so hath he a commaundement to gouerne them. And as the husband is head ouer hys wife: euen so hath he commaundemēt to rule her appetites and is damned if he suffer her to be an whore & a mistresse, or submit him self to her, & make her his head. And euen in lyke maner as God maketh the kyng head ouer his Realme, euen so geueth he him cōmaundement to execute the lawes vpon all men indifferently. For the law is Gods and not the kyngs. The king is but a seruaunt to execute the law of God, and not to rule after his owne imagination.

The kyng is but a seruaunt to execute the lawes of God.

I shewed also that the law and the kyng are to be feared, as thinges that were geuēm fire, and in th under, and lightning, & terrible signes. I shewed the cause why rulers are euill, and by what meanes we might obtaine better. I shewed also how wholesome those bitter medicines euill Princes are to right Christen men.

I declared how they whiche God hath made gouerners in the worlde ought to rule if they be Christē. They ought to remēber that they are heades and armes, to defend the body, to minister peace, health, & wealth, and euē to saue the body, and that they haue receaued their offices of God to minister & to do seruice vnto their brethrē. Kyng, subiect, Master, seruaunt, are names in the world: but not in Christ. In Christ we are all one and euen brethren. No man is his own, but we are all Christes seruauntes bought with Christes bloud. Therfore ought no mā to seke him selfe or his owne profite: but Christ and his will. In Christ no man ruleth as a kyng his subiectes, or a master his seruaunts: but serueth as one hand doth to an other and as the handes do vnto the feete and the feete to the handes, as thou seest. i. Cor. xij. we also serue not as seruauntes vnto masters: but as they which are bought with Christes bloud serue Christ hym selfe, we be here all seruauntes vnto Christ. For what soeuer we do one to an other in Christes name, that do we vnto Christ, & the reward of that shall we receaue of Christ. The kyng counteth his cōmōs Christ himselfe, & therfore doth thē seruice willingly, seeking no more of thē thē is sufficiēt to maintein peace & vnitie, & to defēde the realme. And they obey agayne willingly and loungly as vnto Christ. And of Christ euery man seketh his reward.

How farre a kyng ought to seeke at his commons handes.

I warned the iudges that they take not an ensample how to minister their offices, of our spiritualtie, whiche are bought and sold to do the will of Sathā: but of the Scripture whence they haue their authoritie. Let that which is secret abyde secret till God open it, which is the iudge of secretes. For it is more then a cruell thyng to breake vp into a mans hart & to compell him to put either soule or body in iopardy or to shame him selfe. If Peter that great piller for feare of death forsoke hys master, ought we not to spare weake consciences?

Note.

I declared how the kyng ought to ridde his Realme from the wily tyrānny of the hypocrites, and to bryng the hypocrites vnder his lawes: yea and how he ought to be learned, & to heare, and to looke vpon the causes him selfe, which he wil punish, and not to beleue the hypocrites, and to geue them his swoord to kill whom they will.

The kyng ought to count what he hath spent in the Popes quarell sens he was kyng. The first viage cost vpō xiiij. hundred thousand pounde. Rekē sens what hath bene spēt by sea and land betwene vs and Frenchmen, and Scottes, and then in triumphes, and in Ambassiates, and what hath bene sent out of the Realme secretly, and all to mainteine our holy father, and I doubt not but that will surmount the some of. xl. or. l. hundred thousand poūdes. For we had no cause to spend one peny but for our holy father. The king therfore ought to make them pay this money euery farthing, and fette it out of their myters, croses, shrines and all maner treasure of the Church, and pay it to his commons again: not that onely which the Cardinal and his Bishops compelled the commōs to lend, and made thē sweare with such an ensample of tyrānny as was neuer before thought on: but also all that he hath gathered of them. Or els by the cōsent of the commons to keepe it in store for the defence of the realme. Yea the kyng ought to loke in the Chronicles what the Popes haue done to kings in time past and make them restore it also, And ought to take away from them theyr landes whiche they haue gotten with their false prayers, & restore it vnto the right heyres agayne, or with consent & aduisemēt turne them vnto the mayntenyng of the poore and bringyng vp of youth vertuously and to maynteine necessary officers and ministers for to defend the common wealth.

If he will not do it: then ought the commons to take pacience and to take it for Gods scourge, and to thinke that God hath blynded the kyng for theyr sinnes sake and commit their cause to God: And then shall God make a scourge for them and driue them out of his Temple after hys wonderfull indgement.

ON the other side I haue also vttered the wickednes of the spiritualtie, the falshead of the Bishops, and iugglyng of the Pope, and how they haue disguised them selues, borowyng some of their pompe of ỹ Iewes, and some of the Gentiles, and haue with suttill wyles turned the obedience that should be geuen to Gods ordinaunce vnto them selues. And how they haue put out Gods Testament and Gods truth and set vp their owne traditions and lyes, in which they haue taught ỹ people to beleue & there by sit in their consciences as God, and haue by that meanes robbed the world of landes & goodes, of peace and vnitie, and of all tēporal authoritie, and haue brought the people into the ignorāunce of God & haue heaped the wrath of God vpon all realmes & namely vpon the kings. whom they haue robbed (I speake not of worldly thinges onely) but euen of their very natural wittes. They make thē beleue that they are most Christen, whē they lyue most abhominably, and will suffer no man in their Realmes that beleueth on Christ, and that they are defenders of the fayth, when they burne the Gospell & promises of God, out of which all fayth springeth.

I shewed how they haue ministred Christ, Kyng and Emperour out of their rowmes, & how they haue made them a seuerall kyngdome which they gote at the first in deceauyng of Princes, and now peruert the whole scripture to proue that they haue such authoritie of God. And lest the lay men should see how falsely they alledge the places of the Scripture, is the greatest cause of this persecution.

They haue fained confession for the same purpose to stablish their kyngdome with all. All secretes know they therby. The Bishop knoweth the confession of whom he lusteth throughout all his Dioces. Yea and his Chaunceler commaundeth the ghostly father to deliuer it written. The pope, his Cardinals and Bishops know the confession of the Emperour, Kyngs, & of all Lordes: & by confession they know all their captiues. If any beleue in Christ, by confession they know him. Shrine thy selfe where thou wilt, whether at Sion charterhouse or at the obseruāts thy confession is knowen wel inough. And thou, if thou beleue in Christ, art wayted vppon. Wonderfull are the thinges that therby are wrought. The wife is feared and compelled to vtter not her own onely but also the secretes of her husband, and the seruaunt the secretes of his master. Besides that thorough confession they quench the fayth of all the promises of God, and take away the effect and vertue of all ỹ Sacramentes of Christ.

Confession.

The manifolde enormities which this auricular confession did bryng.

They

They haue also corrupted ẏ Saintes lines with lyes and fayned miracles & haue put many thinges out of the sentence or great curse, as rayling of rente and fines and hyring men out of their houses, and what soeuer wickednes they them selues do, & haue put a great part of the stories and Chronicles out of the waye lest their falshead shoulde be sene. For there is no mischieues or disorder, whether it be in the temporall regiment, or els in the spiritual wherof they are not the chief causes and cuẽ the very fountayne and springes, and as we say, the wel head so that it is impossible to preach agaynst mischief except thou begyn at them, or to set any reformation in the world except thou reforme them first. Now are they indurate and tough as Pharao, and will not bow vnto any right way or order. And therefore persecute they Gods word and the preachers therof, and on the other side lye awayte vnto all princes & stirre vp all mischief in the world and send them to warre, and occupy their myndes therewith or with other voluptuousnes, lest they should haue laysure to heare the word of God and to set an order in their realmes.

The Pope and his chapleyns were the fountaines of all euils in spirituall regiment, or temporall.

By them is all thing ministred and by them are all kynges ruled: yea in euery kynges conscience sit they ere he be king and persuade euery king what they lust, and make thẽ both to beleue what they will and to doe what they will. Neither can any kyng or any realme haue rest for their busynesses. Behold kyng Henry the v. whom they sẽt out for such a purpose as they sent out our kyng that now is. See how the Realme is inhabited. Aske where the goodly townes and their walles and the people that was wont to be in thẽ are become, and where the blond royal of the Realme is become also. Turne thine eyes whether thou wilt & thou shalt see nothing prosperous but their suttle pollyng. with that it is flowyng water: yea and I trust it wilbe shortly a full see.

In all their doynges though they pretend outwardly the honour of God or a common wealth, their entent and secret Councell is onely to bryng all vnder their power and to take out of the way who soeuer letteth them, or is to mighty for them. As whẽ they send the princes to Hierusalem to cõquere the holy land and to fight agaynst the Turkes. what soeuer they pretende outwardly their secret entent is, while the princes there conquere them more Bishoprikes, to conquere their landes in the meane season with their false hipocrisie, and to bryng all vnder them, which thou mayest easely perceaue by that they will not let vs know ẏ fayth of Christ. And when they are ones on hye, then are they tyrauntes aboue all tyrauntes, whether they be Turkes or Saracenes. How ministre they prouyng of testamentes? How causes of wedlocke? or if any man dye intestate? If a poore man dye and leaue his wife and halfe a dosen young children & but one cow to finde them, that will they haue for a mortuary mercylesse: let come of wife and children what will. Yea let any thyng be done agaynst their pleasure and they will interdite the whole realme sparyng no person.

Under an outwarde pretence of Gods honor, the popes Clergie procured their owne dignitie.

Read the Chronicles of England (out of which yet they haue put a great part of their wickednesse) & thou shalt finde them all wayes both rebellious and disobedient to the kinges and also churlish and vnthankeful, so that, whẽ all the Realme gaue the kyng somewhat to maynteine him in his right, they would not geue a myte. Consider the story of K. Iohn, where I dout not but they haue put the best & tayrest for them selues, & the worst of kyng Iohn, For I suppose they make the Chronicles them selues. Compare the doings of their holy Church (as they euer call it) vnto the learnyng of Christ and of his Apostles. Did not the Legate of Rome assoyle all the Lordes of the realme of their due obediẽce which they ought to the king by the ordinaunce of God? would he not haue cursed ẏ king with his solemne pompe, because he would haue done that office whiche God commaundeth euery kyng to do and wherfore God hath put the sword in euery kynges hand? that is to were, because kyng Iohn would haue punished a wicked Clerke that had coyned false money. The lay men that had not done halfe so great fautes must dye, but the Clerke must go escape fre. Sẽt not the Pope also vnto the kyng of Fraunce remission of his sinnes to go and conquere kyng Iohns Realme. So now remission of sinnes commeth not by fayth in the Testament that God hath made in Christes blond: but by fightyng & murtheryng for the Popes pleasure. Last of all was not kyng Iohn fayne to deliuer his crowne vnto the Legate and to yeld vp his Realme vnto the Pope, wherfore we pay Peter pēce. They might be called the pollyng pence of false prophetes well inough. They care not by what mischief they come by their purpose. war and cōquering of landes is their harnest. The wickeder the people are, the more they haue the hypocrites in reuerence, the more they feare them and the more they beleue in them. And they that cōquere other mens landes, whē they dye, make them their heyres, to be prayed for for euer. Let there come one cōquest more in the Realme, and thou shalt see them get yet as much more as they haue (if they can keepe downe Gods word that their inggiyng come not to light) yea thou shalt see them take ỳ Realme whole into their hādes and crowne one of them selues kyng therof. And verily I see no other likelyhode, but that the land shalbe shortly conquered. The starres of the Scripture promise vs none other fortune, in as much as we denye Christ with the wicked Iewes, and will not haue him reigne ouer vs: but wilbe still children of darknes vnder Antichrist, and Antichristes possession, burnyng the Gospell of Christ, and defendyng a fayth that may not stand with hys holy Testament.

The keepyng down of Gods word promoted the Popes spiritualties honour.

If any mā shed blond in the church, it shalbe interdited, til he haue payd for the halowing. If he be not able the parish must paye or els shall it stand alwayes interdited. They wilbe auenged on them that neuer offended. Full well prophesied of them. Paule in the .ij. Epistle to Timo. iij. Some man wil say, wouldest thou that men should fight in the Church vnpunished? May but let the kyng ordeine a punishment for them, as he doth for them that fight in his palace and let not all the Parish be troubled for ons faute. And as for their halowing it, is ỳ iuggling of Antichrist. A Christen mā is the temple of God and of the holy ghost, & halowed in Christes blond. A Christē mā is holy in hym selfe by reason of the spirite ỳ dwelleth in him and the place wherin he is, is holy be reasō of hym, whether he be in the feld or towne. A Christen husband sanctifieth an vnchristē wife, and a Christen wife an vnchristen husband (as concernyng the vse of matrimony) sayth Paul to the Corinthians. If now while we seeke to be halowed in Christ, we are found vnholy, & must be halowed by the grounde or place or walles, thē died Christ in vayne. Howbeit Antichrist must haue wherwith to sit in mens consciences, and to make them feare where is no feare, and to robbe them of their faith, and to make them trust in that can not helpe them, and to seeke holynes of that which is not holy in it selfe.

After that the old kyng of Fraunce was brought down out of Italy, mark what pageaūtes haue ben played, and what are yet a playeng to separate vs frō the Emperour (lest by the helpe or ayde of vs he should be able to recouer his right of the Pope) & to couple vs to the Frēchmē, whose might the pope euer abuseth to keepe the Emperour frō Italy. what preuayleth it for any kyng to mary his daughter or his sōne or to make any peace or good ordinaunce for the wealth of his realme? For it shal no longer last thē it is profitable to them. Their treason is so secret that the world cā not perceaue it. They dissimule those thynges whiche they are onely cause of, & inuil discorde among them selues whē they are most agreed. One shall hold this, and another shall dispute the contrary: But the conclusiō shalbe that most mayntayneth their falshead, though Gods word be neuer so contrary. what haue they wrought in our days, yea and what worke they yet, to the perpetuall dishonour of the kyng and rebuke of the Realme, and shame of all the nation in what soeuer Realmes they go?

The Bysshop of Lychester, is a fit patron to shew us all ỳ rest of a Prelate by.

I vttered vnto you partly the malicious blindnes of the Bysshop of Lychester, his iuggling his cōueying, his forewilenes, his dopepe, his wretting, rentyng and shamefull abusyng of the Scripture, his Oratory & allegyng of heretikes and how he would make the Apostles authors of blind ceremonies without signification contrary to their owne doctrine, and haue set him for an ensample to iudge all other by. what soeuer thou art that readest this. I exhorte thee in Christ, to cōpare his sermon and that which I haue written, and the scripture together and more. There shalt thou finde of our holy fathers authoritie, and what it is to be great, and how to know the greatest.

Then foloweth the cause why laye mē can not rule tēporall offices which is the falshead of the Bishops. There shalt thou finde of miracles & ceremonies without signification, of false annoynting & lyeng signes & false names and how the spiritualtie are disguised in falshead, & how they rowle the people in darknes and do all thing in the Latin toung and of their pety pyllage, Their polling is like a lokyng consūption wherin a man cōplaineth of feblenes and of fayntynes and wotteth not whence his disease commeth: it is lyke a pocke that freateth inward and consumeth the very marow of the bones.

La-

The cause why kings coulde not come to the knowledge of ỹ truth.

There seest thou the cause why it is impossible for kynges to come to the knowledge of the truth. For the spyrites lay awaite for them & serue their appetites at all poyntes and through cōfession buy and sel and betray both them, and all their true frendes & lay beytes for them and neuer leaue them till they haue blinded them with their sophistry & haue brought them into their nettes. And thē whē the kyng is captiue, they compell all the rest with violēce of his swerd. For if any man will not obey them be it right or wrōg they cite him, suspēde hym, and curse or excommunicate him. If he then obey not they deliuer him to Pylate, that is to say, vnto the temporall officers to destroy hym. Last of all there findest thou the very cause of all persecution, whiche is the preachyng agaynst hypocrisie.

Then come we to the Sacramētes, where thou seest that the worke of the Sacrament saueth not, but the fayth in the promise which the Sacramēt signifieth iustifieth vs onely. There hast ỹ that a Priest is but a seruannt to teach onely and what soeuer he taketh vpon him more then to preach & to minister the Sacramentes of Christ (whiche is also preaching) is falshead.

Then cōmeth how they iuggle thorough dōme ceremonies & how they make marchaūdise with tamed words, penaunce, a pœna & a culpa, satisfactiō, attrition, character, Purgatory picke-purse and how through confessiō they make the Sacramētes and all the promise of none effect or value. There seest thou that absolutyng is but preachyng the promises & cursing or excommunicating preachyng the law, and of their power, & of their keyes, of false miracles & prayeng to Saintes. There seest thou that ceremonies dyd not the miracles but faith: euē as it was not Moses rodde that did ỹ miracles but Moses fayth in the promise of God. Thou seest also that to haue a fayth where God hath not a promise is Idolatry. And there also seest thou how the pope exalteth him self aboue God and commaūdeth him to obey his tyrāny. Last of all thou hast there that no mā ought to preach but he that is called.

Miracles are done by fayth and not by ceremonies.

Thē foloweth the bely brotherhead of Monkes & Friers. For Christ hath deserued nought with them. For his sake getest thou no fauor. Thou must offer vnto their belyes & thē they pray bitterly for thee. There seest thou that Christ is the onely cause: yea & all the cause why God doth ought for vs and heareth our complaint. And there hast thou doctrine how to know and to be sure that thou art elect and hast Gods spryte in thee. And hast there learnyng to try the doctrine of our spirites.

Then folow the foure senses of the Scripture of which three are no senses and the fourth that is to wite the litterall sense which is the very sense hath the Pope taken to him selfe. It may haue no other meanyng thē as it pleaseth his fatherhode. we must abyde his interpretatiō. And as his belles thinke so must we thinke, though it be impossible together any such meanyng of the Scripture. Then hast thou the very vse of Allegories and how they are nothyng but ensamples borowed of the Scripture to expresse a text or an open conclusion of the Scripture and as it were to paynte it before thyne eyes, that thou mayest feele the meanyng and the power of the Scripture in thyne hart. Then commeth the vse of worldly similitudes, & how they are false Prophetes which bring a worldly similitude for any other purpose, saue to expresse more playnly ỹ which is cōteined in an open text. And so are they also whiche draw the Scripture contrary to the open places and cōtrary to the ensample liuyng and practising of Christ, the Apostles and of the holy Prophetes. And then finally hast thou of our holy fathers power and of hys keyes and of hys bindyng and excommunicatyng and of his cursyng and blessyng with ensamples of euery thyng.

The vse of Allegories.

¶An exposition vppon the v.vi.vii. chapters of Mathew, which three chapters are the keye and the doze of the scripture, and the restoring agayne of Moses law corrupte by the Scribes and Phariſes. And the expoſition is the reſtoring agayne of Chriſtes lawe corrupte by the Papiſtes.

¶Item before the booke, thou haſt a Prologe very neceſſarie, contayning the whole ſumme of the couenaunt made betwene God and vs, vppon which we be baptiſed to kepe it.

Set forth by William Tyndall.

¶The Prologe.

HEre haſt thou deare Reader an expoſition vppon the v. vi. and vij. chapters of Mathew, wherin Chriſt our ſpirituall Iſaac, diggeth agayne the welles of Abraham: which welles ỹ Scribes & Phareſes, thoſe wicked & hiteſull Philiſtines, had ſtopped and filled vp wyth the earth of their falſe expoſitions. He openeth the kingdome of heauen which they had ſhut vp that other men ſhould not enter, as they themſelues had no luſt to go in. He reſtoreth the keye of knowledge which they had taken away and broken the wardes with wreſting the text contrary to his due and natural courſe, with their falſe gloſes. He plucketh away from the face of Moſes, the vaile which the Scribes and Phareiſes had ſpred thereon, that no man might perceaue the brightnes of his countenaunce. He weedeth out the thornes and buſhes of their Phareſaicall gloſes, wherewith they had ſtopped vp the narrow way and ſtraight gate, that fewe coulde finde them.

To digge the welles of Abrahã, is to open and to make plaine the ſcriptures, which is the kingdome of God.

Abrahams welles.

The kingdome of heauen what it is.

Moſes face.

The keye what it is.

The lawe is the way that leadeth to Chriſt.

The welles of Abraham, are the ſcripture. And the Scripture may well be called the kingdome of heauen, which is eternall lyfe, and nothing ſaue the knowledge of God the father and of his ſonne Ieſus Chriſt. Joh. xvij. Moſes face is the law in her right vnderſtanding, and the law in her right vnderſtanding is the keye, or at the leaſt waye the firſt and principall keye to open the doze of the Scripture. And the law is the very way that bringeth vnto ỹ doze Chriſt, as it is writtẽ Gala. iij. The law was our ſchoolemaſter to bring vs to Chriſt, that we might be iuſtified by fayth. And Rom. x. the ende of the lawe: that is to ſay, the thyng or cauſe why the law was geuen, is Chriſt, to iuſtifie all that beleue. That is to ſay: the lawe was geuen to proue vs vnrighteous and to driue vs to Chriſt, to be made righteous thorow forgeuenes of ſinne by hym. The lawe was geuen to make the ſinne knowen fayth Saint Paule Rom. iij. and that ſinne committed vnder the law might be the more ſinfull. Rom. vij. The law is that thyng, which Paule in his inward mã graũted to be good, but was yet compelled oft tymes of his mẽbers to do thoſe thinges which that good lawe condemned for euill. Rom. vij.

Lawe what her office is.

The law maketh no man to loue the law, or leſſe to do or commit ſinne: but gendereth more luſt, Rom. vij. and increaſeth ſinne. Rom. v. For I cannot but hate the lawe, in as much as I finde no power to do it, and it neuertheleſſe condemneth me becauſe I do it not. The lawe ſetteth not at one with God, but cauſeth wrath. Rom. iij.

The law diſcereth ſinne, condemneth our deedes, & driueth vs to Chriſt.

The lawe was geuẽ by Moſes, but grace and veritie by Ieſus Chriſt. Joh. j. Behold though Moſes gaue the law, yet he gaue no man grace to do it or to vnderſtand it aright, or wrote it in any mans hart, to conſent that it was good, and to wiſhe after power to fulfill it. But Chriſt geueth grace to do it, and to vnderſtand it aright, and writeth it wyth his holy ſpirite in the tables of the hartes of men, and maketh it a true thing there, and none hypocriſie.

Moſes gaue the law but Chriſt onely geueth grace to do it, and vnderſtand it aright.

The lawe truely vnderſtoode, is thoſe fierie ſerpentes that ſtong the children of Iſrael with preſent death: But Chriſt is the braſen ſerpent on whom whoſoeuer beyng ſtoge with cõſcience of ſinne, & looketh with a ſure fayth, is healed immediatly of that ſtinging and ſaued from the paynes and ſorrowes of hell.

The braſen ſerpent. Num. xxi.

It is one thyng to cõdemne and pronoũce the ſentence of death, and to ſtyng the conſcience with feare of euerlaſtyng payne. And it is an other thing to iuſtifie from ſinne: that is to ſay, to forgeue and remitte ſinne, and to heale the conſcience, and certifie a man, not only that he is deliuered from eternall death, but alſo that he is made the ſonne of God & heire of euerlaſtyng life. The firſt is the office of the lawe. The ſecond pertayneth vnto Chriſt onely thorow fayth.

The lawe & fayth be of contrary operations.

Now if thou geue the lawe a falſe gloſe & ſay: that the lawe is a thyng which a man may do of his owne ſtrength, euen out of the power of his free wyll: and that by the deedes of the law thou mayſt deſerue forgeuenes of thy foreſinnes. Then dyed Chriſt in vayne Galat. ij. and is made almoſt of no ſteade, ſeyng thou art become thyne owne ſauiour. Neither can Chriſt (where that gloſe is admitted) be otherwiſe take or eſteemed of Chriſten men (for all his paſſion and promiſes made to vs in his bloude) then he is of the turkes: how that he was an holy prophet, and that he prayeth for vs as other Saintes do: ſaue that we Chriſten thinke that he is ſomewhat more in fauour then other ſaintes be (thogh we imagine hym ſo proude that he will not heare vs but thorow his mild mother and other holy saintes, which all we count much more meeke and mercifull then he, but hym most of might) and that he hath also an higher place in heauen, as the grape Fryers and obseruaunts set hym, as it were trō the chinne vpward about S. Fraunces.

Christ is the doore, the way, and foundation, of all the Scriptures.

And so when by this false interpretation of the lawe, Christ which is the doore, the way, and the grōund or foundation of all the scripture, is lost concerning the chiefest frute of hys passion, and no more sene in his owne likenes: then is the scripture locked vp, and henceforth extreame darckenes and a maze, wherein if thou walke, thou wottest neither where thou art, nor canst finde any way out. It is a confused Chaos, and a mingling of all thinges together without order, euery thyng contrary to an other. It is an hedge or grone of briers, wherin if thou be caught, it is impossible to get out, but that if thou lowse thy selfe in one place, thou art tangled and caught in an other for it.

When by gloses of our owne imaginatiō we darken the cleare text of gods word, thē is the Scripture locked vp from vs.

This wise was the scripture locked vp of the Scribes & Phareseis, that the Iewes could not see Christ when he came, nor yet can. And though Christ with these iij. chapters did open it agayne: yet by such gloses, for our vnthankfulnes sake, that we had no lust to lyue accordyng: haue we Christen lost Christ agayne, and the vnderstanding of the most cleare text, wherewith Christ expoundeth and restoreth the lawe agayne.

For the hipocrites whatsoeuer semeth impossible to their corrupt nature vnrenued in Christ, that they couer ouer with the mist of their gloses, that the light therof shuld not be seene. As they haue interpreted here ẏ wordes of Christ, wherwith he restoreth the law agayne, to be but good counceiles onely, but no preceptes that binde the consciences.

Christ vsed no temporal regiment.

And thereto they haue so ruffled and tangled the temporall and spirituall regiment together, and made thereof such confusion that no man can know the one from the other: to the entent that they would seme to haue both by the authoritie of Christ, which neuer vsurped temporall regiment vnto him.

Notwithstanding (most deare reader) if thou reade this exposition with a good hart onely to know the truth for the amendyng cheifely of thine owne liuing, and thē of other mennes (as charitie requireth where an occasion is geuen) thē shalt thou perceaue their falshod, and see their mist expelled with the brightnes of the inuytable truth.

Christ is a gift geuen onely to thē that loue the law and fulfille it.

In other conclusion is this: all the good promises which are made vs thorow out all the scripture for Christes sake, for hys loue, his passion or suffering, his bloudsheding or death all are made vs on this condition and couenaunt on our party, that we henceforth loue the law of God, to walke therin & to do it & fashion our lyues therafter. In so much that whosoeuer hath not the lawe of God written in hys hart, that he loue it, haue hys lust in it, and recorde therein night and day, vnderstanding it as God hath geuen it, and as Christ and the Apostles expounde it: the same hath no part in the promises, or can haue any true faith in the bloud of Christ: because there is no promise made him, but to them onely that promise to keepe the lawe.

Thou wilt happely say to me agayne: if I cannot haue my sinnes forgeuen except I loue the lawe, and of loue endeuour my selfe to keepe it: then the keeping of the lawe iustifieth me. I answere that the argument is false and but blinde sophistrie, and lyke vnto thys argument: I cannot haue forgeuenes of my sinne except I haue sinned, Ergo to haue sinned is the forgeuenes of sinne. And it is like to this also: No man can be healed of the pockes but he that hath them: Ergo to haue the pockes doth heale the pockes. Workes do not iustifie.

And lyke sophistry are these argumentes: if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the cōmaūdementes. Math. xix. Ergo the deedes of the lawe iustifie vs. Item the hearers of ẏ lawe are not righteous in the sight of God, but the doers of the lawe shall be iustified. Rom. ij. Ergo the deedes of the lawe iustifie from sinne. And agayne: we must all stand before the iudgement seate of Christ, to receaue euery man according to the deedes which he did in the body: Ergo the lawe or the deedes of the lawe iustifie. 2. Cor. 5.

These and all such are naughty argumēts. For ye see that the kyng pardoneth no murtherer but on a condition, that he henceforth keepe the lawe and do no more so, and yet ye know well inough that he is saued by grace, fauour, and pardon, per the keping of ẏ lawe come. Howbeit, if he breake the lawe afterwarde, he falleth agayne into the same daunger of death.

The law. By keepyng the lawe we continue in grace.

Euen so, none of vs can be receaued to grace but vpon a condition to keepe the law, neyther yet continue any longer in grace then that purpose lasteth. And if we breake the law, we must sue for a new pardon, and haue a new sight agaynst sinne, hell, and desperation, per we can come to a quiet fayth againe and fele that the sinne is forgeuen. Neyther can there be in the a stable and an vndoubted fayth that thy sinne is forgeuen thee, except there be also a lusty courage in thine hart, & a trust that thou wilt sinne no more, for on that condition that thou endeuour thy selfe to sinne no more, is the promise of mercy and forgeuenes made vnto thee.

Fayth, loue and hope are inseparable in this lyfe.

And as thy loue to the lawe increaseth, so doth thy fayth in Christ, and so doth thyne hope and longing for the life to come. And as thy loue is colde, so is thy fayth weake, & thine hope and longing for the lyfe to come litle. And where no loue to the lawe is, there is neither fayth in Christ for the forgeuenes of sinne, nor longing for the lyfe to come: but in stede of fayth, a wicked imagination that God is so vnrighteous that he is not offended with sinne. And in stede of hope, a desire to liue euer here, and a gredines of worldly voluptuousnesse.

They that loue not the law cannot vnderstand the Scripture to saluation.

And vnto all such is the Scripture locked vp and made impossible to vnderstand. They may reade it and rehearse the stories thereof, and dispute of it, as the turkes may, and as we may of the turkes lawe. And they may sucke pride, hipocrisye and all maner of poyson there out to slaye their owne soules, and to put stombling blockes in other mennes wayes, to thrust them from the truth: and get such learnyng therin as in Aristoties Ethikes and morall philosophy, and in the pre-ceptes of olde philosophers. But it is impossible for them to apply one sentence thereof to their soules health for to fashion their liues thereby for to please God, or to make them loue the lawe or vnderstand it, either to feele the power of Christes death and might of his resurrection and swetnes of the life to come. So that they euer remayne carnall and fleshly, as thou hast an ensample of the Scribes, Pharisees, and Iewes in the new testament.

Cate.

How God careth for the weake.

An other conclusion is this: of them that beleue in Christ for the remission of sinne and loue the law, are a thousand degrees and not so few, one perfecter or weaker thē another: of which a great sort are so feble that they cā neither go forward in their profession & purpose, nor yet stand except they be holpe and borne of their stronger brethren, and tended as young childrē are by the care of their fathers and mothers. And therfore doth God commaund the elder to care for the younger. As Paule teacheth Rom. xv, saying: we that be stronger, ought to beare the feblenes of the weaker. And Gala. vj. brethren if any man be caught in any fault, ye that be spirituall (and are growen in knowledge and haue gottē the victory of your flesh) teach such with the spirite of softenes, not calling them heretickes at the first choppe, & threatenyng them with fier and fagottes. But alter alterius onera portate (sayth he) & sic adimplebitis legē Christi. That is to saye: beare eche others burthen, & so shall ye fulfill the law of Christ. Euen so verily shall ye fulfill the lawe of Christ, and not with smityng your brethren, and puttyng stombling blockes before their weake feete, and killyng their consciences, and makyng them more afrayde of shadowes and bugges, then to breake their fathers commaundementes, and to trust in wordes of winde and vanitie more then in their fathers promise.

By bearyng eche other weakenes we fulfil the lawe of Christ.

Rulers why they were ordayned.

And for their sakes also, he hath ordeyned rulers both spirituall and temporall, to teach them and exhorte them, to warne them and to keepe occasions from them, that with custome of synne they fall not from their profession.

Why God scourgeth hys.

Now when they that take vpon them to be the elder brethren, are become hypocrites, and turned to wily Foxes and cruell Wolues and fierce Lyons, and the officers be waxen cuill and seruauntes to Mammon, ministryng their offices for their owne lucre onely, and not for the profite of their brethren, but fauouryng all vices whereby they may haue a vauntage. Then is God compelled of his fatherly pitie to scourge his weake hym selfe, with pouertie, oppression, wrong, losse, daunger, and with a thousand maner of diseases, to bryng them agayne if they be fallen, and to kepe their hartes fast to their profession. So that diligentibus Deum omnia cooperantur in bonum. Roma. viij. They that loue God, that is to say, the law of God (for that is to loue God) vnto them god turneth all to the best, and scourgeth them with the lustes of their owne weakenes to their owne saluation.

In other conclusion is this: God receaueth both perfite and weake in lyke grace for Christes sake, as a father receaueth all hys children both small and great in lyke loue. He receaueth them for to be his sonnes and maketh a conenaunt with them, to beare their weakenes for Christes sake, till they be waxen stronger, and how often soeuer they fall, yet to forgeue them if they will turne agayn, and neuer to cast of any, till he yeld hym selfe to sinne, and take sinnes part, and for affection and lust to sinne, fight agaynst his owne professiō to destroy it. And he correcteth and chastiseth his children euer at home with the rodde of mercy and loue, to make thē better: but he bryngeth them not forth to be iudged after the condemnation of the law.

The conditions of the conenaunt.

In other conclusion is this: euery man is two men, flesh and spirite. which so fight perpetually one agaynst an other, that a man must go either backe or forward, and can not stand long in on state. If the spirit ouercome the temptation: then is she stronger and the flesh weaker. But and if the flesshe get a custome, then is the spirite none otherwise oppressed of the flesh, then as though she had a mountaine vpon her backe, and as we sometyme in our dreames thinke we beare heuyer then a millstone on our breastes, or when we dreame now and then that we would runne away for feare, our legges seme heauyer then leade. Euen so is the spirite oppressed and ouer laden of the flesh through custome, that she struggeleth and striueth to get vp and to breake lowse in vayne, vntil the God of mercy which heareth her grone through Iesus Christ, come and lowse her with his power, and put his crosse of tribulation on the backe of the flesh to keepe her downe, to minish her strength and to mortifie her.

Flesh and spirite.

Wherfore euery man must haue his crosse to nayle his flesshe to, for the mortifieng of her. Now if thou be not strong inough and discrete thereto, to take vp thy crosse thy selfe and to tame thy flesshe with prayer and fastyng, watchyng, deedes of mercy, holy meditations and readyng the Scripture, and with bodely labour and in withdrawyng all maner of pleasures from the flesh, and with exercises contrary to the vices which thou markest thy body most enclined to, and with abstenyng from all that courage the flesh agaynst the spirite: as readyng of wanton bookes, wanton communication, fooluish iestyng and effeminate thoughtes, and talkyng of couetousnes, whiche Paule forbydeth Ephe. v. and magnifieng of worldly promotions: And takest I say vp such a crosse by thyne owne selfe or by the counsell of other that are better learned and exercised then thou. Then must God put his crosse of aduersitie vpon thee. For we must haue euery man his crosse in this world, or be damned with the world.

Crosse.

Cuill lustes and affections are to be purged with the crosse of Christ.

Of this ye see the difference betwene the sinne of them that beleue in ỹ bloud of Christ for the remission of sinne, and consent and submit themselues vnto the lawe: and the sin of them that yelde themselues vnto sinne to serue it. &c. The first sinne vnder grace, and their sinnes are venial, that is to say: forgeueable. The other sinne vnder the lawe & vnder the damnation of the lawe, and sig, t for for a great part of them) agaynst grace & against the spirite of grace, & agaynst the law of God and fayth of Christ, and corrupt the text of the covenaunt with false glosses, and are disobedient to God, and therefore sinne deadly.

Lambes. Swyne. Dogges.

Of this also ye see the difference betwene the lambes of true beleuers, and betwene the vncleane swyne that follow carnall lustes & fleshly libertie, and the churlishe and hypocritishe dogges. which for the blinde zeale of their owne righteousnes, persecute the righteousnes of the fayth in Christes bloud. The effeminate and carcies swyne which cõmune in their fleshlines, & cease not to wallow thẽselues in their olde podell, thinke that they beleue very well in Christes bloud, but they are deceaued (as thou mayst clearely perceaue) because they feare not the damnation of euill workes, nor loue the lawe of good workes, and therefore haue no part in the promise.

Swyne haue no fayth.

Dogges loue not the lawe.

The cruell and doggishe hypocrits which take vpon them to worke, thinke they loue the lawe, which yet they neuer sawe, saue vnder a vayle. But they be deceaued (as thou mayst perceaue) by that they beleue not in Christ for the forgeuenes of sinne. Whereby also (I meane that they beleue not) thou mayst perceaue that they vnderstand not the lawe. For if they vnderstoode the lawe, it would either driue them to Christ or make them dispayre immediatly.

True fayth is coupled with loue to the lawe.

But the true beleuers beholde the lawe in her owne likenes and see the impossibilitie thereof to be fulfilled with naturall power, and therefore flee to Christ for mercy, grace, and power: and then of a very thankfulnes for the mercy receaued, loue the lawe in her owne likenes, and submit thẽselues to learne it and to profit therein, and to do to morow that they can not do to day.

The difference of faythes and how it is to be vnderstoode fayth iustifieth.

Ye see also the difference of all manner of faythes. The fayth of the true beleuers is, that God iustifieth or forgeueth, and Christ deserueth it, and the fayth or trust in Christes bloud receaueth it, and certifieth the cõscience thereof, and saueth and deliuereth her from feare of death and damnation. And this is that we meane when we say, fayth iustifieth: that fayth (I meane in Christ and not in our owne workes) certifieth the conscience that sinne is forgeuẽ vs for Christes bloudes sake.

Fayth of hypocrites.

But the fayth of hypocrites is that God forgeueth and workes deserue it. And that same false fayth in their owne workes receaueth the mercy promised to the merites of their owne workes: and so Christ is vtterly excluded.

And thus ye see that faith is the thing that is affirmed to iustifie, of all partyes. For faith in Christes bloud (which is Gods promise) quieteth the conscience of the true beleuers. And a false fayth or trust in workes (which is their owne sayeng) beguileth the blynde hypocrites for a season, till God for the greatnes of their sinne, when it is full, openeth their eyes, & then they dispayre. But the swyne say: God is so good that he will saue deuilles and all, and damne no man perpetually, whatsoeuer he do.

Fayth all one.

In other conclusion is this, to beleue in Christ for the remission of sinnes, and of a thankfulnes for that mercy to loue the lawe truely: that is to say, to loue God that is father of all and geueth all, and Iesus Christ that is Lord of vs all and bought vs all, with all our hartes, soules, power, and might, and our brethren for our fathers sake (because they be created after his image) and for our Lord and master Christes sake, because they be the price of his bloud: and to long for the like to come, because this like cannot be lodde without sinne. These ingredientes (I say) are the profession and religion of a Christen mã, and the inward baptisme of the hart signified by the outward washing of the bodye. And they be that spirituall character, badge or signe, wherewith God thorough his spirite marketh all his immediatly and assoone as they be ioyned to Christ and made members of his Church by true fayth.

The right baptisme.

The Church of Christ then, is the multitude of all them that beleue in Christ for the remission of sinne, and of a thankfulnes for that mercy, loue the lawe of God purely and without glosses, and of hate they haue to the sinne of this worlde, long for the like to come. This is the church that cannot erre dampnably nor any long tyme, nor all of them: but assoone as any question ariseth, the truth of Gods promise stirreth vp one or other to teach them the truth of euery thing needefull to saluation out of Gods worde, and lighteneth the hartes of the other true members to see the same and to consent thereto.

The church of Christ.

And as all they that haue their hartes washed with this inwarde baptisme of the spirite are of the church and haue the keyes of the scripture, ye and of binding and louesing, and do not erre: Euen so they that sinne of purpose & will not heare when their faultes be tolde them, but seeke libertie and priuileges to sinne vnpunished, and glose out the lawe of God, and maintaine ceremonies, traditions and customes, to destroy the fayth of Christ: the same be members of Sathan, & all their doctrine is poison. Errour & darcknes, ye though they be Popes, Bysshoppes, Abbotes, Curates and Doctoures of diuinitie, and though they can rehearse all the scripture without booke, and though they be seene in Greeke, Ebrew and Latine: ye and though they so preach Christ and the passion of Christ that they make the poore women weepe and howle agayne. For when they come to the point that they should ministre Christes passion vnto the saluation of our soules, there they poyson all together, and glose out the lawe that should make vs feele our saluation in Christ, and driue vs from that poynt from Christ, and teach vs to put our trust in our owne workes for the remission and satisfaction of our sinnes, and in the Iewish pity of hypocrites which sell their merites in steede of Christes bloud & passion.

Whosoeuer derogate any thyng frõ the fayth of Christ are not of the church.

They that haue not the lawe written in their harts, cannot vnderstand the passion of Christ to saluation.

I know (deare reader) to beleue in Christes bloud for the remission of sinne and purchasing of all the good promises that helpe to the like to come: and to loue the law, and to long for the like to come, is the inward Baptisme of the soule, the Baptisme that onely auayleth in the sight of God, the new generation and image of Christ, the onely keye also to binde and lowse synners. The touchstone to trye all doctrines. The lanterne and light that scatereth and expelleth the myst & darknes of all hypocrisie, and a preseruatiue agaynst all errour and heresie: The mother of all good workes. The earnest of euerlastyng lyfe and title whereby we chalenge our inheritaunce.

Thau. And thoughe fayth in Christes bloude make the mariage betwene our soule and Christ, & is properly the Mariage garment, yea and the signe Thau, that defendeth vs from the smityng and power of the euill aungels, and is also the rocke whereon Christes Churche is built, and whereon all that is built, standeth against all weather of wynde and tempestes: yet might the profession of the fayth in Christes bloud, and of the loue to the law, and longyng for the lyfe to come, be called all these thynges, were malyce and froward vnderstandyng away: because that where one of them is, there be all three and where all are not, there is none of them.

Faith hope, and charitie are inseperable.

And because that the one is knowen by the other & is impossible to know any of them truly, and not be deceaued, but in respect and comparison of the other.

Faith hope, and charitie are knowen one by the other. For if thou wilt be sure that thy faith be perfect, then examine thy selfe whether thou loue the law. And in lyke maner, if thou wilt knowe whether thou loue the lawe aright: then examine thy selfe whether thou beleue in Christ onely, for the remission of sinne, and obtayning the promises made in the Scripture. And euen so compare thy hope of the lyfe to come vnto fayth and loue, and to hatyng the sinne of this lyfe: whiche hate, the loue to the law engendereth in thee. And if they accompanie not one another, all three together, then be sure that all is but hypocrisie.

If you say: seyng fayth, loue, and hope be three vertues inseperable. Ergo fayth onely iustifieth not. I answere: though they be inseperable, yet they haue seperable and sundry offices, as it is aboue sayd of the lawe & fayth.

The office of fayth. Fayth onely which is a sure and an vndoubted trust in Christ, and in the father thorow hym, certifieth the conscience that the sinne is forgeuen and the dampnation and impossibilitie of the lawe taken away (as it is aboue rehearsed in the conditions of the couenaunt.) And wyth such perswasions mollesieth the hart and maketh her loue God agayne and his lawe.

And as oft as we sinne, faith onely kepeth that we forsake not our profession, and that loue vtterly quench not, and hope fayle, and onely maketh the peace agayne. For a true beleuer trusteth in Christ onely, and not in his owne workes or ought els, for the remission of sinne.

The office of loue. And the office of loue is to powre out agayne the same goodnes that she hath receaued of God, vppon her neighbour, and to be to hym as she feleth Christ to her selfe. The office of loue onely is to haue compassion and to beare with her neighbour the burthen of his infirmities. And as it is writte. 1. Pet. 4. Operit multitudinem peccatorum, couereth the multitude of sinnes. That is to say: considereth the infirmities and enterpreteth all to the best, and taketh for no sinne at all, a thousand thinges of which the least were inough (if a man loued not to go to law for, & to trouble & vnquiet an whole towne, and sometyme an whole realme or two.

The office of hope. And the office of hope is to comfort in aduersitie and make patient, that we faint not and fall downe vnder the crosse, or cast it off our backes. And thus ye see that these three inseperable in this life haue yet seperable and sundry offices and effectes, as heate & drith beyng inseperable in the fyer, haue yet their seperable operations. For the drith onely expelleth the moystnes of all that is consumed by fyer, and heat onely destroyeth the coldenes. For drith and colde may stand together, and so may heate and moystnes. It is not all one to say the dryth onely, and the dryth that is alone: nor all one to say, fayth onely and fayth that is alone.

Go to then and desire God to print this profession in thyne hart, and to encrease it dayly more and more, that thou mayst be full shapē like vnto the image of Christ in knowledge and loue, and meeke thy selfe & creepe lowe by the groumde, and cleaue fast to the rocke of this profession, and tye to thy shippe this anker of fayth in Christes bloud, wyth the gable of loue, to cast it out against all tempests: and so set vp thy sayle and get thee to the mayne sea of Gods worde. And reade here the wordes of Christ with this exposition folowing, and thou shalt see the lawe, fayth, and workes, restored eche to his right vse and true meaning. And therto the cleare difference betwene the spirituall regiment & the temporall, and shalt haue an entraunce and open way into the rest of all the scripture. wherein, and in all other thinges the spirite of veritie guide thee, and thyne vnderstandyng. Amen.

The anker of our saluation is perfect faith in Christes bloud.

The fift Chapter of Mathew.

1. WHen he saw the people, he went vp into a mountaine and sat him downe, and his Disciples came to hym, and he opened his mouth and taught them saying. Blessed be the poore in spirite, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen.

Christ here in his first Sermon begynneth to restore the law of the ten commaundements vnto her right vnderstandyng, agaynst the Scribes and Pharisees which were hipocrites, false Prophetes, and false preachers, & had corrupt the scripture with the leauen of their glosses. And it is not without a great mysterie that Christ beginneth his preachyng at powertie in spirite, rite, which is neither beggerie nor a-gaynst the possessing of richesse. But a vertue cõtrarie to the vice of couetous-nesse, the inordinate desire and lous of richesse and putryng trust in richesse.

Powertie in spirite.

Riches. Riches is the gift of God geuen mã to mayntaine ẏ degrees of this world, and therefore not euill: yea and some must be poore and some rich, if we shal haue an order in this world. And God our father deuideth richesse and pouer-tie among his childrẽ accordyng to his godly pleasure and wisedome. And as richesse doth not exclude the from the blessing, so doth not pouertie certifie thee: But to put thy trust in the liuyng god maketh ẏ heyre therof. For if thou trust in the liuing God: Thẽ if thou be poore, thou couetest not to be rich, for thou art certified ẏ thy father shall mi-nister vnto thee fode & raymẽt, and be thy defẽder: & if thou haue riches thou knowest that they be but vanitie, and that as thou broughtest them not into the world, so shalt thou not carie them out: and that as they be thyne to day, so may they be an other mans to mo-row, and that the fauour of God onely both gaue and also kepeth thee & them, and not thy wisedome or power: and that they, neither ought els cã helpe at nede, saue the good will of thy heauen-ly father onely. Happy and blessed then are the poore in spirite: that is to say the rich that haue not their confidence nor consolation in the vanitie of their richesse: and the poore that desire not inordinatly to be riche, but haue their trust in the liuyng God, for fode and raymẽt and for all that partayneth ei-ther to the body or the soule: for theirs is the kyngdome of heauen.

Neither riches or pouertie excludeth, or assure vs of Gods blessing.

Who are poore in spi rite is here pithely de-clared.

And contrarywise, vnhappy & accursed and that with the first & depest of all curses, are the rich in spirite: that is to say, the couetous that beyng riche trust in their richesse, or beyng poore long for the consolation of richesse, and comfort not their soules with the pro-mises of their heauenly father, confir-med with ẏ bloud of their Lord Christ. For vnto them it is harder to enter in-to ẏ kingdome of heauen, then for a ca-mel to enter through ẏ eye of an nedle. Mar. 10. No they haue no part in the kyngdome of Christ, & God Ephe. v. Therefore is it euident why Christ so diligẽtly warneth all his to beware of couetousnesse, and why hee admitteth none to be his Disciples except he first forsake all together. For there was ne-uer couetous person true yet euher to God or man.

Riche in spirite.

If a couetous mã be chosẽ to preach Gods word, he is a false prophet im-mediatly. If he be of the lay sorte, so ioyneth he him self vnto the false pro-pheters, to persecute the truth. Cou-etousnesse is not onely aboue all other lustes, those thornes that choke ẏ word of God in them that possesse it: But it is also a deadly enemy to all that in-terprete Gods word truly. All other vices though they laugh thẽ to scorne that talke godly, yet they can suffer thẽ to lyue and to dwell in the countrey. But couetousnes cannot rest as long as there is one that cleaueth to Gods word in all the land.

Couetous-nes is a thyng con-trarie to the wyrde of God and to the mini-sters of the same.

Take hede to thy preacher therfore: and be sure, if he be couetous and gape for promotion, that he is a false pro-phet & leaueneth the Scripture, for all his crying fathers fathers, holy Church, and fifteen hũdred yeares, and for all his other holy pretenses.

By cou-etousnes is a false pro-phet chief-ly knowen.

Blessed are they that mourne, for they shall be comforted. 2.

This mournyng is also in the spi-rite, and no kinne to the sowre lokyng of hipocrites, nor to the impaciẽt wey-wardnesse of those sicklye which euer whyne and complayne that the world is naught, because they cãnot obtayne and enioy their lustes therin. Neither forbiddeth it alwayes to be mery and and to laugh, & make good chere now and then, to forget sorrow, that ouer-much heauynesse swalow not a man cleane vp. For the wise man sayth, sor-row hath cost many their lyues.

Some cry the world is naught, not for their owne, and others iniquitie: but for wayward-nes they cã not enioye their owne lustes.

And Paule. ẏ. Thess. v. an heavy spirite dryeth vp the bones. And Paule com-maundeth, Philip. iij. to reioyse euer. And Roma. xij. he sayth reioyse with them that reioyse, and sorow with thẽ that sorow, and wepe with them that wepe, which seme two contraries.

This mourning is that crosse with-out which was neuer any Disciple of Christ or euer shalbe. For of what so-euer state or degree thou be in this world, if thou professe ẏ Gospell, there foloweth the a crosse (as warmenesse accompanieth the sonne shynyng) vn-der which thy spirite shall grone and mourne secretly, not onely because the world and thyne owne fleshly carie thee eway cleane cõtrary to the purpose of thyne hart. But also to see and behold the wretchednesse & misfortunes of thy brethrẽ: for which) because thou louest them as well as thy selfe) thou shalt Godlye mournyng.

As warme-nes accõ-panieth the sonne so fo-loweth the crosse a true Chris-tian man.

mourne and sorow no lesse thē for thy selfe. Though thou be King or Emperour, yet if thou knowest Christ and God through Christ, and entendest to walke in the light of God, and to minister thyne office truly, thou shalt (to kepe iustice with all) be compelled to do dayly that, which thou art no lesse loth to do, then if thou shouldest cut of arme, hand or any other member of thyne owne body: yea and if thou wilt folow the right way, and neither turne on the right hand nor on the left, thou shalt haue immediatly thine own subiectes, thyne owne seruauntes, thyne owne Lordes, thyne own counsellours and thyne owne Prophetes thereto agaynst thee. Unto whose froward malice and stubburnesse, thou shalt be cōpelled to permitte a thousand thynges agaynst thy conscience, not able to resiste them, at whiche thyne hart shall blede inwardly, and shalt sawse thy swete soppes which the world weneth thou hast, with sorowes inough and still mournyng, studyeng either alone or els with a few frēdes secretly night and day, and sighing to God for helpe, to mitigate the furious frowardnesse of them whō thou art not able to withstand, that all go not after the will of the vngodly. What was Dauid cōpelled to suffer all the dayes of his lyfe, of his own seruauntes the sonnes of Seruia. Beside the mischaliees of his own children: And how was our king Iohn forsaken of his owne Lordes, when he would haue put a good and godly reformatiō in his owne land? How was Henry the secōd compassed in lyke maner of his owu Prelates whom he had promoted of nought, with the secrete conspiracie of some of his own temporal Lordes with thē? I spare to speake of ỹ mournyng of the true preachers, & the poore cōmon people which haue none other helpe, but the secret hand of God, and the word of his promise.

K. Iohn.

Henry the second.

The promise of Goddes word, is ỹ cōfort of ỹ afflicted in this world for Christs sake.

But they shalbe cōforted of all their tribulatiō and their sorow shalbe turned into ioye and that infinite & euerlastyng in the lyse to come. Neither are they without comfort here in this world: for Christ hath promised to sēd them a comfortour to be with them for euer, the spirite of trouth whiche the world knoweth not. Iohn. xiiij. And they reioyse in hope (of the comfort to come) Rom. xij.

And they ouercome through fayth, as it is written Hebr. xi. the Saintes through fayth ouercame kyngdomes & obtained the promises. And. i. Iohn. v. this is the victorie that ouercōmeth the world, euē our faith. But the blind world, neither seeth our comfort nor our trust in God, nor how God thorough faith in his word, helpeth vs & maketh vs ouercome.

Faith is our victory.

How ouercome they (wilt thou say) that be alwayes persecuted and euer slayne? verely in euery battaile some of them that wynne the field, be slayne: yet they leaue the victorie vnto their deare frēdes for whose sakes they toke the fight vppon them, and therfore are conquerours, seyng they obtayne their purpose & maynteine that they fought for. The cursed riche of this worlde whiche haue their ioye and comfort in their riches, haue sence the begynnyng fought agaynst them, to wede thē out of the worlde. But yet in vayne. For though they haue alwayes slayne some, yet those that were slayne, wanne the victory for their brethren with death, & euer increased the nūber of them. And though they semed to dye in the sight of the foolish, yet they are in peace and haue obtayned that euerlastyng kyngdome for which they fought. And beside all this when God plagueth the world for their sinne, these ỹ mourne and sorow are marked with the signe of Thau in their foreheades, and saued from the plague, that they perish not with the wicked, as thou seest Ezech. ix. & as Lot was deliuered frō among the Sodomites.

By perse-cution and death for ỹ truthes sake, we ob teine lyfe & get the victory.

The mourners for righteousnes are saued when God sa-keth vengeance on ỹ vnrighte-wise.

And contrariwise, cursed are they that laugh now, that is to say, which haue their ioy, solace, and comfort in their riches: for they shall sorow and weepe. Luke. vj. And as it was answered the rich man. Luke. xvj. sonne remember how that thou receauedst thy good dayes in thy life tyme, and Lazarus likewise euill, And therefore is he comforted and thou tormented.

Blessed are the meeke, for they shall enherite the earth. 5.

By the earth vnderstand all that we possesse in this world, which all, God will keepe for vs, if we be softe and meeke. And whatsoeuer trouble arise, yet if we will be patient and abide, the end will go on our side: as it is writtē in the 36. Psal. The wicked shall be weded out, but they that abide the Lordes laysure, shall enherite ỹ earth. And agayne: within a while the wicked shall be gone, thou shalt beholde the place where he was, and he shalbe away, away, but the meeke or softe shall enherite the earth. Euen as we say, be still & haue thy will, and of little medling commeth much rest: for a patient man shall weare out all his enemies.

Meekenes possesseth the earth.

It is impossible to dwell in any place where no displeasure should be done thee. If it be done vnwillingly, as whē thy neighbours beastes breake into thy corne by some chaunce against his will, then it is reason that thou be softe and forgeue. If it be done of malice and selfe wil, then with reuenging thou doost but with pottering in the fire, make the flame greater, and geuest an occasiō of more euill to be done thee. If any man rayle on thee and rebuke thee, answere not agayne, and the heat of his malice shal die in it selfe, and goe out immediatly, as fire doth when no more woode is laide theron.

Referre ỹ reuenge of thy cause to the Magistrate whō God appointeth to forbyd such violence.

If the wrong that is done, be greater then thou art able to beare, trust in God and complayne with all meekenesse vnto the officer that is set of God to forbid such violence. And if ỹ Gentlemen that dwell about thee be tyrauntes, be ready to helpe to fet home their woode, to plow their land, to bring in their harueft and so forth, and let thy wife visit my Lady now and then with a couple of fat Hennes, or a fat Capon, and such like, and then thou shalt possesse all the remnaunt in rest, or els one quarell or other may be picked to thee, to make thee quite of all together.

Chuse whether thou wilt with softnesse and suffering haue God on thy side, euer to saue thee, and to geue thee euer inough, and to haue a good conscience and peace on the earth, or wyth furiousnesse and impatiencie to haue God agaynst thee, and to be polled a littel and little of all together, and to haue an euill conscience and neuer rest on earth, and to haue thy dayes shortened thereto. God hath promised if thou be meke and softe and suffer a little persecution, to geue thee not onely the life to come, but also an hundred folde here in this life: that is to say, to geue thee his owne selfe, and to be thy protectour, and minister to thee euer inough, which may of right be called an hūdred folde: and is a treasure passing the treasure of all Princes.

Hundred folde.

The vyluat person may not auenge. but the officer must.

Finally Christ teacheth here how euery mā must liue for him selfe amōg them to whom he is a neighbour, & in priuate matters in which he is but as a neighbour (though he be a king) and in which thou canst not be to soft. But and if thou be an officer, thē thou must be good, kynde, and mercifull, but not a milkesoppe and negligent. And to whom thou art a father, them must thou rule, and make obedient, and that with sharpnesse, if softnesse will not be heard, and so in all other offices.

Blessed are they that honger and thirst for righteousnesse, for they shalbe fulfilled. 4.

Righteousnes in this place is not taken for the principall righteousnes of a Christen man, thorow which the parson is good accepted before God. For these vij. pointes are but doctrine of the frutes and workes of a Christen man, before which the fayth must be there: to make righteous wythout all deserning of workes, and as a tree out of which all such fruites and workes must spryng. wherefore vnderstand here the outward righteousnes before the world, and true and faythfull dealing ech with other, and iust executing of the offices of all maner degrees, and meke obedience of all that are vnder power. So that the meaning is: happy are they which not onely do their duties to all men, but also study and helpe to the vttermost of their power with worde, deede, counsell, and exhorting, that all other deale truely also according to the degree that euery man beareth in the world, and be as desirous to further good order & righteous dealyng, as the hungry & thirsty be desirous to eate and drinke.

Righteousnes.

How this word righteousnes ought here to be vnderstood.

And note that it is not for naught that he saith hunger and thirst. For except thy soule hunger & thirst for this righteousnes of her new nature, as the body doth for meate and drinke of hys olde nature, the deuill & the children of this world (which cannot suffer that a man either deale truely himselfe, or helpe other) will so resist thee, plague thee, and so weary thee, that thou haddest leuer of very mystrust & desperation, that thy state should be better, to forsake all & make thy selfe a Mōke or a Fryer, yea & to runne into a straūge cōtry, & leaue all thy frends, then to abide in the world, and to let it chuse whether it wil sinke or swimme.

Monkes.

Monkes why they runne into Religion.

But to comfort vs, that we faint not, or be weary of well doing, Christ promiseth that all that haue this thyrst and honger, shall haue their lust satisfied, and be trāslated into a kingdome, where none vnrighteousnes is, besides that thou shalt here at length see many come to the right way and helpe with thee, and many thinges that cannot be all together mended, yet somewhat bettered and more tolerable, so that all righteousnesse shall not be quenched.

Luc. vi. And contrariwise cursed be all they that are full, as Luke in the vj. sayth, that is to say, the hypocrites which to anoyde all labour, sorrow, care, combraunce and suffring wyth their brethren, get them to dennes, to liue at rest and to fill their bellies, the wealth of other mē not regarded. No, it were a grief to them that other were better, that they alone may be taken for holy, and that whosoeuer will to heauen, must buy it of them, yea they be so full, that they preferre themselues before poore sinners, and looke as narowly on them as the Pharisey did on the Publicane, thanking God that he alone was good, and the other euyll. Cursed are they yet for all their fulnesse, for they shall hunger wyth euerlasting hunger, where none shall geue them to eate, nor they haue any refreshing of their paynes.

Wonkes be cursed.

5. Blessed be the mercifull, for they shall obtaine mercy.

To be merciful, is to haue compassion and to feele an other mās disease, and to mourne with thē that mourne, and suffer with them that suffer, and to helpe and succour them that are in tribulation and aduersitie, and to cōfort them with good counsell & wholsome instruction and louing wordes. And to be merciful, is louingly to forgeue them that offended thee, assoone as they knowledge their misdoyng & aske thee mercy. To be mercifull, is patiently long to abide the conuersion of sinners with a lusty courage and hope that God will at the last conuert them, and in the meane tyme to pray instantly for them, and euer when he seeth an occasion, to exhort thē, warne them, monishe thē, and rebuke them. And to be mercifull, is to interpret all to the best, and to looke thorow the fingers at many thynges, and not to make a greuous sinne of euery small trifle, and to suffer and forbeare in his owne cause the malice of them that wil not repent nor be a knowen of their wickednesse, as long as he can suffer it, and as long as it ought to be suffred, and when he can no lenger, then to complayne to them that haue auctoritie to forbidde wrong and to punishe such euill doers.

To be merciful, what it is: & how manye wayes mercy may be shewed.

But the hypocrites cleane contrary condemne all mē for grenous sinners, saue them onely that buy their holynesse of them. And because they wyll suffer wyth no man, they get them to silence. And because they will helpe no man, all that they haue (say they) pertayneth to the Couent, and is none of theirs. And if they be offended, they wyll be auenged immediatly. And to clooke, that they should not seeme to aduēge thēselues, the matter (say they) pertayneth to God and holy Church, or to some Saint, or to one or other holy thyng: as if thou smite one of them on the one cheke, he will turne to thee the other yer he will auenge himself. But the iniury of the holy oyle wherwith he was annointed, that must be auenged, and that with a spirituall punishymēt, that thou must be accursed as blacke as a Cosyer, and deliuered to Sathan. And if thou come not in and aske absolution, and to offer thy selfe to penaunce and to paying thereto, they wyll not suffer till the Deuil fetch thee. But will deliuer thee to the fyre in the meane tyme. And all for zeale of righteousnes (say they.)

Wonkes. Couent. Oyle. Holy oyle must be auenged.

O hypocrites, the zeale of righteousnes is to hunger and thyrst for righteousnes, as it is aboue described: that is, to care and study and to do the vttermost of thy power, that all thynges went in the right course and due order both thorow all degrees of the temporaltie and also of the spiritualtie, and to ieopardy lyfe and goodes therefon.

Zeale of righteousnes what it is.

All the worlde can beare recorde what payne ye take and howe ye care for the temporall common wealth, that all degrees therein dyd, and had their dutie: & how ye put your lines in aduenture to preach the truth: and to informe Lordes and Princes, and to cry vpon them to feare God & to be learned, and to minister their offices truly vnto their subiectes, and to be mercyful & an example of vertue vnto them. And howe helpe ye that youth were brought vp in learnyng and vertue, & y the poore were prouided for of foode and rayment &c. And how prouide ye that your Prieste be all learned, and preach and do their duties truly euery mā in his Parish: how prouide ye that seeters arise not to pulle the people and leade them out of the way, vnder a colour of long praying and hypocrisie, holynesse, luyng them selues ideane Care. How the spiritualty care for the temporall common wealth.

beyng vtterly vnto the commō wealth improfitable? who smelleth not ẏ swete odoure of chastitie that is among you? what righteousnes is in your sactuaries, and what indifferent equitie is in all your exemptions, priuiledges and liberties? By your workes we iudge you and your zeale to righteousnes, & not by your sophisticall suttle reasons, with which ye would claw our eares, bleare our eyes, & beguile our wittes, to take your tyrannous couetous crudelitie for the zeale of righteousnes.

Finally he that will not be mercyfull, to be blessed of God & to obtayne mercy of him, both heare and in the life to come, let him be accursed with the vnmercyful, and to him be iudgement without mercy, according to ẏ wordes of S. James in the seconde chapter of his Epistle.

If thou art mercifull, so shalt thou obteine mercy in ẏ life to come.

6. Blessed be the pure in hart, for they shall see God.

That which entreth into a man defileth not a mā. But ẏ thyngs that defile a man, procede first out of his hart, as thou mayst see Math. xv. Thence come out euill thoughtes (saith Christ) as murther, aduulterie, fornicatiō, theft, false witnessynges and blasphemyes. These are the thyngs that make a man foule. A man then is not foule in the sight of God, till his hart be foule. And the filthinesse of the hart are thoughtes that study to breake Gods cōmaundementes. wherfore the pureneſſe of the hart is the consenting & studious purpose to keepe the law of God, and to meane truly in al thy words & workes, and to do them with a true intent.

The filthinesse of the hart, what.

The pureness of the hart, what.

If solloweth then that thou mayst be pure harted and therewith do all that God hath commaunded or not forbidden. Thou mayst be pure harted and haue a wife and get childrē, be a iudge and condemne to death them that haue deserued it, hang or behead euil doers, after they be by a iust processe condēpned. Thou mayst be pure harted, & do all the drudge in the world. Lot was pure harted amōg the Sodomites. Nicodemus beyng in the councell among them that conspired the death of Christ was pure harted & consented not with them to the death of that innocent.

If the law be written in thyne hart it will drive thee to Christ, which is the end of the law to iustifie all that beleue Rom. x. And Christ will shew thee his father. For no man seeth the father but the sonne, and he to whom the sonne will shew him Luke. x. If thou beleue in Christ, that he is thy Sauiour: that faith wil leade thee in immediatly, and shew thee God with a louely & amiable countenaunce, and make thee feele, and see how that he is thy father, al together mercyfull to thee, & at one with thee, and thou his sonne and highly in his fauour and grace, & sure that thou pleasest him, when thou doest an hundred thinges whiche some holy people would suppose them selues defiled, if they should but thinke on thē. And to see God is the blessing of a pure hart.

The ende of the lawe is, to iustifie all that beleue.

Impure and vncleane harted then are all they that study to breake Gods commaundementes. Impure harted are all that beleue not in Christ to be iustified by him. Impure harted are all hypocrites ẏ do their worke for a false purpose: either for prayse, profite, or to be iustified thereby, which paynted sepulchres (as Christ calleth them) can neuer see God, or bee sure that they be in the state of grace, and that their workes be accepted because they haue not Gods word with them, but cleane agaynst them.

Impure harted, who are.

Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shalbe called the children of God. 7.

To inherite this blessing, it is not onely required that thou haue peace in thy selfe, and that thou take all to the best, and be not offended lightly and for euery small trifle, and alway ready to forgeue, nor sowe no discorde, nor adnenge thyne owne wrong: But also that thou be feruent & diligent to make peace and to go betweene, where thou knowest or hearest malice and enuie to be, or seest bate or strife to arise between person and person, and that thou leane nothing vnsought, to set them at one.

Peacemaking, what.

And though Christ here speake not of the temporall sword, but teacheth how euery man shall liue for him selfe toward his neighbour: yet Princes (if they wilbe Gods children) must not onely giue no cause of warre, nor begyn any, but also (though he haue a iust cause) suffer him selfe to be entreated, if he that gaue the cause repent, and must also seke al wayes of peace before he fight. Howbeit, when all is sought, and nothing will helpe, then he ought and is bound to defend his land & subiectes, & in so doyng he is a peacemaker, as well as whē he causeth theeues & murtherers to be punished for their euill doyng and breakyng of the common peace of his land and subiectes.

Princes what they ought to do yer they make warre.

Whē thou maist assure thy selfe to be ỹ sonne and heyre of God.

If thou haue peace in thy selfe and louest the peace of thy brethren after this maner, so is God through Christ at peace with thee, and thou his beloued sonne and heyre also.

Moreouer if the wrong done thee, be greater, then thou mayst beare: as whē thou art a person, not for thy selfe onely. But in respect of other, in what soeuer worldly degree it be, and hast an office committed thee: then (when thou hast warned with all good maner him that did it, and none amendement wilbe had) kepe peace in thyne hart and loue him still, and complaine to them that are set to reforme such things, and so art thou yet a peacemaker and still the sonne of God. But if thou aduenge thy selfe or desirest more then that such wronges be forbidden, thou sinnest against god, in taking the authoritie of God vpon thee without his commaundemēt. God is father ouer all, and is (of right) iudge ouer all his children, and to him onely partayneth all aduēging. Who therfore without his commaundemēt aduengeth either with hart or hand, the same doth cast hym selfe into the handes of the sword, & loseth the right of his cause.

Reuengeaūce pertayneth to God onely.

And on the other side, cursed be the peacebreakers, picquarels, whisperers, backbyters, sowers of discorde, dispraysers of thē that be good to bring thē out of fauour, interpreters to euill that is done for a good purpose, finders of faultes where none is, stirrers vp of Princes to battaile and warre: & aboue all cursed be they that falsly belye the true preachers of Gods word, to bring them into hate, and to shed their blood wrongfully for hate of the truth. For all such are children of the deuill.

8. Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnes sake, for theirs is the kyngdome of heauen.

In ỹ sayth of Christ & law of God, all our righteousnes is contayned.

If the faith of Christ & law of God, in which two all righteousnes is contained, be writtē in thine hart: that is, if thou beleue in Christ to be iustified frō sinne or for remission of sinne, & cōsentest in thyne hart to the law that it is good, holy, and iust and thy dutie to do it and submittest thy selfe so to do, & therupon goest forth and testifiest that sayth and law of righteousnes openly vnto the world in word, & dede. Then will Sathan stirre vp his members against thee, and thou shalt be persecuted on euery side. But be of good comfort and sayntē not. Call to mynde the saying of Paule. ij. Timo. iij. how all that will liue godly in Christ Iesu, shal suffer persecution. Remember how all the Prophetes that went before thee, were so dealt with Luke. vi. Remēber the examples of the Apostles, and of Christ him selfe, and that the Disciple is no better then his Maister, and that Christ admitteth no disciple which not onely leaueth not all, but also taketh his crosse to. We be not called to a soft liuing and to peace in this world. But vnto peace of cōscience in God our father through Jesus Christ, & to warre in this world.

Peace. The peace of Christ is a peace of conscience.

Moreouer comfort thy selfe with the hope of the blessing of the inheritaunce of heauen, there to be glorified with Christ, if ỹ here suffer with hym. For if we be like Christ here in his passiōs, and beare his image in soule and body, & fight manfully, that Sathan blot it not out, & suffer with Christ for bearyng recorde to righteousnes: thē shall we be like him in glory. S. Johū. iij. of hys Epistle: yet appeareth not what we shalbe. But we know, that whē he appeareth, we shalbe like hym. And Paule Phil. iij. our conuersation is in heauen, whence we looke for a Sauiour, the Lord Jesus Christ which shall chaunge our vile bodyes and make thē like his glorious body.

To suffer with Christ in ỹ his worlde, is to be glorified with him in the worlde to come.

It is an happy thing to suffer for righteousnes sake, but not for vnrighteousnes. For what prayse is it (sayth Peter in the second of his first epistle) though ye suffer, when ye be buffeted for your offences. wherfore in ỹ fourth of the same he sayth, see that none of you suffer as a murtherer or a theefe, or an euill doer, or a busy body in other mens matters. Such suffering glorifieth not God, nor thou art therby heire of heauen. Beware therfore that thou deserue not that thou sufferest. But if thou do: then beware much more of them that would beare thee in hand, how that such suffering should be satisfaction of thy sinnes and a deserning of heauen. No, suffering for righteousnes (though heauen be promised therto) yet doth it not deserue heauen, nor yet make satisfactiō for the forgiuenes: Christ doth both twaine. But and if thou repent and beleue in Christ for the remission of sinne, and then cōfesse, not onely before God, but also open before all that see thee suffer, how that thou hast deserued that thou sufferest, for breaking the good and rightuous law of thy father, and then takest thy punish-

Nay. No mans payne can be a satisfaction to God for Christes sake.

punishmēt patiently, as an holesome medicine to heale thy flesh that it sinne no more, and to feare thy brethren that they fall not into like offence, as Moses teacheth euery where: then as thy pacięce in suffering is pleasaunt in the sight of thy brethrē which behold thee, pitie thee, and suffer with thee in their harts, euen so is it in the sight of God, and it is to thee a sure token that thou hast true fayth and true repentaunce.

And as they be blessed which suffer for righteousnes: euen so are they accursed which runne away and let it be troden vnder the feete, and wyll not suffer for the fayth of their Lord and lawe of their father, nor stande by their neighbours in their iust causes.

9. Blessed are ye, when they reuile you, and persecute you, and say all maner of euil sayinges against you for my sake, and yet lye. Reioyce, and be glad, for your rewarde is great in heauē. Euē so verely they persecuted the Prophets that were before you.

Here seest thou the vttermost what a Christen man must looke for. It is not inough to suffer for righteousnes: But that no bitternesse or poyson be left out of thy cuppe, thou shalt be reuiled and rayled vpon: and euen whē thou art condempned to death then be excommunicat and deliuered to Sathan, depriued of the felowship of holy Church, the company of ỹ Angels, and of thy part in Christes bloud, and shalt be cursed downe to hell, defied, detested, and execrat with all the blasphemous raylinges that the poysonfull hart of hypocrites can thinke or imagine, and shalt see before thy face when thou goest to thy death, that all the worlde is perswaded and brought in beliefe that thou hast sayd and done that thou neuer thoughtest, and that thou dyest for that thou art as giltlesse of, as the childe that is vnborne.

What the most cruell persecution is.

Well, though iniquitie so highly preuayle, and the truth, for which thou dyest, be so low kept vnder and be not once knowen before the worlde, in so much that it seemeth rather to be hindered by thy death, then furthered (which is of all griefes the greatest) yet let not thyne hart fayle thee, neither dispaire, as though God had forsaken thee, or loued thee not. But comfort thy selfe with olde ensamples, how God hath suffred all his olde frendes to be so entreated, and also his onely & deare sonne Jesus. whose ensample aboue all other set before thine eyes, because thou art sure he was beloued aboue all other, that thou doubt not, but thou art beloued also, and so much the more beloued, the more thou art like to the image of his ensample in suffering.

Set the ensample of Christ before thee.

Did not the hipocrites watch hym in all his sermons, to trappe hym in hys owne wordes? was he not subtelly apposed, whether it were lawfull to pay tribute to Cesar? were not all hys wordes wrong reported? were not his miracles ascribed to Belsebub? sayd they not, he was a Samaritane & had a deuill in hym? was he not called a breaker of the Saboth, a wyne drinker, a frende of Publicans and sinners? did he ought wherewyth no fault was found, and that was not interpreted to be done for an euill purpose? was not the pretense of his death the destroying of the temple, to bryng him into the hate of all men? was he not thereto accused of treason, that he forbad to pay tribute to Cesar: and that he moued the people to insurrection? Rayled they not on hym in the bitterest of all hys passion, as he hanged on the crosse, saying: saue thy selfe thou that sauest other: come downe from the crosse and we will beleue in thee: fie wretch that destroyest ỹ temple of God.

Yet he was beloued of God, and so art thou. His cause came to lyght also, and so shall thyne at the last: yea and thy reward is great in heauē with him, for thy deepe suffering.

Cursed.

Most accursed, who.

And on the other side, as they be cursed which leaue righteousnesse destitute and will not suffer therewyth: so are they most accursed which know the truth, and yet not onely flee therefrom because they will not suffer: But also for lucre, become the most cruell enemies thereof, and most subtill persecutors, & most falsly lye theron also.

Workes iustifie not.

Finally though God when he promiseth to blesse our workes, do bynde vs to worke if we will obtayne the blessing or promise: yet must we beware of this pharesaicall pestilence, to thinke that our works did deserue the promises. For whatsoeuer God commaundeth vs to do, that is our dutie to do, though there were no such promise made to vs at all. The promyse therefore commeth not of the deserning of the worker (as though God had had neede of ought that we could doo) but of the pure mercy of God, to make vs the more wylling to do that is our dutie. &c. For if when we had done all that God commaundeth vs to do, he then gaue vs vp into the handes of tyrauntes. and kylled vs, sent vs to purgatory (which mē so greatly feare) or to hell, and all the Aungels of heauen with vs, he did vs no wrong nor were vnrighteous for ought that we or they coulde chalenge of deseruing, howsoeuer that God vseth his creatures, he euer abydeth righteous: till thou cāst proue that after he hath bound him selfe wyth his owne woorde of mercy, he then breake promyse wyth them that keepe couenaunt with him. So now, if nought were promised, nought coulde we chalenge, whatsoeuer we did. And therefore the promise commeth of the goodnes of the promiser onely, and not of the deseruing of those workes, of which God hath no neede, and which were no lesse our duty to do, though there were no such promise.

Not the worker, but ye pure mercy of God is cause of the promise made vnto.

Ye be the salt of the earth. But if the salt be waxen vnsauery, what can be salted therwith? It is henceforth nothyng worth. But to be cast out, and to be troden vnder foote of men.

The office of a true preacher.

The office of an Apostle & the preacher is to salt, not onely the corrupt maners & conuersation of earthly people, but also the roten hart within and all that springeth out therof: their natural reason, their will, their vnderstādyng and wisedome: yea & their fayth and beleue and all that they haue imagined without Gods worde, concernyng righteousnes iustifieng, satisfaction and seruyng of God. And the nature of salt is to byte, frete, and make smarte. And the sicke pacientes of the world are maruelous impaciēt: so that though with great payne they cā suffer their grosse sinnes to be rebuked vnder a fashion, as in a parable a farre of, yet to haue theyr righteousnes theyr holynesse and seruing of God and his Saintes, disalowed, improued & condēned for damnable and deuilish, that may they not abyde. In so much that ye must leaue thy salting or els be prepared to suffer agayne: euen to be called a rayler, seditious, a maker of discorde, and a troubler of the cōmō peace, yea a schismatike and an hereticke also, and to be lyed vpō, that thou hast done and sayd that thou neuer thoughtest, & thē to be called coram nobis, and to syng a new long & forswearē salting, or els to be sent after thy felowes that are gone before, and the way thy master went.

It is a ieopardous thyng to salt hy pocrisie.

Salt.

Who is mete to salt.

True preachyng is a salting that stirreth vp persecution, and an office that no man is mete for, saue he that is seasoned hymselfe before wyth ponertie in spirite, softnesse, meekenesse, patience, mercifulnesse, purenes of hart, and hunger of righteousnes, and lookyng for persecution also: and hath all hys hope, comfort and solace in the blessing onely, & in no worldly thing.

A true preacher of gods word must die no persecutie for feare of persecution.

Nay will some say, a man myght preach long inough without persecution, yea & get fauour to, if he would not medle with the Pope, Bysshops, Prelats, and holy ghostly people that lyue in contemplation and solitarines, nor wyth great men of the worlde. I aunswere, true preaching is saltyng, and all that is corrupt must be salted. And those personnes are of all other most corrupt: and therfore may not be left vntouched.

The Popes pardons must be rebuked, the abuse of the Masse, of the Sacramentes, and of all the ceremonyes must be rebuked and salted. And selling of merites and of prayers must be salted. The abuse of fastyng, and of pilgrimage must be salted. All idolatry & false faith must be rebuked. And those Fryers that teach men to beleue in S. Fraunces coate, how that they shall neuer come in hell or purgatory, if they be buryed therein, may not be passed ouer with silence.

Monkes why they runne to cloysture.

The payne & griefe of salting made Monkes flee to their cloysture. Nay (say they) we went thether of pure deuotion to pray for the people. Yea but for all that the more ye encrease, and ye more ye multiply your prayers, the worse the world is. That is not our fault (say they) but theirs, that they dispose not themselues but continue in sinne, and so are vnapt to receaue the influence of our prayers. O hipocrits, if ye weee true salt and had good harts and loued your neighbours (if dead men be neighbours to them that are aline) and woulde come out of your dennes and take payne to salt and season them, ye should make a great many of them so apt, that your prayers might take effect. But now seyng as ye say, they be so vnsauery that your prayers be to thē vnprofitable, though their

their goods be to you profitable, and yet ye haue no compassiō to come out and salt thē, it is manifest that ye loue not them, but theirs, and that ye pray not for them, but vnder the colour of praying mocke them and robbe them.

Why salte is vnderstood the true vnderstanding of the lawe, as of fayth, of workes. &c.

Finally salt which is the true vnderstandyng of the law, of faith, and of the intent of all workes, hath in you lost her vertue, neither be there any so vnsauery in the world as ye are, nor any that so sore kicke agaynst true saltyng as ye: and therfore are ye to be cast out and troden vnder foote and despised of all men, by the righteous iudgement of God.

Spiritualte: why they be despised.

If salt haue lost his saltnesse, it is good for nothing but to be troden vnder foote of men. That is, if the preacher whiche for his doctrine is called salt, haue lost ẏ nature of salt: that is to say, his sharpnesse in rebukyng all vnrighteousnes, all naturall reason, naturall witte and vnderstandyng, & all trust and confidence in what soeuer it be, saue in the blond of Christ, he is cōdemned of God, and disalowed of all them that cleaue to the truth. In what case stād they then that haue benefices & preach not? verely though they stand at the altar, yet are they excommunicat and cast out of the liuing Church of almighty God.

Ceremonies must be salted.

And what if the doctrine be not true salt? verely then is it to be troden vnder foote: As must all werish and vnsauery ceremonies whiche haue loste their significatiōs, and not onely teach not, and are become vnprofitable & do no more seruice to man: But also haue obtained authoritie as God in the hart of man, that mā serueth them and putteth in them the trust & confidence that he should put in God hys maker thorough Jesus Christ his redemer. Are the institutions of man better then Gods? yea are Gods ordinaūces better now thē in the old tyme? The Prophets trode vnder foote and defied the tēple of God and the sacrifices of God and all ceremonies that God had ordained, with fastinges and prayinges, and all that the people peruerted and committed idolatrie with. We haue as straite a commaundement to salt and rebuke all vngodlinesse as had ẏ Prophetes. Will they then haue their ceremonies honourably spokē of? then let them restore them to the right vse, and put the salt of the true meanyng & significations of them to thē agayne. But as they be now vsed, none that loueth Christ, cā speake honourably of them. What true Christen man can geue honour to that that taketh all honour frō Christ? who can geue honour to that that slayeth the soule of his brother & robbeth his hart of that trust and cōfidēce which he should geue to his Lord that hath bought him with his blond?

Ye are the light of the world. A Citie that is set on an hil, cānot be hid, neither do men light a candle. And put it vnder a bushell, but on a cādlesticke, and so geueth it light to all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before mē, that they may see your good woorkes, and prayse your father that is in heauen.

Christ goeth forth and describeth ẏ office of an Apostle and true preacher by an other likenesse, callyng them as before the salt of the earth. Euē so here the light of the world signifiyng therby that all ẏ doctrine, all the wisdome and hie knowledge of the world, whether it were Philosophy of naturall conclusions, of maners and vertue, or of lawes of righteousnes, whether it were of the holy scripture and of God hymselfe, was yet but a darcknes, vntill the doctrine of hys Apostles came: that is to say, vntill the knowledge of Christ came, how that he is the sacrifice for our sinnes, our satisfaction, our peace, attonement and redemption, our life therto and resurrection. Whatsoeuer holinesse, wisdome, vertue, perfectnesse or righteousnes is in ẏ world among men, howsoeuer perfect & holy they appeare, yet is all dampnable darcknesse, except the right knowledge of Christes blond be there first, to iustifie the hart before all other holinesse.

Darcknes, all knowledge is darckne, till the knowledge of Christes blond sheading be in the hart.

An other cōclusion. As a citie buit on a hill can not be hid, no more can the light of Christes Gospell. Let the world rage as much as it will, yet it wil shine on their sore eyes whether they be content or no.

An other conclusion: as men light not a candle to wheline it vnder a bussheil, but to put it on a candlesticke to light all that are in the house: euen so the light of Christes Gospell may not be hid nor made seuerall thyng, as though it perrayned to some certayne holy persons onely. Nay it is the light of the whole world, and perraineth to all men, and therfore may not be made seuerall. It is a madnesse that diuerse men say, the lay people may not know it: except they can proue that the laye people be not of the world. Moreouer it will not be hid, but as the lightning that breaketh out of the cloudes, shyneth ouer all, euen so doth the Gospel of Christ. For where it is truely receaued, there it purifieth the hart, and maketh the person to consent to the lawes of God, and to beginne a new and a godly lyuing, fashioned after Gods lawes, and without all dissimulation. And then it wil kendle so great loue in hym towarde his neighbour, that he shall not onely haue compassiō on hym in hys bodely aduersitie, but much more pitie him ouer the blyndenes of his soule, and to minister to him Christes Gospel. wherfore if they say, it is here or there, in Saint Fraunces coate, or Dominickes and such like, & that if thou wilt put on that coat, thou shalt finde it there it is false. For if it were there, thou shouldest see it shyne abroad though thou creptest not into a sell or a monkes coule, as thou seest ỹ lightning without crepyng into the cloudes, yea their light would so shine that men should not onely see ỹ lyght of the Gospell, but also their good workes, which would as fast come out, as they now runne in. In so much that ỹ shouldest see thē make thēselues pore, to helpe other as they now make other poore to make thēselues rich.

Laye. The laye ought to haue the Gospell.

Gospell. The propertie of ỹ Gospell.

Gospell. The true Gospell is not hid in dennes.

If ỹ spiritualty were a light as they ought to be, they would make them selues pore to make other riche: but they make other poore and themselues riche.

This lyght and salt pertayned not then to the Apostles, and now to our Byshops and spiritualtie onely. No it pertayneth to the temporall men also. For all kynges and all rulers are bound to be salt and light, not onely in example of liuing, but also in teaching of doctrine vnto their subiects, as wel as they be bounde to punishe euill doers. Doth not the scripture testifie that kyng Dauid was chosen to be a shepeheard and to feede his people wyth Gods worde. It is an euill scholemaster that cannot but beate onely. But it is a good scholemaster that so teacheth that few neede to be beatē. This salt and light therefore partayne to the temporaltie also, and that to euery mēber of Christes Church: so that euery man ought to be salt & light to other.

Kinges ought to be learned.

Euery man then may be a common preacher thou wilt say, and preach euery where by his owne auctoritie. Nay verely: No man may yet be a commō preacher saue he that is called and chosen thereto by the commō ordinaunce of the congregation, as long as the preacher teacheth the true worde of God. But euery priuate man ought to be in vertuous lyuing, both light and salt to hys neighbour: in so much that the poorest ought to strine to ouerrun the Byshop, and to preach to hym in ensample of liuing. Moreouer euery man ought to preach in worde & deede vnto his housholde, and to them that are vnder his gouernaunce. &c. And though no mā may preach openly saue he that hath the office committed vnto hym, yet ought euery mā to endeuour himselfe, to be as well learned as the preacher, as nie as it is possible. And euery man may priuatly enforme hys neighbour, yea and the preacher and Byshop to, if nede be. For if the preacher preach wrong, then may any man whatsoeuer he be rebuke him, first priuately, and then (if that helpe not) to complayne further. And when all is proued, according to the order of charitie, and yet none amendment had: thē ought euery man that cā to resist him, and to stand by Christes doctrine, & to ieoparde lyfe & all for it. Looke on the olde ensamples & they shal teach thee.

The order how euery man may be a preacher, and how not.

Euery man must do fede Christes doctrine in his owne person.

The Gospel hath an other fredome with her then the temporall regiment. Though euery mans body and goods be vnder ỹ kyng, do he right or wrōg, yet is the auctoritie of Gods woorde free and aboue the kyng: so that the worst in the realme may tell ỹ kyng, if he do hym wrong, that he doth nought and otherwise thē God hath cōmaunded hym, and so warne hym to auoide the wrath of God which is the pacient auenger of all vnrighteousnes. May I then and ought also, to resist father and mother and all temporall power wyth Gods worde, when they wrōgfully do or commaunde that hurteth or killeth the body: and haue I no power to resiste the Byshop or preacher that wyth false doctrine slayeth the soules, for which my maister and Lord Christ hath shed his bloud: Be we otherwise vnder our Byshops then Christ and hys Apostles, and all the other Prophetes were vnder the Byshops of the olde law? May verely: and therefore may we and also ought to do as they dyd, and to aunswere as the Apostles dyd. Act. v. Oportet magis obedire deo quàm hominibus. We must rather obey God then men. In the Gospell euery man is Christes Disciple and a person for himselfe to defend Christes doctrine in his owne person. The fayth of the Byshop will not helpe me, nor the by-

Spiritual and temporal regimēt do differ.

None ought to preach openly, but such as are admitted by the ordinaunce of the congregation.

shops

shoppes keeping the lawe is sufficient for me. But I must beleue in Christ for the remission of all sinne, for myne owne selfe and in myne owne person. No more is the Bishops or preachers defending Gods woorde inough for me. But I must defende it in mine owne person, and ieopard lyfe and all thereon when I see neede & occasion.

I am bound to get worldly substaūce for my selfe & for myne household with my iust labour and somewhat more for thē that cannot, to saue my neighbours body. And am I not more bound to labour for Gods word to haue therof in store, to saue my neighbours soule? And when is it so much tyme to resiste with Gods word and to helpe, as whē they which are beleued to minister the true word, do slea the soules with false doctrine, for couetousnes sake? He that is not ready to giue hys lyue for the maintenaunce of Christes doctrine agaynst hypocrites, with what soeuer name or title they be disguised, ỳ same is not worthy of Christe nor can bee Christes Disciple, by the very wordes and testimony of Christ. Neuertheles we must vse wisedome, pacięce, meknes and a discrete processe after the due order of charitie in our defendyng the word of God, least while we go about to amende our Prelates we make thē worse. But when we haue proued all that charitie bindeth vs & yet in vaine: then we must come forth opēly and rebuke their wickednes in the face of the world and ieoparde life & all theron.

Whose refuseth to dye for Christes sake, cā not be the disciple of Christ.

Ye shall not thinke that I am come to destroy the law or the prophetes, no, I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them. For truly I say vnto you, till heauē and earth perish, there shal not one iote or one title of the law scape, till all be fulfilled.

A litle before Christ calleth his Disciples the light of the world, & the salt of the earth, & that because of their doctrine, wherewith they should lighten the blynd vnderstandyng of man, and with true knowledge driue out ỳ false opinions and sophisticall persuasions of natural reason, & deliuer the Scripture out of ỳ captiuitie of false gloses: which the hypocritishe Phariseis had patched therto: and so out of the light of trueknowledge, to styre vp a new liuyng, and to salt & season the corrupt maners of the old blind conuersation. For where false doctrine, corrupt opinions, and sophistical gloses raigne in the witte and vnderstandyng: there is the liuing deuilish in the sight of God, how soeuer it appeare in the sight of the blind world. And on the other side, where the doctrine is true and perfect, there foloweth godly liuing of necessitie. For out of the inwarde belefe of the hart, floweth the outward conuersation of the members. He that beleueth that hee ought to loue hys enemy, shall neuer cease fightyng agaynst his owne selfe, till he haue weeded all rācour and malice out of his hart. But he that beleueth it not, shall put a visor of hypocrisie on his face, till he get opportunitie to auenge him selfe.

False doctrine cannoseth, euill workes.

True doctrine is cause of good workes.

And here he beginneth to teach them to be that light, and that salt of whiche he spake, and sayth. Though the Scribes and Phariseis beare the people in hand, that all I do, is of the deuil, and accuse me of breakyng the law and the Prophetes (as they afterward rayled on the Apostles, that they drawe ỳ people from good workes, through preachyng the iustifying and righteousnesse of fayth) yet see that ye my Disciples, be not of that belefe. For heauen and earth shall sooner perish, then one iote or title of the law should be put out. I come not to destroy the law, but to repayre it onely, & to make it go vpright where it halteth: and euē to make croked strayght, & rough smoth, as John the Baptist doth in the wildernes, and to teach the true vnderstandyng of the law. Without me the law cā not be fulfilled, nor euer could. For though the law were geuen by Moses, yet grace and veritie: that is to say, the true vnderstandyng and power to loue it and of loue to fulfill it, commeth and euer came through fayth in me.

Grace and truth through Iesus Christ.

I do but onely wype away the filthie and roten Gloses wherewith the Scribes and the Phariseis haue smered the law, and the Prophetes, & rebuke their dāmable liuyng which they haue fashioned, not after the law of God, but after their owne sophisticall gloses fayned to mocke out the law of God, and to beguile the whole world, and to leade them in blyndnesse. And that the Scribes and Phariseis falsly belye me how that I go about to destroy the law, and to set the people at a fleshly libertie, and to make them first disobedient, and to despise their spirituall Prelates, and then to rise agaynst the tēporall rulers and to make all cō-mon, & to giue licēce to sinne vnpunished: cōmeth only of pure malice, hate, enuie, and furious impacience, that their visures are plucked frō their faces and their hypocrisie discouered. Howbeit what I teach and what my learnyng is concernyng the law, ye shall surely heare and that in few wordes.

Who soeuer breaketh one of these least commaundements and teach men so, shalbe called the least in the kingdome of heauen. But he that doth them and teacheth thē, the same shalbe great in the kyngdome of heauen.

Whosoeuer studieth to destroy one of the commaundementes folowing, which are yet the least and but childish thynges in respect of the perfect doctrine that shall hereafter be shewed, & of the misteries yet hid in Christ: and teach other men euen so, in woorde or ensample, whether openly or vnder a colour, and thorow false gloses of hypocrisie: that same doctour shall all they of the kyngdome of heauen abhorre and dispise, and cast hym out of their company, as a sething pot doth cast vp her fome and scome and purge her selfe. So fast shal they of the kingdome of heauen cleaue vnto the pure law of God without all mens gloses.

Gloses. They that destroy the law of God with gloses must be cast out.

But whosoeuer shall first fulfill thē himselfe, and then teach other, and set all his studie to the furtheraunce and mayntainyng of them, that doctour shall all they of the kingdome of heauē haue in price, and folow hym and seke hym out, as doth an Egle her pray, & cleaue to hym as burres. For these commaundementes are but the very lawe of Moses (the draffe of the Phareseis gloses clensed out) interpreted accordyng to the pure word of God, and as the open text compelleth to vnderstand them, if ye looke diligently thereon.

The kyngdome of heauen take for the congregation or church of Christ. And to be of the kyngdome of heauen, is to know God for our father, and Christ for our Lord and sauiour from all sinne. And to enter into this kingdome it is impossible except the hart of men be to kepe the commaundements of God purely, as it is written. Iohn. vij. if any man will obay his will, that is to say, the will of the father that sent me (sayth Christ) he shall know of the doctrine: whether it be of God, or whether I speake of myne owne head. For if thyne hart be to do the will of God, whiche is his commaundementes: he will geue thee a pure eye, both to discerne the true doctrine from the false, & the true Doctour frō the howlyng hypocrite. And therfore he sayth.

The Church.

Law.

Except a man loue Gods law: he cannot vnderstand the doctrine of Christ.

For I say vnto you, except your righteousnesse excede the righteousnesse of the Scribes and Phariseis, ye can not enter into the kingdome of heauen.

The righteousnes of Pharisens.

The righteousnes of the Scribes & Phariseis can not enter into the kyngdome of heauen. The kyngdome of heauen is the true knowledge of God & Christ: Ergo the righteousnesse of the Scribes & Phariseis neither knoweth God nor Christ. He that is willyng to obey the will of God, vnderstandeth the doctrine of Christ, as it is proued aboue: the Scribes and the Phariseis vnderstand not the doctrine of Christ: Ergo, they haue no wil nor lust to obey the will of God. To obey the will of God, is to seeke the glory of God (for the glory of a master is the meeke obedience of his seruauntes, the glory of a Prince is the humble obedience of his subiectes, the glory of an husbād is the chast obedience of his wife, the glory of a father is the louyng obedience of his children) the Scribes and the Phariseis haue no lust to obey ỳ wil of God: Ergo, they seeke not the glory of God. Furthermore the Scribes & the Phariseis seke their owne glory, they that seeke their owne glory, preache their owne doctrine, Ergo, the Scribes and the Phariseis preach their owne doctrine. The maior thou hast Math. xxiij the Scribes and Phariseis do all their workes to be sene of men: they loue to sit vppermost at feastes and to haue ỳ chief seates in the Synagoges, and salutations in the open markets, and to be called Rabbi. And ỳ minor foloweth the text aboue rehearsed Iohn vij. he that speaketh of himselfe or of his own head, seketh his owne glory: that is to say, he that preacheth hys owne doctrine is euer knowen by seekyng hys awne glory: so that it is a generall rule to know that a mā preacheth his own doctrine, if he seke his owne glory.

Glorie: He that seketh hys owne glorie, teacheth his owne doctrine & not his maisters.

Some mā will haply say: the Scribes and Phariseis had no other law then Moses & the Prophetes nor any other Scripture: and grounded their sayinges theron. That is truth: how thē preached they their owne doctrines? vere-Glory. he that seketh hys owne glory alt'eth his masters message.

verely it folowth in the sayd seuenth of Iohn. He that seeketh the glory of him that sent him, the same is true and there is no vnrighteousnesse in hym: that is to say, he will do hys masters message truly, and not alter it. Where contrarywise he that seeketh his owne glory, will be false (whē he is sent) and wil alter his masters message, to turne his masters glory vnto his owne selfe. Euen so did the Scribes and Pharisees alter the woorde of God for their own profite & glory. And when Gods word is altered with false glases, it is no more Gods worde. As when God sayth, loue thy neighbour, & thou puttest to thy leuē and sayest: if my neighbour do me no hurt nor lay me any, I am bound to loue him, but not to geue him at his neede my goodes which I haue gottē with my sore labour. Now this is thy law and not Gods. Gods law is pure and single: loue thy neighbour, whether he be good or bad. And by loue god meaneth, to helpe at neede. Now when God byddeth thee to get thy liuyng and somwhat ouer to helpe him that cannot, or at a tyme hath not wherewith to helpe him selfe: if thou & xx. or xl. with thee get you to wildernesse, & not onely helpe not your neighbours, but also robbe a great number of two or three thousand poūd yearely, how loue ye your neighbours? Such men helpe the world with prayer, thou wilt say to me. Thou were better to say, they robbe ỹ world with their hypocrisie, say I to thee: and it is truth in dede, that they so do. For if I sticke vp to the middle in the myre like to perish without present helpe, and thou stand by and wilt not succoure me, but knelest downe and prayest, wil God heare the prayers of such an hypocrite? God biddeth thee so to loue me, that thou put thy selfe in ieopardie to helpe me, and that thyne hart while thy body laboureth, do pray and trust in God, that he will assiste thee, & through thee to saue me. An hypocrite that will put neither body nor goodes in perill for to helpe me at my neede, loueth me not neither hath compassion on me, & therfore hys hart cā not pray, though he wagge his lippes neuer so much. It is written, Iohn. ix. If a man be a worshipper of God and do his wil (which is the true worshyp) him God heareth. Now the will of God is, that we loue one an other to helpe at nede. And such louers he heareth & not suttle hypocrites. As loue maketh thee helpe me at my nede:

Worde. Gods worde altered is not his worde.

To loue is to helpe at neede.

Prayer. The prayer of hypocrites robbeth, & helpeth not.

so when it is past thy power to helpe, it maketh thee pray to God. Euen so where is no loue to make thee take bodely paine vnto me: there is no loue ỹ maketh thee pray for me. But thy prayer is in deede for thy bely which ỹ louest.

Loue prayeth.

What were the scribes and Pharisees? The scribes besides that they were Phariseys (as I suppose) were also officers: as are our Bysshoppes, Chauncellers, Comissaries, Archdeacones and Officialles. And the Phariseys were religious men, which had professed, not as now, one dominicke, the other Fraunces, an other Barnardes rules: But euen to holde the very law of God, with prayer, fastyng, and almesdeedes, and were the flower and perfection of all the Iewes: as Saint Paule reioyseth of himselfe, Phil. iij. saying: I was an Ebrue, and concernyng the law a Pharisey, and concernyng the righteousnes of the lawe, I was faultlesse. They were more honorable then any secte of the Monkes with vs, whether obseruaūt, or Anere, or whatsoeuer other be had in price.

Scribes & Phariseis what they were.

These might much better haue reioyced to haue beene the true Church, and to haue had the spirite of God, & that they coulde not haue erred, then they whom all the world seeth, neither to keepe Gods lawes nor mans, nor yet that deuilles lawe of their owne makyng. For God had made them of ỹ olde testamēt as great promises, that he would be their God, and that hys spirite and all grace shoulde be wyth them, if they kept his lawes, as he hath made to vs. Now seing they kept the vttermost iote of the lawe in the sight of the worlde and were faultlesse: and seyng thereto that God hath promised neither vs nor them ought at all, but vppon the profession of keepyng hys lawes: whether were more lyke to be the right church and to be taught of the spirite of God, that they coulde not erre, those Phariseys or ours? Might not the generall councelles of those, & the thinges there decreed without scripture, seeme to be of as great auctorite as the generall councelles of ours, & the thynges there ordained and decreed both cleane without & also against Gods worde: Might not the ceremonies which those had added to the ceremonies of Moses, seeme to be as holy and as well to please God, as the ceremonies of ours. The thynges which they added to the ceremonies of Moses, were of ỹ same kynde as those

The Phariseyes might better haue proued thēselues the true Church thē our spiritualte may.

The promises are made vpon the profession of the keepyng of the lawe of God. so that the Church that will not keepe Gods lawe hath no promise that they cānot erre.

ceremonies were, and no more to be rebuked then the ceremonies of Moses. As for an ensample, if Moses had washe a table or a dishe, when an vncleane worme had crept thereon, the Pharisays did washe the table wyth a wete cloute before euery refection, least any vncleane thyng had touched them vnwares to all men: as we put vnto our tythes a mortuary for all forgotte tythes. what was then the wickednesse of the Pharisays? verely the lewen of their gloses to the moral lawes, by which they corrupted the cõmaundementes, and made them no more Gods: and their false faith in the ceremonies that the bare worke was a sacrifice and a seruice to God, the significations lost: and the opinion of false righteousnesse in their prayers, fastinges, and almesdedes, that such workes did iustifie a man before God, and not that God forgeueth sinne of his mere mercy, if a man beleue, repent, and promise to do his vttermost to sinne no more.

The wickednes of the Pharisees what it was.

When these thus sate in the hartes of the people, with the opinion of vertue, holinesse and righteousnesse, and their lawe the lawe of God, their workes, workes commaunded by God, and confirmed by all his prophets, as prayer, fasting and almesdede, & they looked vppon as the Church of God that coulde not erre: and finally they themselues eyther euery where, were the chiefe rulers, or so sate in the harts of the rulers, that their worde was beleued to be the worde of God. what other thyng coulde it be, to preach agaynst all such, and to cõdempne their righteousnes for the most dampnable sinne that can be, then to seeme to go about to destroy the lawe and the prophetes? what other thyng can such a preacher seeme to be before the blynde worlde, then an hereticke, scismaticke, seditious, possessed wyth the deuyll, & worthy of shame most vile, and death most cruell? And yet these must be first rebuked, and their false righteousnesse detected, yer thou mayst preach against open sinners.

Preacher. Why the true preacher is accused of treason and heresie.

Hypocrisie. Why hypocrisie must be first rebuked, though it be ieopardie to preach against it.

Or els if thou shouldest conuert an open sinner frõ hys euill lyuing, thou shouldest make hym nyne hundred times worse thẽ before. For he would at once be one of these sort: euen an obseruaunt, or of some like secte, of which among an hũdred thousãd, thou shalt neuer bring one to beleue in Christ. Where among open sinners many beleue at ỹ houre of death, fall flat vpon Christ, & beleue in him onely, without al other righteousnes. It were an hũdred thousand tymes better neuer to pray, thẽ to pray such lippe prayers: & neuer to fast or do almes, then to fast, and to do almes with a mynde therby to be made righteous, and to make satisfaction for the fore sinnes.

Ye haue heard how that it was sayde to them of olde tyme, kyll not, for whosoeuer killeth shalbe in daunger of iudgement. But I say vnto you, whosoeuer is angry with his brother, shalbe in daunger of iudgement. And who soeuer saith vnto his brother Racha, shalbe in daunger of a councell. But who soeuer sayth to hys brother, thou foole, shalbe in daunger of hell fyre.

The lawe is restoyed.

Here Christ beginneth, not to destroy the lawe (as the Pharisays had falsely accused hym) but to restore it agayne to the right vnderstanding, and to purge it frõ the gloses of the Pharisays. He that slayeth shalbe giltie or in daunger of iudgemẽt: that is to say, if a man murther, his deede testifieth agaynst hym: there is no more to do, then to pronounce sentence of death agaynst hym. This text did the Pharisays extend no further thẽ to kill with the hand and outward members. But hate, enuie, malice, churlishnesse, and to withdraw helpe at neede, to beguile and circumuent with wyles and subtil bargayning, was no sinne at all. No, to bryng hym whom thou hatedst to death with craft and falshood, so thou diddest not put thyne hand thereto, was no sinne at all. As when they had brought Christ to death wrongfully, & compelled Pilate with subtiltie to slay hym, they thought themselues pure. In so much that they woulde not goe into the hall for defiling themselues & beyng partakers wyth Pilate in hys bloud. And Act. v. they sayd to the Apostles: ye woulde bring this mans bloud vppon vs, as who would say, we slue hym not. And Saul in the first booke of the Kinges in the xviii. chap. beyng so wroth wyth Dauid, that he would gladly haue had hym slaine, determined yet that he would not defile hymself, but to thrust him into ỹ hãdes of the Philistines, that they might slay him, and he hymselfe abide pure.

The Pharisees vnderstode the outward shewe of deede, and nothyng in the hart.

And as our spiritualtie now after a man mercy once, though he haue spoken against holy church, onely if he wil but periure and beare a fagot. But if he wil not, they do but diet hym a season, to winne him and make hym tell more and deliuer hym to the laye power saying: he hath deserued death by our lawes and ye ought to kyll hym. howbeit we desire it not.

But Christ restoreth the law againe and sayth, to be angry with thy neighbour, is to slea hym & to deserue death. For the lawe goeth as wel on the hart as on the hād. He that hateth his brother is a murtherer. 1. Joh. iij. If then the blynde hand deserue death, how much more those partes which haue ỳ sight of reason? And he ỳ sayth Racha, lewde or whatsoeuer signe of wrath it be, or that prouoketh to wrath, hath not onely deserued that men shoulde immediatly pronoūce sentēce of death vpon him, but also that when death is pronoūced, they shuld gather a coūcell, to decree what horrible death he shuld suffer. And he that calleth hys brother foole, hath sinned downe to hell.

The lawe of God, goeth as wel on the hart as the hand.

Racha.

Shall then a man not be angry at all, nor rebuke or punishe? yes, if thou be a father or a mother, master, or maistresse, husband, Lord, or ruler: yet with loue and mercy, that the angre, rebuke, or punishment exceede not the fault or trespasse. May a man be angry with loue? ye, mothers can be so wyth their children. It is a louyng anger that hateth onely the vice, and studieth to mende the person. But here is forbiddē not onely wrath against father, mother, and all that haue gouernaūce ouer thee, which is to be angry and to grudge agaynst God himselfe, & that the ruler shall not be wrath without a cause agaynst the subiect. But also all priuate wrath against thy neighbour ouer whom thou hast no rule, nor he ouer thee, no though he do thee wrōg. For he that doth wrong lacketh witte and discretion, and cannot amende till he be enformed and taught louingly. Therefore thou must refrayne thy wrath, and tell him his fault louingly, and with kyndenesse winne him to thy father: for he is thy brother as well made and as deare bought as thou, & as well beloued, though he be yet childishe and lacke discretion.

How a mā may be angry without sinning

But some wil say: I wil not hate my neighbour nor yet loue him or do hym good, yes ỳ must loue him: for the first cōmaundement out of which all other flow, is: thou shalt loue the Lorde thy God with all thyne hart with all thy soule and with all thy might. That is, thou must keepe all his commaundemētes with loue. Loue must kepe thee from killing or hurting thy neighbour and from couetyng in thyne hart what soeuer is his. And. 1. John. iij. This commaundement haue we of him, that he which loueth God, loue his brother also. And agayne. 1. John. iij. he that hath the substaunce of this world and seeth his brother haue necessity, & shutteth vp his compassion from him, how is the loue of God in hym: he then that helpeth not at neede loueth not God, but breaketh the first commaundemēt. Let vs loue therefore sayth S. John, not with word and toung, but in dede, and truth. And agayne S. John sayth in the sayd place, he that loueth not his brother abydeth yet still in death. And of loue hath Moyses textes inough. But the Pharisees glosed thē out, saying they were but good counceiles if a man desired to be perfect, but not preceptes. Exod. xxiij. if thou mete thyne enemyes Oxe or Asse goyng astraye, thou shalt in any wise bryng them to him agayne. And if thou see thyne enemyes Asse fall downe vnder hys burthen, thou shalt helpe him vp agayne. And Leuit. xix. thou shalt not hate thy brother in thyne hart, but shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, that thou beare no sinne for his sake. For if thou study not to amēd thy neighbour whē he sinneth, so art thou partaker of his sinnes. And therfore whē God taketh vengeaunce and sendeth what soeuer plage it be, to punish opē sinners, thou must perish with them. For thou dyddest sinne in the sight of God as deepe as they because thou dyddest not loue the law of God to maintayne it withall thyne hart, soule, power, and might. Is not he that seeth his neighbours house in ieopardie to be set on fire and warneth not, nor helpeth in time, to auoide the perill worthy (if his neighbours house be burnt vp) that his be burnt also: seing it was in his power to haue kept al out of ieopardy, if he had wold: as he would no doubt if he had loued his neighbour? Euē so whē God sendeth a generall pestilence or warre to thy Citie, to punish the sinne therof: art ỳ not worthy that thine house shuld be infected or perish, if thou mightest haue kept it from sinnyng, and thou haddest bene willyng thereto? But if thou do thy best to further the law of God & to kepe thy land or neighbours

Loue is ỳ keping of the lawe.

Sinners. He that helpeth not to mende sinners, must suffer with them when they be punished.

In doyng our best to further our neighbour in vertue, (although we preuaile not) we are excused.

frō sinnyng against God, then (though it helpe not) thou shalt beare no synne for their sakes when they be punished. He therfore ẏ loueth the law of God, may be bold in tyme of pestilence and all ieopardy to belene in God. And agayne in the same place, thou shalt not auēge thy self nor beare hate in minde against the children of thy people: But shalt loue thy felow as thy selfe. I am the Lord. As who should say, for my sake shalt thou do it. And Deut. x. The Lord your God, is the God of Gods & Lord of Lordes, a great God, mighte & terrible, which regardeth no mās person or degree, nor taketh giftes: But doth right to the fatherlesse & the widow, and loueth the straunger, to geue him rayment and fode, loue therfore the straunger, for ye were straungers in ẏ lād of Egypt. And Leuit. 19. if a straunger soiourne by thee, in your land, see that ye vexe him not. But let the straūger that dwelleth among you, be as one of your selues, and loue him as thy selfe: For ye were straungers in the land of Egypt. I am the Lord. As who should say, loue him for my sake.

Hate. When a man may hate hys neighbour.

Notwithstandyng when thy neighbour hath shewed thee more vnkyndnesse then God hath loue, then mayst thou hate him, & not before. But must loue him for Gods sake, till he fight agaynst God to destroye the name and glorie of God.

Therfore when thou offerest thy gift at the alter, and there remembrest that thy brother hath ought agaynst thee. Leaue there thy gift before the alter, and goe first & reconcile thy selfe vnto thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agre with thine aduersarie at oncē whyle thou arte in the waye with hym, least thyne aduersarie deliuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thee to the minister, and thou be cast into prison. Verely I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou haue payed the vttermost farthyng.

This text with ẏ similitude is somwhat suttle, and bindeth both him that hath offended to reconcile him selfe as much as in him is and him that is offended to forgeue and be at one. The offeringes were signes, and dyd certifie a man that God was at one with him, and was his frēd and loued hym.

Offeringes or sacrifices what they meant.

For the fat of beastes was offered and wyne therto, as though God had eate and eaten and dronke with them: and the rest they and their housholdes dyd eate before God, as though they had eat and dronke with God, and were commaunded to be merie and to make good cheare, fully certified that God was at one with them and had forgot all old offences, and now loued them, that he would fulfill all his promises of mercy with them.

Now will God receaue no sacrifice: that is to wete, neither forgeue or fulfill any of his promises, except we be first reconciled vnto our brethrē, whether we haue offended or be offended. In the chapter folowyng thou readest if ye forgeue, your father shall forgeue you. And Osia. vi. I lone mercy & not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more then I do burnt offeringes: that is to say, the knowledge of ẏ appointementes made betwene God and vs what he will haue vs to doe first, and then what he will doe for vs agayne. And Esaias. lviij. God refuseth fasting and punishyng of the body that was coupled with cruelty, and sayth that he delired no such fast. But sayth this fast require I, that ye be mercyful and forgeue, and cloth the naked and fede the hungry. &c. Then call (saith he) and the Lord shall answere: crye, and he shall say: see, here I am.

The fast that God requireth.

And that similitude will, that as a mā here, if he will no other wise agree, must suffer the extremitie of the law, if he be brought before a iudge (for the iudge hath no power to forgeue or to remit, but to condēne him in ẏ vttermost of ẏ law) euen so, if we will not forgeue one another here, we shal haue iudgemēt of God, without all mercy.

Fast for thyng.

And that some make Purgatory of the last farthyng, they shew their deepe ignorauncē. For first no similitude holdeth euery worde and syllabe of the similitude. Furthermore when they dispute, till he pay the last farthyng, Ergo, he shall pay. But not in hell, Ergo in Purgatory. A wyse reason: Ioseph knew not Marie till she had borne her first sonne, Ergo she bare the second or he knew her after. I will not forgiue thee till I be dead or while I lyue, Ergo I will doe it after my death, and a thousand like.

Ye haue hard how is was sayd to them of olde tyme, committe not adulterie. But I saye to you, that who-who soeuer looketh on a wife, lustyng after her, hath committed aduoutrie with her all ready in his hart.

How corruptly the Phariseis dyd attribute all evil to the deede onely.

This commaundement, committe none adultery, had the Phariseis blinded and corrupte with their sophistrie and leuen, interpretyng the concupiscēce of the hart, lewde toyes, filthy gestures, vncleane wordes, clipping, kissing and so forth, not to be imputed for sinne. But euen the acte & dede alone, though Moyses say in the text, thou shalt not couet thy neighbours wife. &c. But Christ putteth to, light, & salt, & bringeth the precept to his true vnderstanding and naturall cast agayne, and condemneth the roote of sinne, the concupiscence and consent of the hart. Before the world I am no murtherer til I haue killed with myne hand. But before God I kil, if I hate: ye if I loue not, and of loue keepe me both from doyng hurt, and also be ready and prepared to helpe at nede. Euen so the cōsent of the hart with all other meanes that folow therof, be as well aduoutry before God, as the dede it selfe.

Finally I am an aduouterer before God, if I so loue not my neighbour, that very loue forbyd me to couet hys wife. Loue is the fulfilling of all commaundementes. And without loue it is impossible to absteine from sinnyng agaynst my neighbour in any precept, if occasion be geuen.

Loue is the fulfilyng of the law.

Carnall loue will not suffer a mother to robbe her childe, no it maketh her robbe her selfe, to make it riche. A naturall father shal neuer lust after his sonnes wife: No, he careth more for her chastitie then his sonne doth hym selfe. Euē so would loue to my neighbour, kepe me frō sinning against him.

Aduoutrie.

Aduoutrie is a damnable thyng in the sight of God, & much mischief followeth therof. Dauid to saue his honour was driuen to commit greuous murther also. It is vnright in ỹ sight of God and man that thy child should be at an other mans cost, & be an other mans heyre. Neither canst thou or thy mother haue lightly a quyet conscience to God, or a merie hart as long as it so is. Moreouer what greater shame cāst thou do to thy neighbour, or what greater displeasure: what if it neuer be knowen, nor come any child therof? The preciousest gift that a mā hath, in this world, of God, is the true hart of his wife, to abyde by him in wealth & wo, & to beare all fortunes with him. Of that hast thou robbed him: for after she hath once coupled her selfe to thee, she shal not lightly loue him any more so truly: But haply hate him and procure hys death. Moreouer thou hast vntaught her to feare God, and hast made her to sinne agaynst God. For to God promised she and not to man onely: for the law of Matrimonie is Gods ordinaunce. For it is written Genes. xxix. when Putiphars wyfe would haue had Joseph to lye with her, he answered: how could I do this wickednesse and synne agaynst God: yea verely it is impossible to sinne agaynst man, except thou sinne agaynst God first. Finally read Chronicles & stories, and see what hath folowed of adulterie.

Some doctours haue doubted in that, which Christ hath flatly condemned.

What shall we say, that some Doctours haue disputed and douted whether single fornication should be sinne, when it is condemned both by Christ and Moses to. And Paule testifieth. 1. Cor. 6. that no fornicatour or whore keeper shall possesse the kyngdome of God. It is right that all mē that hope in God, should bryng vp their frute in the feare and knowledge of God, and not to leaue his seede where he careth not what come therof.

Wherefore if thy right eye offende thee, plucke it out, and cast it frō thee: for it is better for thee that one of thy mēbers perish, thē that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And euen so if thy right hand offende thee, cut it of and cast it frō thee. For it is better for thee that one of thy members perishe, then that thy whole bodye should be cast into hell.

This is not meant of the outward mēbers, For then we must cut of nose, eares, hand and fote: ye we must procure to destroy the seing, hearing, smelling, tasting, and fealing, and so euery man kill himselfe. But it is a phrase or speach of the Ebrue tongue, and will that we cut of occasions, daunsing, kissing, riotous eating, and drinking, & the lust of the hart and filthy imaginations that moue a man to concupiscence. Let euery man haue his wyfe, and thinke her the fayrest and the best conditioned, and euery woman her husband so to. For God hath blessed thy wife and made her without sinne to thee, which ought to seeme a beautifull Filthy.

A wife.

How good a thyng.

full fayzenes. And all ẏ ye suffer togeth-er the one with the other, is blessed also, and made the very crosse of Christ and pleasaũt in the sight of God. why should she thẽ be lothsome to thee, because of a little suffering, that ẏ shouldest lust after an other, that should defile thy soule & slea thy conscience, and make thee suffer euerlastingly:

It is sayd, whosoeuer putteth away his wife, let him geue her a testimoniall of the deuorcemẽt. But I say vnto you, who soeuer putteth away his wife (except it be for fornication) maketh her to breake wedlocke, and who soeuer marieth the deuorced, breaketh wedlocke.

Moses Deut. xxiiij. permitted hys Israelites in extreame necessitie, as when they so hated their wiues ẏ they abhorred the company of them, then to put them away, to auoyde a worse inconuenience. whereof ye read also Mat. xix. And he knitte thereto that they might not receaue them agayne after they had bene knowne of any other persons. which licence ẏ Iewes abused and put away their wiues for euery light or fayned cause, and whensoeuer they lusted. But Christ calleth backe agayne and enterpreteth ẏ lawe after the first ordinaunce, and cutteth of all causes of deuorcement, saue fornication of the wiues partie, whẽ she breaketh her matrimony. In which case Moses law pronoũceth her dead, and so do ẏ lawes of many other coũtreyes: which lawes where they be vsed, there is the man free without all question. Now where they be let liue, there the man (if he see signe of repentaunce and amendment) may forgeue for once. If he may not finde in hys hart (as Ioseph as holy as he was, coulde not finde in his hart to take Christes mother to hym, when he spied her with childe) he is free no doubt to take an other, while the lawe interpreteth her deede: for her sinne ought of no right to bynde him.

What shall the woman doe, if she repent and be so tempted in her flesshe that she cannot liue chaste? verely I can shew you nothing out of the scripture. The office of the preacher is, to preach the x. commaundements which are the lawe naturall, and to promise them which submitte themselues to kepe them of loue and feare of God, euerlasting life for their labour, thorow fayth in Christ: and to threate the disobedient with euerlasting payne in hell. And his punishment is, if any man haue offended thorow frailtie, & when he is rebuked, turne and repent, to receaue him vnto grace, and absolue hym: and if any will not amende whẽ he is rebuked, to cast him out among the infidelles. This I say, if the temporall power shut her vp, as a conuict person appointing her a sober liuyng, to make satisfaction to the congregation for her dampnable example, they did not amisse. It is better that one misdoer suffer, then that a common wealth be corrupt.

The office of a preacher.

Where the officers be negligent, & the woman not able to put her selfe to penaunce, if she went where she is not knowen and there marry, God is the God of mercy. If any man in the same place where she trespasseth, pitied her, and maryed her, I coulde suffer it: were it not that the libertie woulde be the next way to prouoke all other that were once weary of their husbandes, to commit adultery, for to be deuorced from them, that they might marry other which they loued better. Let the temporall swoorde take heede to theyr charge therefore: For this is truth, all the temporall blessings set in the lawe of Moses for keeping their lawes, as wealth and prosperitie, long life, the vpperhand of their enemies, plenteousnesse of fruites, and cheape of all thyng, and to be without pestilence, warre and famishment, and all maner other abhominable diseases & plagues pertayne to vs as well as to them, if we keepe our temporall lawes.

Law. What followeth the keeping of the law.

And all the curses and terrible plagues which are threatned throughout the law of Moses, as hunger, dearth, warre and dissentiõ, pestilence, feuers, and wonderfull and straunge fearefull diseases, as the sweate, pockes, and falling sickenesse, shortyng of dayes, that the swoorde, hunger, and such diseases shal eate them vp in their youth, that their enemies should haue ẏ vpperhand, that the people of the land should be minished, and the townes decayed, and ẏ land brought to a wildernesse, and that a plenteous lande should be made barren, or so ordered that dearth shall deuoure the enhabyters, and wealth be amonge few that shoulde oppresse the rest, with a thousand such like, so that nothing they begynne, should haue a prosperous end:

Law. What followeth the breaking of the law.

all

all those curſſes (I ſay) pertaine to vs as well as to them, if we breake our temporall lawes.

Let England looke about them, & marke what hath chaunced them ſince they ſlue their right kyng whom God had annointed ouer them, King Richarde the ſecond. Their people, townes and villages, are miniſhed by the third parte. And of their noble bloude remayneth not the thirde nor I beleue the ſixte, yea and if I durſt be bolde, I wene I might ſafely ſweare that there remaineth not the ſixteneth part. Their owne ſworde hath eaten them vp. And though paſtures be enlarged aboue all meaſure, yet rotte of ſheepe, ſtore of beaſtes, with parkes & warennes, with reiſing of fines and rent, make all things twiſe ſo deare as they were. And our owne cõmodities are ſo abuſed, that they be the deſtructiõ of our owne realme.

The enormities that haue chãced ſince ỹ ſlaughter of King Richard ỹ ſecõd, vnto this realme of England.

And right: for if we will not know God to keepe his lawes, how ſhould God know vs, to keepe vs & to care for vs, and to fulfill his promiſes of mercy vnto vs? ſayth not Paul. Ro. i. of the heathen: Sicut non probauerunt habere deum in noticia, ita tradidit illos Deus. As it ſeemed them not good, or as they had no luſt, or as they admitted it not, nor alowed for right in their hartes to know God as God, to geue him the honor of God, that is: to feare him as God, and as auenger of all euill, and to ſeeke hys will: euen ſo God gaue them vp to follow their owne blyndneſſe, and tooke his ſpirite and his grace from them, and woulde no longer rule their wittes. Euen ſo if we caſt of vs, the yoke of our temporall lawes which are ỹ lawes of God, and drawen out of the ten commaundementes and lawe naturall, and out of loue thy neighbour as thy ſelf: God ſhall caſt vs of and let vs ſlippe, to follow our owne wit. And then ſhall all goe agaynſt vs, what ſoeuer we take in hand: in ſo much that when we gather a parliament to reforme or amẽde ought, that we there determine ſhalbe our owne ſnare, confuſion, and vtter deſtruction, ſo that all the enemies we haue vnder heauen coulde not wiſhe vs ſo great miſchiefe as our owne coũcell ſhall do vs, God ſhall ſo blinde the wiſedome of the wiſe. If any man haue any godly councell, it ſhall haue none audience: Errour, madneſſe, and daſing ſhall haue the vpper hand.

Tirannts: Why God geueth vs vp, and leaueth vs in the handes of tiraunts and in all miſery.

And let the ſpiritualtie take heede and looke well about them, and ſee whether they walke as they haue promiſed God, and in the ſteppes of hys ſonne Chriſt, & of his Apoſtles whoſe offices they beare. For I promiſe thẽ, all ỹ deuilles in hell, if God had let thẽ loſe, coulde not haue geuẽ thẽ worſe coũſell, then they haue geuen thẽſelues this xx. yeare long. God gaue vp hys Iſraelites oftẽ time, whẽ they woulde not be ruled, nor know thẽſelues and their dutie to God, and brought them into captiuitie vnder their enemies, to proue and feele (ſaith the text) whether were better ſeruice, either to ſerue God, and willingly to obay hys lawe coupled wyth ſo manifolde bleſſings, or to ſerue their enemies, and to obey their crueltie and tyranny (ſpite of their heades) in neede and neceſſitie. And let the temporaltie remẽber, that becauſe thoſe nacions vnder which the Iſraelites were in captiuitie, did deale cruelly with them, not to puniſhe thẽ for their idolatry and ſinne which they had committed agaynſt God, but to haue their landes and goodes and ſeruice onely, reioyſing to make them worſe and more out of their fathers fauour: therefore when God had ſcourged his children inough, he did beate the other for their labour.

In admonition.

But to our purpoſe, what if the mã runne from his wife & leaue her deſolate. Verely the rulers ought to make a law, if any do ſo and come not agayn by a certaine day, as with in the ſpace of a yeare or ſo, that thẽ he be baniſhed the countrey: and if he come agayne, to come on his head, and let the wife be free to mary where ſhe will. For what right is it that a lewde wretch ſhould take his goods & runne from his wife without a cauſe and ſit by a whore, yea and come agayne after a yeare or two (as I haue knowen it) and robbe hys wife of that ſhe hath gotten in ỹ meane time, & goe agayne to his whore? Paul ſayth to the Corinthians, that if a man or a womã be coupled with an infideli, and the infidell depart, the other is free to mary where they luſt. And. 1. Timo. 5. he ſayth, if there be any man that prouideth not for his, and namely for thẽ of his owne howſhould, the ſame denieth the faith and is worſe then an infidell. And euen ſo is this man much more to be interpreted for an infidell that cauſeleſſe runneth from his wife. Let I ſay the gouerners take heede how they let ſinne be vnpuniſhed, and how they bring the wrath of God vpon pon their Realmes. For God wilbe auenged on all iniquitie, and punishe it with plagues from heauen.

In like maner if the woman depart causeleſſe and will not be reconciled, though ſhe commit none adultery, the man ought of right to be free to marie agayne. And in all other cauſes if they ſeperate them ſelues of impaciẽcie that the one can not ſuffre the others infirmities, they muſt remaine vnmaried.

If any part burne, let the ſame ſuffer ỹ payne or infirmities of the other. And the temporaltie ought to make lawes to bridle the vnruly partie.

Agayne ye haue heard howe it was ſayd to them of old tyme, forſweare not thy ſelfe, but pay thyne othes vnto the Lord. But I ſay vnto you, ſweare not at all, neither by heauen, for it is the ſeate of God, neither by the earth, for it is hys footeſtole, neither by Ieruſalẽ, for it is the Citie of the great king, neither ſhalte thou ſweare by thyne head, for thou canſt not make a white heere or a blacke. But your communicatiõ ſhalbe yea yea, nay nay. For if ought be aboue that, it procedeth of euill.

Swearing

As to hate in the hart, or to couet an other maus wife, was no ſinne with the Phariſeis: no more was it to hide one thyng in the hart, & to ſpeake an other with the mouth, to deceaue a mãs neighbour, if it were not bounde with an oth. And though Moſes ſay Leuit. xix. Lye not, nor deceaue any man hys neighbour or one an other, yet they interpreted it but good councell, if a man deſired to be perfect: But no precept to bynde vnder payne of ſinne. And ſo by that meanes not onely they that ſpake true, but alſo they that lyed, to deceaue, were compelled to ſweare and to confirme their wordes with othes, if they would be beleued.

But Chriſt bringeth light, and ſalt to the texte (which the Phariſeis had darckened and corrupt with the ſtynkyng myſt of their ſophiſtrie) and forbiddeth to ſweare at all, either by God or any creature of Gods: for thou canſt ſweare by none othe at all, except the diſhonour ſhall redound vnto ỹ name of God. If thou ſweare, by God it is ſo, or by God I wil do this or that, the meanyng is, that thou makeſt God iudge, to auenge it of thee, if it be not as thou ſayeſt or if thou ſhalt not do as thou promiſeſt. Now if truth be not in thy wordes, thou ſhameſt thyne heauenly father, and teſtifieſt that thou beleueſt that he is no righteous iudge nor wil auenge vnrighteouſneſſe, but that he is wicked as thou art and conſẽteth and laugheth at thee, while thou deceaueſt thy brother, as well created after the likeneſſe of God and as deare bought with the precious bloude of Chriſt, as thou. And thus through thee (a wicked ſonne) is the name of thy father diſhonoured, and his law not feared nor hys promiſes beleued. And when thou ſweareſt by the Goſpell booke or Bible, the meanyng is, that God, if thou lye, ſhall not fulfill vnto thee, the promiſes of mercy there in written. But contrarywiſe to bryng vpõ thee all the curſſes, plagues & vẽgeance therin threatned vnto ỹ diſobedient & euill doers. And euen ſo when thou ſweareſt by any creature, as by bread or ſalt, the meanyng is, that thou deſireſt, that the creatour therof ſhall auenge it of thee, if thou lye, &c. wherfore our dealyng ought to be ſo ſubſtãtiall, that our wordes might be beleued without an othe. Our wordes are the ſignes of the truth of our hartes, in which ought to be pure and ſingle loue toward thy brother: for what ſoeuer procedeth not of loue, is damnable. Now falſehead to deceaue him & pure loue can not ſtand together. It can not therfore be but damnable ſinne to deceaue thy brother with lying, though ỹ adde no othe to thy wordes. Much more damnable is it then to deceaue & to adde an othe therto. &c.

When ought ỹ to deale that their wordes may be credited without any othes.

To ſweare by God.

Howbeit all maner of ſwearyng is not here forbydden, no more then all maner of killyng, whẽ the cõmaundement ſaith, kill not: for iudges and rulers muſt kill. Euẽ ſo ought they, whẽ they put any man in office, to take an othe of him that he ſhalbe true & faithfull and diligent therein. And of their ſubiectes it is lawfull to take othes, & of all that offer thẽ ſelues to beare witneſſe. But if the ſuperiour would compel the inferiour, to ſweare that ſhould be to the diſhonour of God or hurting of an innocent, the inferiour ought rather to dye then to ſweare. Neither ought a iudge to cõpell a man to ſwere agaynſt him ſelf, that he make him not ſinne & forſweare. wherof it is inough ſpoken in an other place. But here is forbidden ſwearyng betwene neighbour & neighbour, and in all our pri-nate busynesse and dayly communicatiō. For customable swearyng, though we lyed not, doth robbe the name of God of his due reuerence & feare. And in our dayly cōmunication & businesse one with an other is so much vanitie of wordes that we can not but in many thyngs lye, which to confirme with an othe, though we beguile not, is to take the name of God in vayne, & vnreuerently agaynst the second precept. Now to lye for the entent to beguile, is damnable of it self, how much more then to abuse the holy name of God thereto, and to call to God for vengeaunce vpon thyne owne selfe?

Charitie moderateth the law.

Many cases yet there chaunce dayly betwene man and man, in which charitie compelleth to sweare: as if I know that my neighbour is falsely sclaundered, I am bound to report the truth, and may lawfully sweare, yea & am bounde if it neede, and that though not before a iudge. And vnto ỹ weake where ye and nay haue lost their credence thorow the multitude of lyers, a man may lawfully sweare to put them out of doubt. which yet commeth of ỹ euill of them that abuse their language to deceaue withall. Finally to sweare to do euill is dampnable, and to performe that is double damnation. Herodes oth made him not innocent and giltlesse of the death of Iohn the Baptist, though the hipocrite had not knowen what his wiues daughter would haue asked. And whē men say, a kings worde must stand: that is trouth, if his oth or promise be lawfull & expedient.

Othe.

To performe an euill othe is double sinne.

In all our promises it is to be added, if God will, & if there be no lawfull let. And though it be not added, it is to be interpzete, as added. As if I borow thy sworde, and by the houre I promise to bring it thee agayne, thou be beside thy self. If I promise to pay by a certaine day, and be in the meane tyme robbed or decayed by chaunce, that I cannot performe it. I am not forsworne, if myne hart ment truely when I promised. And many like cases there be of which are touched in other places. To lye also and to dissemble is not alway sinne. Dauid 1. Reg. 27. tolde kyng Achis the Philistine, that he had robbed hys owne people the Iewes, when he had bene a rouing among the Amalekites, and had slayne man, woman, and childe, for telling tales. And yet was that lye no more sinne, then it was to destroy the Amalekytes those deadly enemies of the fayth of one almighty God. Neither sinned Cusai Dauids trusty frend 2. Reg. 17. in sayning and beguilyng Absolon, but pleased God highly. To beare a sicke man in hand that wholesome bitter medicine is swete, to make hym dzinke it, it is the dutie of charitie, and no sinne. To perswade hym that pursueth hys neighbour, to hurt hym or slay hym, that hys neighbour is gone an other contrary way, is the duty of euery Christen man by the law of charitie, and no sinne: no though I confirmed it with an othe. But to lye for to deceaue and hurt, that is dampnable onely. &c.

He is not forsworne whose hart ment truly when hee promised.

To lye or dissemble some times not sinne.

Ye haue heard, how it is sayde, an eye for an eye, a toth for a toth. But I say vnto you, that ye withstand not wrong. But if a mā geue thee a blow on the right cheeke, turne to him the other also. And if any man will goe to lawe with thee and take away thy coate, let hym haue thy clocke thereto. And if any mā compell thee to goe a mile, goe with him twaine. Geue to him that asketh, and from hym that would borow turne not away.

Christ here entēdeth not to disanull the temporall regiment, and to forbid rulers to punishe euill doers, no more then he ment to destroy matrimony, when he forbad to lust, and to couet an other mans wife in the hart. But as he there forbad, that which defileth matrimony, euen so he forbiddeth here that which troubleth, vnquieteth and destroyeth the temporall regimēt, and that thyng which (to forbid) the temporall regiment was ordayned: which is that no man auenge himselfe. Christ medleth not with the temporall regiment. But in all this long sermon fighteth agaynst the Pharisees false doctrine, and salteth the law, to purge it of the corruption of their filthy glosses, and to bring it vnto the right taste and true vnderstanding agayne.

For the Pharisees had so enterpret that lawe of Moses (which pertayned onely vnto the rulers) that euery priuate person might auenge hymselfe, & do his aduersary as much harme agayne as he had receaued of hym.

Now if he that is angry haue deserued that men pronounce death vpon hym, and he that sayth Racha hath deserued that mē should gather a cousell to determine some sondry and cruell death for so haynous a crime, & if he that calleth hys brother foole, haue deserued hell: what deserueth he that smiteth or aduengeth himselfe wyth his owne hand? Here is forbidden therfore priuate wrath onely, and that a man aduenge himselfe.

More is spoken then ment to feare

it is earnest that we commaunde. Euen so is the meaning here, ỹ we in no wise aduenge, but be prepared euer to suffer as much more, & neuer to thinke it lawfull to aduenge, how great soeuer they shall possesse the earth. Let all the world studie to do thee wrong, yea let them do thee wrong: and yet if thou be meeke, thou shalt haue foode and rayment inough for thee and thyne.

And moreouer, if the worst come, God shall yet set such a tyraunt ouer thee, that (if thou be meeke and canst be cō-and euen death to hym, but he that is impatient and cannot suffer to be pol-ther, and geue the Bayliffe or like officer, now a Capon, now a Pigge, now a Goose, and so to thy Landlord likewise: or if thou haue a great Ferme.

now a Lambe, now a Calfe, and let thy wife visit thy Landladye three or foure tymes in a yeare, wyth spiled cakes, and Apples, Peares, Cheries, and such like. And be thou ready with thyne Oxen or Horses three or foure, or halfe a dosen dayes in the yeare to fet home their wood, or to plow their lād: yea and if thou haue a good horse, let them haue hym good cheape, or take a worse for hym, and they shal be thy shilde and defende thee, though they be tyraūtes and care not for God, that no man elles shall dare polle thee.
And thereto thou maist with wisdome get of them, that shall recompence all that thou doost to them: All thys I meane, if thou be patient and wise and feare God thereto, & loue thine neighbour, and do noue euill. For if thou keepe thy selfe in fauour, with hurting thy neighbour, thine ende will be euill, and at the last desperation in thys worlde, and hell after.

But and if thou canst not polle thy selfe with wisdome, and laugh & beare a good countenaūce, as though thou reioysedst while such personnes polle thee, euery man shall polle thee, and they shall mainteine them, and not defende thee. Let this therefore be a cō-mon prouerbe, be contented to be polled of some man, or to be polled of e-uery man.

Ye must vnderstand that there be two states or degrees in thys worlde: Two maner states, & degrees of regimēts.
the kyngdome of heauen which is the regiment of the Gospell. And ỹ kingdome of this world which is the tem-porall regimēt. In the first state there is neither father, mother, sonne daugh ter: neither master, maystres, mayde, manseruaunt: nor husband, nor wyfe, nor Lord, or subiect, nor man or woman. But Christ is all, and ech to other is Christ himselfe. There is none better then other, but all like good, all brethren, and Christ onely is Lord ouer all. Neither is there any other thyng to do, or other law saue to loue one an other as Christ loued vs. In the temporall regiment is husband, wyfe, father, mother, sonne, daughter, maister, maystresse, mayde, man-seruaunt, Lord and subiect.

Now is euery person a double person, and vnder both the regimentes. Euery man is of the spiritualtie and of the temporalitie both.
In the first regiment, thou art a person for thyne owne selfe, vnder Christ and his doctrine, & mayst neither hate or be angry, and much lesse fight or aduenge: But must after the ensample of Christ humble thy selfe, forsake and deny thy selfe, and hate thy selfe, and cast thy selfe away, and be meeke and patient, and let euery mā goe ouer thee, and tread thee vnder foote and do thee wrong: and yet loue them, and pray for them, as Christ did for his crucifiers. For loue is all, and what is not of loue that, is damnable and cast out of that kyngdome.

For that kyngdome is the knowledge

ledge of God and Chriſt. But he that loueth not, knoweth neyther God nor Chriſt: therefore he that loueth not is not of that kingdome. The minor is on this wiſe proued, he that knoweth God and Chriſt ſeeth light, for Chriſt is light: But he that hateth hys brother, is in darckneſ, and walketh in darckneſ, and wotteth not whether he goeth, for darckneſ hath blinded hys eyes. 1. Joh. 2. Ergo, he that hateth his brother, knoweth not what Chriſt hath done for hym, and therefore hath no true fayth, nor is of the ſpirituall kyngdome of God.

Loue: He that loueth not his neighbour hath not ỹ true fayth of Chriſt.

To hate thy ſelfe, that ſhalt thou get, if thou conſidereſt thyne owne ſinnes and the deepe dampnation that long thereto, with due repentaunce. And to loue, that thou ſhalt obtayne, if thou beholde the great and infinite mercy of God wyth ſtrõgfaith. There is none ſo great an enemy to thee in this worlde, but thou ſhalt lightly loue hym, if thou looke well on the loue that God ſhewed thee in Chriſt.

The temporall regiment.

In the temporall regiment thou art a perſon in reſpect of other thou art an huſband, father, mother, maiſter, maiſtreſſe, lord, ruler, or wife, ſonne, daughter, ſeruaũt, ſubiect &c. And there thou muſt do accordyng to thyne office. If ỹ be a father thou muſt do the office of a father, and rule, or els thou damneſt thy ſelfe. Thou muſt bryng all vnder obedience whether by fayre meanes or foule. Thou muſt haue obedience of thy wife, of thy ſeruauntes, and of thy ſubiectes: and the other muſt obey. If they wil not obey with loue, thou muſt chide and fight, as farre as the law of God, and the law of the land will ſuffer thee. And when ỹ cãſt not rule thẽ, thou art bound in many caſes, to deliuer thẽ vnto the hyer officer of whom thou dyddeſt take the charge ouer thẽ.

Violence: Not to reſiſt violẽce, how it is vnderſtode.

Now to our purpoſe, whether a mã may reſiſt violence, and defend or auenge him ſelfe. I ſay nay, in the firſt ſtate, where thou art a perſon for thy ſelfe alone & Chriſtes Diſciple. There thou muſt loue, and of loue do, ſtudie. and enforce: yea and ſuffer all thynges (as Chriſt dyd to make peace, that the bleſſyng of God may come vpon thee, which ſayth: Bleſſed be the peace makers, for they ſhalbe the children of God. If thou ſuffer and keepeſt peace in thy ſelfe onely, thy bleſſyng is, the poſſeſſion of this world. But if thou ſo loue the peace of thy brethrẽ, that thou leaue nothyng vndone or vnſuffred to further it, thy bleſſyng is, thou ſhalt be Gods ſonne and conſequently poſſeſſe heauen.

But in the worldly ſtate, where thou art no priuate man, but a perſon in reſpect of other, thou not onely mayeſt, but alſo muſt, and art bounde vnder payne of dãnation to execute thyne office. where thou art a father, thou muſt haue obedience by fayre meanes or by foule: and to whom thou art an huſband, of her thou muſt require obedience & chaſtitie, and to get that, attẽpt all that the law of the land commaundeth and will. And of thy ſeruauntes thou muſt exact obedience and feare, & mayeſt not ſuffer thy ſelfe to be deſpiſed. And where thou art a ruler therto appoynted, thou muſt take, priſon, and ſlea to: not of malice and hate, to auenge thy ſelfe, but to defend thy ſubiectes, and to mainteine thine office.

Rulers muſt puniſhe, not for malice, but for defence of the people, and maintenaunce of ỹ lawes.

Concernyng thy ſelfe, oppreſſe not thy ſubiectes with rent, fynes or cuſtome at all, neither pille them with taxes and ſuch like, to mainteine thyne owne luſtes: But be louyng and kinde to them, as Chriſt was to thee, for they be his and the price of his bloud. But thoſe that are euill doers among them and vexe their brethren, and will not know thee for their iudge and feare thy law, them ſmite, and vpon them draw thy ſword, & put it not vp vntill thou haue thyne office: yet without hate to thee perſon, for his maiſters ſake, and becauſe he is in the firſt regiment thy brother, but to amende him onely, or if it cãnot be, but that thou muſt loſe one to ſaue many, then execute thine office with ſuch affection, with ſuch compaſſion and ſorow of hart, as thou wouldeſt cut of thine owne arme to ſaue the reſt of the body.

In example how to vnderſtand ỹ two regimentes.

Take an example: thou art in thy fathers houſe among thy brethren and ſiſters. There if one fight with an other, or if any do thee wrõg, thou mayſt not auenge nor ſmite: For that pertayneth to thy father onely. But if thy father geue thee authoritie in hys abſence, and commaund thee to ſmyte if if they will not be ruled: now thou art an other perſon. Notwithſtanding yet thou haſt not put of the firſt perſõ, but art a brother ſtill, and muſt euer loue, and prone all thyng to rule with loue. But if loue will not ſerue: then thou muſt vſe the office of the other perſon, or ſinne agaynſt thy father. Euen ſo when thou art a temporal perſon, thou puttеſt not of the ſpirituall. Therfore thou must euer loue. But when loue will not helpe, thou must with loue execute the office of the temporall person or sinne agaynst God. A mother can smite and loue: and so mayst thou with loue execute the office of thy seconde state. And the wife, sonne, seruaũt and subiect are brethrẽ in the first state and put not that person of, by reason of the secõd degree: & therfore must they loue euer, and with loue pay custome, tribute, feare, honour and obedience to whom they belong as Paule teacheth Roma. xiii. And though the other doe not his dutie and loue thee, but rule the with rigorousnesse & deale vnkindly with thee, thou not deseruyng: yet cleaue thou to Christ, and loue stil, and let not his euill ouercome thy goodnesse and make thee euill also.

What soeuer thou art bound to do, do it with loue.

And as after the example aboue, thy father hath power ouer thee to commaund thee to vse his power ouer thy brethren, euen so hath thy master, to geue thee hys authoritie ouer thy fellowes. whiche when thou hast, thou must remember that thou art a felow still, and bound to loue still. But if loue alone will not helpe, then put thy masters authoritie vnto thy loue. And so hath the ruler power ouer thee, to send thee to vse violence vppon thy neighbour, to take him, to prison hym, and happly to kill him to. And thou must euer loue thy neighbour in thyne hart by the reason that he is thy brother in the first state, and yet obey thy ruler & go with the cõstable or like officer, and breake open thy neighbours doore, if he will not opẽ it in the kynges name: yea and if he will not yeld in the kyngs name, thou must lay on, and smite him to ground till he be subdued. And loke what harme he getteth, yea though he be slayne, that be on his owne head. For thine hart loued him & ỹ desiredest him louingly to obey, and hast not adnẽged thy selfe in that state where thou art a brother. But in the worldly state where thou art an other maner person in this case, thou had executed the authoritie of him that hath such power of God, to commaunde thee, and where thou were damned of God if thou diddest not obey.

How to be a warriour.

And like is it, if thy Lord or Prince send thee a warfare into an other land, thou must obey at Gods commaundement, and go, and aduẽge thy Princes quarell whiche thou knowest not but that it is right. And when thou comest thether, remember what thou art in the first state with thẽ agaynst whõ thou must fight, how that they be thy brethren and as deerely bought with Christes blond as thou, and for Christes sake to be beloued in thyne hart. And see that thou desire neither their life or goodes, saue to aduẽge thy princes quarell and to bryng them vnder thy Princes power. And be content with thy princes wages, and with such parte of the spoyle (when thou hast wonne) as thy prince or his deputie appointeth thee. For if thou hate thẽ in thyne hart and coueteth their goodes, and art glad that an occasion is founde (thou carest not whether it be right or wrong) that thou mayst go a robbyng and murtheryng vnpunished, then art thou a murtherer in ỹ sight of God, & thy blond wilbe shed agayne for it, either in the same warre folowyng: or when thou art come home (as thou there dyddest in thyne hart) so shalt thou robbe and steale, and be hanged for thy labour, or slayne by some other mischief.

Thou mayst fight with, or slay thine enemies, & yet loue him.

Now cõcernyng the goodes of this world, it is easie to iudge. In the first state or degree ỹ oughtest to be thankfull to Christ, and to loue, to geue and to lend to them that are bought with his precious blond, all that thou art able. For all that thou owest to Christ whose seruaũt thou art to do his will, that must pay thẽ. And that thou doest to thẽ, that same thou doest to Christ, and that thou art not ready to do for thẽ, that denyest thou to do for Christ. But and any of thy brethren will withhold or take away by force aboue that thou mayst spare by the reason of some office that thou hast in the second state, or inuade thee violently, and lay more on thy backe then thou canst beare: thẽ hold thyne hart & hand, that thou neither hate or smite, and speake fayre and louingly, and let neighbours goe betwene. And when thou hast proued all meanes of loue in vayne, then complaine to the law and the officer that is set to be thy father & defend thee, & to iudge betwene thee and thy brother.

Goodes.

Math. xxv.

To goe to lawe.

Thou wilt say the text forbiddeth me to go to law: for it sayth, if a man will law with thee and take thy coate, thou must let him haue gowne and all. If I must suffer my selfe to be robbed by ỹ law, wilt thou say, by what right can I with law recouer myne own? I aunswere: Behold the text diligently. For by no right of law can a man take thy coate frõ thee: For ỹ law was ordeined deyned of God, to mainteine thee in thy right and to forbydde that wrong should be done thee. Wherefore the text meaneth thus, that where the law is vniustly ministred, and the gouerners and iudges corrupt, and take bribes and be parciall, there be pacient & ready to suffer euer as much more, what soeuer vnright be done thee, rather them of impaciencie, thou shouldest auenge thy selfe on thy neighbour or rayle or make insurrection agaynst the superiours whiche God hath set ouer thee. For to rise agaynst them is to rebell against God and against thy father when he scourgeth thee for thyne offece, and a thousād tymes more sinne then to auēge thee on thy neighbour. And to rayle on them is to rayle on God, as though thou wouldest blaspheme him, if he made the sicke, poore or of low degree or otherwise thē thou wouldest be made thy selfe.

To rise agaynst the iudge, or magistrate is to resiste God.

Thou wilt happely say: the subiectes euer chose the ruler and make hym sweare to keepe their law and to maintein their priuilegies and liberties, and vpon that submit their selues vnto hym: Ergo, if he rule amisse they are not bounde to obey. But may resist him and put him downe agayne: I answere your argument is nought. For the husband sweareth to his wife: yet though he forsweare him selfe. She hath no power to compell hym. Also though a maister keepe not couenaunt with his seruaunt, or one neighbour with an other: yet hath neither seruaunt, no nor yet neighbour (though he be vnder none obedience) power to auenge: But the vengeaunce perteyneth euer to an higher officer, to whō thou must complayne.

Princes: whether they may be resisted or put downe of their subiectes in any case.

Yea but you will say: it is not like. For the whole body of the subiectes chose chose the ruler. Now, cuius est ligare: eius est soluere: Ergo, if he rule amisse, they that set him vp, may put hym downe agayne. I answere: God (and not the common people) chuseth the Prince, though he chuse hym by them. For deut. xvij. God commaundeth to chuse and set vp officers: and therefore is God the chiefe chuser and setter vp of them, and so must he be the chiefe putter downe of them agayne: so that without his speciall commaundement, they may not be put downe agayne. Now hath God geuen no commaundement to put them downe agayne: But contrariwise, when we haue anoynted a kyng ouer vs at his commaundement, he sayth: touch not myne annointed. And what ieopardy it is to rise agaynst thy Prince that is annointed ouer thee, how euill so euer he be, see in the story of kyng Dauid, and thorowout all the bookes of the kinges. The authority of the kyng is the authority of God: and all the subiectes compared to the king, are but subiectes still (though the king be neuer so euill) as a thousand sonnes gathered together are but sonnes still, & the commaundement obey your fathers, goeth ouer all, as well as ouer one. Euen so goeth the commaundement ouer all the subiectes: obey your Prince and the higher power, and he that resisteth him, resisteth God, and getteth him dampnation. And vnto your argument, cuius est ligare, eius est soluere, I aunswere: he that bindeth wyth absolute power, and without any higher authoritie, his is the might to louse agayne. But he that bindeth at an other mans commaundement, may not louse agayne without y commaundement of the same. As they of London, chuse them a Maior: But may not put him downe agayne how euill so euer he be without the authority of hym with whose licence they chose him. As long as the powers or officers be one vnder an other, if the inferior do thee wrong, complayne to the higher. But if the hyghest of all do thee wrong, thou must complayne to God onely. wherefore the onely remedy agaynst euill rulers is, that thou turne thine eyes to thy selfe and thyne owne sinne, and thē looke vp to God and say: O father, for our sinne, and the sinne of our fathers is this misery come vpon vs, we know not thee as our father, to obey thee and to walke in thy wayes, and therfore thou knowest not vs as thy sonnes, to set louing scholemasters ouer vs. we hate thy law, and therefore hast thou thorough the wickednes of vnrighteous Iudges, made that law that was for our defence, to be a tyraunt most cruel and to oppresse vs and do vs iniury aboue all other kindes of violence and robbing. And amende thy liuing, and be meeke and patient, and let them robbe as much as they will, yet shall God geue thee foode and raiment, and an honest possession in the earth, to mayntaine thee and thine withall.

The king hath Gods authoritie.

In answere to the former Argument

Moreouer concerning thy goodes, thou must remember how that thou art a person in the temporall regimēt, Goodes.

The kyng as hee is Lord of thy body, so is hee of thy goodes.

and the kyng, as he is ouer thy body, euē so is he Lord of thy goods, and of hym thou holdest them, not for thy selfe onely, but for to maintaine thy wife, children and seruaūtes, and to maintaine the kyng, the realme, & the countrey, & towne or citie where thou dwellest. Wherefore thou mayst not suffer thē to be wasted, that thou were not able to do thy dutie, no more thē a seruaūt may suffer his masters goods to go to wracke negligently. For he that prouideth not for his, and namely for them of hys owne housholde, sayth Paule, denieth the fayth, and is worse then an Infidell. But euery man is bounde to labour diligently & truely, & therewith to soberly to liue, that he may haue inough for hym, and his, and somwhat aboue for them that can not labour, or by chaunce are fallen into necessitie. And of that geue & lende, and looke not for it againe. And if that suffice not thy neighbours necessitie: then speake and make labour to thy brethren, to helpe also. For it is a common prouerbe, many handes make light worke, & many may beare that that one alone cannot.

And thy wife, thy children, and seruaūtes, art thou bounde to defende. If any man would force thy wife, thy daughter, or thy mayde, it is not inough for thee to looke on, & say, God amende you. Nay thou must execute thine office and authoritie which the kyng geueth thee. And by the way ỹ must defēde thy master and his goods, and the kings goods, which thou hast to maintaine thy wife and houshoide withall, and thine neighbour that goeth with thee, agaynst theues & murtherers. And against all such persons lay about thee, and do as thou wouldest do if thou were vnder the kinges standard against his enemies which had inuaded the realme. For all such persons are mortall enemies to the realme, and seeke to put downe the king, and law, and altogether, and to make that it might be lawfull to sinne vnpunished. And of this maner if thou marke well the difference of these two states and regimentes, thou mayst soyle all like doubtes that shalbe layde agaynst thee.

Regimēts.

Euery mā is vnder both regimentes.

Moreouer whē I say, there be two regiments, the spirituall and the temporall: Euen so I say that euery person baptised to keepe the lawe of God and to beleue in Christ, is vnder both the regimentes, and is both a spirituall person and also a tēporall, and vnder the officers of both the reginētes: so that the kynge is as deepe vnder the spirituall officer, to heare out of Gods worde what he ought to beleue and how to liue, and how to rule, as is the poorest begger in the realme. And euen so the spirituall officer, if he sinne against his neighbour, or teach false doctrine, is vnder the kinges, or temporall correction, how high so euer he be. And looke how dampnable it is for the king to withdraw himselfe frō the obedience of the spirituall officer: that is to say, from hearing hys duty, to do it, and frō hearing his vices rebuked, to amende them: so dampnable is it for the spirituall officer, how high so euer he be, to withdraw hymself frō vnder the kinges correctiō, if he teach falle, or sinne agaynst any temporall lawe.

Is the spiritualtie may rebuke kings vices, so may kynge vse temporall correctiō agayust the spiritualtie.

Finally ye must consider that Christ here teacheth his disciples, and them that should be the light and salt in lyuing & doctrine, to shine in the weake and feble eyes of the worlde, diseased with the mygrim, and accustomed to darckenesse, that wyth our great paine they can beholde no light, and to salte their olde teasterd sores, and to frete out the rotten flesh, euen to the harde quicke, that it smert agayne, and spare no degree. But tell all men, hie & low, their faultes, and warne them of the ieopardie, and exhort them to the right way. Now such scholemasters shall finde small fauour and frendship with the rulers of thys world, or defence in their lawes. As Christ warneth them, Math. x. saying (I sende you out as sheepe among wolues. Beware therfore of men, for they shall deliuer you vp to their counsels, and shall scourge you in their sinagoges or counselhouses, and ye shall be brought before the chiefe rulers and kinges, for my sake) and there teacheth them, as here, to arme themselues with patience, and to goe forth boldly wyth a strong fayth, and trust in the succour and assistaunce of God onely, and to plant the gospell with all loue & meekenes, and to water it with their owne blood, as Christ did. Thou mayst not in that state come with a sword, to defend either thy self or thy Gospell, and to compell men to worship thee as God, and to beleue what thou wilt. Nay, ye sheepe, vse no such regiment among wolues. If thou be a sheepe, thou act not in euill taking if thou canst owing to passe that

The preacher of the Gospell may vse no violence.

wolfe be content with thy flese onely, and to shere thee yearely.

Geue to him that asketh, and from him that would borow, turne not away. Luke sayth, geue to whosoeuer asketh thee: that is to say, whersoeuer thou seest neede, or seest not the cõtrary, but there may be neede: to the vttermost of thy power there open thine hart & be mercifull onely. And of mercifulnes set God thy father, and Christ thy Lord and master for an ensample: and enforce to be as like them as thou canst. If thou be mercifull, God hath bound himselfe to be mercifull to thee agayne. Lo, is not this an exceeding great thyng, that God which of no right ought to be bound to hys creatures, hath yet put it whole in thyne owne hands, to bynd hym against the day of thy tribulation, then to shew thee mercy.

In lending we must follow the rule of mercy.

Concerning lending, proceede by ỹ forsayd rule of mercy. Many in extreame neede, yet ashamed to begge, shall desire thee to lende. Vnto such in steede of lending geue, or say thus, lo, here is as much as ye require. If ye can pay it agayne well, do, and ye shall finde me ready against an other tyme, to lende or geue (if neede be) as much more. But and if ye shall not be able to pay it agayne, trouble not your conscience, I geue it you. we be all one mans children: one man hath bought vs al with his bloud, & bound vs to helpe one an other. And with so doyng, thou shalt wynne the hart of him to thy father.

Concernyng marchaundise, & chapmen, the lesse borowyng were among them, the better should the common wealth be: if it were possible, I would it were, ware for ware, or money for ware, or part money & part ware. But if it will not be: but that a man to get his luyng with, must nedes lende, and call for it agayn to finde his household, and to pay his dettes: then in the lendyng, be first single and harmeles as a Doue, and then as wise as a Serpent. and take hede to whom thou lendest. If when thou hast lent an honest mã, God visite him, and take away hys goods, with what chaunce it be, whether by sea or land, that he is not able to pay thee: then to prison him, or to sue him at the law, or once to speake an vnkynde worde, were agaynst the law of loue, and contrary to shewyng mercy. There thou must suffer with thy neighbour and otherwhyle as Christ dyd with thee, and as God doth dayly. If an vnthrift haue beguiled thee, and spent thy goods away, and hath not to pay, then hold thine hand and hart, that thou auenge not thy selfe: But loue him, and pray for him, and remember how God hath promised to blesse the patient and meke. Neuertheless because such persons corrupt the common maners and cause the name of God the lesse to be feared, men ought to complaine vpon such persons to the officer that is ordayned of God to punish euill doers, and the officer is bound to punish them. If thou haue lent a fore which with cauillation will kepe thy goods from thee: then if the ruler and the law will not helpe thee to thy right, do as it is aboue sayd of him that will go to lawe with thee, and take thy coate frõ thee. That is to say: be content to lose that & as much more to it, rather then thou wouldest auenge thy self. Let not the wickednes of other men plucke thee from God. But abyde by God and his blessings, and tary his iudgement. Liberalitie is mercyfulnes that byndeth God to be mercyfull again. Couetousnes (the roote of all euill, and father of all false Prophetes, and the scholemaster that teacheth the messẽgers of Sathan to disguise them selues like to the messengers of Christ) is mercyles that shall haue iudgement without mercy: And therefore exhorteth Christ all hys so diligently, and aboue all thing, to be liberall & to beware of couetousnes.

We must not reuenge our selues vpon our euill detters, but referre our cause to God, and his officers

Couetousnes is the roote of all euill.

Iaco. ij.

Ye haue heard, how it is sayd, thou shalt loue thy neighbour and hate thyne enemy. But I saye vnto you, loue your enemyes. Blesse thẽ that curse you, do good to them that hate you. Pray for them which do you wrong and persecute you. That ye may be the childrẽ of your heauẽly father. For he maketh his sunne to arise ouer the euill, and ouer the good, and sendeth rayne vpon the righteous and vnrighteous. For if ye loue them that loue you, what reward shall ye haue? do not the Publicans so? and if ye be frendly to your brethren onelye what singular thyng do ye? do not the Publicans likewise? ye shal therfore bee perfecte, as your father which is in heauen, is perfect.

This text of hating a mans enemy,

The enemies of God, and his wordes, are to be hated.

stãdeth not in any one place of the Bible, but is gathered of many places, in which God commaundeth the childrẽ of Israel to destroy their enemyes, the Cananites, the Amorites, the Amalekites and other heathen people, as the Moabites, and Ammonites, whiche sought to bring them out of the fauour of God, and to destroy the name of God. The Amalekites came behynde them, and slue all that were faintie and werie by the way, as they came out of Egypt. The Moabites and Ammonites hyred Balam to curse them, and beguiled them with their women, and made a great plague amõg thẽ. These and like nations were perpetuall enemies to their land which God had geuen them, and also of the name of God and of their faith. For which cause they not onely might lawfully, but were also bounde to hate them, and to studie their destruction agayne: howbeit they might not yet hate (of the sayd natiõs) such as were conuerted to their fayth.

Now by the reason of such textes as commaunded to hate the commõ enemies of their coũtrey, and of God and his law, and of their fayth: the Pharisees doctrine was, that a man might lawfully hate all his priuate enemyes without exception, nor was bound to do them good. And yet Moses sayth, Thou shalte not hate thy brother in thyne hart. And agayne thou shalt not auenge thy selfe, nor beare hate in thy minde agaynst the children of thy people. And if thine enemyes Asse sinke vnder his burthẽ, helpe to lift him vp again. And if his Oxe or Asse go astray bryng thẽ home agayne. which all no doubt, the Pharisees did interpret for good coũcel, but for no preceptes, wher fore Christ salteth their doctrine, & proueth that a man is bound both to loue & to do good to hys enemy. And as a naturall sonne, though his brethren be neuer so euill, yet to loue them, & shew them kyndnesse, for his fathers sake, & to study to amend thẽ. what hast thou to reioyce of, if thy Religion be no better then the Religion of theeues? For theeues loue among them selues: and so do the couetous of the world, as the vsurers and publicans, which bought in great the Emperours tribute, and to make their most aduauntage, did ouer let ỹ people. Nay, it is not inough for thee to loue thy benefactours onely, as Monkes and Friers do, & them of thine owne coate, and order, or the brethren of thyne owne Abbay onely (for among some their loue stretcheth no further, and that shall he that is remoued out of an other cloysture thether, will finde: yea and in some places charitie reacheth not to all the celles of the same cloisture, and to all ỹ monkes that were professed in the same place. But lift vp thine eyes vnto thy heauẽly father, and as thy father doth, so doe thou loue all thy fathers children. He ministreth sunne, and rayne to good & bad, by which two, vnderstand all hys benefites. For of the heate and dryeth of the sunne and cold and moyst of the rayne, spryng all thinges that are necessary to the lyfe of man. Euen so prouoke thou and draw thyne euill brethren to goodnesse, with pacience, with loue in word and deede, and pray for them to him that is able to make them better and to cõuert them. And so thou shalt be thy fathers natural sonne, and perfect, as he is perfect. The text sayth not, ye shalbe as perfect as God: But perfect after his example. To be perfect in the Scripture is not to bee a Monke or a Frier, or neuer to sinne. For Christ teacheth not here Monkes or Friers, but his disciples and euery Christen man and woman. And to be in this life all together without sinne, is impossible. But to be perfect, is to haue pure doctrine without false opinions, and that thyne hart be to folow that learnyng.

Publicans what they were.

Leui. 19.

As our heauẽly father bestoweth his benefites vpon good & bad so ought we to loue both frend and foe.

To be perfect what it meanth.

An exposition of the sixt Chapter.

TAke heede to your almose, that ye do it not before men, to be sene of thẽ, or els ye get no reward of your father whiche is in heauen. Therfore when thou geuest almose, make not a trompet to be blowen before thee, as the hypocrites do in the Synagoges & in the stretes, to be praysed of mẽ. Verely I saye vnto you, they haue their reward. But thou when thou geuest almose, let not thy left hand knowe what thy right hand doth, that thine almose may be in secret. And then thy father which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

AS hee rebuked theyr doctrine aboue, euẽ so here he rebuketh their wor-kes:

almose.

Deedes cõmaũded by the scripture, done to any other ende then they ought are no good deedes.

workes: for out of deuilish doctrine cãspryng no godly workes. But what workes rebuketh he? verely such as God in the Scripture commaundeth, and without whiche no man can bee a Christen man: euen prayer, fasting and almose deede. For as the Scripture corrupt with gloses, is no more Gods word, euen so the dedes commaunded in the Scripture (when the entent of them is peruerted) are no more godly deedes. What sayd the Scribes & Pharisees of him (thinke ye) when he rebuked such maner of workes? No doubt as they sayd (when hee rebuked their false gloses) how he destroyed the law and the Prophetes, interpretyng the Scripture after the litteral sence, which killeth, & after his owne brayne, cleane contrary to the common sayth of holy Church, and myndes of great Clerkes and autenticke expositions of old holy Doctours. Euen so here what other could they say, then, behold the hereticke, and dyd not we tell you before whereto hee would come, and that he kept some mischief behynd, and spued not out all his venome at once: see to what all his godly new doctrine that sounded so sweetly, is come? he preached all of loue, and would haue the people saued by sayth, so long till that now at the last, he preached cleane agaynst all deedes of merry, as prayer, fasting and almose deede, and destroyeth all good workes. His disciples fast no more then dogges, they dispise their deuine seruice, & come not to Church, yea and if the holyest of all S. Fraunces order aske them almes, they bidde hym labour with his handes, and get hys liuing, and say that he that laboureth not is not worthy to eate, & that God bad that no such strong lubbers should loyter, and goe a begging, and be chargeable to the cõgregation, and eate vp that other poore men get with the sweat of their bodyes: yea and at the last ye shall see, if we resiste him not betymes, that he shall moue the people to insurrection, as Cayphas sayd, and the Romaynes shall come & take our land from vs. As ye see in ỹ text, Luk. xxiij. How (when they could not driue the people from him wyth those perswasions) they accused hym to Pilate saying: we haue founde thys fellow peruerting the people, and forbidding to pay tribute to Cesar, and saying that he is Christ a kyng. wherfore thou canst not be Cesars frend, if thou let hym escape. But after all these blas-phemies, yet must ỹ holy ghost rebuke the world of their righteousnes, yea of their false righteousnes and false holines, which are neither righteousnes nor holines, but colour of hipocrisy.

Christ here destroyeth not prayer, fasting & almes deede: But preacheth agaynst the false purpose and entent of such workes, and peruerting the true vse: that is to say, their seking of glory, and that they esteemed themselues righteous thereby, and better then other men, and so despised and cõdempned their brethren. with our almose (which is as much to say as deedes of mercy) or compassion, we ought to seeke our fathers glory onely, euen the wealth of our brethren, and to winne them to the knowledge of our father, and keeping of his lawe. He that seeketh the glory of his good workes, seeketh the glory that belongeth to God, and maketh himselfe God. Is it not a blynde thyng of ỹ world, that eyther they will do no good woorkes at all, or will be God for their good workes, and haue the glory themselues.

It is the purpose & entent of our deedes that make, or marre.

Concerning blowing of trumpets, and ringing of belles, or makyng a cry, to call men to set almes (though ỹ right way be, that we should know in euery parishe, all our poore, & haue a cõmon cofer for them, and that straũgers should bring a letter of recommendation with them of their necessitie, and that we had a common place to receaue them into, for the tyme, and though also we ought to flee all occasions of vayne glory) yet while ỹ world is out of order, it is not dampnable to do it. So that the very meaning, both that we blow no trumpets, and that the left hand know not what the right hand doth, is that we do as secretly as we can, and in no wise seeke glory, or to receaue it, if it were proffered: But to do our deedes in singlenes of conscience to God, because it is his commaundement, and euen of pure compassion and loue to our brethren: and not ỹ our good deedes thorough standing in our owne cõceite, should cause vs to dispise them. If thou be tempted to vayne glory for thy good deeds, thẽ looke on thyne euill thereto, and put the one in the one balaunce, and the other in the other. And then if thou vnderstand the law of God any thyng at all, tell me whether wayeth heuier.

Vaine glorie: A good remedy against it.

If that ỹ thou doest, do tempt thee, then consider what thou doest not. If it mone thee to set vp thy combe, when thou geuest thy brother a farthyng, or an halfepenny: ponder in thine hart, how farre thou art of from louing him as well as thy selfe, and caring for him as much as for thy selfe. And be sure how much ẏ lackest of that, so much thou art in sinne, and that in dampnable sinne, if God for Christes sake dyd not pardon thee, because thine hart mourneth therefore, and thou fightest with thy self to come to such perfectiō. If a Peacocke did looke well on his feete, and marke the euilfauoured shryking of his voyce, he would not be so proude of the beauty of hys tayle.

Workes iustifie not from sinne, neither deserue the rewarde promised.

Finally that many dispute, because God hath promised to rewarde our deedes in heauen, that our deedes deserue heauen: and because he promiseth to shew mercy to ẏ merciful, that with our deedes we deserue mercy, and because he promiseth forgeuenes of sins to thē ẏ forgeue, ẏ our deedes deserue forgeuenes of sinne, and so iustifie vs. I aunswere: first there is inough spoken thereof in other places, so that to them that haue read that, it is superfluous to rehearse the matter agayne. Furthermore the argument is nought and holdeth by no rule. See ye not ẏ the father and mother haue more right to the childe and to all it can do, than to an Oxe or a Cowe. It is their flesshe and blood, nourished vp wyth their labour and cost. The life of it, and the maintenaunce, and continuaunce therof is their benefite, so that it is not able to recompence that it oweth to father and mother by a thousand partes.

And though it be not able to do his dutie, nor for blindnesse to know hys dutie, yet the father and mother promise moe giftes still without ceasing, and that such as they thinke shoulde most make it to see lone, & to prouoke it to be willing to do part of his dutie. And when it hath done amisse, though it haue no power to do satisfaction, nor lust or courage to come to ẏ right way agayne, yet their loue and mercy abydeth still so great to it, that vppon appointment of mending, they not onely forgeue that is past, and fulfill their promise neuertheles, but promise greater giftes then euer before, and to be better father and mother to it thē euer they were. Now when it cannot do ẏ thousand part of his dutie, how coulde it deserue such promises of the father & mother, as a labourer doth his hyre: the rewarde therefore commeth of the lone, mercy, and truth of the father and mother, as well when the childe keepeth the appointment, as when they fulfill their promise, when it hath broken the appointment: and not of the deseruing of the childe.

Our reward cometh not of our deserte but therin the lone that God beareth vs thorough faith in Iesus Christ.

Euen so, if we were not thus drowned in blindnesse, we should easily see, that we cannot do the thousand parte of our dutie to God: no though there were no life to come. If there were no life to come, it were not right that I should touch any creature of God, otherwyse then he hath appoynted. Though there were no life to come, it had neuertheless bene right, that Adā had abstayned from the forbiddē apple tree, and from all other to, if they had bene forbid. Yea & though there were no life to come, it were not the lesse right that I loued my brother and forgaue him to day, seing I shall sinne agaynst him to morrow. Because a father cannot geue his children heauen, hath he no power to charge them to loue one another, and to forgeue, and not auenge one an other? And hath he not right to beat them if they smite ech other, because he cannot geue them heauen? A bondman that hath a master more cruell then a reasonable man would be to a dogge: if there were no heauen, might this bond seruaunt accuse God of vnrighteousnes, because he hath not made hym a master: Now then when we cannot do our dutie by a thousand partes, though there were no such promises: and that the thyng commaunded is no lesse our dutie, though no such promise were, it is easie to perceaue that the reward promised commeth of the goodnes, mercy, & truth of the promiser, to make vs the gladder to do our dutie, and not of the deseruing of the receauer. When we haue done all we can, we ought to say in our hart, that it was our dutie, and that we ought to do a thousand tymes more, and that God (if he had not promised vs mercy, of his goodnesse in Christ) he might yet of right damne vs, for that we haue left vndone.

We may not chalenge the promise by our merites, but by Christes bloud.

And as touching forgeuenesse of sinne: though forgeuenesse of sinne be promised vnto thee, yet chalenge it not by thy merites, but by the merites of Christes bloud, and heare what Paule sayth Phil. iij. Concerning the righteousnes of the law, I was faultlesse, or such as no man could rebuke. But the thinges that were to vauntage, I thought domage for Christes sake, ye, I thinke all thing to be dammage or

losse, for the excellēt knowledges sake of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whose sake I set all go to losse, and count thē as chaffe or refuse (that is to say, as thinges which are purged out, and refused when a thyng is tryed and made perfect) that I might wynne Christ, & might be found in him: not hauyng my righteousnes ẏ cōmeth of ẏ lawe. But ẏ which cōmeth of faith in Christ Jesu, which righteousnes commeth of God through fayth, and is to know him, and the power of his resurrection (how he is Lord ouer all sinne, & the onely thyng that slayeth and vanquisheth sinne) and to know also the felowshyp of his passions that I might be made like vnto his death.

So that when righteousnesse, and true merites be tryed, we must be content that ours be the chaffe & Christes the pure corne: ours the scome and refuse, and Christes the pure gold. And we must fashion our selues lyke vnto Christ and take euery man his crosse & slea and mortifie the sinne in the flesshe: or els we cannot bee partakers of hys passion. The sinne we doe before our conuersion is forgeuen clearely, thorough fayth, if we repent, and submit our selues to a new lyfe. And the sinne we doe agaynst our willes (I meane the will of the spirite, for after our conuersion we haue two willes fightyng one agaynst the other) that sinne is also forgeuen vs through fayth, if we repent and submit our selues to amēde. And our diligence in worksyng kepeth vs frō sinnyng agayne, and mortifieth the sinne that remaineth in the flesh & maketh vs pure and lesse apte and disposed to sinne: and it maketh vs mery in aduersities and strong in temptations and bold to go into God with a strong & feruent fayth in our prayers, and sure that we shalbe heard whē we cry for helpe at neede, either for our selues or our brethren. Now they that be negligent, and sinne, are brought in temptation vnto the point of desperation, and feele the very paynes of hell, so that they stand in doubt whether God hath cast them away or no. And in aduersitie they be sorowfull and discouraged, and thinke that God is angry, & punisheth them for their sinnes. When a child taketh payne to do hys father his pleasure, and is sure that he shal haue thāke, & a reward for his labour: he is mery & reioyseth in worke and paine that he suffreth: and so is the aduersitie of them that keepe them selues from sinnyng. But a child whē he is beaten for his faute, or whē he thinketh his father is angry & loueth hym not, is anone desperate and discouraged: so is the aduersitie of them that are weake and sinne oft. A child that neuer displeaseth his father, is bold in his fathers presence to speake for hym selfe or his freud. But he that oft offēdeth and is correct or chidde, though the peace be made agayne, yet the remembraunce of hys offences maketh him fearefull, and to mistrust, and to thinke hys father would not heare him: so is the fayth of the weake that sinne oft. But as for them that professe not a new liuyng how euer so much they dreame of faith, they haue no faith at all: for they haue no promise, except they be conuerted to a new lyfe. And therfore in aduersities, temptation and death, they vtterly dispayre of all mercy and perish.

Two apte similitudes of well and ill doings

Promises.

He that professeth not a newe lyfe, hath no promise of mercy in Christ.

And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be like the hipocrites. For they loue to stand and pray in the Sinagoges, and in corners of the streates, that they might be sene of men. Verely I say vnto you, they haue their reward. Thou therfore when thou prayest, goe into thy chamber, and shut thy doore, and pray to thy father whiche is in secret. And thy father which seeth in secret, shall reward the openly.

Prayer.

After almose foloweth prayer. For as it is a Christen mans part, to helpe his neighbour and to beare with hym when her is ouer charged, and suffer with him, and to stād one by an other, as long as we lyue here on this earth. Euen so because we be euer in such perill & combraunce, that we cānot ryd̄e our selues out: we must dayly & hourely cry to God for aide & succour, as well for our neighbours as for our selues.

Workes must be seasoned with Gods worde, if they shall please God

To geue almose, to pray, to fast or to do any thing at all, whether betwen thee and God, or betwen thee and thy neighbour, cāst thou neuer do to please God therewith, except thou haue the true knowledge of Gods word to season thy deedes with all. For God hath put a rule in the Scripture without which thou canst not moue an heere of thyne head, but that it is damnable in the sight of God. As it is of ẏ Jewes, though (as Paul beareth them record) they haue a feruent zeale to God, yea and haue the Scripture therto: yet because

canse they haue not the true vnderstādyng, all is dānable that they do. Hypocrites with scrappes of almose get an hundred fold. And with prayer they get prayse (as thou seest here) and pray therto and robbe widowes houses, as thou readest Math. xxiij. And with fastyng they get fat belyes, full dishes & euer more then inough. And yet there is none almose, praying or fastyng among them in the sight of God. With their prayers they exclude all true prayers, and make it impossible that there should be any amōg them. For prayer is, either a longyng for the honour of the name of God that all men should feare him, and kepe his precepte, and beleue in him. And contrary to that, they seke their owne honour, that men should feare them and keepe their ordinaunces, and beleue in their swete blessings, prayers, pardons, and what soeuer they promise. If they byd fast thou must doe it or be damned and be an hereticke and rebellious to holy Church. If they dispēce and geue thee cleane remission for to eate flesh on good friday (though thou be neuer so lustie) thou must obey, or els thou art damned and an hereticke, because thou doest not beleue in holy Church. Either prayer is, to geue God thākes for the benefites receaued. Contrary to which, they will first haue thankes of the world for their prayers, and robbe not onely widowes houses: But also Lord, Prince, Emperour and all the world, of house and land, yea & of their wittes to. And then they bynde God to thāke them, and to geue them. (Beside the thankes which they haue gotten in the world) not onely heauē and an hygher place but that he geue heauen to no other man, saue thorough their merites.

Prayer. What it is, and how many sowes it may be named prayer.

Either prayer is a complaynyng & a shewyng of thyne owne miserie and necessitie, or of they neighbours before God: desiring hym with all the power of thine hart, to haue compassion and to succour. Contrary to this, they haue excluded with their prayers all necessitie, & miserie from among them. They be Lordes ouer all, and do what they will thorough the whole world. Kyng and Emperour are their seruauntes: they neede but say the word, and their wil is fulfilled. And as for their neighbours, they haue no compassion vpon them, to bryng their complaintes before God. But with theyr prayers robbe them of that litle they haue, and so make them more miserable.

Of enteryng into the chamber and shuttyng the doore to, I say as aboue of that the lift hand should not know what the right hand doth: the meanyng is, that we should auoyde all worldly prayse and profite, and pray with a single eye and true entēt accordyng to Gods word: and is not forbidden therby, to pray openly. For we must haue a place to come together to pray in generall, to thanke and to crye to God for the common necessities, as well as to preach the word of God in. Where the Priest ought to pray in the mother toung, that the name of God may be halowed and his word faithfully taught and truly vnderstode, and fayth and godly liuyng encreased: and for the kyng and rulers, that God will geue them his spirite, to loue the common wealth: and for peace, that God will defend vs from all enemyes: for wederyng and frutes, that God will kepe away pestilence and all plagues. And the Priest should be an example to the people how they should praye. There be of such things as the Priests and other bable (and not pray) many good Collectes that should much edifie the people if they were spokē in the mother tounge. And then while the Priestes sing Psalmes, let euery man pray priuatly and geue God thankes for such benefites as his hart knoweth he hath receaued of God, & commende to God his priuate necessities, and the priuate necessities of his neighbours which he knoweth, & is priuie to. Neither is there in all such any ieopardie of vayne glory. But and if God haue geuen any man the spirite of prayng, as all men haue not like giftes, that he pray oft and when other do not: thē to haue a secret place to pray in, both for the auoydyng of vayne glory, & speach of people, and that thou mayst be free, to vse thy wordes as thou lustest, and what soeuer gestures and behauiours do moue the most to deuotiō, is necessarie and good.

Chamber. To shut thy chamber doore, what it meaneth.

And finally what soeuer necessitie thou hast, though thou feele thy selfe a great sinner, yet if thyne hart be to amend, let not that discourage thee. But go boldly to thy father, seing thou hast his commaundemēt, euer to pray, and promise that he will heare thee: not for thy goodnesse, but of his goodnesse, & for his truth.

Prayer. Gods commaundement and promise should moue vs to pray.

Moreouer when ye pray, bable

not not much as the heathen do. For they thinke that they shalbe heard, for theyr much bablinges sake. Be not therfore like vnto them. For youre Father knoweth of what thynges ye haue neede, before ye aske hym. Of this maner therefore pray ye.

The Pater noster.

O our father which art in heauen, honoured be thy name, thy kingdome come. Thy will be fulfilled, euen in earth, as it is in heauen. Geue vs this daye our dayly bread. And forgeue vs our trespasses, as we forgeue our trespassers. And leade vs not into temptation. But deliuer vs frō euill. For thine is the kingdome, the power & the glory for euer. Amen.

That prayer is vayne wherein ỹ hart is not ioyned with the toung.

As before he rebuked their false entent in praying, that they sought praise and profite of that worke which ought to be direct to God alone, other to geue him thākes, that is to say, to be a knowen and to confesse in the hart, that al we haue, commeth of hym: or to call vpon hym for ayde and succour in tēptations and all necessitie. Euen so here he rebuketh a false kynde of praying, wherin the toung, and lippes laboure, and all the body is payned, but ỹ hart talketh not wyth God, nor feeleth any sweetnes at all, nor hath any confidēce in the promises of God: But trusteth in the multitude of wordes, and in the payne and tediousnes of the length of the prayer, as a coniurar doth in his circles, Characters, and superstitious wordes of his coniuration. As ye see now to be amōg our Fryers, Mōkes, Chanons and Nunnes, and euen thoroughout al the spiritualtie. which (as I haue proued aboue) haue with their false entent of praying, excluded all occasions, and the whole matter of true prayer, & haue turned it into a bodely labour, to vexe the toung, lippes, eyes, and throate with roaring, and to weary all the members: so that they say (& may truely sweare it) that there is no greater labour in the world, then prayer: for no labour whatsoeuer it be, when the body is compelled and the hart vnwilling, can be other then greuous and painefull. But true prayer (if they complayned and sought helpe either for themselues or for their neighbours, and trusted in the promyse of God) would so comfort the soule and courage ỹ hart, that the body (though it were halfe dead and more) would reuiue and be lusty agayne, and the labour would be short and easy (as for an ensample, if thou were so oppressed that thou were weary of thy life, and wēttest to the kyng for helpe, and haddest sped, thy spirits would so reioyce, that thy bodye would receaue her strength agayne, and be as lusty as euer it was) euē so the promises of God worke ioy aboue all measure, where they beleued in the hart.

False prayer is painefull.

True prayer is pleasaunt.

But our hierlinges haue no Gods woorde, but trust in the multitude of wordes, length of bablyng, and payne of body, as bond seruauntes. Neither know they any other vertue to be in prayer: as ye may see by the ordinaunces of all foundations. King Henry the fift built Syon, and the Charterhouse of Shene on the other side of the water, of such a manner that lippe labour may neuer cease. For when the Fryers of Sion ryng out, the Nūnes beginne. And when the Nunnes ring out of seruice, the Monkes on the other side beginne. And whē they ring out, the Fryers beginne agayne, and vexe themselues night and day, & take payne for Gods sake: for which God must geue them heauen. Yea & I haue knowen of some yer this, that for very payne and tediousnes, haue bidden the Deuill take their founders. They call Lent the holyest tyme of the yeare: but wherin is that holines, verely in multitude of wordes and tedious lēgth of the seruice. For let thē beginne at syze, and it will be twelue or they can ende. In which time they be so wearied that by the tyme they haue dined, they haue lust to nothing saue to sleepe. And in the ende of all they thinke no farther then that God must reward their payne. And if ỹ aske how they know it. They will aunswere: he must reward it or be vnrighteous. Now god looketh not on the paine of the prayer, but on thy faith in his promise & goodnes: neither yet on the multitude of thy wordes, or long babling. For he knoweth thy matter better then thou thy selfe. And though the Iewes and the heathen were so foolishe thorough their vnbeliefe, to bable many woords, yet were they neuer so madde, as to mumble and buze out woordes that they vnderstoode not. Thou wilt say: what matter maketh it, if I speake wordes which I vnderstand not, or if I pray not at all, seing God knoweth

Sion Shene.

Not the multitude of thy wordes, but thy fayth in praying. God doth respect.

my matter all ready: I aunswere, he will haue thee to open thine hart to him, to enforme and edifie thine owne selfe. That thou mightest know how all goodnes is of him, to put thy trust and confidence in hym, and to flie to him in time of neede, and to be thankfull, and to loue him and obey his cõmaundementes, and turne and be cõuerted vnto thy Lord God, and not to runne wilde, as the vngodly do, which know not the benefites of God, and therefore be vnthankfull to obey hys commaundementes.

And that thou mayst know how & what to pray, he geueth thee a short instruction and eusample saying: after this maner pray.

The Pater noster is expounded.

O our father which art in heauẽ.

First thou must goe to him as a mercifull father, which of his owne goodnes and fatherly loue that he beareth to thee, is ready to do more for thee then thou cãst desire, though thou haue no merites. But because he is thy father, onely if thou wilt turne, & henceforth submitte thy selfe to learne to do hys wyll.

To honour Gods name, what it is.

Honoured be thy name.

Honoured and praysed be thy name or honoured and praysed be thou: for to honour God and to honour ỳ name of God is all one. And to honour the name of God is, to dread him, to loue hym, and to keepe hys commaundementes. For whẽ a childe obeyeth his father, he honoureth and prayseth hys father: and when he is rebellious and disobedient, he dishonoureth hys father. This is then the vnderstandyng & meaning of it. O father, seing thou art father ouer all, powre out thy spirite vppon all flesh, and make all men to feare and dread & loue thee as their father, & in keeping thy commaundementes, to honour thee and thy holy name.

Kinges must commaunde nothyng, nor forbid to do any thyng contrary to Gods worde.

Thy kingdome come.

That is, seyng thou art kyng ouer all, make all to know thee, & make the kynges and rulers which are but thy substitutes, to commaunde nothyng but according to thy worde, and to them make all subiectes obey.

Thy will be fulfilled in earth, as it is in heauen.

This is all one with that goeth before. For as much then as thou art father and kyng ouer all, and all we thy children & brethren among our selues, make vs all as obedient to seeke, and to do thy will as the Aungelles do in heauen. Make that no man seeke hys owne will but all thine. But & if thou withdraw thyne hãd to tempt thy children, that the rulers cõmaunde ought contrary to thy will, then make the subiectes to stand fast by thy worde, & to offer themselues to suffer all extremitie, rather then to obey. Finally when we pray to thee in our temptations and aduersities, desiring thee of whatsoeuer thyng it be, and meane truely: yet if thou which knowest all, seest a better way to thy glory and our profite, then thy will be, and not ours. As thy sonne Jesus gaue vs an eusample, when he desired (if it had bene possible) that that cuppe of bitter death might haue departed frõ hym, saying: yet not as I will, but as thou wilt.

When we request any thing at Gods hãd, we must pray that his will be done, & not ours.

Geue vs our dayly bread.

Dayly bread, wherby is vnderstood all that pertaineth vnto the necessitie of this lyfe.

By bread is vnderstoode all maner of sustinaunce in the Ebrue speach, yea and here is vnderstand therby, all that pertayneth vnto the necessitie of thys life. If we haue bread, there is dearth of nothing ỳ can pinch, namely in that land, Geue vs our dayly bread. Geue vs all that the necessitie of this life dayly requireth. Geue it vs day by day, as we nede it. We desire not to haue store for many yeares, to exclude all necessitie of praying to thee, and to be as it were out of thy daunger, and to forget thee. But minister it day by day, that we may dayly feele thy benefites and neuer forget thee. Or if thou geue vs aboundaunce aboue that we desire, then geue vs an hart to vse it, and to bestow it for that purpose thou ganest it, and to deale with our neighbours, and not to loue it inordinatly. But to thinke that it is thyne, and that thou mayst take it away euery houre, and that we be content that thou so do at thy pleasure: and so euer to haue it but for dayly bread.

Forgeue vs our trespasses, as we forgeue our trespassers.

Because he knoweth that our nature is so weake that we cannot but sinne dayly: therefore he teacheth vs dayly to repẽt and to reconcile our selues together, and dayly to aske God forgeuenesse. Seing he cõmaundeth vs to aske, we may behold so to do, and to beleue that he will forgeue vs. No mã ther-therfore nedeth to dispayre that can repent and aske forgeuenesse, how euer so deepe he hath sinned. And me thinketh, if we looked somewhat nerer to this text, we neded not to make the Pope so great a God for his pardons. For Christ (which is a man to be beleued) sheweth vs here a more sure way, yea and that a sensible way, by which we may feele that we be pardoned and our sinnes forgeuen. We can haue no experiēce of the popes thynges whether they be so, or no. He can with all his pardons deliuer no man of any Purgatorie that God putteth vs vnto in this world. He cā not blesse, or heale any man so much as of a poore agew, or totheach, which diseases yet (by hys owne confession) God putteth on vs to purge vs from sinne. But where we cannot see, feele, or haue any experience at all, that it so is, there is hee mightie. If I were come whom out of a land where neuer mā was before, and were sure neuer mā should come, I might tel as many wonders as Master More doth of Vtopia, and no man could rebuke me.

A surer way then pardons.

But here, Christ maketh thee sure of pardon: for if thou canst forgeue thy brother, God hath bound him selfe to forgeue thee. What if no man haue sinned agaynst me? That were hard in this lyfe: neuertheless yet, if that profession be in thyne hart, that ỹ knowest that it is thy dutie to forgeue thy brother for thy fathers sake, and art obedient to thy fathers ordinaunce, and wouldest forgeue, if any of thy brethrē had offended thee and did aske thee forgeuenesse. Then hast thou that same spirit which God desireth to be in the. Marke what Christ sayth aboue in the begynnyng of the fift chap. Blessed be the mercyfull: for they shall haue mercy. Doest thou pitie thy brethren that sinne, and doest thy best to amend thē, that thy fathers name may be honoured: Thē hast thou that, whereby thou art sure of mercy, as soone as thou desirest it. And agayne: Blessed be the peace makers for they shall be Gods children. Lo, if there be any variaunce among thy brethren, that one haue offended the other, do thy best to set thē at one, and thou hast the same thing that God desireth of thee, and for which he hathe bound himselfe to forgeue thee.

How thou mayst bee sure of pardon for thy sinnes.

Leade vs not into temptation.

That is, let vs not slippe out of thy leafe, but hold vs fast: geue vs not vp nor cease to gouerne vs, nor take thy spirite from vs. For as an hounde can not but folow his game when he seeth it before him, if he be lowse, so can we not but fall into sinne when occasiō is geuen vs, if thou withdraw thine hand from vs. Lead vs not into temptatiō. Let no temptation fall vpon vs, greater then thine helpe in vs: But be thou stroger in vs then the temptation thou sendest or lettest come vpon vs. Lead vs not into tēptations: Father though we be negligent, yea and vnthankfull, and disobediēt to thy true Prophetes: yet let not the deuill lowse vpon vs, to deceaue vs, with his false Prophetes, and to harden vs in the way, in which we gladly walke, as thou diddest Pharao with the false miracles of his sorcerers, as thine Apostle Paule threateneth vs. ij. Thes. ij. A litle threde holdeth a strong man where he gladly is. A litle pullyng draweth a mā whether he gladly goeth. A litle wynde driueth a great shyp with the streame. A light persuasion is inough to make a lecherous mā beleue that fornication is no sinne. And an angry mā that it is lawfull to aduēge him selfe, and so forth by all the corrupt nature of man. A litle miracle is able to confirme and harden a man in that opinion, and faith which his blind reason beleueth all ready. A few false miracles were sufficiēt to persuade the couetousnesse of Pharao, and his gredynesse (to hold the children of Israell in bōdage for their seruice) that thy true miracles shewed by Moyses for their deliueraūce, were not of thee: But of the same kynd, and done by the same craft, as were the miracles of his sorcerers, and so to harden his hart.

We can not of our selues but fall into sinne.

Euen so father if thou geue vs ouer for our vnkyndnesse (seyng the blynd nature of man deliteth in euill, and is ready to beleue lyes) a litle thyng is inough to make them that lone thee all ready not to walke in thy truth, and therfore neuer able to vnderstand thy sonnes doctrine. John. vij: But for to beleue ỹ fayninges of our most holy father, all is superstitious Popery and inuisible blessinges, and to hardē them there in. As a stone cast vp into ỹ ayre, can neither go any higher neither yet there abyde, whē the power of the hurler ceaseth to driue it: Euen so father, seyng our corrupt nature can but go downeward onely, and the deuill and the world driueth therto ỹ same waye, how can we procede further in vertue

Small occasiony drawe vs to sinne, where into we are naturally prone.

or stand there in, if thy power cease in vs. Leade vs not therfore O merciful father into temptation nor cease at any tyme to gouerne vs. Now seyng the God of al mercy which knoweth thine infirmitie, commaundeth thee to pray in all temptation and aduersitie, and hath promised to helpe, if thou trust in him: what excuse is it to say, whē thou hast sinned, I could not stand of my selfe, when his power was ready to helpe thee, if thou haddest asked.

But deliuer vs from euill.

First (as aboue) let vs not fall into temptation. Secondarely, if we be fallen, as who liueth and falleth neuer: for neuer to fall were inough to make a mā as euill as Lucifer, and to beleue that he stode by his owne power. If therfore we be fallen euen to the bottome, how so euer deepe it be, put in thine arme after, for it is long & strong inough, and plucke vs out agayne. Thirdly, deliuer vs frō euill, & plucke vs out of the flesh, and the world, and the power of the deuill, and place vs in thy kyngdome, where we be past all ieopardy, and where we can not sinne any more.

Who should thinke hym selfe to be without sinne were as euill as Lucifer.

For the kingdome, and the power and the glorie is thyne for euer. Amen.

Because that thou onely art ỹ king, and all other but substitutes. And because all power is thyne, and all other mens power but borowed of thee: therfore ought all honour: and obedience to be thyne of right, as chief Lord: and none to be geuen other men, but onely for the office they hold of thee. Neither ought any creature to seeke any more in this world, then to be a brother, till thou haue put him in office: thē (if brotherlynesse will not helpe, whiche he ought first to proue) let hym execute thy power. Neither may any mā take authoritie of him selfe, till God haue chosē him: that is to wete, til he be chosen by the ordinaūce that God hath set in ỹ world, to rule it. Finally no King, Lord, Master or what ruler it be, hath absolute power in this world, & is the very thyng whiche he is called: For then they ceased to bee brethren still, neither could they sinne what soeuer they commaunded. But now their authoritie is but a limeted power. which when they transgresse, they sinne agaynst their brethren, and ought to reconcile them selues to their brethren & to aske forgeuenesse, & they are bounde to forgeue.

Finally let kynges, rulers and officers remember that God is the very kyng, and referre the honour that is geuen to them for their offices sake, to him, and humble them selues to him & knowledge and confesse in their harts, that they be but brethren and euen no better before God, then the worst of their subiectes. Amen.

Kynges & subiectes are al one afore God.

For if ye forgeue men theyr fautes, your heauenly father shall forgeue you also. But and if ye do not forgeue men their fautes, no more shall your father forgeue your fautes.

This is Gods couenaunt with vs, and a confirmation of the petition aboue rehearsed in the Pater noster: forgeue vs our trespasses, as we forgeue our trespassers. If thou wilt enter into the couenaūt of thy Lord God, and forgeue thy brother: then what soeuer thou hast committed agaynst God, if thou repēt and aske him forgeuenesse, thou art sure that thou art so absolued by these wordes, that none in heauen nor earth can bynde thee: No though our most holy father curse thee as blacke as coales, seuen foote vnder the earth and seuen foote aboue, and cast all his lightenyng vpon thee, to burne thee to powder Keepe the couenaunt of ỹ Lord thy God therfore, and feare no bugges. But and if thou wilt not come within the couenaunt of God, or if whē thou hast professed it and receaued the signe therof, thou cast the yoke of the Lord from of thy necke: be thou sure, thou art bound by these wordes so fast that none in heauen or in earth can lowse thee. No, though our earthlyhe God whisper all his absolutions ouer thee, & claw thee, & stroke thyne head with all his swete blessynges.

A couenaūt with vs, & is bounde to forgeue vs, and vs to forgeue ech other.

Gods couenaunt is a sure absolution to all that keepe.

Furthermore though forgeuenesse of thy sinnes be annexed to thy worke and forgeuyng thy brother: yet do not (as I said) thy workes iustifie thee before God. But the fayth in Christes bloud, & in the promises made to vs for his sake, doth bryng righteousnesse in to the hart. And the righteousnesse of the hart by fayth, is felt and knowen by the worke. As Peter in the first of his second Epistle commaūdeth to do good workes, for to make our vocatiō and election sure: that we might feele our fayth, & be certified that it is right. For except a man be proued and tryed, it cannot be knowen, neither to hym selfe or other men, that he is righteous and in the true faith. Take an example least thou be beguiled with sophistrie: Christ sayth Math. xiij. the kyngdome of heauen is like leuen which a womā taketh & hideth in thre peckes of meale till all be leuenned or soure. Leuen is sometyme takē in an euill sence, for the doctrine of the Pharisees, which corrupted the sweetenesse of the word of God with the leuē of their glosses: and sometime in a good sence, for the kingdome of heauen, that is to say the Gospell and glad tydinges of Christ. For as leuen altereth the nature of dowe and maketh it through sowre: euen so the Gospell turneth a man into a new life and altereth him a litle and a litle: first the hart, and then the members.

Leuen how many wayes it is taken.

Faith, what power it is of, and the frutes that spring therof.

Faith in Christ first certifieth the cōsciēce of the forgeuenesse of sinnes and deliuereth vs from the feare of euerlasting damnation: and then bringeth the loue of God & of his law into the hart, which loue is the righteousnesse of ẏ hart. Loue bringeth good workes into the mēbers, which workes are ẏ outward righteousnesse and the righteousnesse of the mēbers. To hate the will of God is the vnrighteousnesse of the hart, & causeth euill workes which are the vnrighteousnesse of the members. As whē I hated my brother, my young spake euill, my handes smote & so forth. To loue is the righteousnesse of the hart, and causeth good workes which are the righteousnesse of the mēbers. As if I loue my brother, and he haue nede of me & be in pouertie, loue will make me put myne hand into my purse or almory and to geue him some what to refresh him &c. That the loue of God and of his commaundementes is the righteousnesse of the hart, doth no man doubt saue he that is harriesse. And that loue springeth of fayth thou mayst euidētly see. i. Joh. ij. he ẏ loueth his brother dwelleth in ẏ light. But he that hateth his brother, is in darkenes, & walketh in darckenesse, and wotteth not whether he goeth, for darckenesse hath blynded his eyes. Why is he that hateth, in darcknesse (verely because he seeth not the loue of God in Christ. For if he saw that, he coulde not but loue his brother for so kynde a fathers sake. If any man hate his brother, be thou sure that the same mā is in darcknesse, and hath not ẏ light of true faith, nor seeth what Christ hath done. If a man so loue that he cā forgeue his brother, assure thy selfe that he is in the light of the true faith, and seeth what mercy is shewed him in Christ.

Leue is righteousnes.

Faith bringeth loue.

This is then the summe of altogether: workes are the outward righteousnes before ẏ world, & may be called the righteousnes of ẏ mēbers, & spring of inward loue. Loue is the righteousnes of the hart, and springeth of faith. Faith is the trust in Christes bloud, & is the gift of God. Ephes. ij. whereunto a man is drawen of the goodnesse of God, and driuen thorow true knowledge of the lawe, and of beholding his deedes in the lust and desire of the members vnto the request of the lawe, and with seing his owne dampnation in the glasse of the lawe. For if a man sawe his owne dampnation in ẏ law, he should immediatly hate God & hys workes, and vtterly dispayre, except God offered him Christ, and forgaue all that were past, and made hym hys sonne, and tooke the dampnatiō of the lawe away, and promised that if he would submit himself to learne and to do his best, that he should be accepted as well as an Angell in heauē, and therto if he fell of frailtie, and not of malice and stubbornnesse, it should be forgeuen vpon amendment, and that God would euer take him for his sonne, and onely chastice him at home whē he dyd amysse, after the most fatherlyest maner, and as easely as his disease would suffer, but neuer bring him forth to be iudged after the rigorousnes of ẏ law. And as thou couldest not see Leauen though thou brakest vp a loafe, except thou smelledst or tastedst the sourenes, euē so couldest thou neuer see true faith or loue, except thou sawest workes: & also sawest the entent & meaning of ẏ worker, least hipocrisie deceaue thee.

Workes.

Loue.

Faith.

Ye Leauen can not be seene in a loafe without smell or tast, so cannot fauth in vs without good workes, and ẏ intent of the same be seene or appeare.

Our deedes are the effect of righteousnesse, and thereto an outward testimonie and certifying of the inwarde righteousnes, as sourenes is of Leauen. And when I say fayth iustifieth, the vnderstanding is, that faith receaueth the iustifying. God promiseth to forgeue vs our sinnes, and to impute vs for full righteous. And God iustifieth vs actiuely: that is to say, forgeueth vs and reckoneth vs for full righteous. And Christes bloud deserueth it, and faith in the promise receaueth it, and certifieth the conscience therof. Faith chalēgeth it for Christes sake, which hath deserued all that is promised, and cleaueth euer to the promise, and truth of the promiser, and pretendeth not the goodnes of her worke, but knowledgeth that our workes deserue it not, but are crowned and rewarded with the deseruinges of Christ. Take an ensample of young children, when the father promiseth them a good thing for ẏ doing of some trifle, and when they come for their rewarde, delayeth with them saying: what, that thou hast done is not worth halfe so much: should I geue thee so great a thing for so little a trifle: They will answere: ye did promise me: ye sayd I should haue it: why did ye promise, and why then did ye say so: And let him say what he will to driue them of, they will euer say agayne: ye did promise me, so ye did: ye sayd I should haue it, so ye did. But hirelinges wyll pretend their woorke and say: I haue deserued it: I haue done so much, and so much, and my labour is worth it.

That fayth iustifieth, what it meaneth.

Faith. Now at the first couenaunt making with God, and as oft as we be reconciled, after we haue sinned, the righteousnes commeth of God altogether. But after the attonement is made and we reconciled, then we be partly righteous in our selues & vnrighteous: righteous as farre as we loue, and vnrighteous as farre as the loue is vnperfect. And faith in ẏ promise of God ẏ he doth reckē vs for full righteous doth euer supply ẏ vnrighteousnes & imperfectnes, as it is our whole righteousnes at the beginning.

Workes are sacramentes. Finally, our workes which God commaundeth, and vnto which he annexed his promises that he will reward them, are as it were very sacramētes and visible and sensible signes, tokens, earnest obligations, witnesses, testimonies, and a sure certifying of our soules, that God hath and will do according to his promise, to strēgth our weake fayth, and to keepe the promise in mynde. But they iustifie vs not, no more then the visible workes of the sacramentes do. As for an example, the worke of baptime, that outward washing, which is the visible sacramēt or signe, iustifieth vs not. But God onely iustifieth vs actiuely, as cause efficient or workeman. God promiseth to iustifie whosoeuer is baptised to beleue in Christ, and to keepe the law of God, that is to say, to forgeue them their foresinnes, and to impute righteousnesse vnto them, to take them for his sonnes, and to loue them as well as though they were full righteous. Christ hath deserued vs ẏ promise, and that righteousnes. And faith doth receaue it, & God doth geue it & impute it to faith, & not to ẏ washing. And the washing doth testifie it, and certifie vs of it, as the Popes letters do certifie the beleuers of the Popes pardons. Now the letters helpe not or hinder, but that the pardōs were as good without them, saue onely to stablishe weake soules that could not beleue except they reade the letters, looked on the seale, and saw the print of Saint Peters keyes. Faith. Baptim. Christ.

O a mercifull God and a most louing father, how careth he for vs: first aboue all and beside all his other benefites, to geue vs hys owne sonne Iesus, and with him to geue vs hymselfe and all: and not contēt therewith, but to geue vs so many sacraments, or visible signes to prouoke vs & to helpe our weake fayth, & to keepe hys mercy in mynde: as baptime, the sacramēt of his body and bloud, and as many other sacramentes as they will haue, if they put significations to them (for we destroy none, but they destroy which haue put out the significations or fayned some without) as wedlocke to signifie that Christ is the husband and we his wife and partakers wyth hym, as the wife with her husband of all his riches. &c. And beyond all those visible sacramentes, to geue vs yet more sensible and surer sacramentes & suraunces of his goodnes, euen in our owne selues: as if we loue and geue almose to our neighbour, if we haue compassion and pray for him, if we be mercifull and forgeue him, if we deny our selues, and fast, and withdraw all pleasures from the flesh for loue of the life to come: and to keepe the cōmaundemētes of God. For whē such things beyng before impossible, and now are easie and naturall, we feele, and are sure that we be altered and of a new creature shapen in righteousnesse after the image of Christ and God our father, seing his lawes of righteousnes are written in our hartes.

When ye fast, be not sad as the hipocrites are. For they fashion them a new countenaunce, that it might appeare vnto men how they fast. Verely I say vnto you, they haue their rewarde. Thou therefore when thou fastest, annointe thine head, & washe thy face, that it appeare not vnto men how thou fastest. But vnto thy father which Fast.

is in secrete. And thy father which seeth in secrete, shall rewarde thee openly.

If fasting be vsed to any other end then to tame the flesshe, that thereby we may be the more prone to serue God, it is abused.

As aboue of almose and prayer: euē so here Christ rebuketh the false entent and hipocrisie of fasting. That they sought prayse of that worke that was ordayned for to tame the flesshe, and vsed such fashions, that all the worlde might know that they fasted, to prayse them, and to say: O what holy mē are these, how pale and pitifull looke they, euen like death, hanging downe their heades, and beholding the earth, as mē cleane out of the worlde: If these come not to heauen, what shall become of vs poore wretches of the worlde: If these be not great in the fauour of god, and their prayers be heard whatsoeuer they aske, in what case are we laye people? Happy is he that may be a brother among them, & partaker of their prayers and fastinges, and other holy liuing. In an vnhappy, in an happy (I woulde say) houre was he borne that buildeth them a cell or a cloysture, or geueth them a portion of his land to comfort them good men, in thir painfull liuing and straite penaunce which they haue taken vpon them. Blessed were he that might kisse the edge of the coate of one of thē. Oh, he that myght haue his body wrapped in one of their olde coates at the houre of death; it were as good to him as his Christendome. &c. It appeareth also by that they asked Christ why his disciples fasted not as well as the pharisees, that they oft fasted when the common people fasted not, and all to appeare holy. As ours fast Aduent, and beginne before Lent at Septuagesima, whē Laus tibi domine commeth in.

To annoint the head, what it meaneth.

And concerning the annointing of thy head. &c. is ment, as afore of turning the other cheeke, and of that the left hand should not know what the right did: that is, that they shoulde auoyde all vaine glory, and fast to god, and for the entent that God ordeyned it for, and that with a merry hart and chearefull countenaunce, thereby to feele the working of God, and to be sure of his fauour. Such is the meaning, & not to bynde thē that will fast to annointe their head and washe their faces. And the maner or phrase of speaking commeth of an vsage, that was among the Iewes, to annoint themselues with swete and odoriferous annointmentes whē they were disposed to be merry and to make good cheare, as ye see how Mary of Bethanie powred a bore of precious ointement vppon Christes head at supper.

Fastyng.

As cōcerning fasting, it were good, that kinges and rulers did set an order of sobernes among their subiectes, to auoyde dearth, innumerable diseases, and ỹ great heape of vices that spring of intemperancy, and that they forbid not onely riote and excesse: but also all maner wanton, delicious, and customable eating and drinking of such thynges as corrupt the people, & make the men more effeminate then the women, so that there remayneth no more tokens of a man in them saue theyr beardes. Our fashions of eating make vs slouthfull and vnlusty to labour & study: vnstable, inconstant, and lyght manered: full of wittes, after witted (as we call it) incircumspect inconsiderate, heady, rash, and hasty to begyn vnaduisedly, and without tasting of perils, the end not cōsidered what may folow, nor ỹ meanes well looked vpon, how and by what way the matter might be brought to passe, trifflers, mockers, rude, vnsauery iesture without all maner of salt, and euen very apes and marmesettes, and full of wanton and ribaldish communication & lewde gestures. It corrupteth the witte with false iudgement, and infecteth the body with lust, and maketh the whole man so vnquiet in him selfe, that the body cannot sit still and rest in one place and continue in his worke, nor the mynde perseuer and endure in one purpose.

The harys of inconueniences that spring by intemperate & superfluous eating, and drinking.

Let them prouide that there be diligent fishyng in the Sea, & commaunde the Sea cost and townes whether fish may easely come, to fast Friday, Saterday and Wensday to if nede be, & on the friday to eate no white meate. And let the countreys which haue none aboundance of fish, yet haue white meate inough, fast Friday and Saterday frō flesh onely. And let those countreys where scarsetie of both is, fast Friday from flesh onely, and eate flesh Wensday and Saterday. But abstayne from supper or from dyner, or eate soberly those dayes. And let them so moderate their fastes that the people may beare it, a prouisiō made for the old, the sicke and feble &c. which fast shalbe a tempo rall thyng, for a temporall common wealth onely, & not a seruice to God.

Fastyng dayes, or dayes of abstinence are to be ordained for commos weales sake.

Then let the Priestes preach first the law truly and teach the people to see their sinnes, and so bryng them to repentaunce: And secondearely the fayth of Christ and the forgiuenesse of sinne through fayth: And thyrdly almose, prayer, & fasting, which are the whole life of a Christē man, & without which there is no Christen man a liue. And let them preach the true vse of their almose, which is to helpe thy neighbour with counsell, with body and goodes and all that is in thy power: and the true vse of prayer whiche is to bryng his necessitie and thyne owne before God with a strong fayth in his promises: and the true vse of fastyng, which is to tame ỹ flesh vnto ỹ spirit, that the soule may attende to the word of God and pray through fayth.

Almose.

Prayer.

Fasting.

By these three we kepe the spirite of God, and both cōtinue and also grow in righteousnesse and ware perfecter & perfecter in soule & body. And if these fayle or that we vnderstand not the right entēt, we loose the spirite againe, and the righteousnesse of fayth, and the true vnderstandyng of the Scripture, and all our learnyng shalbe but pure darcknesse. And then what a blyndenesse is that, whē the darcknesse of hell is called the light of heauen.

Almose, prayer, and fasting, how necessary.

As it is of almose & prayer, so it is of fastyng: iudge like of all thre. where any one of them is, there are they all thre: and where any one is away, there is none at all. We must haue the profession of all three euer written in our harts. I must euer loue my neighbour and be ready to helpe, and when occasion is offered, then do it. I ought to cōsider and know that all commeth of God, and to knowledge that same to him in myne hart. And what so euer we nede, we ought to know, that we must receaue that of God, and therfore to call euer to him with a strong fayth. Euen so I must euer fight agaynst my flesshe, and therefore euer withdraw from it all that moueth it to rebell agaynst the spirite.

Almose, prayer, and fasting, are inseperable

So now fastyng standeth not in eatyng and drinkyng onely, and much lesse in flesh alone. But in abstinence of all that moueth the flesh agaynst the spirite, as long sleepyng, idlenesse, and filthy communication and all worldly talkyng, as of couetousnesse and promotion and such like, and wanton cōpany, soft clothes, and soft beddes and so forth. which are that right hand and right eye that must be cut of and plucked out, that the whole mā perish not. And as ye can put no generall rule of almose or prayer, no more can ye of fastyng. But I must be all way ready to cut of what soeuer I perceaue to strēgth the flesh agaynst the spirit. And I must haue a diligent eye to the flesh and his complexion, and if ought scape me in word or dede, seke whēce the occasiō came, and at once cut of that right hand, and plucke out that eye.

Fasting is not in eating and drinking onely.

If this fast be truly preached, then is fasting good, and not afore, for making of hypocrites: as Christ would not let his Disciples fast before they were learned, lest they should therby haue bene no better then the Pharisseis. And then the outward fastyng ordayned by the temporall rulers helpeth much, for the weakes sake. Yea and though the land were so plenteous that it neded not to cōmaūde such fast for to auoide dearth, yet they ought to set such vp. Because of them that cannot rule them selues, for whose sakes they ought to forbyd excesses of tauernes and alehouses and rioryng out of season. For if the people could rule them selues, what ned rulers. Moreouer if any man priuately shew the Priest his infirmities, and the Priest see any maner of abstinence or chastising apte for the person, that let him councell him to do for the subduc-yng of the flesh, and not commaund as a tyraunt vnder payne of damnation and to make satisfaction. Thus wise let him say: brother or sister: ye be boūd vnder payne of deadly sinne to tame your flesh by some maner of way that ye sinne not agaynst God: & I know no better then this: my councell & my desire therfore is, that ye vse this till either ye haue no more nede, or till god shew you some better &c. And let the elders consider diligently the course of their youth, and with wisedome, counsell and discrete gouernaunce, helpe the younger to auoyde the perils and ieopardies whiche they haue learned by their owne experiēce to be in that daūgerous iourney.

Workes make hypocrites, if ỹ true entent be away.

Rulers be ordayned for thē that cannot rule thēselues.

Moreouer when the people be fallē from their professiō and from the law: as it shalbe impossible for the preacher, to kepe the great multitude together, if the temporal sword be slacke and negligent in punishing open offences (as they euer haue and wilbe, saue in those poyntes onely wherein lyeth the pith of their owne profite and aduauntage, and the weight of their honour & maintenaunce of their dignities) and when God also (as hys promise is) hath brought vppon them the curses of the law: hunger, dearth, battaile, pestilence

Preachers. The office of a true preacher.

Note this well, ye temporall magistrates.

and

and all maner of plagues with all misfortune and euill lucke. Then let the true preachers be importune, & shew the people the causes of their miserie & wretched aduersitie, and expounde the law to them and bring them to knowledge of their sinnes, and so binde their consciences and draw them to repentaunce and to the appointement & conenaunt of the Lord agayne. As many holy Prophetes, Priestes and Kinges in the old Testament did call the people backe and brought them agayne in tyme of aduersitie, vnto the appoyntement of the Lord. And the Priest, Prophete or Kyng in Gods stede smote handes with them, and tooke an oth of them, to be the Lordes people and to turne agayne to the Lordes conenaũt, for to keepe his law and to beleue in his promises. And God immediatly withdrew his hand and tyd them out of all captiuitie and daunger, & became as merycfull as euer before.

Prophets, Priestes, yea and Kynges of the old Testamẽt were zealous Preachers.

But we Christẽ haue bene very seldome or neuer called agayne to the conenaunt of the Lord, the law of God and fayth of Christ: But to the conenaunt of the Pope often. As he now clocketh a pase for his chekyns & will both proue all his old policies, & seke and imagine new practises. And if the people come agayne let the Priest or Bysshop after the ensample of the Prophetes and hygh Priestes of the Israelites take an oth in Gods stede of the Kyng and Lordes. And let the Kyng and Lordes receaue an othe of the people, and folow the example of the Niniuites in fastyng and praying.

Papistes haue often bene called to the Popes conenaunt, but seldome to the Lords.

Some man will say: seyng fastyng is to withdraw all pleasures from the body and to punish the flesh, then God deliteth in our payne takyng &c. I answere: God deliteth in true obedience & in all that we do at his commaundement and for the entent that he commaundeth it for. If thou loue and pitie thy neighbour and helpe him, thy almose is acceptable. If thou do it of vayne glory to haue the prayse that belongeth to God, or for a greater profite onely, or to make satisfactiõ for thy sinnes past and to dishonour Christes bloud, which hath made it all ready: then is thyne almose abhominable. If thy prayer be thãkes in hart or callyng to God for helpe with trust in him according to his promise: thẽ thy prayer pleaseth. If thou beleue in Christes bloud for the remission of sinnes, and hencefoorth hatest sinne, that thou punishest thy body to tie thy lustes & to keepe them vnder that thou sinne not agayn, then it pleaseth God exceedingly. But & if thou thinke that God delyteth in the worke for the worke it self, the true intent away, & in thy payne for thy paine it selfe, ỹ art as farre out of the way as frõ heauen to the earth. If ỹ wouldest kil thy body or whẽ it is tame inough: payne him further that thou were not able to serue God & thy neighbour, according to the rowme and estate thou art in, thy sacrifice were cleane without salt, & all together vnsauery in the tast of God, and thou mad and out of thy witte. But and if thou trust in thy worke, then art thou abhominable.

Payne.

How God deliteth in our payne takyng.

Now let vs looke on the Popes fast. First the entent should be to tame thy lustes, not lechery onely, but pride chiefly, wrath, malice, hate, enuie, & couetousnes, and to keepe the lawe of God, and therefore standeth not in meate and drinke onely, but how they keepe Gods lawe, compare it to their deedes and thou shalt see. Secondarily the fast of the olde lawe was, to put on mourning clothes, as heire or sack, and neither to eate nor drinke vntill night, and all the while to pray and to do almose deedes and shewe mercy. And at euen they eate flesh and what God gaue, soberly as little as would sustaine the body. &c. The Popes fast is commonly, onely to eate no flesh. I say not looke how leane they be, but consider what a taming of the flesh it is, to eate ten or twenty manner of fishes dressed after the costliest maner, & to sitte a cople of houres, and to poure in of the best wine and Ale that may be gotten. And at night to banquet with dew (as they say) of all maner of fruits and confections, marmelad, Succad, Grenegynger, comffettes, sugerplate, with malmelay & romney burnt with suger, Synamond & cloues, with bastarde, Muscadell and Ipocrasse. &c. Thinke ye not that such dewes wyth drinking a peece of saltfishe or a Pickrell, doth not tame ỹ body exceedingly?

The popes fast.

A fastyng fast.

Furthermore that the true entent is away both of their fasting & prayers, it is euident: first by the multiplying of them, for when the Iewes had loste the vnderstanding of their sacrifices, and did beleue in the worke, then they were mad vpon them, that well was he that could robbe him selfe to offer most: in so much that the Prophetes cryed out against them, that their offeringes stanke in the nose of God. And Fastyng.

The true intent is a way from the Popes fastyng.

ours had so multiplyed their fasting that they coulde no longer beare them. At the beginning they were tollerable for the vauntage: quia leuis est labor cũ lucro. But when they had purchased inough and inough agayne, they became intollerable. And therefore all our Monkes whose profession was neuer to eate flesshe, set vp the Pope, & tooke dispensations, both for that fast, and also for their straite rules, & made their straite rules as wide as ỳ hoodes of their cowles. And as for the hipocrisie of the fratrie where they eate but inuisible flesh, or that is interpret to be no flesshe is spoken of in other places. An other proofe is, that they so long a tyme haue geuen pardons of the merites of their fasting, as though they had done more then inough for themselues, and of that marchaundise haue gotten all they haue, and haue brought the knowledge of Christes bloude cleane into darcknesse. And last of all, what shall I say of the open idolatry of innumerable fastes: of saint Brandons fast, Saint Patrickes fast, of 4. holy Fridayes, of Saint Antonies betwene Saint Maries dayes, of our Lady fast, either vij. yeare the same day that her day falleth on in March, and then beginne, or one yeare with bread and water, and all for what purposes, ye know well inough, and of suchlike, I trowe ten thousand in the worlde. And who hath rebuked them?

Monkes made the Pope a God for his dispensations.

See that ye gather not treasure vppon the earth, where rust and mothes corrupt, and where theues breake vp and steale, But gather you treasure in heauen, where neither rust nor mothes corrupt, and where theeues neither breake vp nor steale. For where your treasure is, there will be your hartes also.

Note the goodly order of Christes preaching. First he restored the true vnderstanding of the lawe, then ỳ true intent of the workes. And here consequently he rebuketh the mortall foe & sworne enemy, both of true doctrine and true liuing, which is couetousnes the roote of all euill sayth Paule. 1. Tim. 6. Couetousnes is Image seruice. Col. 3. It maketh men to erre frõ the faith. 1. Tim. 6. It hath no part in the kingdome of Christ & God. Ephe. 5. Couetousnes hardened the hart of Pharao that the sayth of the miracles of God could not sinke into it. Couetousnes did make Balam which knew all ỳ truth of God to hate it, & to geue the most pestilent and poysonfull counceli against it, that hart could imagine, euen for to destroy it if it had bene possible. Couetousnes taught the false prophetes in the olde testament to interpret the law of God falsely, and to peruert the meaning and entent of all the sacrifices and ceremonies, and to slea ỳ true preachers that rebuked thẽ.

Couetousnes what a pestilence it is.

And with their false perswasions they did leade all the kinges of Israell out of the right way, and the most part of the kynges of Juda also. And Peter in the second chapter of his second Epistle prophesieth that there should be false teachers among vs, that shoulde follow the way of Balã (that is to say, for couetousnes persecute the truth) & thorow couetousnes with fained wordes to make marchaundise of the people, and to bring in dampnable sectes to. And here ye haue an infallible rule that where couetousnes is, there is no truth: no though they call themselues the church, and say thereto that they cãnot erre. Couetousnes kept Judas stil in vnbeliefe though he saw and did also many miracles in the name of Christ, and compelled him to sell hym to the Scribes and Phariseis: for couetousnes is a thyng merciles. Couetousnes made the Phariseis to lye on Christ, to persecute hym, and falsely to accuse hym. And it made Pilat though he founde hym an innocent, yet to slay hym. It caused Herode to persecute Christ yet in his cradell. Couetousnes maketh hipocrites to persecute ỳ truth against their owne consciences, and to lye to Princes, that the true preachers moue sedition and make their subiects to rise against them, and the sayd couetousnes maketh the Princes to beleue their wicked perswasions, and to lẽde their swordes to shed innocent blond.

2. Pet 2.

Couetousnes cannot but erre.

Finally couetousnes maketh many (whom the truth pleaseth at the beginning) to cast it vp againe and to be afterward the most cruell enemies therof, after the ensample of Symon Magus. Act. 8. Yea and after the ensample of Sir Thomas More K. which knew the truth, and for couetousnes forsooke it agayne, and conspired first with the Cardinall to deceaue ỳ kyng, and to leade hym in darcknes. And afterwarde when the light was sprong vpon them, and had driuen thẽ cleane out of the scripture, and had deliuered it out of their tyranny, and had expelled led the darcke stinking mist of their deuelish gloses: and had wiped away the cobwebbes which those poysoned spiders had spread vpon the face of the cleare text, so that the spiritualtie (as they call themselues) were ashamed of their part, as shameless as they be: yet for all that, couetousnes blynded the eyes of that glering Fore, more & more, and hardened his hart agaynst ỳ truth, with the confidence of his painted Poetry, babbling eloquence, and iuggeling argunents of subtill sophistry, grounded on his vnwritten veritles, as true and as autentike as hys story of Utopia. Paule therefore biddeth Timothy to charge the rich to beleue in the liuing god, and not in their vncertaine riches, for it is impossible for a couetous Idolater or Image seruer, that trusteth in the dead God of his riches, to put hys trust in the lyuing God.

Couetousnes blinded the eyes & hardened ỳ hart of Sir Thomas More.

The cõmodities that folow couetous and worldly rich men.

One misery is, that they which here gather & lay vp, cannot tell for whom. An other is, rust, canker, mothes, and a thousãd misfortunes, beside, theues, extortioners, oppressors, & mighty tirants, to ỳ which ỳ rich be euer a pray. And though they prosper to ỳ end outwardly, yet feare euer gnaweth their hartes inwardly. And at the houre of death they know & feele that they haue gathered naught, & then sorrow they, and are like one that dreameth of riches, and in the morning when he findeth nought, is heauy and sory for the remẽbraunce of the pleasaunt dreame. And finally when they be most loth to die and hope to liue long, thẽ they perishe sodainly, after the ensample of ỳ rich man which entended to make him larger barnes and store houses. Happy therfore is he that layeth vp treasure in heauen, and is rich in faith and good workes: for the rewarde thereto promised shall God kepe sure for him: no man can take it away. Here is not forbidden to haue riches. But to loue it, to trust in it, and to be carefull for it. For God hath promised to care for vs, and to geue vs inough, & to keepe that which is gotten, if we will care to keepe his commaundementes. whatsoeuer office or degree thou art in, in this world, do the dutie of thine office diligently, and trust in God, & let hym care. If thou be an husband man, eare and sow, and husband thy ground, and let God alone for the rest, he will care to make it grow plenteously, and to send seasonable weather to haue it in, and will prouide thee a good market to sell. &c.

Luke.xij.

In like maner, if thou be a kyng, do the office of a king, and receaue the duties of the kyng, and let God care to keepe thee in thy kingdome. His fauour shall do more for thee thẽ a thousand millions of golde, and so of all other. He that hath but a little and is sure that God shall keepe both him & it, is richer then he which hath thousandes, and hath none other hope thẽ that he and it must be kept wyth hys owne care and policy.

And finally marke one point in Luke.14. None of them that refuseth not al that he possesseth cã be my disciple, that is, he that casteth not away ỳ loue of all worldly thinges, can be no scholer of Christes to learne his doctrine. Thẽ he addeth that salt is good, but if the salt be vnsauery or hath lost his vertue, what can be seasoned therwith? verely nothing. Now by salt is vnderstand the doctrine, and the meaning is, if ye be couetous and loue worldly thinges, it will corrupt ỳ salt of your doctrine, so that whatsoeuer you powder therewith it shalbe more vnsauery then before.

Luke.xiiij.

Couetousnes maketh the salte of Godes worde vnsauery.

where your treasure is, there are your hartes. If your treasure be in ỳ worlde, so is the loue of your hartes. And if ye loue the world & the thynges of the world, the loue of God is not in you, and the loue of God is the loue of his commaundements: and he that loueth not Gods commaundementes shall neuer preach them truely, because he loueth them not. But shall corrupt them with gloses that they may stand with that which his hart loueth, and vntill they haue an other sence then euer God gaue them. Ergo no couetous person can be a true Prophet. It is not for nought then that Christ so oft and so diligently warneth his disciples to beware of couetousnes, as of that thing which he wist well had euer corrupt the worde of God, and euer shoulde.

Couetousnes maketh a false Prophet.

The light of thy body is thyne eye, wherfore if thine eye be single, all thy body shall be full of lyght. But and if thine eye be wicked, thã shall thy whole body be darcke. If therfore the light that is in thee be darcknesse, how great is that darknesse.

Note the conclusion wyth a proper simili-similitude. The eye is the light of the body, and by the light of the eye all other members see and are gouerned. As long as the eye seeth, hand & foote do their duties, neyther is there any feare that a man should stumble or fall into fire or water. But if the eye be blynde, all the body is blinde, and that so blinde that there is no remedy at al: set a candle before hym, he seeth not, gene hym a lanterne in hys hand, and yet he goeth not straighte. Bring him out into the sunne & point hym vnto ỳ which thou wouldest haue hym see, yt boteth not. Euen so, if couetousnesse haue blinded the spirituall eye, & peruerted the right entent of the lawe of God, and of the workes commaunded by God, and of the sacrifice, ceremonies, and sacramentes, and of all other ordinaunces of God (which entent is the spirituall eye) then is all the doctrine darcke and very blyndnes: yea and then how darke is the darcknes, when that which is pure blindnes is beleued to be light: how darcke is the doctrine of them that teach that a man may compell God wyth the woorkes of free will to geue them hys fauour & grace, or make God vnrighteous? How darcke is the doctrine of them which (to ỳ rebuke of Christes bloud) teach that woorkes do iustifie before God, and make satisfaction for sinnes? How blinde are they which thinke prayer to be the pattering of many wordes, and will therefore not onely be prayed and payed of the world, but also by the title thereof chalenge heauē & not by ỳ merites of Christes bloud? How darcke is the doctrine of them whose fayth is onely and all together in appointmentes which they themselues haue fayned betweene them and God, vnto which yet God neuer subscribed: In which also they assigne what worke and how much they will do, and what rewarde, and how great God must geue them, or chuse whether he will be vnrighteous.

How darcke is the doctrine of them that say stifly that the worke of the Sacramentes in it selfe (not referring it to styre vp the faith of the promises annexed to thē) doth iustifie: and affirme that bodely payne for the payne it selfe (not referryng it either to the loue of ỳ law of god or of their neighbour) doth please God? How darcke, damnable & deuelish is the doctrine of them which not onely thinke lucre to be the seruice of God, but also are so farre past all shame that they affirme they be the holy Church and cannot erre, and all that they decree, must be an article of our fayth, and that it is damnable once to doubt or search the Scripture whether their doctrine will therto agree or no: But say their decrees must be beleued as they sound, how contrary so euer the Scripture be: and the Scripture must be expounded and made agree to them. They neede not to regarde the Scripture, but to do and say as their holy Ghost moueth them: and if the Scripture be contrary, then make it a nose of waxe and wrest it this way and that way till it agree.

Faith of workes was the darcknesse of the false Prophets, out of the which the true could not draw them. Faith of workes was the blyndnesse of the pharisees, out of the which neither John Baptist nor Christ could bryng them. And though John Baptist pyped to them with reasons of the Scripture inuincible, and Christ therto added miracles, yet the Pharisees would not daunce. For John Baptist (as they thought) was to mad to lyue so strayte a life, and to refuse to be iustified therby. And as for Christ & his Disciples, the Pharisees were much holyer themselues, fasted oftener, and prayed thicker, yea and vttered many mo wordes in their prayer then they. Fayth of workes is that belefe of the Turkes & Iewes which driueth them euer away from Christ. Faith of workes hath ben that light of darcknes in which a great part of vs Christen haue walked euer sence Pelagius and Faustus, well about vij. C. yeares, and euer mo and mo: & in which all our religious haue walked all and more to this foure or fiue hundred yeare: & in which the Priestes also haue walked a long season, the Lord bryng them out agayne.

Finally how darcke is the darcknesse when a Pharisey and a very Pelagian standeth vp, and preacheth agaynst the Pharisees & the Pelagians and is alowed of al ỳ audience? And in conclusion when the world euer sence it began hath & doth of naturall blindnesse beleue in their owne workes, thē if the Scripture be peruerted to confirme that errour, how sore are their hartes hardened and how depe is that darckenesse.

No man can serue two masters, for he shal either hate the one, and loue the other, or cleaue to the one,

Darckenesse. — Couetousnes causeth darcknesse. — Darckenesse. — The doctrines of the Popes doctrine here playnely appeareth. — Fayth in workes is darcknesse. — Darcknes.

one, and despise the other. Ye can not serue God and Mammon.

Mammon what it is,

Mammon is riches or abundance of goods. And Christ concludeth with a plaine similitude, that as it is impossible to serue two contrary masters, & as it is impossible to be retayned vnto two diuers Lords, which are enemies one to the other, so is it impossible to serue God and Mammon. Two masters of one mynde, & one will, might a man serue: for if one wil, one mynde, and one accorde be in twenty then are they all but one master. And two masters where one is vnder the other and a substitute, may a man serue. For the seruice of the inferiour is the cõmaundement of the superiour. As to serue & obey Father, Mother, Husband, Master and Lord is Gods commaundement. But and if the inferiour be of a contrary will to the superiour, & commaunde any contrary thing, then mayst thou not obey. For now they be two cõtrary masters. So God and Mammon are two cõtrary masters: yea two contrary Gods, and of contrary commaundementes.

Mammon is a God.

God sayth, I thy Lord God am but one, & me shalt ỹ serue alone: that is, ỹ shalt loue me with all thyne hart, or with thyne whole hart, with all thy soule & with all thy might. Thou shalt neither serue, obey or lone any thyng saue me and that I byd thee: & that as farre and no further then I byd thee.

And Mammon sayth the same. For Mammon wilbe a God also and serued and loued alone.

God sayth, see thou loue thy neighbour, that thou labour with thine hãds to get thy liuyng and somewhat aboue to helpe him.

Mãmon sayth, he is called thy neighbour, because he is nye thee. Now who is so nye thee as thy self. Ergo proximus esto tibi: that is lone thy selfe, & make lewde and vyle wretches to labour diligently to get thee as much as thou mayst, and some scrappes aboue for them selues. Or wilt thou be perfect? Then diligently thy selfe and put on a gray coate, a blacke or a pyed & gene thy selfe to deuotion, despise the world and take a cowtous, (I would say a contemplatiue life) vpon thee. Tell the people how hoate Purgatorie is, and what paynes there must be suffered for small faultes. And then gene mercyfully a thousãd folde for one, spirituall for tẽporall: gene heauen, and take but house and land, and foolish tẽporall thynges.

Mammon teacheth mẽ diligẽce for selues.

God sayth, iudge truly betwene thy brethren, and therefore take no giftes. Mammon sayth, it is good maner and a poynt of curtesie to take that is offered. And he that geueth thee loueth thee better then such a churlle that geueth thee naught, yea & thou art more bound to fauour his cause?

God sayth, sell and gene almose.

Mammon sayth lay vp to haue inough to maintayne thyne estate and to defẽd thee from thyne enemyes and to serue thee in thyne age. &c.

The seruauntes of Mammon are not of Christes Church.

For as much then as God & Mammon be two so contrary masters, that whosoeuer will serue God, must gene vp Mammon, and all that will serue Mammõ must forsake God: it followeth that they which are the sworne seruaũts of Mammon, and haue his holy spirite, and are his faithfull Church, are not the true seruaunts of God, nor haue his spirite of truth in them, or can be his true Church.

The seruaunt of Mammon is no true preacher.

Moreouer seing that God & Mammon be so contrary that Gods worde is death in Mammons eare, & his doctrine poyson in Mammons mouth: it followeth that if the ministers of Gods word do fauour Mammon, they will so fashion their speach & so sound their wordes that they may be pleasaunt in the eares of Mammon.

To bee Mammõs seruaunt what it is.

Finally alonely to haue richesse is not to be the seruaũt of Mammon, but to loue it and cleaue to it in thyne hart. For if thou haue goods onely to maintene the office whiche God hath put thee in, & of the rest to helpe thy neighbours nede, so art thou Lord ouer thy Mammon and not his seruaunt. Of thẽ that be rich, how shalt thou know the master of Mammon from the seruaunt? verely first by the getting, secondarely when his poore neighbour complaineth, if he be Mammons seruaunt, Mammon wil shut vp his hart and make hym without compassion. Thirdly the crosse of Christ will trye them the one from the other. For whẽ persecution ariseth for the word: then will the true seruaunt of Christ byd Mammon adew. And the faithfull seruaunt of Mammon will vtter his hypocrisie, and not onely renounce the doctrine of Christ, but also be a cruel & a sharpe persecuter therof, to put away all surmise, and that his fidelitie which he hath in his master Mammon, may openly appeare.

Mammõs seruaunt how he is knowen.

Therfore I say vnto you, care not for your lyues what ye shall eate, or what ye shall drinke, neither for your bodyes what ye shall put on. Is not the lyfe more then meate, and the body more then the rayment?

The goodnes of god towarde mankynd.

He that buildeth a costely house euē to the tyrying, will not leaue there and lose so great cost for so small a trifle more. No more will he that gaue thee so precious a soule & so bewtifull a body, let either of them perish agayne before ỹ day, for so small a thing as foode or rayment. God neuer made mouth but he made meate for it, nor body but he made rayment also. Howbeit Mām̄on blindeth our eyes, so that we can neither see nor iudge a right.

Behold the foules of the ayre, how they sow not, neither reape nor gather into storehouses, and yet your heauenly father fedeth them. And are not ye farre better then they? Which of you with takyng thought, is able to put one cubite vnto his stature?

Wyldes & beastes teache vs to put away care.

He that careth for ỹ least of his creatures will much more care for ỹ greatest. The byrdes of the ayre and beasts preach all to vs that we should leaue caring and put our trust in our father. But Mammon hath made vs so dull and so cleane without capacitie that none example or argument be it neuer so vehement, cā enter the wittes of vs, to make vs see or iudge a right. Finally what a madnes it is to take so great thought for fode or rayment, when the wealth, health, life of thy body and all together is out of thy power. If all the world were thyne thou couldest not make thy selfe one inche lōger, nor that thy stomacke shall digeste the meate that thou puttest into it: No thou art not sure that that whiche thou puttest into thy mouth shall go through thee or whether it shall choke thee. Thou canst not make when thou lyest or sittest down that thou shalt arise agayn, or when thou slepest that thou shalt awake agayne, or that thou shouldest line one houre lōger. So that he which cared for thee when thou couldest not care, must care for thee still or els thou shouldest perish. And he will not care for thee to thy soules profite, if thou mistrust him and care for thy selfe.

And for rayment why take ye thought? Behold the lylies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither spynne. And yet I say to you that euen Salomon in all his glorie was not apparelled lyke one of them. Wherefore if the grasse whiche is to day in the fieldes and to morow shalbe cast into the furnace, God so clothe, howe much more shal he do the same vnto you. O ye of litle fayth?

Not onely foule and beast, but also tree herbe, & all the floures of the earth do crye vnto vs, to trust God and to cast away all care that is coupled with couetousnesse of more then sufficient to beare the charges whiche we haue in our handes, by the reason of the state we be in the world: and all care that is annexed with mistrust, that God shuld not minister inough to beare all our charges: if we endeuer our selues to keepe his commaundementes and to do euery man his craft or office he is in truly, and (when God to proue vs, suffereth vs to haue neede of our neighbours) we first complayne to God, & desire him to prepare the hartes of our neighbours agaynst we come to desire their helpe. Luc.

But Mām̄on pypeth an other song, saying: if thou shouldest make no other maner of labour for a benefice, then as if thou caredest not whether thou haddest it or haddest it not, it would be lōg ere thou gattest one, all would be take out of thyne hand? I answere: as thy labour was to get it, such shalbe thy behauiour in it: as thou flatteredest to haue it, so shalt thou it it. And as thou boughtest and souldest to get it, so shalt thou sell in it to bye fauour and to be set by in the world. If thy principall intent that thou seekest a benefice for, be lucre, then take hede to the example of thy forefather Symon Magus. Let thy care therefore be to do the office that God putteth thee in truly, and the blessyng that he coupleth thereto that take with thankes, and neither care nor couet further. Mammon. Actes. 8.

Take no thought therefore saying: What shall we eate or what shall we drinke, or what shall we put on? all these thynges the heathen seke. Yea and your heauenly father knoweth that ye neede all theſe things. But ſeke firſt the kyngdome of God and the righteouſneſſe therof, and all theſe thynges ſhalbe miniſtred vnto you.

Be not like the heathen which haue no truſt in God nor his word, nor beleue any life to come. Let them vexe them ſelues and eth be a deuill to an other for worldly thynges. But comfort thou thy ſelf with ỳ hope of a better life in another worlde, euer aſſured that ỳ ſhalt haue here ſufficient, onely if thou keepe couenaunt with the Lord thy God, and ſeke his kyngdome and the righteouſneſſe therof aboue all things. The kyngdome of God, is the Goſpel and doctrine of Chriſt. And the righteouſneſſe therof, is to beleue in Chriſtes bloud for the remiſſion of ſinnes. Out of which righteouſneſſe ſpringeth loue to God, & thy neighbour for his ſake, which is alſo righteouſneſſe as I haue ſayd afore, ſo farre as it is perfect, and that which lacketh is ſupplied by faith in Gods word, in that he hath promiſed to accept that, til more come. Then foloweth the outward righteouſneſſe of workes by the which, and diligent recording of Gods word together, we grow and ware perfect and keepe our ſelues from goyng backe and loſyng the ſpirite agayne.

Couenaũt. Keepe couenaunt with God and he ſhal keepe promiſe wyth thee.

Kingdome of heauen, what.

Righteouſneſſe of the kingdome of heauen, what it is.

And theſe haue our ſpiritualtie with their corrupt doctrine myngled together: that is to ſay, the righteouſnes of the kyngdome of God, which is fayth in Chriſts bloud: & the outward righteouſnes of the mẽbers that we aſcribe to the one that pertaineth to the other.

Seke the kingdome of heauen therfore and the righteouſneſſe of the ſame, and be ſure thou ſhalt euer haue ſufficient, and theſe thynges ſhalbe miniſtred vnto the, that is to ſay: ſhall come of their owne accord by the promiſe of God: yea Chriſt promiſeth thee an hũdredfolde euen in this life, of all that thou leaueſt for his ſake. If that were true would ſome ſay, who would not rather ſerue him then Mammon? yet is it true. For firſt if thou be ſeruaunt of Mammõ, thou muſt kepe thy God, and thy God not thee. And euery man that is ſtrõger then thou, will take thy God from thee. Moreouer God will take either thee from thy Mammon, or thy Mammon from thee, ere thou wouldeſt, to aduenge him ſelfe of thy blynd vnkyndneſſe, that when he hath made thee and geuen thee all, thou forſakeſt him and ſerueſt his mortall enemy. But if thou folow Chriſt, all the worlde (and let them take all the deuils in hell to them) ſhall not be able to diſappointe thee of a ſufficiẽt lyuing. And though they perſecute thee from houſe to houſe a thouſand tymes, yet ſhall God prouide thee of an other with all things ſufficient to line by. Now compare ỳ ſuretie of his, with ỳ incertauntie of the other: & then the bleſſed end of this (that heauẽ is promiſed thee alſo) with the miſerable departyng from the other ſo ſore agaynſt thy will, and then the deſperation that thy hart feeleth that thou art all ready in hell. And thẽ may not this be wel called a thouſand fold more then the other.

If thou folow Chriſt, thou canst not lacke a ſufficient liuing.

Care not then for the day folowyng, but let the day folowyng care for it ſelfe. For the day that is preſent, hath euer inough of his owne trouble.

If thou looke well on the couenaũt that is betwene thee & thy Lord God, on the one ſide, and the temptations of the worlde, the fleſhe and Satan on the other: thou ſhalt ſoone perceiue that the day preſent hath euer mough to be cared for, & for which thou muſt cry inſtantly to God for helpe alſo, though thou do thy beſt. Now thẽ ſeing ỳ day preſent is ouercharged with her owne care, what madneſſe is it to lade vpon her alſo the care of the day folowing, yea the care of a yeare, ye of xx. yeare, or as though thou neuer entendeſt to die, and to torment and vexe the ſoule thorow miſtruſt and vnbeliefe, & to make thy life ſoure and bitter, and as vnquiet as the lyfe of the deuilles in hell?

Care.

Therefore care day by day, & houre by houre earneſtly to keepe the couenaunt of the Lord thy God, and to record therein day and night, and to do thy part vnto the vttermoſt of thy power. And as for Gods part, let hym care for it himſelfe, and beleue thou his wordes ſtedfaſtly: and be ſure that heauen and earth ſhal ſooner periſhe then one iote bide behinde of that he hath promiſed. And for thine owne part alſo, care not of that maner, as though thou ſhouldeſt do all alone. Nay: God hath firſt promiſed to helpe thee: Secondarily to accept thine hart, and that little ỳ thou art able to do, be it neuer ſo imperfect: Thirdly though wynde, weather & the ſtreame cary thee cleane contrary to thy purpoſe, yet becauſe thou bideſt ſtill in thy profeſſion, ready to turne the right course as soone as ẏ tempest is a little ouer blowen, God promiseth to forgeue that, & not ẏ lesse to fulfill his promises of one iote.

What we ought chiefli to care for.

Tempte. Why God letteth hys children be tempted with aduersitie.

Doth Christ so defend his, that they neuer come in daunger of trouble? yes they come into such straites oft, that no witte nor reason can see any way out, saue fayth onely is sure that God hath & will make a way thorow. But that temptation is but for an houre to teach them, and to make them feele the goodnes of their father, and ẏ passions of their brethren and of their master Christ also. It is but as a louyng mother, to make her childe to perceaue and feele her kindnes (to loue her againe and be thankfull) letteth it hunger in a morning. And when it calleth for his breakfast, maketh as she heard not, til for paine and impaciencie it beginneth to cry a good. And then she stilleth it and geueth it all that it asketh and more to, to please it. And when it is peaced and beginneth to eate, and reioyceth and is glad and fayne, she asketh who gaue thee that, thy mother? and it sayth ye: Then sayth she: Am not I a good mother that geue thee all thynges? and it answereth, ye. And she asketh, wilt thou loue thy mother. &c. And it sayth ye, and so commeth it to the knowledge of hys mothers kindnesse, and is thankfull. Such is the temptation of Christes elect, and other wyse not.

What care is forbidde.

Here is not forbiddin all manner of care, but that worldly and deuillishe care that springeth of an inordinate loue to worldly thynges, and of mystrust in God. As for an ensample: I couet inordinarly more then sufficient, or but cuẽ that I haue nede of. And it (because I mistrust God and haue no hope in hym, and therefore pray not to him) commeth not: Then I mourne, sorrow and pine away, and am whole vnquiet in myne hart. Or whether I haue to much or but sufficient, and loue it inordinatly: then I care for the keeking. And because I mistrust God, & haue no hope in him, that he wil helpe me, therefore when I haue locked doores, chambers and cofers, I am neuer the nerer at rest, but care stil and cast a thousand perilles, of which the most part were not in my might to anoyde though I neuer slept. And where this care is, there can the word of God haue no resting place, but is choked vp as soone as it is sowne.

There is an other care that springeth out of the loue of God (for euery loue hath her care) & is a care to keepe Gods commaundementes. This care must euery man haue. For a mã liueth not by bread onely, but much more by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. The keping of Gods commaundement is the life of a man, as well in this world as in the worlde to come. As childe obey father & mother, that thou mayst long liue on the earth. And by father & mother is vnderstand al rulers. which if thou obey, thy blessing shall be long life: and contrary if thou disobey, short life: and shalt either perishe by the sworde, or by some other plague, and that shortly. And euen so shal the ruler, if he rule not as God hath commaunded. Oppresse thou a widow and fatherlesse children (sayth God) and they shall cry to me, and I will heare their voyce, & then will my wrath waxe hot: so I will smite you with sworde, & your wiues shall be widowes, & your children fatherles.

Care. Why care euery man ought to haue.

Gods commaundement is mans lyfe.

Exod. xx.

Some will say, I see none more prosper or longer continue then those that be most cruell tyrauntes. what then? yet say I that God abideth euer true. For where he setteth vp a tyraũt and continueth him in prosperitie, it is to be a scourge to wicked subiectes that haue forsaken the couenaunt of the Lord their God. And vnto them hys good promises pertayne not, saue hys curses onely. But if ẏ subiectes would turne and repẽt, and folow the wayes of God, he would shortly deliuer thẽ. How be it, yet where the superior corrupteth, the inferior which els is disposed inough to goodnes, God wyll not let them long continue.

Why God suffereth tiraunte to prosper.

Why lookest thou on the mote that is in thy brothers eye, and markest not the beame that is in thine owne eye? Or how canst thou say to thy brother, Let me plucke out the mote

mote out of thine eye, and behold, there is a beame in thyne owne eye? Thou hipocrite, plucke first the beame out of thine owne eye, and then thou shalt see clearely to plucke the mote out of thy brothers eye.

Iudgyng. This is not ment of the tempozall iudgemētes: foz Christ forbad not that, but oft did stablishe it, as do Peter & Paule in their Epistles also. Noz here is not forbidden to iudge those deedes which are manifest against the lawe of God: foz those ought euery Christē mā to persecute, yet must they do it after the ozder that Christ hath set. But whē he sayth: hipocrite, cast out first the beame that is in thyne owne eye: it is easie to vnderstand of what maner of iudging he meaneth.

What iudgyng is to be rebuked

The hipocrites will haue fastings, prayinges, kneling, crouching, ducking, and a thousand ceremonies of their owne inuention. And whosoeuer do not as they doo, him they counte a dampned soule by and by. To Christ they say, why fast not thy disciples, as the Phariseyes do? why plucke they the eares of corne and rubbe them in their handes (though they did it compelled with pure hunger) and do that is not lawfull on the Sabboth day? Why breake ye the traditions of our Elders, and washe not when ye sitte downe to meate? yea and why doost thou thy self heale the people vpon the holy day? why biddest thou, not onely heale him that was bedred 38. yeares, but also baddest him beare his bedde away vpon the Saboth day? Be there not worzkyng day sufficient to do good deede to the prayse of God, and profite of thy neigybour, but that thou must breake thy Saboth day? He cannot be but a damned person that breaketh the holy day, and despiseth the ozdinaunce of the holy Church.

All dayes are indifferent to do good dedes to ỹ prayse of God, & the profite of our neighboze.

He eateth Butter a Frydayes without a dispensation of our holy father the Pope, yea & cakebread made wyth milke and egges to, and white meate in the Lent, he taketh no holy water when he commeth to the Church, he heareth no Masse frō Sonday to Sōday. And either, he hath no beades at al, oz els ỹ shalt not heare a stone clink in the hand of hym, noz yet hys lippes wagge all the Masse and Mattens while. &c. O hipocrite, cast out first the beame that is in thine owne eye, and then thou shalte see better. Thou vnderstandest all Gods lawes falsely, & therefoze thou kepest none of thē truely: his lawes require mercy and not sacrifice. Moreouer thou hast a false entent in all the wozkes that ỹ doost, and therefoze are they all dampnable in the sight of God. Hipocrite cast out the beame that is in thine owne eye, learne to vnderstand the lawe of God truely, and to do thy wozkes aright, and foz the entent that God ozdayned them. And then thou shalt see whether thy brother haue a mote in his eye oz not, and if he haue, how to plucke it out, and els not.

The beame.

Foz he that knoweth the entent of the lawe and of wozkes, though he obserue a thousand ceremonies foz hys owne exercise, he shall neuer condēpne his brother oz breake vnitie with him, in those thinges which Christ neuer commaunded, but left indifferent. Oz if he see a mote in his brothers eye, that he obserueth not with his brethren some certaine ozdinaunce made foz a good purpose, because he knoweth not the entent: he will plucke it out fayre and softly, and instruct him louingly, and make him well content. which thing if our spiritualty would do, men woul d not so abhozre to obey their tyranny. But they be hipocrites and do and commaunde all their wozkes foz a false purpose, and therefoze iudge, slea and shedde their brethrens bloude mercilesly. God is ỹ father of all mercy, and therefoze gaue not hipocrites such absolute power to compell theyr brethren to obey what they liste, oz to slay them without pitie, shewing eyther no cause of their cōmaundemētes at all, but so will we haue it, oz els assigning an entent dampnable and contrary to all scripture. Paule Rom. 14. sayth to them that obserued ceremonies, that they should not iudge them that did not: foz he that obserueth and knoweth not the entēt iudgeth atonce, and to thē that obserued not that they should not despise them that obserued, he that obserueth not, ought not to despise the weakenes oz ignozaunce of his brother, till he perceaue that he is obstinate and will not learne.

Ceremonie, bee that breaketh vnitie foz zeale of ceremonies vnderstandeth not Gods law.

Ceremonies.

Moreouer such measure as thou metest, thou shalt receaue againe: that is, if thou iudge thy neighbour, God shal iudge thee, foz if thou iudge thy neighbour in such thinges, thou knowest not the lawe of God, noz the entent of wozkes, and art therefoze condempned of God. &c.

Measure.

Giue not that holy thyng vnto dogges, neither caſt your pearls before the ſwyne, leſt they treade thē vnder their feete, and the other turne agayne and all to teare you.

Dogges, who they be, & what is ſignified therby.

The dogges are thoſe obſtinate and indurate, which for the blynd zeale of their leuen, wherwith they haue ſowred both ỹ doctrine & alſo the workes, maliciouſly reſiſte the truth, and perſecute the miniſters therof: and are thoſe wolues among which Chriſt ſendeth his ſhepe, warnyng them, not onely to be ſingle & pure in their doctrine, but alſo wiſe and circumſpect & to beware of mē. For they ſhould bryng them before iudges and kynges and ſlay them, thinkyng to do God ſeruice therein: that is as Paul to the Romains teſtifieth of the Iewes, for blynd zeale to their own falſe & fayned righteouſnes, perſecute the righteouſneſſe of God.

Swyne truly deſcribed.

The ſwyne are they whiche for all they haue receaued the pure Goſpell of Chriſt, will yet continue ſtill in ſinne, and rowle them ſelues in the podell & myer of their old filthy conuerſation, & both before the ignorannt and alſo the weake, vſe the vttermoſt of their libertie, interpretyng it after the largeſt faſhion, and moſt fauour of the fleſh, as it were the Popes pardon, and therewith make ỹ truth euill ſpoken of, that thouſandes which els might haue ben eaſely wonne, will now not once here therof: and ſtyrre vp cruel perſecution, which els would be much eaſyer, yea and ſometime none at all. And yet will thoſe ſwyne, when it commeth to the poynt abyde no perſecution at all: But offer them ſelues wyllyng euen at the firſt chope for to deny ere they be ſcarſly appoſed of their doctrine. Therfore lay firſt the law of God before them, & call them to repentaunce. And if thou ſee no hope of mendyng in them, ſeaſe there and go no further: for they be ſwyne.

But alas, it euer was and ſhall be ỹ the greater nōber receaue the wordes for a newneſſe and curioſitie (as they ſay) and to ſeme to be ſomewhat and that they haue not gone to ſchole in vayne, they will forthwith yer they haue felt any chaūge of liuyng in them ſelues, be ſcholemaſters and begyn at libertie, and practiſe opēly before their Diſciples. And when the Phariſeis ſee their traditions broken, they rage and perſecute immediatly. And then our new ſcholemaſters be neither grounded in the doctrine to defend their doinges, nor rooted in the profeſſion of a new life to ſuffer with Chriſt. &c.

Aſke and it ſhalbe geuen you, ſeke and ye ſhall finde. Knocke and it ſhalbe opened vnto you. For all that aſke receaue, and he that ſeeketh findeth. And to him that knocketh, it ſhalbe opened. For what man is it among you, if his ſonne aſked hym bread, that would proferre him a ſtone? Or if he aſked him fiſhe, would he offer him a Serpent? If ye then whiche are euill know to geue good giftes to your children, howe much more ſhall your father whiche is in heauen, geue good thynges to them that aſke hym.

Prayer is a commaūdement.

Beleue.

To beleue in God, what.

First note of theſe wordes, that to pray is Gods commaundement, as it is to beleue in God, to loue God or to loue thy neighbour: and ſo are almoſe & faſtyng alſo. Neither is it poſſible to beleue in God, to loue him or to loue thy neighbour, But that prayer will ſpryng out there hēce immediatly. For to beleue in God, is to be ſure that all thou haſt is of him, and all thou nedeſt muſt come of him. whiche if thou do thou canſt not but continually thanke him for his benefites which thou continually without cealyng receaueſt of his hand, and therto euer cry for helpe, for thou art euer in nede, and canſt no whence els be holpen. And thy neighbour is in ſuch neceſſitie alſo: wherfore if thou loue him, it will cōpell thee to pitie him, and to cry to God for him continually, and to thanke as well for him as thy ſelfe.

Luke. 11.

Prayer.

By prayer we wynne the victory onely, and therefore is it of all thynges moſt neceſſary.

Secondarely, this heappyng of ſo many wordes together, aſke, ſeke and knocke, ſignify that the prayer muſt be continuall, and ſo doth the parable of the widowe that ſued to the wicked iudge: and ỹ cauſe is, that we are euer in continuall neceſſitie (as I ſay) and all our lyfe, but euen a warre fare and a perpetual battaile. In which we preuaile as long as we pray, and be ouercome alſoone as we ceaſſe praying: as Iſraell ouercame the Amalechites. Exod. xvij. as long as Moſes held vp his hands in prayer, and alſoone as he had let downe his handes for werynneſſe, the Amalechites preuayled and had the better. Chriſt warned his Diſciples at his laſt ſupper to haue peace in him, affirming that they should haue none in ỳ world. The false Prophetes shal euer impugne the faith in Christes blond, and inforce to quenche the true vnderstāding of the law, and the right meanyng and intent of all the workes commaunded by God, which fight is a fight aboue all fightes. First they shalbe in such nōber that Christes true disciples shalbe but a small flocke in respect of them. They shall haue workes like Christes, so that fastyng, prayer, pouertie obedience and chastitie shall be the names of their profession. For as Paule saith to the Corinthians, the aungels or messengers of Sathā shall chaunge them selues into aungels or messengers of light and truth. They shall come in Christes name, and that with signes and miracles, and haue the vpper hād also, euen to deceaue the very elect if it were possible. Yea & beyonde all this, if thou get the victory of the false Prophetes, and plucke a multitude out of their handes, there shall immediatly rise of the same, and set vp a new false sect agaynst thee. And agaynst all these Amalechites, the onely remedy is to lift vp the handes of thy harte to God in continuall prayer. which hādes, if thou for werynes once let fall, thou goest to the worse immediatly. Then beside the fight and conflict of the suttle sophistrie, false miracles, disguised and hypocritish workes of these false Prophetes, commeth the Dogges & wolues of their Disciples with the seruauntes of Mammon, and the swyne of thyne owne scholers: agaynst whiche all thou hast no other shilde or defence but prayer. Then the sinne & lustes of thyne owne flesh, Sathan, and a thousand temptations vnto euil in the world, wil either driue thee to the castell and refuge of prayer or take the prisoner vndoubtedly.

False Prophetes what their wickednes is.

Mark. xiij.

Math. 24.

Thy hart must be topned with thy prayer.

Last of all thy neighbours necessitie and thyne owne will compell thee to crye, father which art in heauen geue vs our dayly bread, though thou were as rich as kyng Salomon. For Christ commaundeth the rich as well as the poore, to cry to God continually for their dayly bread. And if they haue no such neede, then is Christ a deceauer & a mocker. What nede I to pray thee to geue or lende me, that is in myne own possession all ready: Is not the first cōmaūdemēt, that there is but one God, and that thou put thy whole trust in him? which if it were written in thyne hart thou shouldest easely perceaue, & though thou haddest as many thousandes as Dauid left behynd him, and Salomō heaped mo to them, that thou haddest no more then the poore begger that goeth from doore to doore: yea and that the begger (if that cōmaundement be written in his hart) is sure, that he is as rich as thou. For first thou must knowledge that thou hast receaued ỳ great treasure of ỳ hand of God. wher fore whē thou fettest an halfepeny ther of, thou oughtest to geue God thākes in thyne hart for the gift therof.

The riche must pray for dayly bread.

Thou must confesse also that God onely hath kept it and thee that same night, and euer before, or els be an idolater and put thy trust in some other thyng then God. And thou must confesse that God onely must keepe it and thee, the day and night folowing, and so continually after, & not thine owne witte or power, or the witte or power of any other creature or creatures. For if God kept it not for thee, it woulde be thine owne destructiō and they that helpe thee to keepe it, woulde cut thy throte for it. There is no king in Christendome so well beloued, but he hath inow of his owne euill subiectes (if God kept them not downe with feare) that woulde at one houre rise vpō him and slea hym, to make hauocke of all he hath. who is so well beloued thorow out all Englād but that there be inow in the same parishe or nie about that would, for his good wishe him to hell if they conlde, and woulde wyth theyr handes destroy him, if God kept hym not and did cast feare on the other.

To thinke our selues saued, or preserued, by any other meanes then by Gods. is Idolatry.

Now then if God must euer keepe it for thee, and thou must dayly receaue it of his hand (as a poore man doth receaue his almose of an other man) thou art in no more suertie of thy dayly bread: no though thou were a Cardinall, then the poorest is. wherfore howsoeuer rich thou be, yet must thou euer cry to God for thy dayly bread. So now it is a commaundemēt to pray and that continually, short, thicke, and oft, as the Psalmes be, and all the prayers of the Bible.

Finally the third is that we be commaunded to pray with faith and trust, and that we beleue in the Lorde our God, and doubt not in his promises, vnto which Christ enduceth vs wyth an apt similitude, saying: If ye beyng euill can yet geue good thynges vnto your children, how much more shall God fulfill hys promises of mercy vnto his children if they cry vnto hym? he is better and more mercifull then all men. wherfore seing God commaundeth thee to pray, and for as much as thou hast so great necessitie so to do, & because he is mercifull and hath promised and is true and cannot deny his owne wordes: Therefore pray, and when thou prayest, looke not on thine vnworthines, but on his cōmaūdemēt, mercy, & goodnes, & on his truth and faithfulnes, & beleue stedfastly in hym. Moreouer whatsoeuer thou hast done, yet if thou repent and wilt amende, he promiseth that he will not thynke on thy sinnes. And though he differ thee, thinke it not long, nor faint not in thy fayth, or be slacke in thy prayer. For he will surely come and geue thee more then thou desirest, though he differre for thy profite, or chaunge thy request into a better thyng.

Faith must be topned to our prayer.

Though God differ thy request yet must thou not faynt.

All thinges therefore whatsoeuer ye woulde men shoulde do to you, so do ye to them. This is verely the lawe and the Prophetes.

This is a short sermon, that no mā neede to complayne that he cannot for the length beare it away. It is so nye thee, that thou needest not to sende ouer sea for it. It is with thee, that thou needest not to be importune vpon master Doctor: saying, syr I pray you, what say ye to this case and to that, & is not this lawfull, and may I not so do, and so, well inough? Aske thyne owne conscience what thou mayst or oughtest to do. wouldest thou mē did so with thee, then do it. wouldest thou not be so dealt with, then do it not. Thou wouldest not that men shoulde do to thee wrong and oppresse thee: Thou wouldest not that men shoulde do thee shame and rebuke, lie on thee, kyll thee, hyre thine house from thee, or rice thy seruaunt away, or take against thy will ought that is thyne. Thou wouldest not that men shoulde sell thee false ware when thou puttest them in trust to make it ready or lay it out for thee, nor thou wouldest not that men shoulde deceaue thee wyth great othes, swearing that to be good which in deede is very naught: Thou wouldest not also that men should sell thee ware that is naught and to deare, to vndo thee: do no such thinges then to thy neighbour. But as loth as thou wouldest be to buye false ware or to deare, for vndoing thy selfe, so loth be thou to sell false ware or to deare, for vndoing thy neighbour. And in al thy needes, how glad thou wouldest be to be holpē, so glad be to helpe thy neighbour. And so in all cases examine thy conscience and aske her what is to be done in all doubtes betweene thy neighbour and thee, and she will teach thee, except thou be more filthy thē a swine and all together beastly.

Doubtes.

How to loyle doubtes.

Note.

He sayth here: this is the lawe and the Prophetes. And Math. xxij. he sayth: Thou shalt loue thy Lord God with all thyne hart, with all thy soule and all thy mynde, and as Marke addeth, with all thy might, & thy neighbour as thy selfe. In these two commaundementes, hangeth the whole lawe and the Prophetes. And Paule Rom. xiij. and Gal. v. sayth that loue is the fulfilling of the lawe. And it is written that Christ is the fulfilling or ende of the lawe, To make all these agree, this thou must vnderstand: that to loue God purely is the finall and vttermost ende of all the lawe and the Prophetes. To loue thy neighbour is the ende of all lawes that is betweene man and man: as are: kill not, steale not, beare no false witnesse, committe none adultery, couet not thy neighbours wife, his house, Oxe, Asse, maide manseruaunt: nor ought that is his. & Christ is the fulfilling of the lawe for vs, where we be vnperfect. And when we breake and repent, his fulfilling is imputed vnto vs. And this text, this is the lawe and the Prophetes, mayst thou vnderstand, as when Paul sayth, loue is the fulfilling of the lawe. That is, to do as ỹ wouldest be done to, is all the lawe that is betweene thee & thy neighbour, and that according to the true vnderstanding and interpretyng of all true Prophetes.

Note. Law, what the fulfilyng therof is.

The ende of all ỹ lawes betwen man and man, is to loue thy neighbour as thy selfe.

Enter in at the straite gate, for wide is the gate and broade is the way that leadeth to destruction, & many they be, that goe in thereat. But straite is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth vnto lyfe, and few they be that finde it.

The straite gate is the true knowledge and vnderstanding of the lawe, and of ỹ true entent of workes. which whosoeuer vnderstandeth, the same shalbe driuen to Christ to fetch of hys fulnesse, and to take him for his righteousnes and fulfilling of the lawe, all together at the beginning, and as oft as we fall afterward, and for more the the thousand part of our fulfilling of

the

the lawe and righteousnes of our best workes all our life longe. For except the righteousnesse of Christ be knit to the best deede we do, it will be to short to reach to heauen.

The narrow way.

And the narrow way is to line after this knowledge. He that will enter in at this gate, must be made a new: his head will els be to great, he must be vntaught all that he hath learned, to be made lesse for to enter in: and disused in all thinges to which he hath bene accustomed, to be made lesse to walke thorow ẏ narrow way. where he shall finde such an heape of temptations and so continuall, that it shall be impossible to endure or to stand, but by prayer of strong fayth.

Few finde the narrow way, and why.

And note an other, that few fynde ẏ way. why? for their owne wisedome, their owne power and the reasons of their owne sophistrie blynd them vterly. That is to say: the light of their owne doctrine which is in them: is so extreme darcknesse that they cānot see. Should God let his Church erre (say they) Shoulde our elders haue gone out of the way? Should God haue let ẏ deuill do these miracles and so forth? And when Christ sayth, few shall finde the gate: yea say they: in respect of the Turkes and Sarasens which are the greater multitude. Yea but yet heare a litle: the Scribes & Pharisees, which had all the authoritie ouer the people, and taught out of the Scripture, and the Saduces, with all other false Prophetes that were when Christ came, were no Turkes nor Sarasens: neither had God any other Church then was among them. And S. Peter prophesieth that it shall be so among vs, & that we shal be drawē with false sectes of couetousnesse, to deny Christ, as we now do, and beleue no more in hym. And Paul & Christ confirme the same, that the elect should be deceaued, if it were possible. Moreouer if it were inough to say, I will beleue and do as mine elders haue done, as though they could not erre: then was Christ to blame for to say, that except thou forsake father mother and thyne elders, thou couldest not be his disciple. Christ must be thy master, and thou must be taught of God: and therfore oughtest thou to examine the doctrine of thyne elders by the word of God. For the great multitude that Christ meaneth are the false Prophetes and them that folow them: as it shall better appeare hereafter.

Peter.

Paule, Christ.

Beware of false Prophetes which come to you in sheepes clothyng. But are with in rauenyng Wolues. By their frutes ye shal know them, do mē gather grapes of thornes? either figges of briers? euen so euery good tree bryngeth forth good frute. But a corrupt tree, bryngeth forth euill frute. A good tree can not bryng forth euill frute, nor a corrupte tree bryng foorth good frute. Euery tree that bringeth not foorth good frute is to be hewen downe and to be cast into the fire. Wherefore by their frutes ye shall know them.

The false prophetes, who.

Here Christ warneth thee, and describeth vnto thee, those capitaines that should so blynde the great multitude (that they should not finde the strayte gate) and leade them the broad way to perdition. Note first that though they be false, yet he calleth them Prophetes, which word in the new Testament is taken for an expounder and an interpreter of Scripture. And he sayth they shall come to you my Disciples, then they must bee our Preachers and our doctours. Ye verely they must be those our false preachers whiche Peter prophesied should be amōg vs, and bryng in damnable sectes, for to fulfull & satisfie their couetousnesse, and folow the way and steppes of their father Baalam. And they shall come thereto in sheepes clothyng: Ergo, they be neither the Turkes nor yet Sarasēs. For they come clothed in yron and stele, & will therto suffer vs to kepe our fayth, if we will submit our selues to them, as the Grekes do. And as for ẏ Jewes they be an hundred tymes fewer then we, and are euery where in bondage, yea & for the great part captiues vnto vs. They also be not clothed in sheepes skinnes, but mainteine openly they fayth cleane contrary to ours.

Sheepes clothing, what it meaneth.

But what are these sheepes clothinges, truely the very name of Christ. For sayth Christ Mat. xxiiij. There shall come many in my name and deceaue many. And besides that, they shall do myracles in Christes name: as it foloweth in the text, that they shall call Christ Master, Master, & beginne their sermō saying: Our master Christ sayth in such a chapter, whatsoeuer ye bynde vpon earth shall be bounde in heauen: see frendes these be not our wordes, but our master Christes. And they shall do myracles in Christes name therto, to confirme the false doctrine which they preach in his name. O fearefull and terrible iudgement of almighty God, and sentēce of extreme rigorousnes vpon all that loue not the truth (when it is preached them) that God to auenge hymselfe of their vnkyndnesse, shall sende them so strong delusions, that doctrine should be preached vnto them in the name of Christ, and made seeme to follow out of hys wordes and be confirmed with myracles done in calling vpon the name of Christ, to hardē their harts in the faith of lyes, according to the prophesie of Paule to the Thessalonians in the second Epistle. 2. Thess. 2.

Sheepes clothing. An other of their sheepes coates is, that they shall in euery sermon preach mightely agaynst the Scribes & Pharisees, against Faustus and Pelagian with such like hereticks: which yet neuer preached other doctrine then they themselues do. And more of their clothing is, they shall preach that Christ preached: almose, prayer, and fasting: and profesſe obedience, pouertie, and chastitie: workes that our Sauiour Christ both preached and did. Finally they be holy church and cannot erre.

Rauening wolues. But they be within rauening wolues. They preach to other, steale not: yet they themselues robbe God of hys honour, and take from him the prayse and profite of all their doctrine and of all their workes. They robbe ỹ lawe of God of her mighty power wherewith she driueth all men to Christ, and make her so weake, that the feble free will of man is not able to wrestle with her, without calling to Christ for help.

They haue robbed Christ of all hys merites and clothed themselues therewith. They haue robbed the soule of man of the bread of her life, the fayth and trust in Christes blood: and haue fedde her with the shales and coddes of the hope in their merites, and confidence in their good workes.

They haue robbed the workes cōmaunded by God of the entent & purpose that they were ordeined for. And with their obedience they haue drawen themselues from vnder the obedience of all Princes and temporall lawes. With their pouertie, they haue robbed all nations and kyngdomes, and so with their wilfull pouertie haue enriched themselues, and haue made the commons poore, With their chastitie they haue filled all the worlde full of whores and sodomites, thinking to please God more highly with keeping of an whore then an honest chast wife. If they say it is not truth, then all the worlde knoweth they lye, for if a priest mary an honest wife, they punishe hym immediatly, and say, he is an hainous hereticke, as though matrimony were abhominable. But if he keepe a whore, then is he a good chast childe of their holy father the Pope, whose ensample they follow, and I warrant hym sing Masse on the next day after, as well as he did before, without eyther persecution or excommunication, such are the lawes of their vnchast, I would say their owne chast father. Theobedience, pouertie, and wilfull chastitie of our spiritualtie.

If thou profesſe obedience, why runnest thou from father, mother, maister and ruler (which God biddeth thee to obey) to be a Fryer? If thou obey, why obeyest thou not the king and his law, by whom God defendeth thee both in lyfe and goodes, and all thy great possessions?

If thou profesſe pouertie, what doest thou with the landes of Gentlemen, Squyres, Knightes, Barons, Erles, and Dukes? what shoulde a Lordes brother be a beggers seruaūt? or what should a begger ride with three or foure score horses waiting on hym. Is it meete that a man of noble byrth, and ỹ right heyre of the landes which thou possessest shoulde be thyne horsekeeper, thou being a begger. Pouertie.

If ye profesſe chastitie: why desire ye aboue all other men the company of women? what do ye with whores openly in many countreyes, and wyth secrete dispensations to keepe Concubines? why corrupt ye so much other mens wiues? and why be there so many sodomites among you? Chastitie.

Your charitie is mercilesse to the rest of the world to whom ye may geue nought agayne, and onely liberall to your selues (as is ỹ charitie of theues) thirty or fourty of you together in one denne: among which yet are not many that loue three of his neighbours hartely. Charitie.

Your fasting maketh you as full and as fat as your hydes can holde, beside that ye haue a dispensation of your holy father for your fasting. Fasting.

Your prayer is but pattering without all affection, your singing is but roaring to stretch out your mawes (as do your othee gestures and rising at midnight) to make the meate sinke to Prayer.

Thornes beare no figges.

Ye shal know them by their frutes. First thornes beare no grapes, nor bryers figges. Also if thou see goodly blossomes in them, and thinkest there to haue figges, grapes, or any fruit for the sustenaunce or comfort of man: goe to thē in time of neede, and thou shalt finde nought at all. Thou shalt finde: forsouth I haue no goodes, nor any thing proper, or that is myne owne.

It is the couentes. I were a theefe if I gaue it my father whatsoeuer neede he had. It is Saint Edmundes patrimony, Saint Albons patrimony, S. Edwardes patrimony the goodes of holy church, it may not be minished, nor occupied vpon laye and prophane vses. The king of the realme for all that he defendeth them aboue al other, yet getteth he nought what neede so euer he haue, saue then onely, when he must spend on their causes al that they geue, with all that he can get beside of his poore commons. If the king will attempt to take ought from them by the authoritie of his office, for the defence of the realme. Or if any man will entreat them other wise then they list themselues, by what law or right it be: they turne to thornes and bryers, and ware aronce rougher then a hedgehogge, and will sprinkle them wyth the holy water of their maledictions as thicke as hayle: and breath out the lightening of excommunication vpon them, and so consume them to ponder.

A corrupt tree beareth no good frute.

Moreouer a corrupt tree can beare no good fruite. That is, where they haue fruite that seemeth to be good, goe to and proue it, and thou shalt finde it rotten, or the karnell eaten out, and that it is but as a hollow nut. For fayth in Christ (that we and all our workes done within the compasse of the lawe of God, be accepted to God for his sake) is the kernell, the sweetenesse and the pleasaunt beutie of al our workes in the sight of God. As it is written Joh. vi. this is the worke of God, that ye beleue in him whom he hath sent. This faith is a worke which God not onely worketh in vs, but also hath therein pleasure and delectatiō, and in all other for that faithes sake.

Fayth is the kernell of all our good frutes.

Faith is the life of mā, as it is written, Iustus ex fide viuit, out of which life the pleasantnesse of all his workes spring. As for an ensample thou art a shoumaker which is a worke within the lawes of God, and sayest in thyne hart, lor God here I make a shoe as truely as I woulde for my selfe, to do my neighbour seruice, and to get my liuing in truth with ỹ labour of myne handes, as thou commaundest, and thanke thee that thou hast geuen me this craft, and makest it lucky that I get my liuing therewith, and am surely perswaded that both I & my worke please thee, O father, for thy sonne Jesus sake: loe now this fayth hath made this simple woorke pleasaunt in the sight of God.

Faith maketh the worke good and acceptable.

An other ensample, thou takest a wife & sayest: O father, thou not onely permittest this, but also commaundest all that burne & haue their mindes vnquieted, to marry for feare of fornication and so forth. And father I promise thee to loue this woman truely, and to care for her, and gouerne her after thy lawes, and to be true to her, and to stand by her in all aduersities, and to take in worth as well the euill as the good, and to bring vp the fruite that thou shalt gene me of her, in thy feare, and teach it to know thee.

In ensample how the worke or deede may be pleasaunt and acceptable before God.

Moreouer as concerning the acte of matrimony, as when thou wilt eate, thou blessest God & receauest thy dayly fode of his hand according to ỹ fourth petition of thy Pater noster, & knowledgest that it is his gift, and thankest hym, beleuing his worde, that he hath created it for thee to receaue it wyth thankes, by the which worde & prayer of thankes, thy meate and drincke is sanctified. i. Tim. iiij. Euen so thou sayest, father this I do, not onely at thy permission which is inough to please thee wythall, but also at thy cōmaundement, and haue bound my selfe hereunto, to keepe my soule from sinning against thee, & to helpe my neighbour that he sinne not also, and promise thee to keepe thys profession truely, and to nourishe the fruite that thou shalt geue me, in the feare of thee, and in the fayth of thy sonne Jesu, and so thankest the Lord for his giftes. Now is thy worke thorow thys fayth and thankes pleasaunt and acceptable in ỹ sight of God. And so was the gedring of Jacob in fayth, and of Samuell, & many other. And ỹ geuing sucke was a good worke, and so was the dressing of them by the fire. And when our Lady cōceaued Christ thorow fayth, was not that a good worke? what if God when she doubted and asked (by what maner she should conceaue him) had commaunded her to conceaue hym of Joseph or of some other man, had not that worke done in obediēce and faith, bene as good a worke?

The will that Abraham had to slay Isaac, and all that he dyd till he came at ỹ very point to slay him, were good workes, and so had ben the slaying also. And Abrahā was sure that he pleased God highly, and as well as in any other worke, and had as deply sinned if he had bene disobedient therein, as though he had done any other cruell dede forbidden by God. Yea but shomakyng is not commaunded by God. Yes and hath the promise of God annexed therto. For God hath commaūded me for the anoyding of sinne to do my brethren seruice, and to lyue therby, and to chose one estate or other (for if thou wouldest receaue onely of thy brethren and do nought agayne thou were a thefe and an extorcioner & a tyraunt.) And I chose shomaking, or receaue it at ỹ obedience of myne elders. Now haue I Gods commaūdemēt to worke therin truly, and his promise annexed therto, that he wil blesse mine occupation and make it lucky & frutefull to bryng me an honest lyuyng. Worke I not now at Gods commaūdement and haue hys promise that it pleaseth him?

Handy crafftes are the commaundement of God.

Note this also: first my craft is Gods commaundement. Secondarely I beleue & am sure that my worke pleaseth God for Christes sake. Thirdly my worke is profitable vnto my neighbour, and helpeth his necessitie. Fourthly I receaue my reward of the hand of God with thākes, and worke, surely certified that I please God in my worke thorough Christ. And that God will geue me my dayly bread thereby.

But if thou examine their doctrine, thou shalt finde that this fayth is away in all their frutes, and therefore are they worme eaten and shales with out kernelles.

The Jewes & Turkes geue almes as we doe, yet for lacke of fayth, it is abhominable.

Note againe, the Turkes & Jewes geue almose aswell as we, & as much, & yet abhominable for lacke of fayth & knowledge of the true intent. What sayth the text: he ỹ receaueth a prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall haue the reward of a Prophet. That is, because thou aydest him in preachyng of of Christes word, thou shalt be partaker with him & haue the same reward. And he that receaueth a Disciple in the name of a disciple, shal haue &c. And he that geueth one of these litle once but a cup of cold water for my names sake, shall haue his reward. If a kyng ministeth his kingdome in the faith of this name, because his subiectes be his brethē and the price of Christes bloud, he pleaseth God highly: and if this fayth be not there, it pleaseth him not. And if I sow a shue truly in the fayth of hys name, to do my brother seruice, because he is the price of Christes bloud: it pleaseth God. Thus is faith the goodnesse of all workes.

God is as well pleased when we thankfully receaue his benefites, as when we do good in his sight.

Finally when God geueth, and I receaue with thankes, is not God as well pleased, as when I gene for his sake and he receaueth? A true frend is as glad to do his frēd a good turne, as to receaue a good turne. When the father geueth his sonne a new coate and sayth: am not I a good father, and wilt not thou loue me agayne and do what I byd thee. And the boy receaueth it with thankes and sayth, yea, and is glad and proude therof: doth not the father reioyce as much now in the lad, as an other tyme when the ladde doth what soeuer it be at his fathers commaundement? But the false Prophets do well to paynte God after the lykenesse of theyr owne vilenony: glad when he receaueth, ye when they receaue in his name: But sowre, grudging, and euil content when he geueth agayne. But thou pleasest God, when thou askest in faith, and when thou receauest with thankes, and when thou reioycest in his gifres and louest hym agayne, to kepe his cōmaundementes and the appoyntment and couenaunt made betwene him and thee.

Hipocrites expell their owne workes, to destroy the workes of God.

And for a conclusion besides, that they expell fayth whiche is the goodnes of all workes: they set vp workes of their owne makyng to destroy the workes of God, and to be holyer then Gods workes, to the despisyng of Gods workes, and to make Gods workes vyle.

With their chastitie they destroy the chastitie that God ordeined and onely requireth. With their obedience, they destroy the obedience that God ordayned in this world, & desireth no other. With their poucrty they destroy the pu nertie of the spirit which Christ taught onely: whiche is, onely not to loue worldly goodes. With their fast, they destroy the fast which God commaundeth, that is a perpetuall soberneile to tame the flesh. With their patteryng

prayer,

prayer, they destroy the prayer taught by God, whiche is either thankes or desiryng helpe with fayth & trust that God heareth me.

The holynes of hypocrites wherein it is.

Their holynesse is to forbyd ỹ God ordeined to be receaued with thankes giuyng: as meate & matrimony. And their owne workes they maintayne, & let Gods decay. Breake theirs & they persecute to the death. But breake Gods, and they either looke through the fingers or els geue thee a flappe with a Fore tayle for a litle money. There is none order among them that is so perfect, but that they haue a prison more cruell thē any iayle of theues and murtherers. And if one of their brethren commit fornication or adultery in the world, he finisheth his penaunce therin in three wekes or a moneth, and then is sent to an other place of the same religion. But if he attempt to put of the holy habite, he commeth neuer out, & is so straytly dioted therto, that it is meruell if he liue a yeare, beside other cruell murther that hath bene found among them, and yet is this shamefull dyoting of theirs, murther cruell inough.

Aske the Augustē Friers why they murthered one of their fellowes at London.

Be not deceaued with visions, nor yet with miracles. But go to & iudge their workes, for the spiritual iudgeth all thinges sayth Paule. 1. Cor. ij. Who is that spirituall? not such as we now call men of holy Church. But all that haue the true interpretation of the law written in their harts. The right fayth of Christ and the true intēt of workes, which God byddeth vs worke, he is spirituall and iudged all thinges, and is iudged of no man.

Who is ỹ spirituall?

Not all that say to me, Lorde, Lorde, shall enter into the kyngdome of heauen. But he that fulfilleth the will of my father which is in heauen. Many will say vnto me at that day, Lord Lord dyd we not prophesie in thy name? and in thy name cast out deuils? and dyd we not in thy name many miracles? Then will I confesse vnto thē, I neuer knew you, depart from me ye workers of iniquitie.

This doublyng of Lord hath vehemency and betokeneth that they which shalbe excluded are such as thinke thē selues better and perfitter then other men, and to deserue heauen with holy workes, not for them selues onely, but also for other. And by that they prophesied, by which thou mayst vnderstand the interpretyng of Scripture, and by that they cast out deuils, & did miracles in Christes name (and for all that they are yet workes of wickednesse, and do not the will of the father which is in heauen) it is playne that they be false Prophetes, and euen the same of which Christ warned before.

Ignorance excuseth not, if we will not see.

And now for as much as Christ and his Apostles warne vs that such shall come, and describe vs the fashions of their visures (Christes name, holy Church, holy fathers and xv. hundred yeares, with Scripture and miracles) and commaunde vs to turne our eyes from their visures, and consider their frutes, and cut them vp and loke within whether they be sound in the core & kernell or no, and geue vs a rule to try them by: is it excuse good inough to say, God will not let so great a multitude erre, I will folow the most part and beleue as my fathers dyd, and as the preachers teach, and will not busie my selfe: chose them, the faute is theirs and not ours, God shall not lay it to our charge if we erre.

False prophetes, how to knowe where they be.

Where such workes be, there are the false Prophetes all ready. For where no loue to the truth is, there are ỹ false Prophetes: & where such workes be, there to be no loue to ỹ truth is plane: Ergo, where such woorkes be, there be the false Prophetes in their full swyng by Paules rule. ij. Thessa. ij. An other conclusion where no loue to the truth is, there be false Prophetes: The greatest of the world haue least loue to the truth: Ergo, the false Prophetes be the Chaplaines of the greatest which may with the sword compel the rest: As the kynges of Israell compelled to worshyp the golden Calues. And by false Prophetes vnderstand false teachers, as Peter calleth them and wycked expounders of the Scripture.

Who soeuer heareth these words of me and doth them, I will lyken him vnto a wise man that built hys house vppon a rocke, and there fell a rayne, and the floudes came, and the windes blew, and beate vppon that house, but it fell not, for it was grounded vpon a rocke. And all that heare of me these wordes, and do them not, shalbe lykened vnto a foolishe man that buylt his house vpon the sand, and there fell a rayne, and the floudes came, and the windes blew, and dashed vpon that house, and it fell, and the fall therof was great.

Beleuers without woorkes, & woorkers without fayth are built on sand.

Christ hath two sortes of hearers, of which neither of them do there after. The one wilbe saued by fayth of theyr owne makyng without woorkes. The other with woorkes of their owne makyng without faith. The first are those voluptuous which haue yelded them selues vp to sinne saying: tushe God is mercyfull, & Christ dyed for vs: that must saue vs onely, for we cannot but sinne without resistãce. The second are the hypocrites which will deserue all with theyr owne imagined woorkes onely. And of fayth they haue no other experience, saue that it is a litle meritorious where it is paynefull to be beleued: As that Christ was borne of a virgin, and that he came not out the way that other children do, tie no, that were a great inconuenience but aboue vnder her arme & yet made no hole, though he had a very naturall body, & as other mẽ haue: and that there is no bread in the Sacrament nor wyne: though the fiue wittes say all ye. And the meritorious payne of this belefe is so heauy to them, that except they had fayned them a thousand wise similitudes and lowsye lykenesses, and as many madde reasõs to stay them with all, and to helpe to captiuate their vnderstandyng, they were like to cast all of their backes. And the onely refuge of a great many to keepe in that fayth, is to cast it out of their myndes & not to thinke vpon it. As though they forgene not, yet if they put the displeasure out of their myndes and thinke not of it til a good occasion be geuẽ to aduẽge it, they thinke they loue their neighbour well inough all the while, and be in good charitie.

The Papistes haue that fayth in theyr owne woorkes which they shuld haue in Iesus Christ.

And the fayth of the best of them is, but like theyr fayth in other worldly storyes. But the fayth which is trust and confidence to be saued and to haue their sinnes forgeuen by Christ which was so borne, haue they not at all. That fayth haue they in theyr owne woorkes onely. But the true hearers vnderstand the lawe, as Christ interpreteth it here, and feele thereby theyr righteous damnation, and runne to Christ for succour, and for remission of all their sinnes that are past, and for all the sinne, which chaunce thorough infirmities, shall compel thẽ to do, & for remission of that the law is to stronge for their weake nature.

Fayth, what it bringeth.

And vpon that they consent to the lawe, loue it and professe it, to fulfill it to the vttermost of their power, and then go to and worke. Faith or confidence in Christes bloud without helpe and before the woorkes of the law bringeth all maner of remission of sinnes & satisfaction. Faith is mother of loue, fayth accompanieth loue in all her woorkes to fulfill as much as there lacketh in our doing the lawe, of that perfect loue, which Christ had to his father and vs in his fulfilling of the law for vs. Now when we be reconciled, then is loue & fayth together our righteousnesse, our keeping the lawe, our continuing, our proceeding forwarde in the grace which we stand in, & our bringing to the euerlasting sauing and euerlasting life. And the woorkes be esteemed of God according to the loue of the hart. If the woorkes be great & loue little and colde, then the woorkes be regarded thereafter of God. If the woorkes be small, and loue much and feruent, the woorkes be taken for great of God.

Loue.

And it came to passe, that when Iesus had ended these sayinges, the people were astonied at his doctrine, for he taught them as one hauing power, and not as the Scribes.

The Scribes and Pharisees had thrust vp the sworde of the woorde of God into a scabbarde or shethe of glosses, and therein had knit it fast, that it coulde neither sticke nor cut: teaching dead woorkes without fayth and loue, which are the life and the whole goodnes of all woorkes, and the onely thing why they please God. And therefore their audience abode euer carnall and fleshly mynded without faith to God and loue to their neighbours.

Joh.

Christes woordes were spirit & life. Joh. vi. That is to say: they ministred spirite and life, and entred into the hart and grated on the conscience, and thorow preaching the lawe, made the hearers perceaue their duties: euen what loue they ought to God, & what to man, and the right dampnation of all them that had not the loue of God and man written in their hartes: and thorow preaching of fayth, made all that consented to the lawe of God, fele the mercy of God in Christ, and certified them of their saluation. For the woꝛde of God is a two edged ſwoꝛde that pearceth and deuideth the ſpirite and ſoule of man a ſonder. Heb. iiij. A man beſoꝛe the preaching of Godes woꝛde is but one man, all fleſhe, the ſoule conſenting vnto the luſtes of the fleſhe, to follow them. But the ſwoꝛde of the woꝛde of God where it taketh effect, diuideth a man in two, and ſetteth him at variaunce againſt his owne ſelfe: The fleſhe haling one way, and the ſpirite dꝛawing another: the fleſhe raging to follow luſtes, and the ſpirite calling backe agayne, to follow the lawe and will of God. A man all the while he conſenteth to the fleſh & beſoꝛe he be boꝛne again in Chꝛiſt, is called ſoule oꝛ carnall. But whē he is reuiued in Chꝛiſt thꝛough ỹ woꝛd of lyfe, and hath the loue of God and of hys neighboꝛ, and the fayth of Chꝛiſt wꝛitten in his hart, he is called ſpirite oꝛ ſpirituall. The Loꝛd of all mercy ſend vs pꝛeachers with power: that is to ſay, true expounders of the woꝛde of God, and ſpeakers to the hart of man: and deliuer vs from Scribes, Phariſeyes, hypocrites, and all falſe Pꝛophetes. Amen.

The woꝛd of God, where it taketh effect, deuideth a man into two parts, that is: cauſeth ỹ fleſhe to hold one way, and the ſpirite to dꝛaw an other.

An aunſwere vnto Syr Thomas Mores Dialogue, made by William Tyndall. 1530.

First he declareth what the Church is, and geueth a reaſon of certaine woꝛdes which Maſter More rebuketh in the tranſlation of the new Teſtament.

After that he aunſwereth particularly vnto euery Chapter which ſemeth to haue any appearaunce of truth thꝛough all his foure bookes.

Awake thou that ſlepeſt and ſtand vp from death, and Chꝛiſt ſhall geue the light. Epheſians. 5.

THe grace of our Loꝛd, the light of his ſpirite to ſee & to iudge, true repẽtaunce towardes Godes lawe, a faſt fayth in the mercyfull pꝛomiſes ỹ are in our ſauiour Chꝛiſt, feruẽt loue toward thy neighbour after the exãple of Chꝛiſt & his Saints, be with thee (O Reader) & with all that loue the truth & log foꝛ the redemption of Godes elect. Amen.

Our Sauiour Jeſus in the 16. of Johñ at his laſt Supper when he tooke his leaue of his Diſciples, warned them ſaying, the holy Ghoſt ſhall come and rebuke the woꝛld of iudgemẽt. That is, he ſhall rebuke the woꝛld foꝛ lacke of true iudgement and diſcretion to iudge, and ſhall pꝛoue that the taſt of theyꝛ mouthes is coꝛrupt, ſo that they iudge ſwete to be ſoꝛꝛe and ſoꝛꝛe to be ſwete, & the eyes to be blynd, ſo that they thinke that to be the very ſeruice of God which is but a blynd ſuperſtition, foꝛ zeale of which yet they perſecute the true ſeruice of God: and that they iudge to be the lawe of God, whiche is but a falſe imagination of a coꝛrupt iudgement, foꝛ blynd affection of whiche yet they perſecute the true law of God and them that kepe it.

And this ſayne it is that Paul ſayth 1. Corinth. ij. how that the naturall man that is not boꝛne agayne and created a new with the ſpirite of God, be he neuer ſo great a Philoſopher, neuer ſo well ſene in the law, neuer ſoꝛe ſtudied in the Scripture, as we haue exãples in the Phariſeis, yet hee cannot vnderſtãd the thynges of the ſpirite of God: but ſayth he, the ſpirituall iudgeth all thynges and hys ſpirite ſearcheth the deepe ſecretes of God, ſo that what ſoeuer God commãdeth hym to do, he neuer leaueth ſearchyng till he come at the bottome, the pith, the quicke, the lyfe, the ſpirit, the marow & very cauſe why, and iudgeth all thyng. Take an example, in the great commaundement, loue God with all thyne hart, ỹ ſpirituall ſearcheth the cauſe and looketh on the benefites of God and ſo conceaueth loue in his hart. And when he is commaunded to obey the powers and rulers of the woꝛld, hee looketh on the benefites which God ſheweth the woꝛld thꝛough them and therefoꝛe doth it gladly. And when hee is commaũded to loue his neighbour as hym ſelfe, he ſearcheth that his neighbour is created of God and bought with Chꝛiſtes bloud and ſo foꝛth, and therefoꝛe he loueth hym out of his hart, and if he be euill foꝛbeareth hym and with all loue and patience dꝛaweth hym to good: as elder bꝛethꝛen wayte on the yõger and ſerue them and ſuffer them, & when they will not come they ſpeake fayꝛe, & flatter, and geue ſome gaye thyng and pꝛomiſe fayꝛe and ſo dꝛawe them and ſmite them not, but if they may in no wiſe be holpe, referre the puniſhment to the father and mother and ſo foꝛth. And by theſe iudgeth he all other lawes of God and vnderſtãdeth the true vſe and meanyng of them. And by theſe vnderſtandeth he in the lawes of man, whiche are right, and which tyranny.

If God should cõmaunde hym to drinke no wine, as he commaũded in the olde testament that the priestes should not: when they ministred in the temple, and forbad diuerse meates, the spirituall (because he knoweth that man is Lord ouer all other creatures, & they his seruauntes, made to be at his pleasure, and that it is not commaunded for the wyne or meate it selfe that man should be in bondage vnto his owne seruaunt the inferiour creature) ceaseth not to search the cause. And when he findeth it, that it is to tame the flesshe, and that he be alway sober, he obeyeth gladly, and yet not so superstitiously, that the tyme of his disease he would not drinke wine in ỹ way of a medicine to recouer his health, as Dauid eat of the halowed bread, and as Moses for necessitie left the children of Israell vncircumcised xl. yeares, where of likelyhoode some dyed vncircumcised, and were yet thought to be in no worse case then they that were circumcised, as the children that dyed within the viij. day, were counted in as good case as they that were circũcised, which ensamples might teach vs many thinges, if there were spirite in vs.

Man is Lord ouer all the creatures of the earth.

1. Reg. 21.

Circumcisiõ not frequented in xl. yeares.

And likewise of the holy day, he knoweth that the day is seruaunt to man, and therfore when he findeth that it is done because he should not be let from hearing the worde of God, he obeyeth gladly, and yet not so superstitiously that he would not helpe his neighbour on the holy day, and let the sermõ alone for one day, or that he would not worke on the holyday, neede requiring it, at such tyme as men be not wont to be at church, and so throughout all lawes. And euen likewise in all ceremonies and sacramentes he searcheth the significations, & will not serue the visible thinges. It is as good to him, that the priest say Masse in his gowne as in his other apparell, if they teach him not somewhat, and that his soule be edified thereby. And as soone will he gape while thou puttest saude as holy salt in his mouth, if thou shew hym no reason thereof. He had as lefe be smered wyth vnhalowed butter as annointed wyth charmed oyle, if his soule be not taught to vnderstand somewhat thereby, and so forth.

Holy dayes are ordeined for mã, and not man for the holy dayes.

The signification of thynges are to be sought and not to serue the visible signes.

Ceremonies without some good doctrine are to be reiected.

But the world captiuateth his wit, and about the law of God, maketh him wonderfull imaginations, vnto which he so fast cleaueth that ten John Baptistes were not able to dispute them out of his head. He beleueth that he loueth God, because he is ready to kill a Turke for his sake, that beleueth better in God then he) whom God also commaundeth vs to loue and to leaue nothyng vnsought, to winne him vnto the knowledge of the truth, though with the losse of our liues. He supposeth that he loueth his neighbour as much as he is bounde, if he be not actually angry with him, whom yet he will not helpe freely with an halfepenny but for a vauntage or vayneglory, or for a worldly purpose. If any man haue displeased him, he keepeth his malice in and will not chafe him selfe about it, till he see an occasion to auẽge it craftely, and thinketh that well inough. And the rulers of the world he obeyeth, thinketh he, when he flattereth them, and blindeth them with giftes, and corrupteth the officers with rewardes, and beguileth the lawe with cautels and subtilties.

Turkes are rather to be lamẽted for their ignorãce and to be wonne with good doctrine & example of good lyfe, then to be hated and murthered.

And because the loue of God and of hys neighbour, which is the spirite and the life of all lawes, & wherfore all lawes are made, is not written in his hart, therefore in all inferiour lawes and in all worldly ordinaunces is he betell blinde. If he be commaunded to abstayne from wine, that will he obserue vnto the death to, as the Charterhouse Mõkes had leuer dye then eate flesshe: and as for the sobernesse and chastising of the members will he not looke for, but will poure in ale & bere of the strongest without measure, and hear them with spices and so forth. And the holyday will he keepe so straight, that if he meete a flee in his bed he dare not kill her, & not once regarde wherfore the holyday was ordayned to seeke for Gods worde, and so forth in all lawes. And in ceremonies and sacramentes, there he captiuateth his witte & vnderstanding to obey holy Church, without asking what they meane, or desiring to know, but onely careth for the keeping, and looketh euer wyth a payre of narrow eyes, and wyth all hys spectacles vppon them, lest ought be leste out. For if the priest shoulde say Masse, baptise, or heare confession without a stole about his necke, he would thinke all were marred, and doubt whether he had power to consecrate, and thinke that the vertue of the Masse were lost, and the childe not well baptised or not baptised at all, and that his absolution were not worth a mite. He had leuer that the Bysshop should wag two fingers ouer him, then that an other man should say God saue him, and so forth. Wherfore beloued reader, in as much as the holy ghost rebuketh the worlde for lacke of iudgement, and in as much also as their ignorance is without excuse before whose faces inough is set to iudge by, if they woulde open their eyes to see, and not captiuate their vnderstanding to beleue lyes: and in as much as the spirituall iudgeth all thing, euen the very bottome of Gods secretes, that is to say, the causes of the thinges which God commaundeth, how much more ought we to iudge our holy fathers secretes, & not to be as an Oxe or an Asse without vnderstanding.

We do wrõg thyng wel ere we do it of law from a pure hart.

Superstitious obseruations accõpt the breakyng of the law then the keping of the same.

The world is to be rebuked for lacke of iudgement.

Judge therfore reader whether the Pope with his be the Church, whether their authoritie bee about the Scripture: whether all they teach without Scripture be equall with the Scripture: whether they haue erred, and not onely whether they can. And against the myst of their sophistry take the examples that are past in the old Testament, & authentike stories, and the present practise whiche thou seest before thyne eyes. Judge whether it be possible that any good should come out of their domme ceremonies & Sacramentes into thy soule. Judge their penaunce, pilgrimages, pardons, purgatorie, praying to postes, domme blessynges, domme absolutiõs, their domme pateryng and howling, their domme straunge holy gestures with all their domme disguisinges, their satisfactiõs and iustifyinges. And because thou findest them false in so many thynges, trust them in nothyng but iudge thẽ in all thinges, Iudge by these thynges whether the Pope haue erred or no.

Iudge what baggage is in the Popes doctrine and his maner

Marke

Note the practise of our fleshly spiritualtie.

Marke at the last the practise of our fleshly spiritualtie and their wayes by whiche they haue walked aboue eight hundred yeares, how they stablish their lyes, first with falsifying the Scripture, then thorough corrupting with their riches wherof they haue infinite treasure in store: and last of all with the sword. Haue they not compelled the Emperours of the earth and the great Lordes and hygh Officers to be obedient vnto them, to dispute for them, and to be their tormẽtours, and the Sanhedrins thẽ selues do but imagine mischiek and inspire them.

The Papistes are gathered together agaynst Christ.

Marke whether it were euer truer then now, the Scribes, Pharises, Pylate, Herode, Cayphas and Anna, are gathered together agaynst God & Christ. But yet I trust in vayne, and he that brake the Counsell of Achitophell shall scatter theirs. Marke whether it be not true in the hyghest degree, that for the sinne of the people hypocrites shall rayne ouer them. what shewes, what faces and contrary pretenses are made, and all to stablish them in their theft, falsehead, & damnable lyes, and to gather them together for to continue sutiltie to oppresse the truth and to stoppe the light & to kepe all still in darkenesse. Wherfore it is time to awake and to see euery man with his owne eyes and to iudge, if we will not be iudged of Christ when he commeth to iudge. And remember that he which is warned hath none excuse, if he take no hede. Here with fare wel in ỹ Lord Iesus Christ whose spirite be thy guide & doctrine and the light to iudge with all. Amen.

Our sinne is the cause that hypocrites reigne.

The practice of prelates.

What the Church is.

Significations of the woorde church are diuers.

THis woorde Churche hath diuerse significations. First it signifieth a place or house, whether Christen people were wont in the old tyme to resorte at tymes cõuenient, for to heare the word of doctrine, the law of God & the fayth of our Saniour Iesus Christ, & how and what to pray and whence to aske power and strength to liue godly. For the officers therto appointed preached the pure word of God onely and prayed in a toung that all men vnderstode. And ỹ people hearkned vnto his prayers, & sayd thereto Amẽ & prayed with him in their hartes, & of him learned to pray at home and euery where, and to instruct euery man his houshold.

The ministers of the church are appointed to preach to ỹ people surely the worde of God, & to pray in a toung that all mẽ vnderstand.

Where now we heare but voyces with out signification and buzsinges, howlynges and cryinges, as it were the halowynges of Foxes or baytings of Beares, & wonder at disguisings & toyes wherof we know no meanyng.

By reason wherof we be fallen into such ignorauncie, that we know of the mercy & promises whiche are in Christ nothyng at all.

And of the law of God we thinke as do the Turkes, and as did the old heathen people, how that it is a thyng which euery man may do of his owne power, and in doyng therof becõmeth good and wareth righteous and deserueth heauen: yea and are yet more mad then that. For we imagine the same of Phantasies and vayne ceremonies of our owne making, neither nedefull vnto the tamyng of our owne flesh, neither profitable vnto our neighbour, neither honour vnto God.

The lawe cannot be fulfilled by woorkes, as they neuer so holy.

And of prayer we thinke, that no man can pray but at Church, and that it is nothing els but to say Pater noster vnto a post. wherewith yet and with other obseruasices of our owne imaginyng, we beleue, we deserue to be sped of all that our blynd hartes desire.

A great abuse in prayer.

In an other signification it is abused and mistakẽ for a multitude of shauen shorne, and oyled which we now call the spiritualtie and Clergy. As when we read in the Chronicles kyng William was a great tyrant and a wicked man vnto holy Church and tooke much landes from them. Kyng Iohn was also a perilous man and a wicked vnto holy Church, & would haue had them punished for theft, murther and what soeuer mischief they dyd, as though they had not bene people annoynted, but euẽ of the vile rascall and common lay people.

The church taken for the spiritualtie.

King William.

King Iohn.

And Thomas Becket was a blessed & an holy man for he dyed for the liberties (to do all mischief vnpunished) & priuileges of the Church. Is he a laye man or a man of the Church? Such is the liuing of holy Church. So men say of holy church. Ye must beleue in holy Church & do as they teach you. will ye not obey holy Church? will ye not do the penaunce enioyned you by holy Church? will yet not forsweare obeisance vnto holy Church? Beware least ye fal into ỹ indignatiõ of holy church, lest they curse you & so forth. In which all we vnderstand but ỹ Pope, Cardinals, Legates, Patriarckes, Archbyshops, Byshops, Abbotes, Priours, Chaunceliers, Archdeacons, Commissaries, Officials, Priestes, Monkes, Friers, Blacke, whit, Pied, Grey, and so forth, by (I trow) a thousand names of blasphemy and of hypocrisies & as many sundry fashions of disguisinges.

S. Thomas of Caunterbury.

Holy Church hath borne a great swinge.

The Pope and his rable take for the church.

It hath yet or should haue an other signification, little knowen among the common people now a dayes. That is to wit, it signifieth a congregation, a multitude or a company gathered together in one, of all degrees of people. As a mā would say, the church of Lōdon, meaning not the spiritualtie onely (as they will be called for their diligent serving of God in the spirite, and so sore eschuing to meddle wyth temporall matters) but the whole bodye of the citie, of all kindes, conditions & degrees: and the church of Bristow, all that pertaine vnto the towne generally. And what congregation is mēt, thou shalt alway vnderstand by the matter that is entreated of, and by the circumstaunces thereof.

The church is a congregation of people of all sortes gathered together.

The church of God how it is taken in Scripture.

And in this third signification is the church of God or Christ taken in the scripture, euē for the whole multitude of all them that receaue the name of Christ to beleue in him, and not for the clergy onely. For Paule sayth Gal.i. I persecuted the church of God aboue measure, which was not the preachers onely, but all that beleued generally, as it is to see Act.xxij. where he saith, I persecuted this way euen vnto the death, binding and putting in prison both men and women. And Gal.i. I was vnknowen concerning my person vnto the congregations of the Iewes which were in Christ. And Rom. xvi. I commende vnto you Phebe the Deaconisse of the church of Cenchris. And the churches of Asia salute you. i. Corin. the last.

Gal.i.

Actes.xx.

Gal.i.

Rom.16.

1.Cor.16.

And if a man can not rule his owne house, how shall he take the care of the church of God. i. Tim.iij? if any faithfull man or woman haue widdowes, let them finde them, that the church be not charged. i. Tim. v. And Mat.18. if thy brother heare thee not, tell the church or congregation and so forth. In which places and thoroughout all the scripture, the church is taken for ỳ whole multitude of them that beleue in Christ in that place, in that parishe, towne, citie, prouince, land, or thoroughout all the worlde, and not for the spiritualtie onely.

1.Tim.3.

1.Tim.5.

The church is a multitude of all them that beleue in Christ wheresoeuer they be gathered together.

Notwithstāding yet it is somtimes taken generally for all them that embrace the name of Christ, though their faithes be naught, or though they haue no fayth at all. And sometimes it is taken specially for the electe onely, in whose hartes God hath written hys lawe with his holy spirite, and geuen them a feeling faith of the mercy that is in Christ Iesu our Lord.

A double significatiō of this worde church.

¶ Why Tindall vsed this worde congregation, rather thē church in the translation of the new Testament.

Wherefore in as much (as the clergy, as the nature of those hard & indurat Adamātstones is, to draw all to them) had appropriat vnto themselues the terme that of right is common vnto all the whole congregation of them that beleue in Christ, & wyth their false and subtil wyles had beguiled and mocked the people, & brought them into the ignorāunce of the worde, making thē vnderstand by this worde church, nothing but the shauen flocke, of them that shore the whole worlde: therefore in the translation of the new Testament where I found this word Ecclesia, I enterpreted it, by thys word congregation. Euen therfore did I it, and not of any mischeuous mynde or purpose to stablisshe heresie, as master More vntruely reporteth of me in hys Dialoge, where he rayleth on ỳ translation of the new Testament.

The cause why Tyndall trāslated ỳ word church into this worde congregation.

And when M. More sayth, that this word Church is knowen wel inough, I repor me vnto the consciēces of all the land, whether he say truth or otherwise, or whether the lay people vnderstand by Church the whole multitude of all that professe Christ, or the iugglyng spirites onely. And whē he saith that congregation is a more generall terme, if it were, it hurteth not. For the circumstaunce doth euer tell what cōgregation is ment. Neuertheless yet sayth he not the truth. For whersoeuer I may say a congregation; there may I say a Church also, as the Church of the deuill, the Church of Sathan, the Church of wretches, ỳ Church of wickedmen, the Churche of lyers and a Church of Turkes therto.

Congregation is vnderstand by the circumstaunce.

For M. More must graunt (if he will haue Ecclesia translated throughout all the new Testament by this woorde Church) that Church is as commō as Ecclesia. Now is Ecclesia a Greeke word and was in vse before the tyme of the Apostles and taken for a cōgregation among the heathē, where was no congregation of God or of Christ. And also Lucas him selfe vseth Ecclesia for a Church or congregation of heathen people thrise in one Chapter, euē in the xix. of the Actes, where Demetrius the goldsmith or silversmith had gathered a company agaynst Paule for preachyng agaynst Images.

Ecclesia is a greke worde, and signifieth a congregation.

Actes.19.

Howbeit M. More hath so long vsed his

M.More was faulty in Poetry.

his figures of Poetry, that (I suppose) whē he erreth most, he now by the reason of a long custome, beleueth himself, that he sayth most true. Or els (as the wise people which when they daunce naked in nettes beleue that no man seeth them) euen so M. More thinketh that his errours be so subtilly couched that no man can espy them. So blinde he counteth all other men in comparison of his great vnderstandyng. But charitably I exhorte him in Christ to take hede, for though Judas were wilier then his felowes to get lucre, yet he proued not most wise at ỹ last end.

Judas.

Balaam.

Neither though Balam the false Prophet had a cleare light to bryng ỹ curse of God vpon the childrē of Israell for honours sake, yet his couetousnesse did so blind his prophesie, that he could not see his owne end. Let therfore M. More and his cōpany awake betymes ere euer their sinne be ripe, lest ỹ voyce of their wickednesse ascende vp and awake God out of his slepe, to loke vpō them and to bow his eares vnto theyr cursed blasphemies agaynst the open truth, and to send his harnest men and mowares of vengeaunce to repe it.

A good admonitiō to M.More.

But how happeth it that M. More hath not contended in likewise against hys derelyng Erasmus all this longe while? Doth not he chalige this word Ecclesia into congregatiō and that not seldome in the new Testamēt? peradventure he oweth him fauour because he made Moria in hys house. whiche booke if it were in English, thē should euery man see, how that he then was farre otherwise mynded then he now writeth. But verely I thinke that as Judas betrayd not Christ for any loue that he had vnto the hyghe Priestes, Scribes and Pharisees, but onely to come by that wherfore he thirsted: euē so M. More (as there are tokens euidēt) wrote not these bookes for any affectiō that he bare vnto the spiritualty or vnto the opinions which he so barely defēdeth, but to obtaine onely that which he was an hungred for: I pray God that he eate not to hastily lest he be choked at the latter end, but that he repēt and resist not the spirite of God which openeth light vnto the worlde.

M.More hath greatly honour Erasmus.

M.More was a depe dissembler.

¶ Why he vseth this woorde Elder and not Priest.

Another thyng which he rebuketh, is, that I interprete this Greeke worde Presbiteros by this worde Senior. Of a truth Senior is no very good

M.More hath not yet repēted.

Englishe, though Senior and Iunior be vsed in the vniuersities: but there came no better in my mynde at that tyme. Howbeit I spied my fault since, long yer M. More rolde it me, and haue mēded it in all the woorkes which I sens made, and call it an Elder. And in that he maketh heresie of it, to call Presbiteros an Elder, he condemneth their owne old Latin text of heresie also, which they vse yet dayly in ỹ church and haue vsed, I suppose, this .xiiij. hūdred yeares. For that text doth call it an elder likewise. In the .1. Pet. 5. thus standeth it in ỹ Latin text. Seniores qui in vobis sunt, obsecro ego consenior, pascite qui in vobis est gregem Christi. The elders that are among you I beseech, which am an elder also, that ye fede the flocke of Christ, which is among you. There is Presbyteros called an elder. And in ỹ he sayth fede Christes flocke, he meaneth euen the Ministers ỹ were chosen to teach the people & to informe them in Gods word & no lay persons. And in the 2. Epistle of John sayth the text, Senior electæ Dominæ & filijs eius. The elder vnto the elect Lady and to her children. And in the 3. Epistle of John. Senior Gaio dilecto. The elder vnto the beloued Gaius. In these 3. Epistles Presbyteros is called an elder. And in the 20. of the Actes, ỹ text sayth: Paule sent for maiores natu Ecclesie, the elders in byth of the congregation or Church, and sayd vnto them, take hede vnto your selues & vnto ỹ whole flock, ouer which the holy ghost hath made you Episcopos ad regendum Ecclesiam Dei, Bysshops ouersears to gouerne the Church of God. There is Presbyteros called an Elder in byth whiche same immediately called a Bysshop or ouersear, to declare what persons are ment. Hereof ye see that I haue no more erred then their owne text which they haue vsed sence the scripture was first in the Latin tonge, and that their owne text vnderstandeth by Presbyteros nothyng saue an Elder. And they were called Elders, because of their age, grauitie & sadnesse, as thou mayst see by the text: and Bysshops or ouersears by the reasō of their offices. And all that were called Elders (or Priests if they so wil) were called Bishops also, though they haue diuided ỹ names now, which thing thou mayst euidently see by the first Chapter of Titus. And Actes 20. and other places mo.

M.More condēpneth the Latin text.

1.Pet.5.

Iohn.2.

Iohn 3.

Actes.20.

Bysshops are ordeyned to be ouerlers and gouernours of ỹ Church.

The ministers of the church why they were called Elders.

And when he sayth Timothe vnto my charge, how he was young, thē he weneth that he hath wonne his gilden spurres: But I would pray hym to shew me where he readeth that Paule calleth hym Presbyteros, Priest or Elder. I durst not then cal him Episcopus properly. For those overseers which we now call Byshops after the Greke word, were alway bidyng in one place to governe the congregation there.

Byshops ought to be byders in one place.

Now was Timothe an Apostle. And Paule also writeth that he came shortly agayn. well, will he say, it commeth yet all to one. For if it becommeth the lower Minister to be of a sad and discrete age, much more it becommeth the hygher. It is truth. But y. thynges are without law, God and necessitie. If God to shew his power shall shed out his grace more vpon youth then vpon age at a time, who shall let him? Wemē be no mete vessels to rule or to preach (for both are forbidden them) yet hath God endowed them with his spirite at sondry tymes and shewed his power and goodnesse vpō them and wrought wonderfull thynges by them, because he would not haue them despised. We read that women haue iudged all Israell and haue bene great prophetisses and haue done mighty dedes. Yea and if stories be true, wemen haue preached sence the openyng of ỹ new Testamēt.

Note.

Women.

God poureth hys holy spirite & endoweth wyth wisdome & learning aswell wemē as mē.

Do not our wemen now Christen and minister the Sacrament of Baptisme in tyme of nede? Might they not by as good reason preach also, if necessitie required? If a woman were driuē into some Iland, where Christ was neuer preached, might she there not preach him, if she had the gift thereto? Might she not also Baptise? And why might she not, by the same reason minister the Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, and teach them how to chose officers & ministers? O poore wemen, how despise ye them? The viler the better welcome vnto you. An whore had ye leuer thē an honest wife. If onely shauen and annoynted may do these thinges, then Christ dyd them not nor any of his Apostles, nor any man in long tyme after. For they vsed no such ceremonies.

God is vnder no lawe, necessitie lawlesse.

Notwithstanding, though God be vnder no lawe, and necessitie lawlesse: yet be we vnder a lawe, and ought to preferre the men before the women, & age before youth, as nie as we cā. For it is agaynst the lawe of nature that young men should rule the elder, and as vncomely as that women shoulde rule the men, but when neede requireth. And therfore if Paule had had other shift, and a man of age as mete for the roome, he would not haue put Timothy in the office, he should no doubt haue bene kept backe vntil a fuller age, and hane learned in the meane time in silence. And whatsoeuer thou be that readest this, I exhort thee in our lord, that thou read both ỹ epistles of Paule to Timothy, that thou mayst see how diligently (as a mother careth for her childe if it be in perill) Paule writeth vnto Timothy to instruct him, to teach hym, to exhort, to corage hym, to stirre hun vp, to be wise, sober, diligent, circumspect, sad, humble and meeke, saying: these I write that thou mayest know how to behaue thy selfe in the house of God, which is the church or congregation. Auoyde lustes of youth, beware of vngodly fables & oldwines tales, & auoyde the company of men of corrupt myndes, which waste theyr braynes about wrangling questions. Let no man dispise thyne youth. As who shoulde say, youth is a dispised thyng of it selfe, wherevnto men gene none obedience or reuerence naturally. See therefore that thy vertue exceede, to recompence thy lacke of age, and that thou so behaue thy self that no fault be founde with thee. And agayne, rebuke not an Elder sharpely, but exhort him as thy father, and yongmen as thy brethren, and the elder women as thy mothers, and ỹ yong womē as thy sisters, and such like in euery chapter. Admit none accusation agaynst an Elder vnder lesse then two witnesses. And Paule chargeth hym in the sight of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of his elect Angels, to do nothing rashely or of affection. And shortely wherevnto youth is most prone and ready to fall, therof warneth he hym with all diligence, euen almost or altogether halfe a dolen times of some one thyng. And finally as a man woulde teach a childe that had neuer before gone to schole, so tēderly & so carefully doth Paul teach him. It is an other thyng to teach the people, and to teach the preacher. Here Paule teacheth the preacher, young Timothy.

The cause why yong Timothy was preferred by Paule to be a Byshop.

Paul had a fatherly instrument to Timothy.

S. Paul was a boy thy & must reuerence hys father & mother.

A great difference betwene teaching the people and teaching of a preacher.

And when he affirmeth that I say, how that the oyling and shauing is no part of the Priesthode. That improueth he not, nor can do. And therfore I say it yet. And when he hath inserched the vttermost that he cā, this is all that he can lay agaynst me, that of an hundred there be not x. that haue the properties which Paule requireth to be in them. wherfore if oyling and shauyng be no part of their Priesthode, then euermore of a thousand ix. hundred at the lest should be no Priests at all. And quoth your frend would confirme it with an oth and sweare depely, that it would folow and ỹ it must nedes so be. which argument yet, if there were no other shift I would solue after an Oxford fashion, with concedo consequentiam & consequens. And I say moreouer that their annoynting is but a ceremonie borowed of ỹ Iewes, though they haue somewhat altered the maner, and their shauing borowed of the heathen Priestes, and that they be no more of their priesthood, then the oyle, salte, spittell, taper and chrisome cloth of the substaunce of baptime. which thinges no doubt, because they be of their coniuring, they would haue preached of necessitie vnto the saluation of the childe, except necessitie had driuen them vnto the contrary.

Oyling, nor shauing is no thyng of any part of priesthode.

Oyle, salt, & spittle are no peces of Baptisme.

And seing that the oyle is not of necessitie, let M. More tell me what more vertue is in the oyle of confirmatiõ, in as much as the bishop sacreth the one as well as the other: yea and let hym tell the reason why there shoulde be more vertue in the oyle wherewith ỹ Bysshop annointeth his Priestes. Let hym tell you from whence the oyle cõmeth, how it is made, and why he selleth it to the curates wherewyth they annointe the sicke, or whether this be of lesse vertue then the other.

Oyle hath in it no vertue at all, though the Bysshop halow it.

☞ And finally, why vsed not the Apostles this greke worde ἱερεύς, or the interpreter this Latin woorde Sacerdos, but alway this worde Presbyteros and Senior, by which was at that time nothing signified but an Elder? And it was no doubt taken of the custome of the Hebrues, where the officers were euer elderly men as nature requireth. As it appeareth in the olde testament and also in the new. The Scribes, Pharises, and the elders of the people sayth the text, which were the officers and rulers, so called by the reason of their age.

The ministers amõg the Iewes were named Elders, because of their age.

¶ Why he vseth loue rather then charitie.

Why Tyndall vseth this worde loue rather than charitie.

HE rebuketh me also that I trãslate thys greke worde ἀγάπη into loue, and not rather into charitie, as holy & so knowen a terme. Verely charitie is no knowen Englishe, in that sence which agape requireth. For when we say, gene your almes in the worship of God and sweete saint charitie, and when the father teacheth his sonne to say blessing father for saint charitie, what meane they? In good fayth they wot not. Moreouer whẽ we say, God helpe you, I haue done my charitie for this day, do we not take it for almes? And the man is euer chiding and out of charitie, and I beshrew hym saying my charitie, there we take it for patience. And when I say a charitable mã, it is taken for mercifull. And though mercifulnes be a good loue, or rather spring of a good loue, yet is not euery good loue mercifulnes. As when a woman loueth her husband godly, or a man his wife or his frende that is in none aduersitie, it is not alway mercifulnesse. Also we say not thys man hath a great charitie to god, but a great loue. wherfore I must haue vsed this generall terme loue, in spite of myne hart oftentimes. And agape & charitas were wordes vsed among the Hethen yer Christ came, and signified therefore more then a godly loue. And we may say well inough and haue heard it spoken that the Turkes be charitable one to an other among themselues, & some of them vnto the christen to. Besides all this agape is cõmon vnto all loues.

Charitie hath diuers significations.

Loue also is diuersly vnderstãd.

And when M. More saith euery loue is not charitie, no more is euery Apostle Christes Apostle, nor euery Angell Gods Angell, nor euery hope christen hope, nor euery fayth or beliefe Christes beleefe, and so by an hũdred thousand wordes. So that if I should alway vse but a worde ỹ were no more generall then the worde I enterprete, I should enterprete nothing at all. But the matter it selfe and the circumstaunces do declare what loue, what hope, and what fayth is spokẽ of. And finally I say not charitie God, or charitie your neighbour, but loue God and loue your neighbour, ye & though we say a man ought to loue his neighbours wife & his daughter, a Christen man doth vnderstand that he is commaũded to defile his neighbours wife or his daughter.

Euery loue is not charitie nor euery charitie is not loue.

¶ Why fauour and not grace.

Why Tyndall sayth fauour and not grace.

AND with lyke reasons rageth he because I turne χάρις into fauour and not into grace, saying that euery fauour is not grace, and that in some fauour there is but little grace. I can say also in some grace there is little goodnesse. And when we say, he standeth well in my Ladyes grace, we vnderstand no great godly fauour. And in Vniuersities many vngracious graces are gotten.

¶ Why knowledge and not confession, repentaunce and not penaunce.

Knowledge and not confession, repentaūce and not penaunce.

AND that I vse this worde knowledge and not confession, and this word repentaunce and not penaunce. In which all he can not proue, that I gene not the right Englishe vnto the Greeke word. But it is a farre other thyng that payneth them and byteth them by the brestes. There be secret panges that pinch the very hartes of them, wherof they dare not cõplayne. The sekenesse that maketh them so impaciẽt is, that they haue lost their iuggling termes. For the doctours and preachers were wont to make many diuisiõs, distinctions & sortes of grace, gratis data, gratum faciens, preueniens & subsequens. And with confession they iuggled, & so made the people, as oft as they spake of it: vnderstand shrift in the eare. wherof the Scripture maketh no mentiõ: no it is cleane agaynst the Scripture as they vse it and preach it, and vnto God an abhominatiõ and a foule stinkyng sacrifice vnto the filthy Idole Priapus. The losse of those iuggling termes is the matter where of all these bottes brede / that gnaw them by the belyes and make them so vnquiet.

The Papistes may not forbeare to haue their iuggling termes.

Penaunce.

And in like maner, by this word penaunce, they make the people vnderstand holy deedes of their enioynyng, with which they must make satisfactiõ vnto Godward for their sinnes. when all the Scripture preacheth that Christ hath made full satisfactiõ for our sinnes to Godward, & we must now be thankfull to God agayne and kill the lustes of our flesh with holy workes of gods enioynyng & to take patiently all that God layeth on my back. And if I haue hurt my neighbour, I am bounde to shrine my selfe vnto him and to make him amendes, if I haue wherewith, or if not thẽ to aske him forgeuenesse, and he is bounde to forgeue me. And as for their penaũce the Scripture knoweth not of. The Greke hath Metanoia and Metanoite, repentaunce and repente, or forthinkyng and forthinke. As we say in English it forthinketh me or I forthinke, and I repent or it repẽteth me and I am sory that I dyd it. So now

Penaunce was profitable to the Papistes.

True penaunce What it is.

the Scripture sayth repent or let it forthinke you and come & beleue the Gospell or glad tydynges that is bronght you in Christ, and so shall all be forgeuen you, and henceforth lyue a new lyfe: And it will folow if I repent in the hart, that I shall do no more so wilingly and of purpose. And if I beleued the Gospell, what God hath done for me in Christ, I should surely loue him agayne & of loue prepare my selfe vnto his commaundementes.

Faythe in Christ bringeth true repentaũce

These thinges to be euen so M. More knoweth well inough. For he vnderstandeth the Greke, and he knew them longer I. But so blynd is couetousnesse & dronkẽ desire of honour. Giftes blind the eyes of the seyng and peruert the wordes of the righteous Deut. xvij when couetousnes findeth vantage in fernyng falsehead, it riseth vp into an obstinate malice agaynst the truth & seeketh all meanes to resiste it, and to quẽch it. As Balam the false Prophet, though he wiste that God loued Israell and had blessed them and promised them great thyngs, and that he would fulfill his promises, yet for couetousnesse and desire of honour, he fell into such malice agaynst the truth of God, that he sought how to resiste it and to curse the people. whiche when God would not let him do, he turned him selfe an other way and gaue pestilent counsell, to make the people sinne agaynst God, wherby the wrath of God fel vpon them, and many thousand perished. Notwithstandyng Gods truth abode fast and was fulfiled in the rest. And Balam as he was the cause that many perished, so escaped he not hym selfe. No more did any that maliciously resisted the open truth agaynst hys owne conscience, sence the world began, that euer I read. For it is sinne agaynst ỳ holy ghost, which Christ saith shall neither be forgeuẽ here nor in the world to come; whiche text may this wise be vnderstand that as that sinne shalbe punished with euerlastyng dãnation in the lyfe to come: euen so shall it not escape vengeaũce here. As thou seest in Judas, in Pharao, in Balam and in all other tyrauntes whiche agaynst their consciences resisted the open truth of God.

So now the cause why our Prelates thus rage, & that moueth them to call M. More to helpe, is not that they finde iust causes in the translation, but because they haue lost their iuggling and layned termes, wherewith Peter pro-

¶Whether the Church were before the Gospell or the Gospell before the Church.

The church before ỹ gospell. or the Gospell before the church.

ANother doubt there is, whether the Church or congregatiō be before the Gospell or the Gospell before the Church. which question is as hard to solue, as whether the father be elder then the sonne or the sonne elder then his father. For the whole Scripture and all beleuing hartes testifie that we are begotten through the word. wherfore if the word beget the congregatiō, & he that begetteth is before hym that is begotten, then is the Gospell before the Church. Paul also Rom. ix. sayth, how shall they call on him whom they beleue not? And how shall they beleue without a preacher? That is, Christ must first be preached yer men can beleue in him. And then it foloweth, that the word of the preacher must be before the fayth of the beleuer. And therfore in as much as the word is before the faith, and faith maketh the congregation, therfore is the word or Gospell before the congregation. And agayne as the ayre is darke of it selfe & receaueth all her light of the sonne: euen so are all mens hartes of thēselues darke with lyes and receaue all their truth of Gods word, in that they consent therto. And moreouer as the darke ayre geueth the sonne no light, but contrarywise the light of the sonne in respect of the ayre is of it selfe and lighteneth the ayre & purgeth it from darkenesse: euē so the lying hart of man can geue the word of God no truth, but contrary wise the truth of Gods word is of her self, and lighteneth the harts of the beleuers and maketh them true, and cleanseth them from lyes, as thou readest John. xv. ye be cleane by reason of the word. which is to be vnderstand, in that the word had purged their hartes from lyes, from false opinions & from thinking euill good, and therfore from consentyng to sinne. And John. xvii. sanctifie them O father thorough thy truth. And thy woorde is truth. And thus thou seest that Gods truth depen deth not of man. It is not true because man so sayth or admitteth it for true: But man is true because he beleueth it, testifieth and geueth witnesse in hys hart that it is true. And Christ also sayth him selfe John. v. I receaue no witnesse of mā. For if the multitude of mās witnesse might make ought true, then were the doctrine of Mahomete truer then Christes.

The word which is ỹ Gospell was before the church.

¶Whether the Apostles left ought vnwritten, that is of necessitie to be beleued.

Whether ỹ Apostles taught any thing that they did not write.

BUt did not ỹ Apostles teach ought by mouth that they wrot not? I aunswere, because that many taught one thyng, and euery man the same in diuers places and vnto diuers people. and confirmed euery sermō wyth a sundry miracle: therfore Christ & his Apostles preached an hundred thousād sermons, and did as many miracles, which had bene superfluous to haue bene all written. But the pith and substaunce in generall of euery thing necessary vnto our soules health, both of what we ought to beleue, and what we ought to do was written, and of the miracles done to confirme it, as many as were nedeful. So that whatsoeuer we ought to beleue or do, that same is written expresely, or drawen out of that which is written.

So much is written as is necessary for our saluation.

For if I were bound to do or beleue vnder payne of the losse of my soule any thing that were written, nor depēded of that which is writtē, what holpe me the scripture that is written? And thereto in as much as Christ and all his Apostles warned vs that false prophetes shoulde come with false miracles, euen to deceaue the elect if it were possible, wherewith shoulde the true preacher confound the false, except he brought true miracles to confound the false, or els autenticke scripture of full authoritie already among the people.

The scripture written must confounde the vnwritten verities.

Some man woulde aske, how dyd God continue his congregation from Adam to Noe, and frō Noe to Abraham, and so to Moses, without writing, but with teaching from mouth to mouth. I aunswere, first that there was no scripture all the whyle, they shall proue, whē our Lady hath a new sonne. God taught Adam greater thynges then to write. And that there was writing in the world long yer Abraham yea & yer Noe, do stories testifie.

Writting hath bene from the beginning.

Notwithstanding, though there had bene no writing, the preachers were euer prophetes glorious in doing of miracles, wherwith they confirmed their preaching. And beyond that god wrote his testamēt vnto them alway, both God frō ỹ beginning hath written his will in ỹ hartes of his elect.

both what to do and to beleue, euē in ẏ sacramentes. For the sacrifices which God gaue Adams sonnes, were no dumme popetrie or superstitious Mahometrie, but signes of the testament of God. And in them they redde ẏ worde of God, as we do in bookes, and as we should do in our sacraments, if the wicked Pope had not taken the significations away from vs, as he hath robbed vs of the true sence of all the scripture. The testament which God made with Noe, that he woulde no more drowne the worlde with water, he wrote in the sacrament of the raine bow. And the appointment made betwene him and Abraham, he wrote in the sacrament of circumcision. And therefore sayd Steuen Act. vij. he gaue them ẏ testamēt of circumcision. Not that the outwarde circumcision was the whole testament, but the sacramēt or signe there. For circumcision preached Gods worde vnto thē, as I haue in other places declared.

The Pope hath taken frō vs the significations of the Sacramentes.

Actes. 7.

But in the tyme of Moyses when the congregation was encreased, that they must haue many preachers & also rulers tēporall, then all was receaued in scripture, in so much that Christ and his Apostles might not haue bene beleued without scripture for all their miracles. wherefore in as much as Christes congregation is spred abroad into all the worlde much broader then Moses, euē in as much as we haue not the olde testament onely but also the new, wherein all thinges are opened so richly and all fulfilled that before was promised, & in as much as there is no promise behinde of ought to be shewed more saue the resurrection: yea and seyng that Christ and all the Apostles with all the Angels of heauen, if they were here, could preach no more then is preached, of necessitie vnto our soules: How then should we receaue a new article of the fayth, without scripture, as profitable vnto my soule, when I had beleued it, as smoke for sore eyes. what holpe it me to beleue that our Ladies bodye is in heauen: what am I the better for the beliefe of Purgatory? to feare men thou wilt say. Christ & his Apostles thought hell inough. And yet (besides that the fleshly imaginatiō may not stand with Gods worde) what great feare can there be of that terrible fire which thou mayst quench almost for three halfe pence:

There can no more be taught vs then is cōteyned in the scriptures.

Purgatorye.

And that the Apostles should teach ought by mouth which they woulde not write, I pray you for what purpose? because they should not come into the handes of the Heathen for mocking, saith M. More. I pray you what thing more to be mocked of the Heathen coulde they teach, then the resurrection, and that Christ was God and man, and dyed betwene two theeues, and that for his deathes sake, all that repent and beleue therein should haue their sinnes forgeuen them, yea and if the Apostles vnderstoode thereby as we do, what madder thing vnto heathen people coulde they haue taught thē ẏ bread is Christes body, & wyne his blond. And yet all these thynges they wrote. And agayne purgatory, confession in the eare, penaunce and satisfaction for sinne to Godward, with holy deedes, and praying to Saintes with such like, as dumme sacraments and ceremonies, are maruelous agreable vnto the superstition of the Heathen people, so that they needed not to abstaine from writing of thē, for feare least the Heathen should haue mocked them.

The Heathē thoght nothing more madder thē the doctrine of the resurrection.

Moreouer what is it that the Apostles taught by mouth, and durst not write? The sacramentes? As for baptim and the sacrament of the body and blonde of Christ they wrote, and it is expressed what is signified by them. And also all the ceremonies and sacramentes that were frō Adam to Christ had significations, and all that are made mention of in the new testamēt, wherefore in as much as the sacramentes of the olde testament haue significations, and in as much as the sacramentes of the new testament (of which mētion is made that they were deliuered vnto vs by the very Apostles at Christes commaundement) haue also significatiōs, and in as much as the office of an Apostle is to edifie in Christ, and in as much as a dumme ceremonie edifieth not, but hurteth altogether (for if it preach not vnto me, then I can not but put confidēce therin, that the deede it selfe iustifieth me, which is ẏ denying of Christes blond) and in as much as no mētion is made of thē, as well as of other, nor is knowen what is ment by them: therefore it appeareth that the Apostles taught them not, but that they be the false marchaundise of wily hipocrites. And therto priesthode was in the tyme of the Apostles an office which if they would do truely, it woulde more pro-

The Apostles taught nothing that they were afrayde to write.

Sacramētes haue significations.

All ẏ Sacramentes taught either in the olde testament or new, haue significations.

fite

fite then all the sacraments in ỹ world. And agayne Gods holinesses strine not one against an other, nor defile one another. Their sacraments defile one another. For wedlocke defileth priesthode more thē whordome, theft, murther, or any sinne against nature.

The Popish Sacramentes strine one agaynste another.

They will haply demaunde where it is written that women should baptise. Verely in this commaundement, Loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, it is written, that they may and ought to minister not onely Baptim, but all other in tyme of neede, if they be so necessarie as they preach them.

Sacramēts without significations are not to be receaued.

And finally though we were sure that God hymselfe had geuen vs a sacrament, whatsoeuer it were, yet if ỹ signification were once lost, we must of necessitie, either seeke vp the significatiō or put some significatiō of Gods word therto, what we ought to do or beleue therby, or els put it downe. For it is impossible to obserue a sacrament without significatiō, but vnto our dāpnatiō. If we keepe ỹ faith purely & the law of loue vndefiled, which are ỹ significatiōs of all ceremonies there is no ieopardy to alter or chaunge the fashion of the ceremony, or to put it downe if neede require.

¶ Whether the Churche can erre.

Whether ỹ Church cā erre or not.

THere is an other question, whether the Church may erre. which if ye vnderstand of the Pope and hys generation, it is verely as hard a question as to aske whether he which hath both hys eyes out be blynde or no, or whether it be possible for him that hath one legge shorter thē an other, to halt.

What ỹ very Church is & what sayth sayneth.

But I sayd that Christes elect church is the whole multitude of all repenting sinners that beleue in Christ, and put all their trust and confidēce in the mercy of God, feeling in their hartes, that God for Christes sake loueth thē, and will be or rather is mercifull vnto them, and forgeueth thē their sinnes of which they repent, and that he forgeueth them also all the motions vnto sinne, of which they feare least they shoulde thereby be drawen into sinne agayne. And this faith they haue with out all respect of their owne deseruinges, yea and for none other cause then that the mercifull truth of God the father, which can not lie, hath so promised, and so sworne.

By fayth we are

And this faith and knowledge is euerlasting life, and by this we be borne a new and made the sonnes of God, and obtayne forgeuenes of sinnes, and are translated from death to life, & frō the wrath of God vnto his loue and fauour. And this faith is the mother of all truth, and bringeth with her ỹ spirite of all truth. which spirite purgeth vs, as from all sinne, euen so frō all lies and errour noysome and hurtfull. And this faith is the foundation layd of the Apostles and Prophetes whereon Paul sayth Ephes. ij. that we are built, and therby of the housholde of God. And this sayth is the rocke wheron Christ build his congregatiō. Christ asked the Apostles Math. xvj. whom they tooke him for. And Peter aunswered for them all saying I say that thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God ỹ art come into this worlde. That is, we beleue that thou art he that was promised vnto Abrahā, that shoulde come bleſſe vs and deliuer vs. Howbeit Peter yet wist not by what meanes. But now it is opened throughout all the world, that through the offeryng of hys body & bloud, that offeryng is a satisfaction for the sinne of all that repent and a purchasyng of what soeuer they can aske, to keepe them in fauour. And that they sinne no more. And Christ aunswered vpō this rocke I will build my congregation: that is, vppon this sayth. And agaynst the rocke of this sayth can no synne, no hell, no deuill, no lyes nor errour preuayle.

made the sonnes of God.

Ephe. 2.

Math. 16.

The offeryng of Christes body and bloud is ỹ onely satisfaction for our sinnes.

For what soeuer any mā hath committed, if he repent and come to this rocke, he is safe. And that this sayth is the onely way by which the Church of Christ goeth vnto God and vnto the inheritaunce of all his riches, testifie all the Apostles and Prophetes & all the Scripture, with signes and miracles, and all ỹ bloud of Martyrs. And who soeuer goeth vnto God and vnto forgeuenesse of sinnes or saluation, by any other way then this, the same is an hereticke out of the rightway & not of Christes Church.

There is no way to saluation, but by Christes death and passion.

For this knowledge maketh a man of ỹ Church. And the Church is Christes body Collos. i. and euery person of the Church is a member of Christ. Ephes. v. Now it is no mēber of Christ that hath not Christs spirit in it. Rom. viij. as it is no part of me or member of my body wherein my soule is not present and quickeneth it. And then if a man be none of Christes, he is not of his Church.

Collos. 1.

Ephes. 5.

Rom. 8.

¶ How a true member of Chriſtes Church ſinneth not, and how he is yet a ſinner.

FUrthermore, he that hath this fayth can not ſinne, and therfore can not be deceaued with damnable errours. For by this fayth we be (as J ſayd) borne of God. Now he that is borne of God can not ſinne, for his ſeed dwelleth in him, & he can not therfore ſinne, 1. Iohn. 3. becauſe he is borne of God. 1. Iohn. iij. which ſeede is the holy ghoſt that kepeth a mans hart from conſenting vnto ſinne. And therfore it is a falſe concluſiō that M. More holdeth, how that a mā may haue a right faith ioyned with all kyndes of abhomination & ſinne.

Fayth and ſinne can not ſtand together.

And yet euery member of Chriſtes congregation is a ſinner and ſynneth dayly, ſome more and ſome leſſe. For it 1. Iohn. 1. is written. 1. Iohn. i. if we ſay we haue no ſinne, we deceaue our ſelues & the truth is not in vs. And agayne if we ſay, we haue not ſinned, we make hym a liar and his word is not in vs. And Paul Rom. vij. ſayth, that good which J would, that do J not, but that euill which J would not, that do J. So it is not J that do it (ſayth he) but ſinne that dwelleth in me. Thus are we ſinners and no ſinners. No ſinners, if thou looke vnto the profeſſion of our hartes toward the law of God, on our repentaunce and ſorow that we haue, both becauſe we haue ſinned and alſo becauſe we be yet full of ſinne ſtill, and vnto the promiſes of mercy in our Sauiour Chriſt, and vnto our fayth. Sinners are we, if thou loke vnto the frailtie of our fleſh, which is as the weakeneſſe of one that is newly recouered out of a great diſeaſe, by ỹ reaſon wher of our dedes are imperfect. And by the reaſon wherof alſo, when occaſions be great, we fall into horrible dedes, and the frute of the ſinne which remaineth in our mēbers breaketh out. Notwithſtanding yet the ſpirite leaueth vs not, but rebuketh vs & bryngeth vs home agayne vnto our profeſſion, ſo that we neuer caſt of the yocke of God frō our neckes neither yeld vp our ſelues vnto ſinne, for to ſerue it, but fight a freſh and begyn a new battaile.

All fleſhe doth ſinne.

¶ How a Chriſten man can not erre, and how he may yet erre.

AND as they ſinne not, ſo they erre not. And on the other ſide as they ſinne, ſo they erre: but neuer vnto death and damnation. For they neuer ſinne of purpoſe nor hold any errour maliciouſly, ſinnyng againſt the holy ghoſt, but of weakeneſſe & infirmitie. As good obedient childrē, though they loue their fathers commaundements, yet breake them oft, by the reaſon of their weakeneſſe. And as they can not yeld them ſelues bond vnto ſinne, to ſerue it: euē ſo they can not erre in any thyng that ſhould be agaynſt the promiſes which are in Chriſt. And in other thynges their errours be not vnto damnation, though they be neuer ſo great, becauſe they hold them not maliciouſly. As now, if ſome when they read in the new Teſtament of Chriſts brethren, would thinke that they were our Ladyes children after the byrth of Chriſt, becauſe they know not the vſe of ſpeakyng of the Scripture or of the Hebrues, how that nye kinſmē be called brethren, or happely they might be Joſephes children, by ſome firſt wife, neither can haue any to teach him for tyrānny that is ſo great, yet could it not hurte him, though he dyed therein, becauſe it hurteth not the redēption that is in Chriſtes bloud. For though ſhe had none but Chriſt, J am therfore neuer the more ſaued, neither yet ỹ leſſe, though ſhe had had. And in ſuch lyke an hundred that plucke not a mans faith from Chriſt, they might erre, and yet be neuertheleſſe ſaued no though the contrary were written in the Goſpell. For as in other ſinnes, as ſoone as they be rebuked, they repent: euen ſo here, aſſoone as they were better taught, they ſhould immediatly knowledge their errour and not reſiſte.

We ſinne of frailtie & weakenes.

We may erre & yet be ſaued.

But they which maliciouſly maynteine opinions agaynſt the Scripture, or that ỹ cā not be proued by the Scripture, or ſuch as make no matter vnto the Scripture and ſaluation that is in Chriſt whether they be true or no, and for the blind zeale of them make ſectes, breakyng ỹ vnitie of Chriſtes Church, for whoſe ſake they ought to ſuffer all thyng, and riſe agaynſt their neighbours, whom they ought to loue as them ſelues, to ſlea them (ſuch men J ſay are fallen from Chriſt and make an Idole of their opinions. For except they put truſt in ſuch opinions and thought them neceſſarie vnto ſaluatiō, or with a cankred conſcience went about to deceaue, for ſome filthy purpoſe, they would neuer breake the vnitie of fayth or yet ſlea their brethren. Now is this a playne concluſion, that both they ỹ truſt in their own workes.

Who they be that erre from the way of fayth.

and

and they also ẏ put confidence in theyr owne opinions, be fallen from Christ and erre from the way of fayth that is in Christes bloud, & therfore are none of Christes Church, because they be not built vpon the rocke of fayth.

¶ Fayth is euer assayled and fought with all.

Faith is euer assailed with desperation.

MOreouer this our fayth which we haue in Christ, is euer fought agaynst, euer assayled & beaten at with desperation: not when we sinne only, but also in all temptations of aduersitie, into which God bringeth vs, to nurtour vs, and to shew vs our owne hartes, the hipocrisie & false thoughtes that there lye hid, our almost no fayth at all, and as little loue, euen thē haply when we thought our selues most perfect of all. For when temptations come we can not stand, when we haue sinned fayth is feeble, when wrong is done vs we can not forgeue, in sickenesse, in losse of goodes and in all tribulations we be impatient: when our neighbour needeth our helpe, that we must depart with hym of ours then loue is colde.

All power & readines to do good cōmeth of God & not of our selues.

And thus we learne and feele that there is no goodnes nor yet power to do good, but of God onely. And in all such tēptatiōs our fayth perisheth not vtterly, neither our loue and consent vnto the lawe of God. But they be weake, sicke, and wounded, and not cleane dead. As a good childe whom the father & mother haue taught nurtoure and wisdome, loueth his father and all his commaundementes, and perceaueth of ẏ goodnes shewed him, that his father loueth him, and that all hys fathers preceptes are vnto hys wealth and profite, and that his father commaundeth him nothing for any neede that his father hath thereof, but seeketh his profite onely, and therefore hath a good fayth vnto all his fathers promises, and loueth all his cōmaundementes, and doth them wyth good will, & with good will goeth to schole. And by the way haply he seeth cōpany play, and with the sight is taken and rauished of his memory, and forgetteth himselfe, and standeth and beholdeth and falleth to play also, forgetting father and mother, all their kindnes, all their lawes, and his owne profite thereto. Howbeit, the knowledge of his fathers kindnesse, the fayth of hys promises, and the loue that he hath agayne vnto hys father, and the obedient minde are not vtterly quēched, but lye hid, as all thynges do when a man sleepeth or lieth in a traunce. And as soone as he hath played out all his lustes or be warned in the meane season, he commeth againe vnto his olde profession. Neuer the later, many temptations goe ouer his hart, and the law as a right hangman tormenteth hys conscience, and goeth nye to perswade him that his father will cast him away and hang hym if he ketch hym, so that he is like a great while to runne a way rather then to returne vnto his father agayne. Feare and dread of rebuke, & of losse of his fathers loue and of punishment wrastle with the trust which he hath in his fathers goodnesse, and as it were geue his faith a fall. But it riseth againe assoone as the rage of the first brunte is past and his minde more quiet. And the goodnesse of his father, and his olde kindnesse commeth vnto remembraunce, eyther of his owne corage or by the comfort of some other. And he beleueth that his father wyll not cast him away or destroy hym, and hopeth that he will no more do so.

A very good example.

The faythfull though they slip, yet they fall not

Faith in ẏ goodnes of God is our staye.

And vpō that he getteth him home, dismayed. But not altogether faythlesse. The olde kindnesses will not let him dispayre. Howbeit, all the world cannot set his hart at rest, vntyll the payne be past, and vntill he haue heard the voyce of his father that all is forgeuen.

¶ The maner and order of our election.

EVen so goeth it with Gods electe. God chuseth thē first, and they not God, as thou readest Iohn. xv. And then he sendeth forth and calleth them, and sheweth them his good wil which he beareth vnto them, and maketh thē see both their owne damnation in the lawe, and also the mercy that is layde vp for them in Christes blonde, and therto what he wil haue them do. And then when we see his mercy, we loue hym agayne, and chuse him and submit our selues vnto his lawes to walke in them. For when we erre not in wit, reason and iudgement of thynges, we can not erre in will and choyse of thinges. The choyse of a mans will doth naturally and of her owne accorde follow the iudgement of a mans reason, whether he iudge right or wrong. So that in teaching onely resteth the pyth

Ioh. 15.

If we consider how mercifull god is vnto vs, we cānot chuse but submit our selues vnto hys lawes.

of a mans lining. How be it, there be swine that receaue no learning but to defile it. And there be dogges that rent all good learning wyth their teeth. And there be Pope holy, which following a righteousnes of their owne faining, resiste the righteousnes of God in Christ. And there be that cannot attend to harken vnto the truth for rage of lustes, which when lustes abate, come and obey well inough.

Christian mē must be patient.

And therefore a Christen man must be patient and suffer long to win his brother to Christ, ẏ he which attēdeth not to day, may receaue grace & heare to morowe, we see some at their very latter ende, when colde feare of death hath quenched the heate of their appetites, learne & consent vnto the truth, wherunto before they could geue none eare, for the wylde rages of lustes that blynded their wittes.

Mercy waiteth euer on the elect.

And though Gods elect can not so fall that they rise not agayne, because that the mercy of God euer wayteth vpon them, to deliuer them from euil, as the care of a kynde father wayteth vppon his sonne, to warne hym and to keepe hym from occasions, and to call him backe againe if he be gonne to far: yet they forget themselues oftymes, & sinke downe into traunces and fall a slepe in lustes for a season. But assoone as they be awaked they repent & come agayne without resistaunce. God now and thē withdraweth his hand and leueth them vnto their own strength, to make thē feele that there is no power to do good but of God only, lest they shuld be proude of that which is none of theirs. God layd so sore awaight of persecution vpp n Dauids backe that passed his stregth to beare. So that he cried oft out of his Psalmes, saying that he had liued well and folowed the right way of God in vayne. For the more he kept him selfe from sinne, the worse it wet with him, as he thought, and the better with his enemy Saul, the worse he was. Yet God left hym not there, but cōforted hym & shewed him thinges which before he wist not of, how that the Saintes must be pacient and abyde Gods hauest, vntill the wickednesse of vngodly sinners be full ripe, ẏ God may ripe it in dew season.

Dauid.

The elect of God must haue patience & be long sufferers.

God also suffered occasions stronger then Dauid, to fall vpon him & to carie him cleane out of the way. Was he not ready for a churlysh aunswere to haue slayne Naball & all the males of his house, so much as the child in the cradell? howbeit God with held hym and kept him backe frō that euil, thorough the wisedome of Abigail. How long slombred he, or rather how hard in slepe was he in the adultery of Bethsabe. And in the murther of her husbād Vriah, But at both times assoone as he was rebuked and his fault told him, he repented immediatly & turned agayne inekely. Now in all that long tyme, from the adultery of Bethsabe vntil the Prophet Nathan rebuked him he had not lost his fayth nor yet his loue vnto the lawes of God, no more then a man looseth his wittes when he is a slepe. He had forgot him self onely and had not maliciously cast of the yocke of Gods commaundements from of his necke. There is no man so good, but that there commeth a tyme vpon hym, when he feeleth in him selfe no more fayth or loue vnto God, then a sicke mā oftymes feeleth the tast of hys meate which he eateth.

God tryeth his electe by suffering them to fall into temptation.

We may cōmit euil and yet not forget God

And in like maner the Apostles of Christ at his passiō were astonyed and amased and in such a stounde of temptations, for the soden chaunge from so great glorie into so vyle and shamefull death, that they had forget all the miracles and all the wordes which he had told them before, how that he should be betrayde and deliuered on the same maner vnto death. Moreouer they neuer vnderstode that saying of hys death because theyr hartes were all way heauy and ouer lade with earthly thoughtes. For though they saw hym raise vp other, yet who should rayse him vp, when he were dead, they could not comprehend.

The Apostles were amased & tēptations forgat all Christes wyrdes.

Read what thou read canst, & thou shalt finde no temptatiō like vnto that from the creation of the world, or so great as it by the hlidred part. So that the wonderfull soden chaunge and the terrible sight of his passion and of hys most cruell and most vyle death, & the losse of whō they so greatly loued, that their hartes would fayne haue dyed with him, and the feare of their owne death, and the impossibilitie that a man should rise againe of his owne power, so occupyed their mindes and so astonyed them and amased them, that they could receaue no comfort, either of the Scripture or of the miracles whiche they had sene Christ do, nor of the monitions & warnings wherwith he had warned thē before, neither of the women that brought them tydynges that he was risen. A great temptation layd vpō the Apostles.

ons

ons with feare sorow, mournyng and wepyng, had depely pearced theyr hartes, and the cruell sight had so combred their myndes, that they could not beleue, vntill Christ hym selfe came, deade put of, and ouercome, yea & whē they first saw him, they were astonyed for wonderyng and ioy together that thoughtes arose in their hartes, alas is this he or doth some spirite mocke vs? he was fayne to let them fele hym and to eate with them, to strēgth theyr faythes.

The Apostles were very doubtfull.

Howbeit there was none of them that was fallen in his hart frō Christ. For assoone as the women brought word, Peter and John ranne vnto the sepulchre & saw and wondred & would fayne haue beleued that he was risen and longed for him: But could not beleue the wounde of temptation beyng greater then that it could bee healed with the preaching of a woman without any other miracle.

Joseph of Armathia and Nicodemus whiche while he yet lyued durst not be a knowen of him assoone as he was dead, begged his body and buried hym boldly. And the women assoone as it was lawfull to worke, prepared their annoyntments with all diligēce. And the hartes of the Disciples that wēt to Emaus burned in their brestes to heare him spoken of.

Christ hys resurrectiō

And Thomas had not forsaken Christ, but could not beleue vntill he saw him, and yet desired and longed to see him and reioyced when he saw him and for ioy cried out, my Lord my God. There was none of them that euer rayled on him and came so farre foorth, to say, he was a diseeaner and wrought with the deuils craft all this while, and see where to he is come in the end: we defie hym & all his workes false wretch that he was, and hys false doctrine also. And thereto must they haue come at the last, when feare, sorow and wonderyng had bene past, if they had not bene preuented and holpe in the meane tyme.

The Disciples were not without fayth but yet the same was very doubtfull.

Peters fayth fayled not.

Yea and Peter assoone as he had denyed Christ came to hym selfe immediatly and went out and wept bitterly for sorow. And thus ye see, that Peters fayth failed not, though it were oppressed for a tyme: so that we nede to seke no gloses for the text that Christ sayd to Peter how that hys fayth should not fayle. Yes sayth M. More it fayled in hym selfe, but was reserued in our Lady.

But let vs see the text and their glose together. Christ sayth Luke. xxij. Symon, Symon, Sathan seketh you to syfte you as men syft wheate: but I haue prayed for thee, that thy fayth shall not fayle, wherfore whē thon art come vnto thy selfe agayne stregth thy brethrē. Now put this wise glose thereto and see how they agree together. Symon, Sathā seketh to sift you as whete, but I haue prayed for thee, that my mothers fayth shall not fayle, wherfore when thou art come to thy selfe again, accordyng as my prayer hath obtained for thee, that my mothers fayth shall not fayle, strength thy brethren. How say ye, is not this a proper text & well framed together? Do ye not thinke that there is as much witte in the head of mad Colens, as in the braynes of such expositours?

Luke. 22.

A foolish glose made by M. More.

Whether the Pope and his sect be Christes Church or no.

That the Pope and his spirites be not the Church may this wise be proued. He that hath no fayth to be saued through Christ, is not of Christes Church. The Pope beleueth not to be saued through Christ. For he teacheth to trust in holy workes for the remission of sinnes and saluation: as in the workes of penaunce enioyned, in vowes, in pilgrimage, in chastitie, in other mens prayers and holy lyuyng, in Friers & Friers coates, in Saintes merites, and the significatiōs put out, he teacheth to beleue in ỹ dedes of the ceremonies & of the Sacramentes ordeined at the beginnyng to preach vnto vs and to do vs seruice, & not that we should beleue in them and serue them. And a thousand such superstitiousnesses setteth he before vs in stede of Christ, to beleue in, neither Christ nor Gods word, neither honorable to God nor seruiceable vnto our neighbour nor profitable vnto our selues for the tamyng of the flesh, which all are the denying of Christes bloud.

Pope.

The Pope & his sect are not the Church of Christ.

An other reason is this. who soeuer beleueth in Christ, consenteth that Gods law is good. The pope consenteth not that Gods law is good. For he hath forbyden lawfull wedlocke vnto all his, ouer whom he raigneth as a temporall tyraunt with lawes of his owne makyng & not as a brother exhortyng them to kepe Christes. And he hath graunted vnlawfull whoredome vnto as many as byng money

The Pope in forbyddyng marriage to Preestes, doth not cōfesse that the lawe of god is good.

As through Dutchland, euery Priest paying a gildzen vnto the Archdeacon shall freely and quietly haue his whore and put her away at his pleasure and take an other at his own lust. As they do in wales, in Ireland, Scotland, Fraunce and Spayne. And in Englād therto they be not few which haue lycēces to kepe whores, some of the pope and some of their ordinaries. And whē the Parishes go to law with them to put away their whores, the Bysheps officers mocke them, poll them & make them spend their thrittes, & the Priests kepe their whores stil. Howbeit in very dede sence they were rebuked by the preachyng of wickleffe, our English spiritualtie haue layd their snares vnto mens wiues, to couer theyr abhominations, though they byde not all way secret.

The Pope licenceth whordome whiche God forbiddeth.

Therto all Christen mē if they haue done amisse, repent when their faultes be tolde them. The spiritualtie repent not, but of very lust and cōsent to sume persecute both the scripture wherwith they be rebuked, and also them that warne them to amende, and make heretikes of them, and burne them. And besides that, the Pope hath made a playne decree in which he commaundeth saying, though ỳ Pope sinne neuer so grieuously and draw with him to hell by his ensāple thousādes innumerable, yet let no man be so hardy to rebuke him. For he is head ouer all, & none ouer him, Distinct. xl. Si Papa.

The Popish Clergy are persecutours.

An abhominable, wicked & deuilish decree.

4.

Rom. 13.

And Paule saith Rom. xiij. let euery soule obey the hyer powers that are ordeyned to punishe sinne. The Pope will not, nor let any of his.

5.

1. Cor. 5.

And Paule chargeth 1. Cor. 5. if he that is a brother be an whorekeeper, a dronkard, couetous, an extortioner, or a rayler and so forth, that we haue no felowship with him: No not so much as to eate in his company. But the Pope with violence compelleth vs to haue such in honour, to receaue the sacramētes of them, to heare their Masses, and to beleue all they say, and yet they will not let vs see whether they say truth or no. And he compelleth. x. parishes to pay their tithes and offeringes vnto one such to goe and rūne at riote at their cost, and to do nought therefore. And a thousande such like doth the Pope contrary vnto Christes doctrine.

The Pope is vtterly against the doctrine of Christ.

¶ The argumentes wherewith the Pope woulde proue hymselfe the church, are solued.

NOtwithstanding because as they be all shamen they be all shamelesse to affirme that they be the right church and can not erre, though all the world seeth that not one of thē is in the right way, and that they haue with vtter bestiaunce forsaken both the doctrine and liuing of Christ & of all his Apostles, let vs see the sophistry wherwith they would perswade it. One of their high reasons is this. The Church say they, was before ỳ heretikes, & ỳ heretikes came euer out of the church and left it. And they were before all them which they now call heretikes and Lutherans, and the Lutherans came out of them. &c. wherefore they be the right church, and the other heretikes in dede as they be called. Well, I will likewise dispute. First the right church was vnder Moses and Aaron and so forth, in whose rowmes sat the Scribes Phariseis and hye priestes in the tyme of Christ. And they were before Christ. And Christ and his Apostles came out of them, and departed from thē and left them. Wherefore the Scribes, Phariseis, and hye priestes were the right Church, and Christ and hys Apostles and disciples heretikes and a dampnable secte. And so the Iewes are yet in the right way and we in errour. And of truth if their blynde reason be good, thē is this argumēt so to. For they be like, & are both one thing.

Their first reason.

A like reason.

One Argument confuted with an other of like nature

But in as much as the kingdome of God standeth not in wordes, as Paul sayth 1. Cor. 4. but in power, therefore looke vnto the marow and pith of the thinges selfe, and let vayne woordes passe, Vnder Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob was the church great in fayth, and small in number. And as it encreased in number, so it decreased in fayth vntill ỳ tyme of Moses. And out of those vnbeleuers God stirred vp Moses, & brought thē vnto ỳ faith right agayne. And Moses left a glorious Churche, both in faith & cleauing vnto the word of God, and deliuered them vnto Iosuah, Eleazer, Phincas, and Caleb.

The solucion.

But assone as the generation of thē that saw the miracles of God were dead, they fell to Idolatrie immediatly, as thou seest in the Bible. And god when he had deliuered them into captiuitie for to chastice their wickednesse, stirred them vp a Prophet euermore, to call them vnto his testamēt againe. And so he did well nie an hundred tymes, I suppose, yer Christ came, for they neuer bode any space in the right fayth fayth. And against the comming of Christ the Scribes, Pharisees, Caiphas, Anna, and the Elders, were crept vp into the seat of Moses, Aarō, and the holy Prophetes & Patriarkes and succeded them lineally, and had the scripture of God but euen in captiuitie to make marchaundise of it, and to abuse it vnto their owne glory and profite. And though they kept the people from outward Idolatrie of worshipping of Images with the Heathen: yet they brought them into a worse inward Idolatrie of a false fayth & trust in their owne deedes and in vaine traditions of their owne fayning. And had put out the significatiōs of all ẏ ceremonies and sacramentes of the olde testamēt, and taught the people to beleue in the workes ẏr., and had corrupt the scripture with falle gloses. As ẏ maist see in the Gospell, how Christ warneth his Disciples to beware of ẏ leauen of ẏ Pharisees which was their false doctrine & gloses. And in another place he rebuked the Scribes and the Pharisees saying: wo be to thē, because they had taken away the key of knowledge, and had shut vp the kingdome of heauen, and neither would enter in themselues, nor suffer thē that would. How had they shut it vp? verely with their traditions and false gloses which they had lowed to ẏ scripture in plaine places, and in the taking away ẏ meaning of the ceremonies and sacrifices, and teaching to beleue in the worke.

Math.16.

Math.23.

Hypocrites are crept vp in to the seate of Christ & his Apostles. 2.Pet.2.

And our hipocrites are in like maner crept vp into the seat of Christ and of his Apostles by succession: not to do the deedes of Christ and his Apostles, but for lucre onely (as the nature of the wily Fore is, to get him an hole made with a nother beastes labour) and to make marchaundise of the people with fayned wordes, as Peter warned vs before, and to do according as Christ and all his Apostles prophecied, how they should beguyle and leade out of the right way, all thē that had no loue to follow and liue after the truth.

The Pope and hys Clergye hane corrupted the Scriptures of God with their traditions.

And in like maner haue they corrupt the Scripture, and blynded the right way with their owne constitutions, with traditions of dūme ceremonies, with takyng away the significations of the sacramentes, to make vs beleue in the worke of the sacramentes fyrst, whereby they might the better make vs beleue in works of their setting vp afterward, and with false gloses which they haue patched to the Scripture in playne places, to destroy the litterall sence for to set vp a false fayned sence of allegories, when there is none such. And thereby they haue stopt vp the gates of heauē, the true knowledge of Christ, and haue made their own bellies the dore. For thorow their bellies must thou creepe, and there leane all that fall behynde thee.

And such blynde reasons as ours make against vs, made they agaynst Christ saying: Abraham is our father, we be Moses disciples, how knoweth he the vnderstanding of the Scripture seing he neuer learned of any of vs? onely the cursed vnlearned people that know not the scripture beleue in hym. Looke whether any of the rulers or Pharisees do beleue in hym?

Iohn.8.

The scriptures beare witnes who are the right Church.

Wherefore the scripture truely vnderstode after the playne places and generall articles of ẏ fayth, which thou findest in the scripture, and the ensamples that are gone before, wyll alway testifie who is the church. Though the Pharisees succeded the Patriarkes & prophetes, and had the scripture of thē, yet they were heretikes and fallē from the fayth of them, and frō their liuing. And Christ and his disciples, & John the Baptist departed from the Pharisees which were heretikes, vnto the right sence of ẏ scripture and vnto the faith and liuing of the Patriarkes and Prophetes, and rebuked the Pharisees. As thou seest how Christ calleth them hipocrites, dissimulers, blynde guides and pamted sepulchers. And John called them the generatiō of vipers and serpentes. Of John, the angell sayde vnto his father Luke.i. he shall turne many of the children of Israell vnto their Lord God, which yet before John beleued after a fleshly vnderstanding in God, and thought thēselues in the right way. And he shall turne the harts of the fathers vnto the children. That is, he shall wyth hys preaching and true interpreting of the scripture make such a spirituall hart in ẏ childrē as was in their fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And he shall turne the disobedient vnto the obedience of the righteous, and prepare the Lord a perfect people. That is, them that had set vp a righteousnes of their owne, and were therefore disobedient vnto the righteousnes of fayth, shal he conuert from their blindnes vnto the wisdome of them that beleued in God to be made righteous, and with those fathers shall he geue the childrē Egies eyes to spye out Christ and his righteousnesse, and to forsake their own, and so to become perfect.

Our Popish hypocrites have nede of a John Baptist to convert the

And after the same maner, though our Popish hypocrites succede Christ and his Apostles and have their scripture, yet they be fallen from the fayth & liuyng of them and are heretickes and had nede of a John Baptist to convert them. And we depart from them vnto the true Scripture and vnto the fayth and liuyng therof, and rebuke them in like maner. And as they which depart from the fayth of the true Church are heretickes, euē so they that depart frō the Church of heretickes and false fayned fayth of hypocrites, are the true church, which thou shalt alway know by their fayth examined by the Scripture & by their profession and conſēt to liue according vnto the lawes of God.

Those which depart from the fayth of hypocrites are the true Church.

¶ An other Argument.

Their second reasō.

AN other like blind reasō they have wherein is all their trust. As we come out of them and they not of vs, so we receaue the Scripture of them & they not of vs. How know we that it is the Scripture of God and true, but because they teach vs so? How can we beleue, except we first beleue that they be the Church and can not erre in any thyng that perteyneth vnto our soules health. For if a man tell me of a marvelous thyng, wherof I can have no other knowledge thē by his mouth onely, how should I geve credence except I beleued that the mā were so honest that he could not lye or would not lye, wherfore we must beleue that they be the right Church that can not erre, or els we can beleue nought at all.

Note here this Popish argument.

This wise reason is their shotcancre & all their hold, their refuge, to flye vnto & chief stone in their foundation, wheron they have built all their lyes & al the mischief that they have wrought this viij. hūdred yeares. And this reason do the Jewes lay vnto our charge this day, and this reason doth chiefly blynd them and hold them still in obstinacie. Our spirites first falsifie the Scripture to stablish their lyes. And when the Scripture commeth to light and is restored vnto the true vnderstādyng and their iuggelyng spied, & they like to suffer shipwracke, then they cast out this ancre, they be the Church and can not erre, their authoritie is greater then the Scripture, and the Scripture is not true, but because they say so and admitte it. And therfore what soever they affirme, is of as great authoritie as the Scripture.

The Pope and his sect say they are the church and can not erre.

The solution.

Notwithstandyng, as I sayd, the kyngdome of heauen standeth not in words of mās wisedome, but in power and spirite. And therfore loke vnto the examples of the Scripture and so shalt thou vnderstand. And of an hundred examples betwene Moyses and Christ, where the Israelites fell from God & were euer restored by one Prophet or other, let vs take one: euen John the Baptist. John went before Christ to prepare his way, that is, to bryng mē vnto the knowledge of their sinnes and vnto repentaunce, through true expoundyng of the law, which is the onely way vnto Christ. For except a man knowledge his sinnes & repent of them, he can have no part in Christ, of John Christ sayth Math. xvij. that he was Elias that should come & restore all thyng. That is, he should restore the scripture vnto the right sence agayne, which the Pharisees had corrupt with the leuen of their false glosses and vayne fleshly traditions. He made croked thynges straight, as it is written, and rough smoth. which is also to be vnderstand of the Scripture, which the Pharisees had made croked wrestyng them vnto a false sence with wicked glosses, & so rough that no man could walke in the way of them. For when God sayd, honour father & mother, meanyng that we should obey them and also helpe thē at their nede, the Pharisees put this glose thereto, out of their owne leuen saying: God is thy father and mother. wherfore what soever nede thy father & mother have, if thou offer to God, thou art hold excused. For it is better to offer to God, then to thy father and mother and so much more meritorious, as God is greater then they: yea and God hath done more for thee then they & is more thy father and mother then they. As ours now affirme, that it is more meritorious to offer to God and his holy dead Saintes, then vnto the poore liuyng Saintes. And whē God had promised the people a Saviour to come & bielle them and sane them from their sinnes, the Pharisees taught to beleue in holy woorkes to be saued by, as if they offered and gaue to be prayd for. As ours, as oft as we have a promise to be forgeuē at the repentaunce of the hart through Christes bloud shedding, put to, thou must first shrive thy selfe to vs of euery sillabe, & we must lay our handes on thine head and whistell out thy sinnes and enioyne the penaunce to make satisfaction. And yet art thou but louſed from the synne onely that thou shalt not come into hell, but thou must yet suffer for euery sinne seuen yeres in Purgatory which is as whot as hell, except thou bye it out of the Pope. And if ỹ aske by what meanes the Pope geueth such pardon. They aunswere out of the merites of Christ. And thus at the last they graft against thẽselues, that Christ hath not only deserued for vs ỹ remissiõ of our sinnes, but also the forgeuenesse of that grosse and fleshly imagined Purgatory, saue thou must bye it out of the Pope. And with such traditions they tooke away the keye of knowledge and stopped vp the kyngdome of heauen that no man could enter in.

Purgatory.

The Pharisees and papistes agree in the false interpreting of ỹ scriptures.

And as I sayd, they taught the people to beleue in the dedes of the ceremonies which God ordeined not to iustifie but to be signes of promises by which they that beleued were iustified. But the Pharisees put out the significations & quẽched the fayth and taught to be iustified by the woorke, as ours haue serued vs.

The sacramentes are signes to fayth.

For our Sacramentes were once but signes partly of what we should beleue, to stirre vs vp vnto fayth, and partly what we should do, to stirre vs vp to do the law of God, and were not woorkes to iustifie.

The Pope will by his reasõ make Christ and all his Apostles heretiques.

Now make this reason vnto John and vnto many Prophetes that went before him and did as he dyd, yea and vnto Christ him self and his Apostles, & thou shalt finde them all heretickes, and the Scribes and Pharisees good men, if that reason be good. Therfore this wise thou mayst aunswere. No thankes vnto the heades of ỹ Church that the Scripture was kept, but vnto the mercy of God. For as they had destroyed the right sense of it for their lucre sake, euen so would they haue destroyed it also if they coulde, rather then the people should haue come vnto the right vnderstãdyng of it, as they slew the true interpretours and preachers of it. And euen so no thankes vnto our hypocrites that the Scripture is kept, but vnto the bottomlesse mercy of God.

For as they haue destroyed the right sense of it with their leuẽ, and as they destroy dayly the true preachers of it, and as they kepe it from the lay people, that they should not see how they iuggle with it, euen so would they destroy it also, could they bring it about, rather thẽ we should come by the true vnderstandyng of it, were it not that God prouided otherwise for vs. For they haue put the stories that should in many thynges helpe vs, cleane out of the way, as nye as they could. They haue corrupt the Legend and lyues almost of all Saintes. They haue fayned false bookes and put them forth, some in the name of S. Hierome, some in ỹ name of S. Augustine, in the name of S. Cypriã, S. Dionise and other holy men. Which are proued none of theirs; partly by the stile and Latine, & partly by autenticke stories. And as the Iewes haue set vp a booke of traditions called Talmud, to destroy the sẽse of ỹ Scripture, Vnto which they geue fayth and vnto the Scripture none at all be it neuer so playne, but say it can not be vnderstand, saue by the Talmud: euen so haue ours set vp their Dunce, their Thomas and a thousand like drasse, to stablish their lyes, thorough falsifying the Scripture, & say that it can not be vnderstand without them, be it neuer so playne. And if a man alledge an holy Doctour agaynst them they glose him out as they do the Scripture, or will not heare, or say the Church hath otherwise determined.

The Pope and his sect would (if they could) destroy the scripture as well as they destroy the preachers therof.

Talmud.

Dunce.

Now therfore when they aske vs how we know that it is the Scripture of God, aske them how John Baptist knew & other Prophetes, which God stirred vp in all such times as the scripture was in like captiuitie vnder hypocrites? Did John beleue that the Scribes, Pharisees and hygh Priests were the true Church of God, and had hys spirite and could not erre? who taught the Egles to spy out their pray? euen so the children of God spy out their father and Christes elect spy out theyr Lord, and trace out the pathes of hys feete and folow, yea though he go vpõ the playne and liquide water which will receaue no stepe: & yet there they find out his foote, his elect know him, but the world knoweth him not John 1. If the world know him not, & thou call the world pride, wrath, enuy, couetousnesse, slouth, glottony and lechery, then our spiritualtie know hym not. Christes shepe heare ỹ voyce of Christ John. x. where the world of hypocrits as they know hym not, euen so the wolues heare not his voyce, but compell the Scripture to heare them and to speake what they lust. Augustinus.

The true meaning of the wordes of S. Augustine.

If they alleage S. Augustine which sayth, I had not beleued the Gospell, except the authoritie of the church had moued me. I answere, as they abuse that saying of the holy man, euen so they alleage all the Scripture, and all that they bring for them, euen in a false sence. S. Augustine before he was conuerted was an heathen mā and a Philosopher, full of worldly wisdome, vnto whom the preaching of Christ is but folishnesse, sayth Paule. 1. Corin. 1. And he disputed wyth blynde reasons of worldly wisdome agaynst the Christen. Neuertheless the earnest liuing of the Christen according vnto theyr doctrine and the constant suffering of persecutiō and aduersitie for their doctrines sake, moued hym & stirred hym to beleue that it was no vayne doctrine, but that it must nedes be of god, in that it had such power with it. For it happeneth that they which wyll not heare the worde at the beginning, are afterward moued by the holy conuersation of them that beleue. As Peter warneth Christē wiues that had heathen husbandes that would not heare the truth preached, to liue so godly that they might winne their heathen husbandes with holy conuersation. And Paule sayth, how knowest thou Christen wife, whether thou shalt winne thine heathen husband, with holy conuersation mēt he. For many are wōne with godly liuing, which at the fyrst either will not heare or can not beleue. And that is the authoritie that S. Augustine meant. But if we shal not beleue, tyll the liuyng of the spiritualtie conuert vs, we be like to bide long inough in vnbeliefe.

1.Pet.3.

8.Cor.7.

And whē they aske whether we receaued the scripture of them: I answere, that they which come after receaue the scripture of them that go before. And when they aske whether we beleue not that it is Gods worde by the reason that they tell vs so, I answere, that there are two manner faythes, an historicall fayth, and a feelyng fayth. The historicall fayth hangeth of the truth and honestie of the teller, or of the common fame and cōsent of many. As if one tolde me that the turke had wonne a citie, and I beleued it, moued with the honestie of the man. Now if there come an other that seemeth more honest or that hath better perswasions that it is not so, I thinke immediatly that he lyed and lose my fayth agayne. And a feeling fayth is, as if a man were there present when it was wonne, and there were wounded and had there lost all that he had, and were taken prisoner there also. That man should so beleue that all ỳ worlde could not turne him from hys fayth. Euen likewise if my mother had blowen on her finger and tolde me that the fire woulde burne me, I shoulde haue beleued her with an historicall fayth, as we beleue the stories of the world, because I thought she woulde not haue mocked me. And so I should haue done, if she had tolde me that the fire had bene cold and would not haue burned, but assoone as I had put my finger in the fire, I should haue beleued, not by reason of her, but wyth a feeling faith, so that she could not haue perswaded me afterward the contrary. So now with an historicall fayth I may beleue that ỳ scripture is gods by the teaching of them, & so I should haue done though they had tolde me that Roben Rode had bene the scripture of God. Which fayth is but an opinion, and therfore abideth euer fruitlesse and falleth away, if a more glorious reason be made vnto me, or if the preacher liue contrary.

There are two maner of faithes.

An historicall fayth.

A feeling fayth.

But of a feeling fayth it is writteen. Iohn vi. They shall be all taught of God. That is, God shall write it in their harts with his holy spirite. And Paule also testifieth Rom. 8. the spirite beareth record vnto our spirit that we be the sonnes of God. And thys fayth is none opinion, but a sure feling, and therefore euer fruitfull. Neyther hangeth it of the honesty of the preacher, but of the power of God and of the spirite, and therefore if all the preachers of the world would goe about to perswade the contrary, it would not preuayle, no more the though they would make me beleue the fire were colde, after that I had put my finger therein.

her pitcher and went into the citie and sayd, come & see a man that hath tolde me al that euer I did, is not he Christ. And many of the Samaritanes beleued because of the saying of the womā, how that he had tolde her all that euer she did, and went out vnto him & desired him to come in, which fayth was but an opinion and no fayth that could haue lasted or haue brought out fruit, but when they had heard Christ, the spirite wrought and made them feele: wherupon they came vnto the womā and sayd: we beleue not now because of thy saying, but because we haue heard our selues, and know that he is Christ the sauiour of the worlde. For Christes preaching was with power and spirite that maketh a mā feele and know and worke to; and not as the Scribes and Pharisies preached, and as ours make a man ready to cast hys gorge to heare them raue and rage as mad men. And therefore sayth ỹ scripture, cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme, that is to say, hys strength. And euen so, cursed is he that hath none other belefe but because men so say. Cursed were he ỹ had none other why to beleue thē that I so say. And euen so cursed is he that beleueth only because ỹ Pope so sayth, and so forth thorowout all the men in the worlde.

The feling fayth doth farre excell the historicall fayth.

Cursed is he that trusteth in mā

¶ The fayth that dependeth of an other mans mouth is weake.

IF I haue none other feeling in my fayth then because a man so sayth, then is my fayth faithles and fruitles. For if I haue none other feeling that lecherie is sinne then that the Pope so preacheth, whom I see before my face set vp in Rome a stewes of xx. or xxx. thousand whores, taking of euery pece tribute yearly, and his Bishops with all other his disciples folowing the ensample mightely, and the Pope therewith not content, but to set vp thereto a stewes of young boyes agaynst nature, the committers of which sinne be burnt at a stake among the Turkes, as Moses also commaundeth in hys lawe. And the Pope also to forbid all the spiritualtie, a multitude of xl or l. hūdred thousand to mary, and to gene them licence to keepe euery man hys whore who so will: If I say, I haue none other feeling in my fayth that lechery is sinne thē this mās preaching, I thinke my fayth should be to weake to beare much fruite. How coulde I beleue a man that would say he loued me, if all hys deedes were contrary? I coulde not beleue God himselfe that he loued me, if in all my tribulations I had of him none other comfort then those bare wordes.

Lechery.

The abhomination of ỹ Romish Church.

Mariage forbidden & whoredom allowed.

And in like māner if I had none other feeling in my fayth that couetousnes were sinne, then that the spirituaitie so sayth, my fayth coulde be but weake and faintie, when I see how ỹ Pope with wiles hath thrust downe the Emperour, and how the Bishops and Prelates be cropt vp an hye in all regions aboue their kynges, and haue made them a seuerall kyngdome, and haue gotten into their handes almost the one halfe of euery realme, which they deuide among thēselues, geuyng no lay man any part with them, & heaping vp Bishopprike vpon Bishopprike, promotion vpon promotion, benefice vpon benefice, with vnions and tot quottes, robbing in euery parishe the soules of their foode, and the poore of their due sustenaunce, yea and some preaching that it were lesse sinne to haue two wiues then two benefices, but while they be yet young and hott, and therefore thinke couetousnes greater sinne thē lechery: which same, whē they be waxed elder, and their cōplection somewhat altered, thinke that couetousnes is as small a sinne as lechery, and therfore take all that commeth. And if any man cast their preachyng in their tethes, they answere that they be better learned, and haue sene further. If I say, I haue no other felyng that couetousnes is sinne, then ỹ preaching of these holy fathers, my fayth were built but vpō a weake rocke, or rather on the soft sand. And therfore our defenders do right well to some out their owne shame, and to vtter the secrete thoughtes of their hartes. For as they write, so they beleue. Other felyng of the lawes of God and fayth of Christ haue they none, then that they? God the Pope so sayth. And therfore as the Pope preacheth wyth his mouth onely, euē so beleue they with their mouth onely whatsoeuer he preacheth, without more a doe, be it neuer so abhominable, and in their hartes consent vnto all their fathers wickednes, and folow him in their dedes as fast as they can runne.

Couetousnesse.

The Papistes thinke lechery not couetousnes to be any sinne.

As ỹ Pope teacheth with the mouth only, so the Papistes beleue ỹ they? mouth only.

Iewes.

And yet they haue erred and bene faithlesse these eight hundred yeares. And the Iewes beleue this day, as much as the carnall sort of them euer beleued, moued also by the authoritie of their elders onely, and thinke that it is impossible for them to erre, being Abrahams seede, and the childrē of them to whom the promises of all that we beleue were made. And yet they haue erred and bene faythlesse this .v. hundred yeares. And we of like blindnesse beleue onely by the authoritie of our elders and of like pride thinke that we can not erre, beyng such a multitude. And yet we see how God in the old Testament did let the great multitude erre, reseruyng alway a litle flocke to call the other backe againe and to testifie vnto them the right way.

The Turkes and Iewes beleue that they cā not erre because they beleue as their Elders byd.

God reserued a litle flocke.

How this word Church hath a double interpretation.

Rom. 9.

THis is therfore a sure cōclusion, as Paule sayth. Rom. ix. that not all they that are of Israell are Israelites, neither because they be Abrahās sede, are they all Abrahams childrē: but they onely that folow the faith of Abraham. Euen so now none of them that beleue with their mouthes moued with the authority of their elders onely, that is, none of thē that beleue with M. More sayth, the Popes sayth and the deuils sayth which may stand (as M. More cōfesseth) with all maner abhominatiōs, haue the right sayth of Christ or are of his Church. But they onely that repēt & feele that the law is good, And haue the law of God written in their harts and the sayth of our Sauiour Jesus, euen with the spirite of God. There is a carnall Israell & a spirituall. There is Isaac and Ismaell, Jacob, & Esau. And Ismaell persecuted Isaac & Esau Jacob & the fleshly the spirituall. wher of Paul complayned in his tyme persecuted of his carnall brethrē, as we do in our tyme and as the elect euer dyd & shall do till the worldes end. what a multitude came out of Egypt vnder Moses of which the Scripture testifyeth that they beleued, moued by ỹ miracles of Moses, as Symon magus beleued by the reason of Philippes miracles Actes. viij. Neuertheles the Scripture testifieth that vj. hundred thousād of those beleuers perished through vnbelief and left their carcasses in the wildernesse and neuer entred into the land that was promised them. And euen so shal the childrē of M. Mores faythlesse faith made by the persuation of mā, leap short of the rest which our Sauiour Jesus is risē vnto. And therfore let them embrace this present world as they do, whose childrē they are though they hate so to be called.

Who they be that are of Gods true Church.

The fleshly persecute the spirituall.

Actes. 8.

The childrē of this world are the Papistes.

And hereby ye see that it is a playne & an euident conclusiō as bright as the sunne shyning that the truth of Gods word dependeth not of the truth of the congregation. And therfore when thou art asked, why thou beleuest that thou shalt be saued thorough Christ and of such like principles of our sayth, aunswere thou wottest and feelest that it is true. And when he asketh how thou knowest that it is true, aunswere because it is written in thyne hart. And if he aske who wrote it, aūswere the spirite of God. And if he aske how thou came first by it, tell him, whether by readyng in bookes or hearyng it preached, as by an outward instrumēt, but that inwardly thou wast taught by ỹ spirite of God. And if he aske whether thou beleuest it not because it is written in bookes or because the Priestes so preach, aunswere no, not now, but onely because it is writtē in thyne hart and because the spirite of God so preacheth and so testifieth vnto thy soule. And say, though at the beginning thou wast moued by readyng or preachyng, as the Samaritans were by ỹ wordes of the woman, yet now thou beleuest it not therfore any lēger, but onely because thou hast heard it of the spirite of God, and read it written in thine hart.

then

then truth,

It hath pleased God of his exceding loue wherewith he loued vs in Christ (as Paul sayth) before the worlde was made, and whē we were dead in sinne and his enemies, in that we did cōsent to sinne and to liue euill, to write with his spirite in our conclusions in our harts, by which we vnderstād all thyng: that is to wete, the fayth of Christ and the lone of our neighbours. For whosoeuer feleth the iust damnation of sinne, and the forgeuenes and mercy that is in Christes bloud for all that repent & forsake it, and come and beleue in that mercy, the same onely knoweth how God is to be honoured and worshipped, and can iudge betweene true seruing of God in the spirite, and false Image seruing of God with workes. And ỳ same knoweth that sacramētes, signes, ceremonies and bodely things can be no seruice to God in his person but memorials vnto men, and a remēbraunce of the testament wherewyth God is serued in the spirite. And he that feeleth not that, is blynde in hys soule, and of our holy fathers generation, and maketh God an Image, & a creature, & worshippeth him with bodely seruice. And on the other side, he that loueth his neighbour as himselfe, vnderstandeth all lawes, and cā iudge betwene good and euil, right & wrong, godly and vngodly, in all conuersation, deedes, lawes, bargaines, couenauntes, ordinaunces and decrees of men, and knoweth the office of euery degree, and the due honour of euery person. And he that hath not that writen in his hart is popishe, and of ỳ spiritualtie which vnderstādeth nothing saue his own honour, his own profite & what is good for himself onely: and when he is as he would be, thinketh ỳ all the worlde is as it should be.

The fayth in Christ, & loue of our neyghbours is all that is required of a Christian man.

The vse of signes & ceremonyes.

¶ Of worshipping and what is to be vnderstand by the worde.

Worshipping and honouring are both one.

COncerning worshipping or honouring (which two termes are both one) M. More bringeth forth a difference, a distinction or diuision of Greke wordes, fayned of our scholemen, which of late neither vnderstode greke, latine or hebrue, called doulia, hyperdoulia and Latria. But the difference declareth he not, nor the properties of the wordes, but with confused termes leadeth you blindfolde in hys maze. As for hyperdoulia I woulde fayne were where he readeth of it in all the scripture, and whether the worshipp done to hys Lord the Cardinalles hat were doulia, hyperdoulia, or idololatria. And as for doulia and latria we fynde thē both referred vnto God in a thousand places.

Therefore that thou be not beguiled wyth falshod of sophisticall words, vnderstand that the wordes which the scripture vseth in the worshipping or honouring of God are these: lone god, cleane to God, dread, serue, bow, pray and call on God, beleue and trust in God and such like. Which wordes all we vse in the worshipping of man also, how be it diuersly, and the differēce thereof doth all the scripture teach.

The true wordes that expresse the honour of God.

God hath created vs and made vs vnto his owne likenes, and our sauiour Christ hath bought vs wyth hys bloud. And therfore are we Gods possession of dutie and right, and Christes seruauntes onely, to waite on his will and pleasure, and ought therefore to mone neither hand nor fote, nor any other member, eyther hart or mynde, otherwise then he hath appointed. God is honoured in his owne person, whē we receaue al things both good & bad at his hand, and loue his lawe wyth all our hartes, and beleue, hope, and long for all that he promiseth.

What it is to honour God.

The true honour of God.

THe officers that rule the worlde in Gods stede, as father, mother, master, husband, Lord and Prince are honoured, when the lawe which almighty God hath committed vnto them to rule with, is obeyed. Thy neighbour that is out of office, is honoured, when thou (as God hath commaunded thee) lonest hym as thy selfe, countest hym as good as thy selfe, thinkest hym as worthy of any thing as thy selfe, and commest louingly to helpe hym at all hys neede, as thou wouldest be holpe thy selfe, because God hath made him like vnto hys owne image as well as thee, and Christ hath bought hym as well as thee.

What it is to honour rulers.

What it is to honour & mās neighbour.

If I hate the lawe, so I breake it in myne hart, and both hate & dishonour God the maker therof. If I breake it outwardly, then I dishonour god before the worlde, and the officer that ministreth it. If I hurt my neighbour, then I dishonour my neighbour and him that made him, and him also that bought him wyth hys bloud. And euē so, if I hate my neighbour in mine

What it is to dishonour God and dishonour our neighbour.

hart, then I hate him that commaundeth me to loue him and him that hath deserued that I should at the lest way for his sake loue him. If I be not redy to helpe my neighbour at hys nede, so I take his due honour from him, & dishonour him, & him that made him, and him also that bought him with his bloud, whose seruaunt he is. If I loue such thinges as God hath lent me and committed vnto mine administration, so that I can not finde in myne hart to bestow them on the vses which God hath appointed me, then I dishonour God and abuse his creature in that I geue more honour vnto it thē I should do, And then I make an idole of it in that I loue it more then God and hys commaundement and then I dishonour my neighbour from whose nede I withdraw it.

To deny to helpe my neighbour is to dishonour hym.

In like maner if the officer abusyng his power, cōpell the subiect to do that which God forbiddeth or to leue vndone that which God commaundeth, so he dishonoureth God, in withdrawyng his seruaunt from him, & maketh an Idole of his owne lustes, in that he honoureth them aboue God, & he dishonoureth his brother in that he abuseth hym contrary vnto the right vse which God hath created him for and Christ hath bought him for, which is to wayte on Gods cōmaundementes.

To do that God forbiddeth is to dishonour God.

A true officer in the sight of God.

For if the officer be otherwise myn ded then this, the worst of these subiectes is made by the hādes of him that made me, and bought with the bloud of hym that bought me, and therfore my brother, and I but his seruaunt onely, to defend him and to kepe him in the honour that God & Christ hath set him, that no man dishonour him: he dishonoureth both God & man. And therto if any subiect thinke any otherwise of ỳ officer (though he be an Emperour) then that he is but a seruaunt onely, to minister the office indifferently, he dishonoureth the office and God that ordeined it. So that all men, what soeuer degree they be of are euery man in his rowme, seruauntes to other, as the hand serueth the foote and euery member one an other. And the aungels of heauen are also our brethren and very seruauntes for Christes sake, to defend vs from the power of the deuils.

All creatures are ordeyned to serue man.

And finally all other creatures that are neither aungels nor man, are in honour lesse then man, and man is Lord ouer them, and they created to serue him, as Scripture testifieth, and he not to serue them, but only his Lord God and his Sauiour Christ.

¶ Of worshippyng of Sacraments, ceremonies, images, reliques and so forth.

NOw let vs come to the worshippyng or honouryng of Sacramentes ceremonies images and reliques. First images be not God, and therefore no confidence is to be put in thē. They be not made after the image of God nor are the price of Christes bloud, but the workemanshyp of the craftes mā and the price of money and therfore inferiours to man. Images.

Images are seruauntes to man, and not mā to images.

Wherfore of all right man is Lord ouer them and the honour of thē is to do man seruice and mans dishonour it is to do them honourable seruice, as vnto his better. Images then and reliques ye and as Christ sayth, the holy day to, are seruauntes vnto man. And therefore it foloweth that we can not, but vnto our damnatiō put on a coate worth an hūdred coates, vpō a postes backe, and let the image of God & the price of Christes bloud go vp & downe therby naked. For if we care more to cloth the dead image made by mā and the price of siluer then the liuely image of God and price of Christes bloud, then we dishonoure the Image of God and hym that made him and the price of Christes bloud and hym that bought hym.

The vse of creatures inferiours to man.

Wherfore the right vse, office and honour of all creatures inferiours vnto man, is to do mā seruice, whether they be images, reliques, ornaments signes or Sacramentes, holydayes, ceremonies or sacrifices. And that may be on this maner & no doubt it so once was. If (for an example) I take a peece of the crosse of Christ and make a litle crosse therof and beare it about me, to looke theron with a repentyng hart, at tymes whē I am moned therto, to put me in remembraunce that the body of Christ was broken and his bloud shed theron, for my sinnes, and beleue stedfastly that the mercifull truth of God shall forgeue the sinnes of all that repēt for his death sake and neuer thinke on thē more: then it serueth me & I not it, & doth me ỳ same seruice as if I read the Testament in a booke, or as if the preacher preached it vnto me. And in lyke maner if I make a crosse in my forehead, in a remembraunce that God hath promised assistaunce vnto all that

The worshipping of the crosse.

How a man may vse Images well.

beleue

beleue in him, for his sake that dyed on the crosse, then doth the crosse serue me and I not it. And in like maner if I beare on me or looke vpon a crosse of what soeuer matter it be, or make a crosse vpon me, in remembraunce that who soeuer wilbe Christes Disciple must suffer a crosse of aduersitie tribulations and persecution, so doth the crosse serue me and I not it. And this was the vse of the crosse once, and for this cause it was at the begynnyng set vp in the Churches.

The worshyppyng of images.

And so if I make an image of Christ or of any thyng that Christ hath done for me, in a memory, it is good and not euill vntill it be abused.

And euen so, if I take the true lyfe of a Saint and cause it to be painted or carued, to put me in remembraunce of the Saintes lyfe, to folow the Saint as the Saint did Christ, and to put me in remembraunce of the great fayth of the Saint to God and how true God was to helpe him out of all tribulatiõ, and to see the Saintes loue towardes his neighbour, in that he so patiently suffered so paynefull a death & so cruell Martyrdome to testifie the truth for to saue other, and all to strengeth my soule with all and my fayth to God and loue to my neighbour, then doth the image serue me and I not it. And this was the vse of images at the begynnyng & of reliques also.

Images & reliques at the first were well vsed, but now shamefully abused.

And to knele before the crosse vnto the word of God which the crosse preacheth is not euill. Neither to knele downe before an image in a mans meditations to call the liuyng of the saint to mynde for to desire God of lyke grace to folow the exãple, is not euill.

False worshypping.

But the abuse of the thing is euill, and to haue a false fayth: as to beare a pece of the crosse about a mã, thinking that so long as that is about him, spirites shall not come at him, his enemyes shall do him no bodely harme, all causes that go on his side euen for bearing it about him, and to thinke that if it were not about him it would not be so, and to thinke, if any misfortune chaūce, that it came for leauing it of, or because this or that ceremonie was left vndone, and not rather because we haue broken Gods cõmaundemẽts, or that God tẽpteth vs to proue our patience. This is playne idolatry, & here a man is captiue, bond & seruaūt vnto a false fayth & a false imagination, that is neyther God nor his worde. Now am I Gods onely and ought to serue nothing but God and his worde. My body must serue ye rulers of this world and my neighbour (as God hath appointed it) and so must all my goods: but my soule must serue God onely, to loue his lawe and to trust in hys promises of mercy in all my deedes. And in like manner it is that thousandes, while the Priest patereth S. Johns Gospell in Latine ouer their heades, crosse themselues with, I trow a legion of crosses, behynde and before, and wyth reuerence on the very arses, and (as Jacke of napes when hee clawerh himselfe) plucke vp their legges and crosse so much as their heeles and the very soles of their fete, and beleue that if it be done in the time that he readeth the gospel (and els not) that there shal no mischaunce happen them that day, because onely of those crosses. And where he should crosse himselfe, to be armed and to make himselfe strong to beare the crosse with Christ, he crosseth himselfe to driue the crosse from hym, and blesseth hymselfe with a crosse frõ the crosse And if he leaue it vndone, he thinketh it no smal sinne, and that god is highly displeased with him, and if any misfortune chaunce, thinketh it is therefore, which is also Idolatry and not Gods worde. And such is the confidẽce in the place or image or whatsoeuer bodely obseruaunce it be: such is S Agathes letter wrytten in the Gospell tyme. And such are ye crosses on palme sonday made in the passion tyme. And such is the bearing of holy wax about a man. And such is that some hang a pece of S. Johns Gospell about their neckes. And such is to beare ye names of god with crosses betwene eche name about them. Such is the saying of gospels vnto women in childbed. Such is the limeteriers saying of in principio erat verbum from house to house. Such is the saying of Gospels to the corne in the field in the procession weeke that it should the better grow. And such is holy bread, holy water, and seruing of all ceremonies and sacramentes in generall without signification. And I pray you how is it possible that ye people can worshyp images, reliques, ceremonies and sacramentes, saue superstitiously, so long as they know not the true meaning, neyther wyll ye Prelates suffer any man to tell them: yea and the very meaning of some and right vse no man can tell?

The abuse of Images

My body must serue ye rulers of this world and my neighbour, but my soule must serue God onely not prone but that it is abhominable, as long as the poore are dispised and vncared for and not first serued, for whose sakes and to finde preachers, offeringes, tithes, landes, rentes, and all that they haue, was geuen the spiritualtie. They wil say we may do both.

Obiection.

Solution.

May or not may, I see that the one most necessary of both, is not done: but the poore are bereued of the spiritualtie of all that was in tyme passed offered vnto thē. Moreouer though both were done, they shall neuer prone that the sight of golde and siluer and of precious stones should moue a mās hart to dispise such thinges after the doctrine of Christ. Neither can the rich coat helpe to moue thy mynde, to follow the ensample of the Saint, but rather if he were purtrayde as he suffered, in the most vngoodly wise. which thing taken away, that such thynges with all other seruice, as sticking vp candels, moue not thy mynde to follow the ensample of the Saint, nor teach thy soule any godly learning: thē the image serueth not thee, but thou y Image, and so art thou an Idolater, that is to say in Englishe, a serue Image. And thus it appeareth that your vngodly and belly doctrine wherwith ye so magnifie the deedes of your ceremonies, and of your pilgrimages, and offering for the deede it selfe, to please God and to obtaine the fauour of dead Saintes (and not to moue you and to put you in remembraunce of the lawe of God and of the promises which are in his sonne, and to follow the ensample of the Saint) is but an exhorting to serue Images, and so are ye Image seruers, that is, Idolaters. And finally the more deuotion men haue vnto such deedes, the lesse they haue vnto Gods commaundement, in so much that they which be most wont to offer to Images & to shew them, be so colde in offering to the poore, that they wyll scarce geue them the scrappes which must els be geuen dogges, or their olde shone, if they may haue new bromes for them.

To worshyp Images is Idolatry.

Pilgrimages.

True Pilgrumage is to walke from place to place the better to serue God

TO speake of pilgrimages, I say, that a Christian man, so that hee leaue nothyng vndone at home that he is bounde to do, is free to go whether hee will, onely after the doctrine of the Lord, whose seruaunt he is and not his owne. If he go and visite the poore, the sicke and the prisoner, it is wel done and a worke that God commaundeth. If hee goe to this or that place, to heare a Sermon or because hys mynde is not quyet at home or if because hys harte is to muche occupied on his worldly businesses by the reasons of occasions at home, he get him into a more quiet and still place, where hys minde is more abstract and pulled from worldly thoughtes, it is well done. And in all these places, if whatsoeuer it be, whether liuely preaching, ceremony, relique, or Image, stirre vp his hart to God and preach the worde of God and the ensample of our Sauiour Iesus more in one place then in an other, that he thether go, I am content. And yet he bideth a Lord, and the thinges serue hym and he not them. Now whether his entēt be so or no, his deedes will testifie, as his vertuous gouerning of his house, and louing demeanour towarde his neighbours: yea and Gods worde wil be alway in his hart, and in hys mouth, & he euery day perfecter thē other.

& to helpe my neighbour.

For there can nothing edifie mans soule saue that which preacheth hym Gods worde. Onely the worde of god worketh the health of the soule. And whatsomeuer preacheth hym that, can not but make him perfecter.

But to beleue that God wyll be sought more in one place then in an other, or that God will heare thee more in one place then in an other, or more where the Image is, then where it is not, is a false faith, and Idolatrie, or Image seruice. For first God dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Act. xvij. Item Steuen dyed for the contrary, and proued it by the prophetes. Act. vij. And Salomon in the viij. of the third of the kynges, when he had built his temple testified the same, and that he had not built it for god to dwel in, yea and that God dwelleth not in the earth, but that he should out of heauen heare the prayers of thē that prayed there. And the Prophetes dyd often testifie vnto the people that had such a false fayth that God dwelt in the temple, that he dwelt not there. Moreouer God in his Testament byndeth hym selfe vnto no place nor yet the: But speaketh generally (concernyng where and when) saying Psalme. xlix. in the day of the tribulation thou shalt call on me and I will deliuer thee, & thou shalt glorifie me. He setteth neither place nor tyme. But whereseuer and

And where soeuer God findeth such an hart, there he heareth the prayer in all places and tymes indifferently. So that the outward place neither helpeth or hindreth except (as I sayd) that a mans mynde be more quiet and still from the rage of worldly businesses, or that some thyng stirre vp the word of God and example of our Sauiour more in one place then in an other.

NOw that thou mayst see whence all this Idolatrie or image seruice is sprong, marke a litle, and then I will aunswere vnto the Arguments whiche these Image seruers make agaynst the open truth. All the ceremonies ornamentes and sacrifices of the old Testament were Sacramentes.
Sacramentes. That is to wete, signes preaching vnto the people one thing or an other. As Circumcision. circumcision preached vnto them, that God had chosē them to be his people, and that he would be their God & defend them and encrease and multiplie them and keepe them in that land and
All the ceremonies of the olde lawe were preachers to the people. blesse the fruites of the earth & all their possessiōs. And on the other side it preached, how that they had promised God agayne to kepe his commaundemēts, ceremonies and ordinaunces. Now whē they saw their young children circumcised, if they cōsented vnto the appointement made betwene God and them, moued by the preachyng of that same, then were they iustified therby.
The Iewes by fayth were iustified, & not by the dedes of the lawe. Howbeit the dede in it selfe, the cuttyng of of ỹ foreskyn of the manchilds priuey member iustified them not, nor was a satisfactiō for the childes sinnes, but the preachyng onely did iustifie thē that receaued the fayth therof. For it was a badge geuē indifferently aswell vnto them that neuer cōsented in their hartes vnto Gods law, as vnto the elect in whose hartes the law was writ ten. And that this was the meanyng of Circumcision may be proued many wayes: But namely by Paul Rom.2. where he sayth, circumcision is much worth, if thou keepe the lawe (whose signe it was) and els not. And Rom. iij. where he sayth that God did iustifie the circumcised of faith (whose signe it was on the other side) and els not.

Paschall lambe. And the Paschall lambe was a memoriall of their deliueraunce out of Egipt onely, and no satisfaction or offering for sinne.

First fruits. And the offering of their first fruits preached how they had receaued all such fruites of the hand of God, and that it was God that gaue them that land, and that kept them in it, and that did blesse & make their fruites grow. In token wherof as vnto a Lord roiall they brought him the first ripe frutes of their harnest. which remēbrance as long as it abode in their hartes, it moued thē to loue God againe & their neighbour for hys sake, as he so oft desired them. And out of this ceremony was fette the blessing of our new ripe fruits for like purpose, though we haue lost the signification.

Sacrifices And their other offerings, as ỹ sacrices of Doues, Turtles, Lambes, kiddes, sheepe, Calues, Goates and Oxen were no satisfactions for sinne, but onely a signe and token, that at ỹ repētaunce of the hart, thorow an offering to come, and for that seedes sake that was promised Abraham, their sinnes were forgeuen them.

Ornamentes. And in like maner the ornamentes and all other ceremonies were eyther an open preaching or secret propheſies and not satisfactions or iustifyinges.
Workes must serue vs, and not we the workes. And thus the workes did serue them, and preache vnto them, and they not the workes, nor put any confidence therein.

¶False worshipping.

BVt what did the children of Israell and the Iewes? They let the significations of their ceremonies goe, & lost the meaning of them, and turned them vnto the workes to serue them, saying that they were holy workes cōmaunded of God, & the offerers were thereby iustified, & obtayned forgeuenes of sinnes, & thereby become good: as the parable of the Phareley & Publican

Luke. 18. lieue declare, Luke. xviii. and as it is to see in Paule and thorowoughout al the Byble: and became captiue to serue & put their trust in that which was neyther God nor hys worde. And so the better creature agaynst nature did serue the worse. whereof all likelihode God should haue accepted their worke by the reason of them, if their harts had bene right, and not haue accepted their soules for the blouds sake of a Calfe or shepe, for as much as a man is much better then a Calfe or shepe, as Christ testifieth Math. xii. For what pleasure should God haue in the bloude of Calues or in the light of our candels? hys pleasure is onely in the hartes of them that loue his commaundementes.

The Iewes became seruauntes & captiues to theyr workes.

The blinde reason of hipocrites.

Then they went further in the imagination of their blynd reason saying, in as much as God accepteth these holy workes, that we be made righteous thereby, then it followeth that he which offereth most, is most righteous, and the best man: yea and it is better to offer an Oxe then a shepe, because it is more costly. And so they stroue who might offer most, and the priests were well apayde. Then went they further in their fleshly wisdome, saying: if J be good for the offering of a Doue, and better for a shepe, and yet better for an Oxe, and so euer the better thyng J offer the better J am, Oh how accepted should J be if J offered a mã, & namelyhym that J most loued? And vpõ that imagination, they offered their owne children, and burnt them to ashes before Jmages that they had imagined.

O blinde & folishe imagination.

And to cõfirme their blindnes, they layd for them (no doubt) the ensample of Abraham, which offered his sonne Jsaac, and was so accepted that God had promised hym, how that in hys seede all the worlde should be blessed. Hereof ye see vnto what abhominatiõ blynde reason bringeth a man, whẽ she is destitute of Gods word.

Holy day.

Exod. 31.

And to speake of ỹ Sabbath (which was ordeyned to be their seruaunt, & to preach & to be a signe vnto thẽ, that God thorow his holy spirit and word did sanctifie them, in that they obeyed hys commaundementes, and beleued and trusted in hys promises (and therfore were charged to leaue worlyng and to come on the holy day and heare the word of God by which they were sãctified) vnto it, also they became captiue and bond to serue it, saying that they were iustified by abstayning from bodely labour (as ours thinke also) in so much that though they bestowed not the holy day in vertue prayer and hearing the word of God, in almosedede, in visiting the sicke, the needy & comfortlesse and so forth, but went vp and downe idlye, yet what soeuer nede his neighbour had, he would not haue holpe hym on the Saboth day, as thou mayst see by the ruler of the Sinagoge which rebuked Christ for healyng the people on the holy day Luke. xiii.

The Sabboth day must serue vs, and not we the Sabboth day.

How the Saboth day should be occupyed.

Luke. 13.

And of like blyndnesse they went & fet out the brasen Serpent (which Moses commaũded to be kept in the Arke for a memory) & offered before it: thinkyng (no doubt) that God must be there present, for els how could it haue healed the people that came not nye it, but stode a farre of and beheld it onely. And a thousand such madnesse dyd they.

The brasen Serpent.

And of the temple they thought that God heard them there better then any where els: yea and he heard them no where saue there. And therfore they could not pray but there, as ours can no where but at Church and before an Jmage. For what prayer can a man pray, when the word of God is not in the temple of his hart: yea & whẽ such come to Church, what is their prayer & what is their deuotiõ, sane the blind image seruice of their hartes.

The tẽple.

Prayer without fayth is no prayer.

But the Prophetes euer rebuked them for such faythlesse woorkes & for such false fayth in their workes Jn the xlix. Psalme saith ỹ Prophet, J wil receaue no Calues of your houses nor Goates out of your foldes, thinke ye that J will eate the flesh of Oxen or drinke the bloud of Goates? And Esayas sayth in his first Chapter, what care J for the multitude of your sacrifices sayth the Lord. J am full. J haue no lust in the burnt offeringes of your Rammes, or in the fat of fat beastes or bloud of Calues, Lambes or Goates: offer me no more such false sacrifice. And therto your swete sense is an abhominatiõ vnto me. And thus he sayd because of the false fayth and peruertyng the right vse of them.

Psal. 46.

God despised the sacrifices of vnfaithfull Iewes.

Fastyng.

And for their false fastyng, not referryng their fast vnto the tamyng & subduyng of their flesshe vnto the spirite, whẽ they complained vnto God iustifying thẽ selues and saying, how happeneth it, that we haue fasted and thou wouldest not looke vppon it, we haue humbled our soules and thou wouldest not know it, God aunswered them by the Prophet Esayas in the, lviii. chapter, Superstitious fasting doth God abhorre.

Esa. 58.

ter, behold, in the day of your fast, ye do your owne lustes and gather vp all your dettes. And how soeuer ye fast, ye neuertheless striue and fight and smite with fiste cruelly. I haue chosen no such fast and humblyng of soule. &c. But that ye louse wicked bondes and let the oppressed go free, and to breake bread vnto the hungry and to cloth the naked and so forth.

True fasting, what it is.

Temple.

And concerning the temple, Esayas sayth in his last chapter. what house will ye build for me or in what place shall I rest? heauē is my seate and the earth my foote stole. As who should say I am to great for any place that ye can make, and (as Steuen sayth Actes vij. and Paul Actes. xvij. I dwell not in a temple made with handes.

How ceremonies sprang among vs.

VNderstād also (to see how we came into like blindnesse) that before the commyng of Christ in the flesh, the Israelites & Iewes were scattered thoroughout all the world, for their Image seruice, both East, west, South, and North, as ye read in the Chronicles how England was once full: so that there was no Prouince or great Citie in the world where no Iewes were: God so prouidyng for the spedy preachyng of the Gospell among the heathen throughout the world. Now Christ, as he was promised, so was he sent, vnto the Iewes or Israelites. And what by Christes preaching & the Apostles after his resurrection, there were innumerable Iewes conuerted haply an hundred thousand or mo in Ierusalem and Iewry and in the countreys about, and abode still in the lād. Then Paul rose vp and persecuted thē in Ierusalē and throughout all Iewry and Damasco, slaying all that he could catch or making them forsweare Christ. For feare of which persecution they fled into all costes & preached vnto the Iewes that were scattered, prouing that Iesus was Christ the Sauiour of the world, both by the scripture & also by miracles: so that a great part of the Iewes came to the sayth euery where, and we heathen came in shortly after, and part abode still in vnbelefe as vnto this day.

Paule a cruell persecutor.

Many Iewes were conuerted to ye faith of Christ.

Now the Iewes beyng borne and bred vp, rooted and nosled in ceremonyes as I haue shewed and as ye may better see in the. v. bookes of Moses, if ye would read them, could but wyth great difficultie, depart from them as it is to see in all the Epistles of Paule, how he fought agaynst them, and in processe gat the vpper hand. And therto the first that were christened, and all the officers and Byshops of ỳ church, euen so much as ỳ great God of Rome were Iewes for the most part a great season.

And moreouer, as Paule sayth. Ro. ix. not all that came of Israel are right Israelites, neither are all they Abrahams sonnes that are Abrahās seede, why so? because they followed not the steps of ỳ faith of their graundfathers. Euen so, not all they that were called and also came vnto the mariage which God the father made betwene Christ his sonne & all sinners, brought theyr mariage garment with them, that is to wete, true fayth wherwith we be maried vnto Christ, and made his flesh & his bloud and one spirit with hym, his brethren and heyres with him, and the sonnes of God also. But many of thē (to fulfill the saying of Christ, that the kyngdome of heauē, which is the gospell, is like a net that ketcheth good & bad) were driuen into the net and cōpelled to cōfesse that Iesus was Christ and that seede that was promised Abrahā and Messias that should come: not of any inward felyng that the spirite of God gaue them, neyther of any louely consent that they had vnto the law of God that it was good, mourning, both because they had broken it, and because also they had no power to fulfill it, and therfore to obtayne mercy and power came to Christ and vnto the father thorow him, with the hart of naturall children which receaue all thyng freely of their fathers bounteous liberalitie, and of loue become seruauntes vnto their brethren for their fathers sake: But were compelled onely with violence of the scripture which euery where bare witnesse vnto Christ, and agreed vnto all that he did, and ouercome also with the power of myracles that confirmed the same. That is to say, they came wyth a story faith, a popish fayth, a faithlesse faith, and a fayned faith of their owne making, and not as God in the scripture describeth the fayth, to beleeuing in Christ, that they would be iustified by their owne deedes, which is the denying of Christ. As our Papistes beleue, which more mad thē those Iewes, beleue nothing by the reason of the scripture

All that came of Israell are not Israelites.

Math. 22.

The Iewes came not to vnderstāding of Christ of loue, but were enforced therunto by the scriptures.

ture, but onely that such a multitude consent thereto, compelled wyth violence of swoꝛde, with falsifiyng of the scripture and fayned lyes. Which multitude yet is not the fift part so many as they that consent vnto the lawe of Mahomet. And therfoꝛe by their own argumentes, the fayth of the Turkes is better then theirs. And their fayth thereto may stand by their owne confession, with all mischiefe (as it well appeareth by them) and with yeldyng themselues to woꝛke all wickednesse with full delectation, after the ensample of the faith of their father the deuil, and without repentaunce and consent vnto the lawe of God, that it is good. And the popish also do so beleue in Christ, and so will be his seruauntes, that they will be bound vnto dumme ceremonies and dead woꝛkes putting their trust and confidence in them, and hoping to be saued by them, and ascribing vnto them the thanke of their saluation and rightcousnes.

The Turkes are a farre greater number then the Papistes.

And therfoꝛe because, as I sayd, the Iewes ye and the Heathen to, were so accustomed vnto ceremonies, and because such a multitude came wyth a faithles fayth, they went cleane cõtrary vnto the mynde of Paul, and set vp ceremonies in the new testamẽt, partly boꝛowing them of Moses and partly imagening like, as ye now see, and called them sacraments, that is to say, signes (as it is plaine in the stoꝛies) the sacrament of holy water, of holy fire, holy bread, holy salt and so foꝛth. And they gaue thẽ significations. As holy water signified the sprincling of Christes blond foꝛ our redemption, which sacrament oꝛ signe) though it seeme superfluous, in as much as the sacrament of Christes body and blond signifieth ẏ same dayly) yet as lõg as ẏ signification bode, it hurted not. And the killing of the Pax was set vp to signifie, that the peace of Christ shoulde be euer among vs, one to loue an other after his ensample, as the woꝛd it self well declareth. Foꝛ pax is as much to say as peace.

Ceremonies set vp in the newe testament.

What holy water signifieth.

The Pax.

And as foꝛ confirmation, it is no doubt but that it came this wise vp, & that this was the vse, which the woꝛd it selfe well declareth. we read in the stoꝛies, that they which were conuerted vnto the fayth of the age of discretion, were full taught in the law of God (as right is) and in the fayth of our saniour Jesus, yet they were baptised, & vppon the profession oꝛ promising to to keepe that law and faith, were baptised. And then foꝛ the succour & helpe of young childꝛen, baptised befoꝛe the age of discretion, to know the lawe of God and fayth of Christ was confirmation instituted, that they should not be alway ignoꝛaunt and faythlesse, but be taught the profession of their Baptim. And this no doubt was the maner, as we may well gather by probable coniectures and euident tokens, when the childꝛen were of sixe oꝛ seuen yeares olde, their elders bꝛought them vnto the pꝛiest oꝛ Deacon in euery parish, which officer taught the childꝛen what their baptim ment, & what they had pꝛofessed therein: that is to were: the law of God and their dutie vnto al degrees, and the faith of our sauiour. And then because it should not be neglect oꝛ left vndone, an higher officer, as the Archdeacon (foꝛ it hath not bene as I suppose in the Byshops handes alway as now, neither were it meete) came about from parish to parishe, at tymes conuenient. And the Pꝛiestes bꝛought the childꝛen vnto hym at xi. oꝛ xii. yeare olde, befoꝛe they were admitted to receaue the sacramẽt of Christes body haply. And he apposed them of the lawe of God and fayth of Christ, & asked them, whether they thought that lawe good, and whether their hartes were to follow it. And they aunswered yea.

Confirmation.

Cõfirmation how it came first vnto the church.

The maner of confirming of childꝛen.

And he apposed them in the articles of our fayth, and asked them, whether they put their hop and trust in Christ, to be saued thoꝛow his death and merites. And they answered ye. Thẽ cõfirmed he their baptim saying: I confirme you, that is, I denounce and declare, by the authoꝛitie of Gods woꝛde and doctrine of Christ, that ye be truely baptised within in your hartes, and in your spirites, thoꝛow pꝛofessing the lawe of God and the faith of our sauiour Jesu, which your outwarde baptim doth signifie, and therupon I put this crosse in your foꝛeheades, that ye goe and fight agaynst the deuill, the woꝛld and the flesh, vnder the standard of our Sauiour, in the name of the father, the sonne, & the holy ghost. Amẽ. which maner I would to God foꝛ his tender mercy were in vse this day.

This is a right confirmation.

But after that the deuil was bꝛoken lowse and the Byshops began to purchase, and the Deacons to scratch all to them, and the spiritualtie to clime an hygh: then because the labour semed to tedious and paynfull, to appose the chil-childzen one by one, they asked the Priests that presented thē onely, whether the childzen were taught the profession of their Baptisme. And they answered yea. And so vpon their wordes they confirmed thē without apposing. So whē they no lenger apposed them, the Priests no lenger taught them, but committed the charge to their Godfather and Godmothers, and they to the father and mother, dischargyng themselues by their owne authoritie within halfe an houre.

The abuse of confirmation.

The fruts of ignorannce.

And the father & mother taught thē a monstrous Latin Pater noster and an Aue and a Crede. which gibberish euery Popiniaye speaketh with a sundry pronunciation and fashion, so that one Pater noster semeth as many languages almost as there be tounges that speake it. Howbeit, it is all one, as lōg as they vnderstand it not. And in processe as the ignorannce grew, they brought them to confirmation straight from Baptisme: so that now oftymes they be volowed and bishoped both in one day, that is, we be confirmed in blindnesse to be kept from knowledge for euer. And thus are we come into this damnable ignorannce and fierce wrath of God through our owne deseruyng, because when the truth was told vs we had no loue therto. And to declare the full and set wrath of God vpon vs, our Prelates whom we haue exalted ouer vs to whom we haue geuen almost all we had, haue persuaded the worldly Princes (to whō we haue submitted our selues and geuē vp our power) to deuour vs vp body & soule, and to kepe vs, downe in darkenesse, with violence of sword, and with all falsehead and guile. In so much that if any do but lift vp his nose to smell after the truth, they swap him in the face with a fire brande to seng hys smellyng, or if he open one of his eyes once to looke toward ỹ light of gods word, they bleare & daze his sight with their falle iugglyng: so that if it were possible, though he were Gods elect, he could not but be kept down and perish for lacke of knowledge of the truth.

Confirmatiō is made now a confirmyng in all superstition, ignorannce and popery.

The Papisticall tyrannye.

And in like maner, because Christ had institute the Sacrament of his body and bloud, to kepe vs in remembrance of his body breaking & blud shedding for our sinnes, therfore went they and set vp this fashiō of the Masse and ordeined Sacramentes in the ornamentes thereof to signifie and expresse all the rest of his passiō. The amice on the head is the kercheue that Christ was blyndfolded with, when the souldiours buffeted him and mocked hym saying: prophecie vnto vs who smote thee? But now it may wel signifie that he that putteth it on, is blynd and hath professed to leade vs after him in darkenesse, according vnto the beginnyng of his play. And the flappe theron is the crowne of thorne. And the albe is the white garment that Herode put on him, saying he was a foole because he held his peace and would not aūswere him. And the ij. flappes on the sleues and the other ij. on the albe beneath ouer agaynst his fete behind and before, are the. iiij. nayles. And the fanon on his hand, the cord that his hādes were bound with: And the stole the rope wherwith he was bound vnto the piller, when he was scorged: And the corporiscloth, the lindon wherin he was buried: and the altare is the crosse or haply the grane and so forth. And the casting abroad of his hands, the splaying of Christ vpon the crosse. And the light and sticking vp of candles & bearyng of candles or tapers in procession happly signified this text. Math. v. ye be the light of the world, and let your light so shyne before mē, that they may see your good workes & glorifie your father which is in heauen. And the salt signifieth the wisedome of Christes doctrine, and that we should therewith salt our dedes and do nothing without the authoritie of Gods word. So that in one thing or other, what in the garmētes and what in the gestures all his playde, in so much that before he will go to Masse, he wilbe sure to sell hym, lest Judases part should be left out.

And so throughout all the Sacramēts, ceremonies or signes (ih. wordes of one signification) there were significations vnto them at the beginning. And so long as it was vnderstād what was ment by them and they dyd but serue the people and preach one thyng or an other vnto them, they hurted not greatly, though that the free seruaunt of Christ ought not to be brought violently into captiuitie vnder the bōdage of traditions of men. As S. Augustine complayneth in his dayes, how that the condition and state of the Jewes was more easy then the Christiās vnder traditions: so sore had the tyranny of the shepheardes inuaded the flocke all ready in those dayes. And thē what iust cause haue we to cōplaine our captiuitie now, vnto whose yocke from that tyme hetherto, euen. xij. hundred yeares long, hath euer somwhat more waight bene added to, for to keepe vs downe and to confirme vs in blyndnesse: howbeit, as long as the significatiõs bode, they hurted not the soule, though they were paynefull vnto the body. Neuertheless I impute this our greuous fal into so extreme and horrible blyndnesse (wherin we are so deepe and so deadly brought a slepe) vnto no thyng so much as vnto the multitude of ceremonies. For assoone as the Prelates had set vp such a rable of ceremonies, they thought it superfluous to preach the playne text any longer and the law of God, faith of Christ, loue toward our neighbour and the order of our iustifying & saluation, for as much as all such thynges were played before the peoples faces dayly in the ceremonies & euery child wist the meanyng: but got them vnto allegories, fayning them euery mã after his owne brayne, without rule, all most on euery sillable, and from thence vnto disputyng and wastyng their braynes about wordes, not attending the significations vntill at the last the laye people had lost the meanyng of the ceremonies & the Prelates the vnderstandyng of the playne text, and of the Greke Latin and specially of the Hebrue whiche is most of nede to be knowen, and of all phrases, the proper maner of speakynges and borowed speach of the Hebrues.

Out of the ceremonies sprang the ignorance of the scripture.

The multitude of ceremonies put away preachyng.

Ceremonies are the chief cause of ignorance.

Remember ye not how within this xxx. yeares and farre lesse, and yet dureth vnto this day, the old barkyng curres Dunces disciples & lyke drasse called Scotistes, the childzen of darkenesse, raged in euery pulpit agaynst Greke Latin and Hebrue, and what sorrow the Scholemasters that taught the true Latin tonng had with them, some bearyng the pulpit with theyr fistes for madnesse & roaryng out with open and fomyng mouth, that if there were but one Tirence or Virgil in the world and that same, in their sleues & a fire before them, they would burne them therein, though it should cost thẽ their liues, affirming that all good learnyng decayed & was vterly lost sence men gaue them vnto the Latin tõg: yea & I day say, that there be. xx. thousand Priests Curates this day in England and not so few, that cã not geue you the right English vnto this text in the Pater noster, fiat voluntas tua sicut in cœlo & in terra & aunswere therto.

Ignorannt Priests.

And assoone as the significatiõ of the ceremonies was lost, and the priestes preached Christ no longer then the common people began to wax mad & out of their mindes vpon the ceremonies. And that trust and confidence which the ceremonies preached, to be geuen vnto Gods worde and Christes bloud, that same they turned vnto the ceremonie it selfe; as though a man were so mad to forget that the bushe at the tauerne dore did signifie wine to be solde within, but would beleue that ỹ bushe it selfe would quench his thirste. And so they became seruauntes vnto ỹ ceremonies, ascribing their iustifying and saluation vnto them, supposyng that it was nothing else to be a christẽ man, then to serue ceremonies, & him most christen that most serued them, & contrary wise him that was not Popishe and ceremoniall, no christẽ man at all. For I pray you, for what cause worship we our spiritualtie so highly, or wherefore thinke we their prayers better then the poore laye mens, then for their disguisings and ceremonies? yea and what other vertue see we in ỹ holiest of them, then to waite vpon dumme superstitious ceremonies?

Ignorance made vs seruauntes to ceremonies.

Yea and how cõmeth it that a poore laye man hauing wife and xx. childzen, and not able to finde them, though all his neighbours know his necessitie, shal not get with begging for Christes sake in a long sommers day inough to fynde them two dayes honestly, when if a disguised monster come, he shall wyth an houres lying in the pulpit, get inough to finde thirty or forty sturdy lubbers a moneth long, of which ỹ weakest shall be as strong in the belly when he commeth vnto the manger, as the mightiest porter in ỹ weyhouse, or best courser that is in ỹ kynges stable? Is there any other cause then disguising and ceremonies. For ỹ deedes of the ceremonies we count better thẽ the deedes which God cõmaundeth to be done to our neighbour at hys nede, who thinketh it as good a deede to feede the poore, as to sticke vp a candle before a post, or as to sprinckle himself with holy water? Neither is it possible to be otherwise, as long as the signification is lost. For what other thyng can the people thinke, then that such deedes be ordeyned of God, and because as it is euident, they serue not our neighbours nede, to be referred vnto ỹ person of God, and he though he be a spirite, yet serued therewyth? And then he can not but forth on dispute in his blynde reason, that as god is greater then man, so is that deede that is appointed to serue God greater then that which serueth man. And then when it is not possible to thinke them ordeyned for nought, what can I other wise thinke then that they were ordeyned to iustitie, and that I should be holy therby, according to the popes doctrine, as though God were better pleased when I sprinkle my selfe with water or set vp a candle before a block, then if I fed, or clothed, or holpe at his neede him whom he so tenderly loueth that he gaue his owne sonne vnto the death for hym, and commaunded me to loue him as my selfe?

When the people by ignorance waxed superstitious then ẏ clergie holpe them forward with falsifying the scripture.

And when the people beganne to run that way, the prelates were glad, and holpe to heue after with subtill allegories and falsifying the scripture, & went and halowed the ceremonies, to make them more worshipfull, that the laye people should haue them in greater estimation & honour, and to be afrayde to touch them for reuerence vnto the holy charme that was layd ouer them, and affirmed also that Christes death had purchased such grace vnto ẏ ceremonies to forgeue sinne and to iustifie. O monster, Christes death purchased grace for mans soule, to repent of euill, and to beleue in Christ for remission of sinne, and to loue the lawe of God, & his neighbour as himselfe, which is the true worshipping of god in the spirite, and he dyed not to purchase such honour vnto vnsensible thinges, that mã to his dishonour, should do them honourable seruice & receaue his saluation of them.

Christes death purchased grace for mãs soule.

Cranes make not iij. wilde Bees, would I therefore that he shoulde beleue that twise two made not foure. Neither entend I to proue vnto you that Paules steple is the cause why Temmes is broke in about Erith, or ẏ Teinterden steple is the cause of the decay of Sandwich hauen as M. More iesteth. Neuertheless, this I would were perswaded vnto you (as it is true) that the building of thē and such like, thorow ẏ false fayth that we haue in them, is the decay of all the hauens in England, & of al the cities, townes, hye wayes, and shortly of the whole common wealth. For since these false monsters crope vp into our consciences, and robbed vs of the knowledge of our sauiour Christ, making vs beleue in such popeholy workes, and to thinke that there was none other way vnto heauen, we haue not ceassed to build thē abbeyes, cloysters, colledges, Chauntries, and cathedrall churches with hye steples, striuing and enuying one an other, who shoulde do most. And as for the deedes that pertayne vnto our neighbours, and vnto the common wealth, we haue not regarded at all, as thynges which seemed no holy workes, or such as God woulde not once looke vppon. And therfore we left them vnsene to, vntill they were past remedy, or past our power to remedy thē, in as much as our slowbellies with their false blessinges had ingled away from vs, that wherwith they might haue bene holpen in due season. So that ẏ silly poore man though he had haply no wisdome to expresse hys mynde, or ẏ he durst not, or ẏ M. More fashioneth his tale as he doth other mens to iest out the truth, sawe that neither Goodwinsandes nor any other cause alleaged was the decay of Sandwich hauen, so much as that the people had no lust to mainteyne the common wealth, for blynde deuotion which they haue to popeholy workes.

The building of Abbeies, cloysters & religious houses haue bene a great decay to the good state of this realme

¶ The solutions and answeres vnto M. Mores first booke.

IN the first chapter to beginne the booke wythal, to bring you good lucke and to geue you a say or a taste what truth shall follow, he fayneth a letter sent from no man.

The second Chapter.

Worshipping.

In the second chapter, besides that it is vntrue this vse to haue bene euer since the tyme of the Apostles, he maketh many sophisticall reasons about worshipping of saintes, reliques, and Images, & yet declareth not w̄ what maner worship, but iuggleth with the terme in comune, as he doth with this worde church, and this worde fayth, when the wordes haue diuers significations: for all faithes are not one maner fayth and so forth, and therefore he beguileth a mans vnderstanding. As if a man sayd, the boyes will was good to haue geuen his father a blow, and an other woulde inferre, that a good will Subtile iuggling wordes.

will coulde be no sinne, and conclude that a man might lawfully smite hys father. Now is good will taken in one sence in the maior and in an other in ỳ minor, to vse schollers termes, & therfore the conclusion doth mocke a mās wit. Then disputeth he, the seruaunt is honoured for the masters sake, and what is done to the poore is done to Christ (as the popishe shall once feele for their so robbing them). And the xii. Apostles shall haue their seates & sitte and iudge with Christ (as shal all that here preach hym truely as they dyd) and Mary that powred the ointment on Christes head before hys passion, hath her memoriall, and therefore we ought to set candles before Images. First I aske hym by what rule hys argument holdeth. And secondarily I

True worshipping of Saintes.

answere that the true worshipping of Saintes is their memoriall: to follow them as they did Christ. And that honour we geue them, and so do not ye papists, but folow the steppes of your father the Pope, as he doth the steppes of his father the deuill. And as for sticking vp of candles, I answere that True worshipping of God.

God is a spirite, and in the spirit must be worshipped only. Faith to his promises, and loue to his lawes, and longing for the life that is in his sonne, are his due honour and seruice. All bodyly seruice must be referred vnto our selues, and not vnto the person of God immediatly. All outwarde thynges which we receaue of God are geuē vs. to take our partes with thankes, and to bestow the rest vppon our neyghbours. For God vseth no such thynges in his owne person, but created thē for to geue thē vs, that we shoulde thanke hym, and not to receaue them of vs, to thanke vs: for that were our praise and not his. Fasting, watching, wolward goyng, pilgrimage, and all bodely exercise must be referred vnto ỳ taming of the flesshe onely. For as god delyteth not in ỳ tast of meat, drinke, or in the sight of golde or siluer, no more doth he in my tast and such like, that I should referre them vnto hys person, to do him a pleasure withall. For God in himselfe is as good as he can be, & hath all the delectation that he cā haue. And therefore to wish that God were better then he is, or had more pleasure then he hath, is of a worldly imagination.

And all the spirites that be in heauē are in as good case as they can be, and haue all the delectation they can haue, and therefore to wishe them in better case or to studie to do them more pleasure then they haue, is fleshly mynded popishnes. The pleasure of them that be in heauen is, that we harken to god and keepe his commaundementes, which when we do, they haue all the pleasure that they can haue in vs. If in this life I suffer hell gladly, to win my brother to folow God, how much more if I were in heauen should I reioyce that he so did? If in thys worlde when I haue neede of my neighbour, by the reason of myne infirmities, yet I seke nought of him, saue his wealth onely, what other thing should I seke of hym, if I were in heauen, where he can do me no seruice, nor I vse any pleasure that he can do me?

They that are in heauē do chefly desire that we harken to God & do hys will.

THe deuill desired to haue his imaginations worshipped as God, & his popishe children desire the same, & compell men so to honour them, and of their deuelishe nature describe they both God and his Saintes. And therfore I say, all such fleshly imaginations, as to fast the wensday in the worship of S. John or of S. Katerine, or what Saint it be, or to fast Sayntes eues, or to go a pilgrimage vnto their images or to offer to them, to do them pleasure, thinkyng therby to obteyne their fauour and to make special aduocates of them, as a man would winne the fauour of an other with presentes and giftes, and thinking that if we did it not, they would be angry, are playne Idolatry & image seruice, for the saint deliteth in no such. And when thou stickest vp a candle before the image, thou mightest with as good reason make an holow bely in the image and powre in meate and drincke. For as the Saint neither eateth nor drinketh, so hath he no bodyly eyes to delyte in the light of a candle.

All popish imaginations are Idolatry.

Candles

An other is this, God geueth not the promises that are in Christ for bodyly seruice, but of his mercy onely, vnto his owne glorie. Yea and of the fathers goodnesse do all naturall childrē receaue. Aske a litle boy, who gaue him his gay coate, he answereth, his father. Aske him why, and he answereth, because he is his father and loueth hym, and because he is his sonne. Aske hym whether his father loue hym, and he sayth yea. Aske him how he knoweth it and he sayth, because he geueth me this or that. Aske him whether he loue his father, he sayth yea. Aske him why,

We receaue all thinges of God our father by Jesus Christes sake hys sonne and our only Sauiour.

he he ſayth, for his father loueth hym and geueth him all thing. Aſke him why he worketh, he aunſwereth, his father wil ſo haue it. Aſke him why his father geueth not ſuch and ſuch boyes coates to. May ſaith he, they be not his ſonnes their fathers muſt geue them as myne doth me. Go now ye Popiſh bond ſeruauntes and receaue your reward for your falſe workes and robbe your brethren and raigne ouer them with violence and cruell tyranny and make thē worſhip your pillars, polaxes images and hattes. And we will receaue of the mercyfull kyndneſſe of our father and will ſerue our brethren freely, of very loue and wilbe their ſeruauntes & ſuffer for their ſakes. And thereto our good deedes whiche we do vnto our neighbours nede, ſpryng out of our righteouſneſſe or iuſtifying, which is ỳ forgeueneſſe of our ſinnes in Chriſtes blond, & of other righteouſneſſe know we not before God. And contrarywiſe your righteouſnes or iuſtifying which ſtandeth, as your fayth doth, with all wickedneſſe, ſpringeth out of your holy workes which ye do to no man freely ſaue vnto paynted poſtes.

We muſt doe all thynges of loue.

Sacrifices

And when he alledgeth the ſacrifices of the old law, I ſay they were Sacramentes and preached vnto the people (as no doubt, our candels once were) and were no holy workes to be referred vnto Gods perſon to obtaine hys fauour, and to iuſtifie the people, and that the people ſhould do them for the workes ſelues. And when the people had loſt the ſignifications and looked on the holyneſſe of the dedes, to be iuſtified thereby, they were image ſeruice and hateful to God and rebuked of the Prophetes, as it is to ſee throughout all the old Teſtament.

Rom. 14.

Then he iuggleth with a text of S. Paule Rom. xiiij. let euery man for his part abounde, one in this Idolatrie & an other in that: when the ſenſe of the text is, let euery mā be ſure of his own conſcience, that he do nothyng, except he know well and his conſcience ſerue him that it may be lawfully done. But what care they to abuſe Gods word & to wreſt it vnto the contrary.

And in the laſt end, to vtter his excellent blindneſſe, he ſayth, the wiſeman Luther thinketh that if the gold were take from the reliques, it would be geuen vnto the poore immediatly, when he ſeeth the contrary, that they which haue their purſes full wil geue ỳ poore (if they geue ought) either an halfe penny or in his countrey the iiij. part of a farthyng. Now I aſke M. Mores conſcience, ſeyng they haue no deuotion vnto the poore which are as Chriſtes own perſon and for whom Chriſt hath ſuffered his paſſion that we ſhould be kynd to them and whom to viſite with our almes is Gods commaundement, with what minde do they offer ſo great treaſure, to the garniſhyng of ſhrines images & reliques? It is manifeſt that they which loue not Gods cōmaundement, can do nothing godly. wherfore ſuch offeryngs come of a falſe fayth, ſo that they thinke thē better thē workes commaunded by God and beleue to be iuſtified therby. And therfore are they but image ſeruice.

A ſore token of a falſe fayth and images ſeruice.

And when he ſayth, we might as well rebuke the powryng of the annoyntment on Chriſtes head. May, Chriſt was thē mortall as well as we, and vſed ſuch thynges as we do, and it refreſhed his body. But and if thou woldeſt now poure ſuch on his image to do him pleaſure, I would rebuke it.

A differēce betwene Chriſtes naturall body, and a paynted Image.

The third Chapter.

Miracles.

IN the third Chapter he bryngeth in miracles done at S. Steues tombe. I aunſwere that the miracles done at Saintes tombes, were done for the ſame purpoſe that the miracles which they dyd when they were aliue, were done: euen to prouoke vnto the faith of their doctrine, and not to truſt in the place or in bones or in the Saint. As Paul ſent his napkē to heale the ſicke, not that mē ſhould put truſt in his napkin, but beleue his preachyng.

Miracles were done by ỳ ſaints to confirme theyr doctrine.

Heliſeus.

And in the old Teſtament Eliſeus healed Naaman the heathen mā in the water of Iordayne, not to put truſt in the water or to pray in that place, but to wonder at the power of God & to come & beleue, as he alſo did. And that his bones, when he was dead, rayſed vp a dead man, was not done that mē ſhuld pray to him: for ỳ was not lawfull thē, by their own doctrine, neither to put theyr truſt in hys bones. For God to auoyde all ſuch Idolatrie, had poluted all dead bones, ſo that whoſoeuer touched a dead bone, was vncleane and all that came in his company, vntil he had waſhed him ſelfe: in ſo much that if a place were abuſed with offering vnto Idoles, there was no better remedie then to ſcatter dead bones there, to driue the people thēce, for beyng defiled and poluted. But his bones did that miracle, to teſtifie that he was a true Prophet & to moue men vnto the fayth of his doctrine.

Dead bones may not be worſhypped.

And euen so miracles done at the holy crosse, were done, to moue men vnto fayth of him that dyed thereon, & not that we shuld beleue in the wood.

Pilgrimages. He saith that pilgrimes put not trust in the place, as Nicromancers do in their circles, and sayth he wotteth not what, to mocke out the text of our Sauiour of praying in the spirite. And in the end he confoundeth him selfe saying, we reken our prayers more pleasaunt in one place thē in an other. And that must be by the reason of the place, for God is as good in one place as in an other and also the man. Moreouer where a mā pleaseth God best, thether is he most bound to go. And so that imagination byndeth a mā to the place with a false fayth, as Nicromancers trust in their circles.

More reasoneth vntowardly.

God is like good in euery place. And agayne if God had sayd that he would more heare in one place then in an other, he had bound him selfe to the place. Now as God is like good euery where generally so hath hee made his Testament generally, wheresoeuer myne hart moueth me & am quyet to pray vnto hym, there to heare me like graciously.

Temple. And if a man lay to our charge, that God bould them vnto the tabernacle & after to the Temple in the old Testament. I say that he dyd it not for ỳ places sake, but for the monumentes and testimonies, that their preached the word of god vnto them, so that though the priests had bene negligēt to preach, yet should such things that there were haue kept the people in the remembraunce of the Testamēt made betwen God and them. which cause and such like onely should moue vs to come to Church, and vnto one place more then an other. And as lōg as I come more to one place then an other because of ỳ quietnesse or that some thing preacheth gods word more lively vnto me there then in an other, the place is my seruaunt and I not bound to it: whiche cause and such like taken away, I can not but put trust in the place as Nicromancers do in their circles, and am an image seruer & walke after myne own imagination & not after Gods word.

The people were specially called to ỳ Temple to behold the monumēts there, wherby they might the better learne the mighty power of God.

Paschall Lambe. And when he sayth, we might as well mocke the obseruaūce of the Paschall Lambe. I aunswere, Christ our Paschall Lambe is offered for vs and hath deliuered vs as Paule sayth. 1. Cor. v. whose signe and memoriall is the Sacrament of his body and blood. Moreouer we were not deliuered out of Egypt. And therefore in as much as we be ouerladen with our owne, I see no cause why we should become Iewes, to obserue their ceremonies to.

1.Cor.v.

Holy straunge gestures is like an apes play. And when he sayth holy straunge gestures. I aunswere, for the holynesse I will not sweare: but the straungenesse I dare well auow. For euery Priest maketh them of a sundry maner & many more madly then the gestures of Jack an apes. And when he sayth that they were left from hand to hand sence the Apostles time, it is vntrue. For the Apostles vsed the Sacramēt as Christ dyd, as thou mayst see. 1. Cor. xi. More ouer the Apostles left vs in the light & taught vs all the counsell of God, as Paule witnesseth Actes. xx. and bid no thyng in straunge holy gestures and apes play the significations wherof no man might vnderstand.

1.Cor.11.

Pitie. And a Christen man is more moued to pitie sayth he, at the sight of ỳ crosse, then without it. If he take pitie as Englishmen do, for compassiō, I say, that a Christen man is moued to pitie whē hee seeth his brother beare the crosse.

The true beholdyng of the signe of the crosse And at the sight of the Crosse, he that is learned in God wepeth not, with ignorant womē, as a mā doth for hys father when he is dead: but mourneth for hys sinnes, and at the sight of the crosse comforteth his soule with the cōsolation of him that dyed theron. But there is no sight whether of the crosse or ought els, that can moue you to leue your wickednesse, for the Testament of God is not written in your hartes.

The Church is a place of prayer. And when he speaketh of praying at Churche who denyeth hym that men might not pray at Church or that the church shuld not be a place of prayer? But that a man could not pray saue at Church, and that my prayers were not heard as well els where, If I prayed with like feruentnesse & strong fayth, is a false lye.

God heareth our prayer in all places.

And whē he speaketh of the presence of God in the temple. I aunswere, that the Prophetes testified, how that hee dwelt not there, & so doth Paule Actes xvij. & so doth Steuē Actes. vij. & Salomon. iij. Of the kynges. viij. And no doubt as the madde Iewes ment, he dwelt not there, nor as we more mad suppose also. But he dwelled there onely in his signes Sacramentes, and testimonies which preached his woorde vnto the people. And finally for theyr false confidence in the temple, God destroyed

Actes. 17.

Actes. 7.

3. Reg. 8.

Jerusalem and the temple is destroyed.

stroyed it. And no doubt for our false fayth in visityng the monumentes of Christ, therefore hath God also destroyed them and geuen the place vnder the infidels.

The piller of fire.

And when he speaketh of the piller of fire and clonde. I answere, that god was no otherwise present there, then in all fire and in all cloudes saue that he shewed his power there specially by the reason of the miracle, as he doth in the eyes of the blinde whom he maketh see, and yet is no other wise present in those eyes then in other, nor more there to be prayed to then in other. And in like maner he is no more to be prayed to where he doth a miracle then where he doth none. Neither though we cā not but be in some place, ought we to seeke God in any place, saue onely in our hartes, and that in veritie, in fayth, hope, and loue or charitie, accordyng to the woorde of hys doctrine.

God is present in all places alike.

And our sacramentes, signes, ceremonies, Images, reliques and monumentes ought to be had in reuerence, so farforth as they put vs in mynde of Gods worde, and of the ensample of them that liued thereafter and no further.

And the place is to be sought, and one to be preferred before an other for quietnesse to pray, and for lively preaching, and for ỹ preaching of such monumentes and so forth. And so long as the people so vsed thē in the olde testament, they were acceptable & pleasaūt to God, and God was sayd to dwell in the temple. But when the significations being lost, the people worshipped such thinges for the things seines, as we now do, they were abhominable to God, and God was sayde to be no longer in the temple.

All places are to be preferred where we may worship God most quietly.

The fourth chapter.

M. More teacheth false doctrine.

AND in the fourth he sayth, that god setteth more by one place then an other. which doctrine besides that it should binde vs vnto the place, and God thereto, and can not but make vs haue confidence in the place, is yet false. For first God vnto whose worde we may adde nought, hath geuen no such commaundement nor made any such couenaunt. Neither is Christ here or there saith the scripture, but in our hartes is the place where God dwelleth by his owne testimony if his word be there.

Math. 24.

And when he proueth it, because God doth a miracle more in one place then in an other, I answere, if God will do a miracle, it requireth a place to be done in. Howbeit he doth it not for the place but for the peoples sakes whom he would call vnto the knowledge of his name, and not to worshippe hym more in one place then in an other.

Miracles were not done for ỹ place but for the people.

As the miracles done in Egipt, in the red sea, in mount Sinay & so forth, were not done that men should goe in pilgrimage vnto the places to pray there, but to prouoke them vnto the true knowledge of god, that afterward they might euer pray in ỹ spirite, whersoeuer they were. Christ also dyd not his miracles that men should pray in the places where he did them, but to stirre vp the people to come and heare the worde of their soules health. And when he bringeth the miracle of Silo, I answere, that the sayd miracle, and that Christ sent the blynde thether to receaue his sight, were not done that men should pray in the poole: but the second miracle was so done to declare the obedient fayth of the blinde, and to make the miracle more known, and the first for the worde of God that was preached in the temple, to moue the countrey about to come thether and learne to know God, and to become a lively temple, out of which they might euer pray, and in all places. Neither was the miracle of Lazarus done, that men shoulde more pray in that place then in an other, but to shew Christes power, & to moue the people thorow wondering at the miracle to harkē vnto Gods word and beleue it, as it is to see playnely.

Siloe. Ioh. 4. & 9.

Miracles done to draw ỹ people to heare the woorde of God.

Moreouer God so loueth no church, but that the parishe haue libertie to take it downe and to builde it in an other place: yea and if it be tymber to make it of stone, and to alter it at their pleasure. For the places, yea and the Images must serue vs and not God which is a spirite, and careth for none more thē other, nor is otherwise present in one place thē in an other. And likewise is it of Saintes bones, we may remoue them whether we wyll, yea & breake all Images therto, and make new, or if they be abused, put them out of the way for euer, as was the brasen serpent, so that we be Lordes ouer all such thinges, and they our seruaunts. For if the Saints were our seruaūts, how much more their bones. It is the hart and not the place that worship-

All places must serue man, ỹ not man bound to serue any place.

God is worshipped in our hartes, & not in any other place.

peth God. The kitchen page turning the spit may haue a purer hart to God then his master at church, and therfore worship God better in the kitchen thē his master at church. But when wyll M. More be able to proue that miracles done at Saintes tombes, were done that we should pray vnto the Saintes, or that miracles done by dead Saintes which a liue neither preached Gods worde nor coulde do miracle are done of God?

The father careth most for the poorest.

God loueth none Angell in heauen better then the greatest sinner in earth that repenteth and beleueth in Christ. But contrarywise careth most for the weakest, and maketh all that be perfect their seruauntes, vntill as Paule saith Ephe. 4. they be growē vp in ỹ knowledge of God into a perfect man, and into the measure of age of the fulnesse of Christ, that is, that we know all the misteries and secretes that God hath hid in Christ, that we be no more children wauering with euery wynde of doctrine, thorough the subtiltie & wylines of men that come vpon vs to bring vs into errour or beguile vs. So far it is of that he would haue vs kept Ephes. 4.

God cānot be serued with bodely seruice.

downe to serue Images. For wyth bodely seruice we can serue nothyng that is a spirite. And therto if it were possible that all the Angels of heauen coulde be mine enemies: yet would I holde me by the testamēt that my mercifull and true father hath made me in the bloud of my Sauiour, and so come vnto all that is promised me, & Christ hath purchased for me, and geue not a straw for them all.

The fift chapter.

IN the fift chapter he falleth from all he hath so long swet to proue, and beleueth, not by the reason of the myracles, but by the common consent of the church and that many so beleue. Thys man is of a farre other complexion thē was the Prophet Elias. For he beleued a lone as he thought, agaynst the consent by all likelihode of ix. or x. hūdred thousand beleuers. And yet M. Mores church is in no other condition vnder the Pope, then was that church agaynst whose consent Elias beleued alone vnder the kinges of Samary.

Our fayth may be grounded vpon men.

The sixt chapter.

IN the sixt chapter & vnto the xviii. he proueth almost nought saue that which neuer man denyed him, that miracles haue bene done. But how to know the true miracles from the false were good to be knowen, which we shall this wise do if we take those for true sacramentes & ceremonies which preach vs Gods woorde, euen so we count them true miracles onely which moue vs to harken therto.

All true miracles prouoke vnto fayth and trust in God.

The xvi. Chapter.

COncerning his xvi. chapter of the mayde of Ipswiche, I answere, that Moses warned hys Israelites that false miracles should be done to proue thē, whether their harts were fast in ỹ Lord. And euen so Christ and the Apostles shewed vs before ỹ lying miracles should come to peruert the very elect if it were possible. And therefore we must haue a rule to know the true myracles from the false, or els it were impossible that any man shoulde scape vndeceaued and continue in the true way. And other rule then this is there not: that the true are done to prouoke mē to come & harkē vnto Gods word, and ỹ false to cōfirme doctrine ỹ is not gods word. Now it is not gods woorde if thou reade all the scripture thoroughout, but contrary therto, that we should put such trust and confidēce in our blessed Lady as we do, & cleane agaynst the testament that is in Christes bloud. wherfore a man neede not to feare, to pronounce that the deuyll did it to mocke vs withall.

The mayde of Ipswich.

True miracles are done to prouoke vs to the hearing of Gods worde, and the false do ỹ contrary.

Neuer the later let vs compare the mayde of Ipswiche and the mayde of Kent together. First they say that the mayde of Ipswich was possessed wyth a deuill, and the mayde of Kent wyth the holy ghost. And yet the tragedyes are so like the one to the other in all pointes, that thou couldest not know the holy ghost to be in the one and the deuill in the other by any difference of workes. But that thou mightest with as good reason say that the deuill was in both, or the holy ghost in both, or the deuill in the maide of Kent and the holy ghost in the mayde of Ipswich. For they were both in like traunses, both rauished from themselues, both tormented a like, both disfigured, like terrible ougly and grysely in sight, and their mouthes drawen a side, euē vnto the very eares of them, both enspyred, both preach, both tell of wonders, wil be both caryed vnto our Lady, & are both certified by reuelation that our Lady in those places and before those Images should deliuer them.

The mayde of Kent.

The mayde of Ipswich & the maide of Kēt were both false dissembling harlotes.

Now as for the mayde of Ipswich was possessed of ỹ deuill by their owne con-cōtrilio. whēce then came that reuelation, that she should be holpe and all her holy preaching? If of the deuill, then was the miracle & all of the deuil. If of the holy ghost, then was she inspired with the holy ghost and had the deuill within her both at once. And in as much as the mayd of Kent was inspired by the holy ghost by their confession, whence came that stoppyng of her throte, that ranyng, those greuous panges that tormentyng, disfiguryng, drawing of her mouth awrye and that fearefull & terrible countenaunce? If of the holy ghost, and thē why not the reuell and gambolde of the mayd of Ipswich also? and then what matter maketh it whether a man haue the deuill or the holy ghost in him. If ye say of the deuill, thē had she likewise both the deuill and the holy ghost both at once. Moreouer those possessed which Christ holpe auoyded Christ and fled frō him, so that other which beleued were faine to bryng them vnto him agaynst their willes. For which causes and many moe that might be made, thou mayst cōclude, that the deuill vered them and preached in them, to confirmed fayned confession and dome ceremonies and Sacramentes without signification & damnable sectes, & shewed them those reuelations. And assoone as they were brought before our Ladyes image, departed out of them, to delude vs and to turne our faythes from Christ vnto an old blocke. As we read in the Legend of S. Bartholomew, how the deuils hurt men in their lymmes and assone as they were brought into a certain temple before an Idole, there they departed out of them and so beguiled the people makyng them beleue that the Idole had healed them of some naturall diseases.

The mayd of Kent.

Such as were possessed with deuils fled frō Christ.

A false delusion to bryng vs to Idolatry.

S. Bartholomew.

Howbeit let it be the holy ghost that was in the mayd of Kent. Thē I pray you what thyng worthy of so great prayse hath our Lady done? Our Lady hath deliuered her of the holy ghost & emptied her of much hygh learnyng which as a goodly Poetisse, she vttered in Rimes. For appose her now of Christ, as Scripture testifieth of hym, and thou shalt finde her cleane without rime or reason. The maide was at home also in heauenly pleasures, and our Lady hath deliuered her out of the ioyes of Orelles and brought her into the miseries of middell earth agayne.

Our Lady byd the mayde of Kent small pleasure.

The xviij. Chapter.

IN the xviij. where he would fayne proue that the Popes Churche can not erre, he alledgeth thynges wherof he might be ashamed, if he were not past shame, to proue that the Byshops haue authoritie to lade vs with traditiōs neither profitable for soule nor body. He bringeth a false allegorie vppon the ouerplus that the Samaritane if it were layde out, promised to pay when he came agayn, for the Byshops traditions. Nay. M. More, besides that allegories which euery man may fayne at his pleasure can proue nothing, Christ interpreteth it hym selfe, that it betokeneth a kynde mynde & a louyng neighbour, which, so loued a straunger, that he neuer left caryng for him, both absent as well as present, vntill he were full whole and common out of all necessitie.

Traditiōs

Allegory

It signifieth that the Prelates, if they were true Apostles and loued vs after the doctrine of Christ, would sell their myters, croses, plate, shrynes, iuels and costly showes to succour the poore and not robbe them, of all that was offered vnto them, as they haue done: & to repare thinges fallen in decay and ruine in the common wealth, & not to begger the realmes with false Idolatry and imagerie ruice, that they haue not left them wherewith to beare the cost of the common charges.

A true exposition of the parable of the Samaritan.

And moreouer when the Scribes & Pharisees taught their owne doctrine, they sat not vpon Moses seate, but on their owne. And therfore Christ (so far it is of that he would haue vs hearken vnto mans doctrine) sayd, beware of the leuen of the Scribes, Pharisees & Saduces which is their doctrine & rebuked them for their doctrine & brake it him selfe and taught his Disciples so to do and exculed them, and sayd of all traditiōs, that what soeuer his heauenly father had not planted, should be plucked vp by the rootes. And therto all the persecutiō that the Apostles had of the Iewes, was for breakyng of traditions.

All that God hath not planted shalbe plucked vp by the rootes.

Our Prelates ought to be our seruauntes as the Apostles were, to teach vs Christes doctrine, and not Lordes ouer vs, to oppresse vs with theyr owne. Peter calleth it temptyng of the Byshops should be seruauntes and not Lordes.

Actes.15. holy ghost Actes.xv. to lade the heathē with ought aboue that which necessitie and brotherly loue required. And Paul rebuketh his Corinthians for their ouer much obedience and the Galathians also and warneth all men to stand fast and not to suffer them selues to be brought into bondage.

The Pope will not obey princes though God haue commaunded hym so to do.

And when he sayth Peter & Paule commaunded vs, to obey our superiours. That is trouth, they cōmaunded vs to obey the temporall sword which the Pope will not. And they commaūded to obey the Byshops in the doctrine of Christ and not in their owne. And we teach not to breake all thyngs rashly, as M.More vntruly reporteth on vs) whiche is to be sene in our bookes, if men will looke vpon them.

Traditiōs

Of traditions therfore vnderstand generally. He that may be free is a foole to be bonde. But if through wilnesse, thou be brought into bondage: then if the tradition hurt thy soule & thy faith, they are to bee broken immediatly, though with the losse of thy lyfe. If they greue the body onely, thē are they to be borne till God take them of, for breakyng the peace and vnitie.

Christes burthen is easie and gentle.

Then how lore maketh he Christes burthē. If it be so lore, why is M.More so cruell to helpe the Byshops to lade vs with more? But surely he speaketh very vndiscretely. For Christ dyd not lade vs with one sillabe more then we were euer bound to, neither did he any thyng but interpret the law truly. And besides that, he geueth vnto all hys, loue vnto the law: which loue maketh all thinges easie be borne that were before impossible.

Math.5. And when he sayth, ye be the salt of the earth that it was spoken for the Byshops and Priestes onely it is vntrue, but it was spoken generally vnto all that beleue and know the truth, that they should be salt vnto the ignoraunt, and the perfecter vnto the weaker, ech to other euery man in his measure. And moreouer if it be spokē vnto the Prelates onely, how fortuneth it ỳ M.More is so busie to fault the world in his hygh learnyng? And last of all the salt of Prelates which is their traditions & ceremonies without signification is vnsaucry long a go, & therfore no more worth but to be cast out at the doores and to be troden vnderfoote.

The salt of our Prelates is vnsaucry.

And that he sayth in the end that a man may haue a good fayth with euill liuing, I haue proued it a lye in an other place. Moreouer fayth, hope and loue be iij. sisters ỳ neuer can depart in this world, though in ỳ world to come loue shall swalow vp the other twoo. Neither can the one be strōger or weaker then the other. But as much as I beleue, so much I loue, and so much I hope ye and so much I worke.

Fayth, loue, & charitie, are iij. sisters.

The xix. Chapter.

In the xix. hee proueth that praying to Saintes is good, & miracles that cōfirme it are of God or els the church sayth he doth erre. It foloweth in dede or that the Popes Church erreth. And when he sayth it is sinne to beleue to much I say we had the more neede to take heede what we beleue and to search Gods word the more diligently that we beleue neither to much nor to litle.

We must beleue neither to much nor yet litle.

And when he sayth God is honoured by praying to Saintes because it is done for his sake: I aunswere, if it springe not out of a false fayth but of the loue we haue to God, then should we loue God more. And moreouer in as much as all our loue to God springeth out of faith, we should beleue and trust God. And then if our fayth in God were greater then our feruent deuotiō to Saintes, we should praye to no Saintes at all, seyng we haue promises of all thinges in our Sauiour Iesu and in the Saintes none at all.

We are promised all thinges for our Sauiour Christes sake, & not for the Saintes.

The xxv. Chapter.

In ỳ xxv. how iuggleth he, to proue that all ỳ perteyneth vnto the faith, was not writte, alledging John in the last, that the world could not conteine the bookes, if all should be written. And John meaneth of the miracles which Iesus did, and not of the necessary pointes of the fayth.

Iohn.21.

And how bringeth he in the perpetuall virginitie of our Lady, which though it be neuer so true, is yet none article of our fayth, to be saued by. But we beleue it with a story fayth, because we see no cause reasonable to thinke the contrary.

The virginitie of our Lady.

And when he sayth many misteries are yet to be opened, as the commyng of Antichrist. Nay verely the babe is knowne well inough, and all the tokens spide in him, which the scripture describeth hym by.

Antichrist is known.

And when he alleageth Paules traditions to the Thessalo. to proue hys phantasie. I haue answered Rocheter in the obedience, that his traditions were the Gospell that he preached.

Paules traditions were the doctrine of the Gospel

And

And when he alleageth Paule to the Cozin. I say that Paule neuer knew of this word Masse. Neither can any man gather thereof any straunge holy gestures, but the playne contrary, and that there was no other vse there then to breake the bread amõg them at supper as Christ did. And therefore he calleth it Christes supper and not Masse.

Christes Supper & not Masse.

There was learned ẏ maner of consecration. A great doubt, as though we coulde not gather of the scripture how to do it. And of the water that the Priest mingleth wyth the wyne. A great doubt also and a perilous case if it were left out. For either it was done to slake the heate of the wine, or put to after as a ceremony, to signifie that as the water is chaunged into wine, so are we chaunged thorow fayth as it were into Christ, and are one wyth him, how be it, all is to their owne shame, that ought shoulde be done or vsed among vs Christen, whereof no man wist the meaning. For if I vnderstand not the meaning, it helpeth me not. 1. Cor. 14. and as experience teacheth. But if our shepherdes had bene as well willing to feede as to shere, we had needed no such dispicience, nor they to haue burnt so many as they haue.

The consecration.

1. Cor. 14.

And as for that he alleageth out of the Epistle of Iames for the iustifying of workes, I haue answered in the Mammon, against which he can not hisse, and will speake more in the iij. booke.

Iustification of workes.

And as for the Saboth, a great matter, we be Lordes ouer the Saboth, & may yet chaunge it into the monday or or any other day, as we see neede, or may make euery tenth day holy daye onely if we see a cause why, we may make two euery weeke, if it were expedient and one not inough to teach ẏ people. Neither was there any cause to chaunge it from the Saterday then to put difference betwene vs and the Iewes, and least we should become seruauntes vnto the day after their superstition. Neyther needed we any holyday at all, if the people myght be taught without it.

Saboth.

The Saboth day & holy dayes are made for vs not we for the.

And when he asketh by what scripture we know that a womã may christen. I answere if baptim be so necessary as they make it, then loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, doth teach women to baptise in tyme of neede: yea and to teach, & to rule their husbandes to, if they be beside them selues.

Why women Baptise.

And when he sayth that of likelihode the laye people vnderstoode the Gospell of John and Paules Epistles better then great Clarkes now. I answere, the more shame is theirs. How be it there be ij. causes why: the one is their diligent shering, and an other, they deny the iustifying of fayth wherof both Paule and John do entreate & almost of nothyng els, if the signification of our baptim which is the lawe of God & fayth of Christ were expounded truely vnto vs, ẏ scripture would be easie to all that exercised themselues therin. And sir in as much as the prelates care so little for the losse of ẏ vnderstanding of the Scripture and to teach ẏ people, how happeneth it that they care so sore for a balde ceremonie, which ẏ significatiõ lost, though Christ hymselfe had instituted it, we coulde not obserue without a false fayth and without hurtyng of our soules?

Why the Prelates vnderstand not the Scripture

And finally to rocke vs a sleepe with all, he sayth, that he shall neuer speede well that will seeke in the scripture whether our Prelates teach vs a true fayth, though ten preach ech contrary to other in one day. And yet Christ for all his miracles sendeth vs to ẏ scripture. And for all Paules miracles, the Iewes studyed the scripture the deligenterly, to see whether it were as he sayd or no. How be it he meaneth that such cã not speede well because the prelates will burne them, except M. More helpe them, and make them forsweare Christ before hand.

A good tale if it were long enough.

Ye can not spede well if ye trye the doctrine of our Prelates by the Scripture

The xxvii. chapter.

IN the xxvij. he bringeth Paule exhorting to agree and to tell all one tale in the fayth, which can not be (saith M. More, except one beleue by the reasõ of an other. Yes verely we all beleue ẏ the fire is hot, and yet not by the reasõ of an other, and that with a more surer knowledge then if we beleued it ẏ one by the tellyng of an other. And euẽ so they that haue the law of God written in their hartes, and are taught of ẏ spirite to know sinne and to abhorre it, and to feele the power of the resurrection of Christ, beleue much surer then they that haue none other certeintie of their fayth then the Popes preachyng confirmed with so godly liuing.

All beleue in God that haue the lawe written in their harts

And it is not vnknowne to M. More that the churches of late dayes and the churches now beyng haue determined thynges in one case the one contrary to the other, in such wise that he can not deny but the one hath or doth erre: the which case I could shew hym if I so were mynded. The olde Popes, Cardinalles and Bysshops sayd yt to the thyng that I meane, whereunto these that now raigne say nay. Now syr if you gather a generall counsell for the matter, the churches of Fraunce and Italy will not beleue the Churches of Spayne and Douchland, because they so say: but will aske how they proue it. Neyther will Louayne beleue Paris because they say that they can not erre, but wyl heare first their probation. Also how shall we know that the olde Pope and hys Prelates erred, because these that are now so say? when ỳ olde Pope lined we were as much bounde to beleue that he could not erre, as we be now that this can not: wherefore you must graunt me, that God must shew a myracle for the tone parte, or els they must bring autẽtike scripture.

Popes may not be beleued without Scripture.

Now syr God hath made hys last & euerlasting testament, so that all is open and no more behynde then the appearyng of Christ againe. And because he wyll not stirre vp euery day a new prophet with a new miracle to cõfirme new doctrine or to call agayne the olde that was forgotten: therefore were all thinges necessary to saluation comprehended in scripture euer to endure. By which scripture the counsels generall and not by open miracles, haue cõcluded such thynges as were in them determined, as stories make mẽtion. And by the same scripture we know which counsels were true & which false. And by the same scripture shall we, if any new question arise determine it also.

Counsells ought to conclude according to the Scriptures.

Luke. 16. Abraham answered the rich man, they haue Moses and the Prophets, let thẽ heare them, and sayd not, they haue the Scribes and the Pharisees whom they should heare preachyng out of the seate of their owne doctrine wythout scripture.

Math. 18. heare not the church take hym for an heathen, concluding that we must beleue whosoeuer is shauen in all that he affirmeth without scripture or myracle, I would fayne know in what figure that silogismus is made. Christes disciples taught Christes doctrine confirming it with miracles, that it might be knowen for Gods and not theirs. And euen so must the Church that I wyll beleue shew a myracle, or bryng autentike scripture that is come from the Apostles which confirmed it with myracles.

The xxix. Chapter.

IN the xxix. he alleageth that Christ sayd not the holy ghost shall write, but shall teach. It is not the vse to say the holy ghost writeth, but inspireth ỳ writer. I marueyle that he had not brought, as many of hys brethren do, Mathew in the last, where Christ cõmaunded the Apostles to go and teach all nations, and sayd not write. I answere, that this precept loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, and God aboue all thyng, went wyth the Apostles & cõpelled them to seeke Gods honour in vs, and to seeke all meanes to continue the fayth vnto the worldes ende. Now the Apostles knew before that heresies shoulde come, and therefore wrote, that it myght be a remedie against heresies, as it well appeareth Iohn. xx. where he sayth, these are written that ye beleue and thorow beliefe haue lyfe. And in the second of his fyrst Epistle he sayth, these I write because of them that deceaue you. And Paule and Peter therto warne vs in many places. wherfore it is manifest that the same loue compelled them to leaue nothyng vnwritten that should be necessarily required, and that if it were left out, should hurt the soule.

Iohn. 20.

1. Iohn. 2.

And in the last chapter to make all fast, he bringeth in the kynges grace, how he confuted Martin Luther, with this conclusion, ỳ Church can not erre: where vnto I will make none answere for feare to displease his grace, neuertheless because Martin could not soyle it, if his grace looke well vpõ the matter, he shall finde that God hath assoyled it for him in a case of his own.

The Pope and hys Cardinals erred in k. Henry the eights cast

And vppon that M. More concludeth his first booke, that what soeuer the Church, that is to wete, the pope & his broode say, it is Gods worde, though it be not written nor confirmed with miracle nor yet good liuing, yea and though they say to day this and to morow the contrary, all is good inough and Gods word: yea and though one Pope condemne an other (it. or r. Popes arow) with all their workes for heretickes, as it is to see in the stories, yet all is right and none errour. And thus good night and good rest, Christ is brought a slepe & layde in his graue and the doore sealed to, and the men of armes about the graue to keepe hym downe with polaxes. For that is the in-

2. Pet. 2. For firſt Peter ſayth. ij. Now ſaith Paule. Rom. iij. the law ſpeaketh vnto thẽ that are vnder the law. And euen ſo this is ſpokẽ of thẽ that profeſſe the name of Chriſt. Now the Pope hath x. thouſand ſectes cropen in, as pied in their conſciences as in their coates, ſettyng vp a thouſand maner of wozkes to be ſaued by, which is the denying of Chriſt. And we ſee many and all moſt all together folow their dammable wayes. And in that Peter ſayd that they ſhall rayle & blaſpheme the truth, it foloweth that there ſhalbe a litle flocke reſerued by the hãd of God to teſtifie the truth vnto them oz els how could they rayle on it? And it foloweth that thoſe raylers ſhalbe the mightier part in the wozld, oz els they durſt not do it. Now what truth in Chriſt doth not the Pope rebuke and in ſettyng vp falſe woozkes denie all together? And as foz their fayned wozdes, where findeſt thou in all the Scripture Purgatozy, ſhrift penaunce, pardon, pœna culpa, hyperdoulia and a thouſand fayned termes mo? And as foz their marchaundiſe, looke whether they ſell not all Gods lawes and alſo their owne, and all ſinne and all Chriſtes merites and all that a mã can thinke. And ỹ elect whiche are few in compariſon of them that be called and come fayredly, ſhall among that great multitude bee kepte by the mighty hand of God agaynſt all naturall poſſibilitie. So that the Church & very elect ſhall neuer be ſuch a multitude together by them ſelues without perſecution & temptatiõ of their fayth, as the great multitude vnder the pope is which perſecute and ſuffer not. And theſe which the Pope calleth heretikes ſhew no miracles, by their owne confeſſion, neither ought they, in as much as they bzyng no new learnyng noz ought ſaue the Scripture which is all ready receaued & cõfirmed with miracles. He hath lyes in all his Legendes in all preachynges and in all bookes. They haue no loue vnto the truth, which appeareth by their great sinnes that they haue set vp aboue all the abhominatiō of all the heathen that euer were, and by their long continuaunce therin, not of frailtie: but of malice vnto the truth and of obstinate lust & selfe will to sinne. Which appeareth in two thinges: the one, that they haue gotten them with wiles and falsehead frō vnder all lawes of man and euen aboue

And by power I vnderstand the pure faith in gods word whiche is the power and pith of all godlynesse and whence all that pleaseth God springeth. And this text pertaineth vnto them that professe Christ.

Gods worde is ỹ power and pith of all goodnes.

And in that he sayth hauing an appearaunce of godlynesse & of that foloweth in the text, of this sort are they that enter into mens houses and lead women captiue laden with sinne, euer askyng & neuer able to attcine vnto the truth (as our hearers of cōfessions do) it appeareth ỹ they be such as wilbe holyer then other and teachers and leaders of the rest. And looke whether there be here any sillabe that agreeth not vnto our spiritualtie in the highest degree. Loue they not them selues their owne decrees and ordinaunces, their owne lyes and dreames & despise all lawes of God and man, regarde no man but thē onely that be disguised as they be? And as for their couetousnesse whiche all the world is not able to satisfie, tell me what it is that they make not serue it? in so much that if God punishe the world with an euill pocke, they immediatly paynt a blocke and call it Job to heale the disease in stede of warning the people to mend their lyuyng. And as for their high mynde and pryde, see whether they be not aboue Kings and Emperour & all the names of God, & whether any man may come to beare rule in this world except he be sworne to them and come vp vnder them.

And ſee whether they loue not theyr luſtes, that they will not be reſtrained from them either by any law of God or man. And as for their apperance of godlyneſſe, ſee whether all be not Gods ſeruice that they fayne, and ſee whether not almoſt all conſciences be captiue thereto. And it foloweth in the text, as the ſorcerers of Egipt reſiſted Moſes, ſo reſiſted they the truth. They muſt be therfore mighty iugglers. And to poynt the popiſhe wyth the finger he ſayth, men are they wyth corrupt mindes, and caſt awaies concernyng fayth, that is, they be ſo fleſhly mynded, ſo croked ſo ſtubburne and ſo monſtrous ſhapen, that they cã receaue no faſhion to ſtand in any buil dyng that is grounded vppon fayth: but whẽ ỹ haſt turned them all wayes and done thy beſt to hew them and to make them frame, thou muſt be fayne to caſt them out wyth the Turkes and Iewes, to ſerue God wyth the image ſeruice of their owne falſe worckes. Of theſe and ſuch like textes, and of the ſimilitudes that Chriſt maketh in the Goſpell of the kyngdome of heauen it appeareth, that though the holy ghoſt be in the choſen, and teacheth them all truth in Chriſt, to put their truſt in hym, ſo that they cannot erre therein, yet whyle the worlde ſtandeth, God ſhall neuer haue a church that ſhal eyther perſecute or be vnperſecuted theim ſelues any ſeaſon, after the faſhion of ỹ Pope. But there ſhall be in the church a fleſhly ſeede of Abraham and a ſpirituall, a Cain and an Abell, an Iſmael and an Iſaac, an Eſau and a Iacob, as I haue ſayd, a worker and a beleuer, a great multitude of them that be called and a ſmall flocke of them that be elect and choſen. And the fleſhly ſhall perſecute the ſpirituall, as Cain did Abel, and Iſmaell Iſaac, & ſo forth, and the great multitude ſhall perſecute ỹ ſmall little flocke, and Antichriſt wil be euer the beſt chriſten man.

In the Churche ſhall there be for euer, both good and euill.

SO now the church of God is double, a fleſhly and a ſpirituall: the one will be and is not, the other is & may not be ſo be called, but muſt be called a Lutheran, an hereticke, and ſuch like. Underſtand therefore, that God when he calleth a congregation vnto hys name, ſendeth forth his meſſẽgers to call generally, which meſſengers bring in a great multitude amazed and aſtonied wyth myracles and power of the reaſõs which the preachers make, and therewyth be compelled to cõfeſſe that there is but one God of power & might aboue all, & that Chriſt is God and man, and borne of a virgine, and a thouſand other thynges. And thẽ the great multitude that is called and not choſen, when they haue gotten thys fayth common as wel to the deuils as them, & more ſtrongly perſuaded vnto the deuils then vnto them, then they go vnto their owne imaginations, ſaying: we may no longer ſerue Idoles, but God that is but one. And the maner of ſeruice they fet out of their owne braynes and not of the worde of God, and ſerue God wyth bodely ſeruice as they did in tymes paſt their Idoles, their hartes ſeruing their owne luſtes ſtill. And one will ſerue hym in white, an other in blacke, an other in grey, & an other in pyed. And an other to do God a pleaſure withall, will be ſure, that his ſhow ſhall haue two or three good thicke ſoles vnder, and wyll cut hym aboue, ſo that in ſommer whyle the weather is hot thou mayſt ſee hys bare fote, & in winter hys ſocke. They wyll be ſhorne and ſhauen and Saduces: that is to ſay, righteous, and Phariſeis, that is ſeperated in faſhions frõ all other men. Yea and they wyll conſecrat thẽſelues altogether vnto God, and wyll annoint their handes, and halow them as the chalice, from al maner lay vſes: ſo that they may ſerue neither father nor mother, maiſter, Lord or Prince, for poluting thẽſelues, but muſt wayte on God onely, to gather vp hys rentes, tythes, offerynges, & all other duties. And all the ſacrifice that come, they cõſume in the altar of their bellies, and make Calil of it, that is, a ſacrifice that no mã may haue part of. They beleue that there is a God: But as they can not loue hys lawes, ſo they haue no power to beleue in hym. But they put their truſt and confidence in their owne worckes, and by their own worckes they will be ſaued, as the rich of this world, whẽ they ſue vnto great men, hope with giftes and preſentes to obtayne their cauſes. Neither other ſeruing of God know they, ſaue ſuch as their eyes may ſee and their bellyes feele. And of very zeale they will be Gods vicars, and preſcribe a maner vnto other, and after what faſhiõ they ſhall ſerue God, and compell thẽ therto, for the anoyding of Idolatry, as thou ſeeſt in the Phariſeis.

This worde Church is taken ỹ. maner wayes.

The ſpirituall Churche of God are called Lutherãs and hereticks.

The fleſhly Churche ſerue God with workes of their owne.

Fiers.

The bliſſing of hypocrites.

Calil, is a ſacrifice that no mã may haue any parte therof.

The small flocke of Christ cometh to the word and promises of God.

But little flocke, as soone as he is perswaded that there is a God, he rūneth not vnto hys owne imaginatiōs, but vnto the messēger that called hym, and of hym asketh how he shall serue God. As litle Paul Act. ix. whē Christ had ouerthrowen him and caught him in hys net, asked saying: Lord what wilt thou that I do. And as the multitude that were cōuerted Act. ii. asked of the Apostles what they shoulde do. And the preacher setteth the lawe of God before them, and they offer their hartes to haue it written therein, consenting that it is good and righteous.

Actes. 9.

Actes. 2.

And because they haue runne cleane contrary vnto that good law, they sorrow & mourne, and because also their bodyes and flesh are otherwise disposed. But the preacher comforteth them and sheweth thē the testamēt of Christes blond, how that for his sake all ỳ is done is forgeuē, and all their weaknes shalbe taken in worth vntil they be stronger, onely if they repent & wyll submit themselues to be scholers and learne to keepe this law. And a litle flocke receaueth thys testament in hys hart, and in it walketh & serueth God, in the spirit. And from henceforth all is Christ wyth hym, and Christ is his, & he is Christes. All that he receaueth, he receaueth of Christ, and all that he doth, he doth to Christ. Father, mother, maister, Lord and Prince, are Christes vnto hym, and as Christ he serueth them wyth all loue. Hys wife, children, seruauntes and subiectes are Christ vnto hym, and he teacheth them to serue Christ and not hymselfe and hys lustes. And if he receaue any good thyng of mā, he thāketh god in Christ, which moued the mans hart. And his neighbour he serueth as Christ in all hys neede, of such thynges as God hath lent, because that all degrees are bought as he is, with Christes bloud.

Christ only is the perfect cōforter of the Christian.

The Christian mā in all thinges seketh the honour of Christ.

And he wil not be saued, for scrning hys brethrē, neither promiseth his brethren heauē for seruyng hym. But heauen, iustifying, forgeuenes, all gyftes of grace, and all that is promised them they receaue of Christ and by hys merites freely. And of ỳ which they haue receaued of Christ they serue ech other freely as one hand doth the other, seekyng for their seruice no more thē one hand doth of an other ech the others health, wealth, helpe ayde, succour, & to assiste one an other in the way of Christ. And God they serue in the spirit only, in loue, hope, faith and dread.

The Christian seketh his saluatiō onely in Christ.

When the great multitude that be called and not chosen, Cain, Ismaell, Esau & carnall Israell that serue God night and day wyth bodely seruice and holy workes, such as they were wont to serue their Idoles withall, beholde little flocke that they come not forth in the seruice of god, they roze out, where art thou? why commest thou not forth and takest holy water? wherfore saith ỳ litle flock. To put away thy sinnes. Nay brethrē, god forbid that ye should so thinke, Christes blond onely washeth away the sinnes of all that repent and beleue. Fire, salt, water, bread, & oyle be bodely thynges, geuen vnto man for his necessitie and to helpe hys brother wyth, and God that is a spirit cannot be serued therwyth. Neyther can such thynges enter into the soule to purge her. For Gods worde onely is her purgation. No say they, are not such thynges halowed. And say we not in the halowing of them that who soeuer is sprinkled wyth the water, or eateth of the bread shall receaue health of soule and body? Sir the blessinges promised vnto Abraham for all nations are in Christ, and out of his bloud we must fet them, and his word is the bread, salt, & water of our soules. God hath geuē you no power to geue thorow your charmes such vertue vnto vnsēsible creatures, which he hath halowed himselfe & made them all cleane (for the bodely vse of them that beleue) thorow his word of promise and permission and our thankes geuing. God sayth, if thou beleue Saint Iohns gospell thou shalt be saued, and not for ỳ bearyng of it about thee with so many crosses, or for the obseruing of any such obseruaunces.

The Popish church answereth.

The little flocke.

God for thy bitter passion roze they out by & by, what an hereticke is this? I tel thee that holy church neede to alleadge no scripture for them, for they haue the holy Ghost which inspireth thē euer secretly, so ỳ they can not erre whatsoeuer they, say, do, or ordayne. what wilt thou dispise the diuelish Sacramentes of holy church wherewyth God hath bene serued this xv. hundred yeare (ye verely this v. thousād yeres, euen since Cain hetherto, and shall endure vnto the worldes end, among thē that haue no loue vnto the truth to be saued thereby) thou art a strong hereticke and worthy to be burnt. And thē he is excommunicat out of the church. If ỳ little flocke feare not that bugge, then they got straight vnto the king.

The Popes church

And

Ye pretye Antithesis between the Popes Churche & Christes litle flocke.

And it like your grace, perilous people and seditious, and euen inough to destroy your realme, if ye see not to them betimes. They be so obstinat & tough, that they will not be conuerted, and rebellious agaynst God and the ordinaunces of hys holy church. And how much more shal they so be against your grace, if they encrease and grow to a multitude. They will peruert all, and surely make new lawes, and eyther subdue your grace vnto them, or ryse agaynst you. And thē goeth a part of ỹ little flocke to pot, and the rest scatter. Thus hath it euer bene and shall euer be, let no man therefore deceaue hymselfe.

The maner of ỹ Popes clergie.

Little flock goeth euer to wracke.

An aunswere to M. Mores second booke.

IN the first Chapter ye may not try the doctrine of the spiritualtie by the Scripture: But what they say, that beleue vndoubtedly and by that try the Scripture. And if thou finde the playne contrary in the Scripture, thou mayst not beleue the Scripture, but seke a Glose and an allegorie to make them agree. As whē the pope sayth, ye be iustified by the woorkes of the ceremonies and Sacramentes and so forth, and the Scripture sayth, that we be iustified at the repentaūce of the hart through Christes bloud. The first is true playne, as the pope sayth it and as it standeth in his text, but the secōd is false as it appeareth vnto thine vnderstandyng and the literall sence that killeth. Thou must therfore beleue the Pope and for Christes doctrine seeke an allegorie and a mysticall sence: that is, thou must leaue the cleare light and walke in the miste. And yet Christ and his Apostles for all their miracles required not to be beleued without scripture, as thou mayst see John. v. and Act. xvij. and by their diligent alledgyng of Scripture through out all the new Testament.

The Pope will not be tryed by scripture but ỹ scripture must be iudged by hym.

☞ Iohn. 5.

And in the end he sayth for his pleasure, that we knowledge, that no man may minister Sacraméts but he that is deriued out of the Pope. Howbeit this we knowledge, that no man could minister Sacramentes without signification which are no Sacramentes, saue such as are of the Popes generation.

None can minister the Sacramentes superstitiously but the Popes generation.

The iij. Chapter.

IN the third Chapter & in the Chapter folowyng, he vttereth how fleshly mynded he is, and how beastly he imagineth of God, as Paule sayth. 1. Cor. 2. the naturall man can not vnderstand the thyngs of the spirite of God. He thinketh of God, as he doth of hys Cardinall, that he is a monster, pleased when men flatter him, & if of whatsoeuer frailtie it be, men breake his cōmaundementes, he is thē ragyng mad as the Pope is & seketh to be venged. Nay, God is euer fatherly minded toward the elect mēbers of his Church. He loued them yer the world began, in Christ. Ephe. 1. He loueth thē, while they be yet euill & his enemies in their hartes, yer they be come vnto ỹ knowledge of his sonne Christ, and yer his law be written in their hartes: as a father loueth his young sonne, while he is yet euill & yer it know the fathers law to consent therto.

1. Cor. 2.

The naturall & carnall man sauoreth not the things that be of God.

Rom. 5.

God is fatherly to his elect members.

And after they be once actually of his Church and the law of God & faith of Christ written in their hartes, their hartes neuer sinne any more, though as Paul sayth. Rom. vij. the flesh doth in them that the spirit would not. And when they sinne of frailtie, God ceaseth not to loue them still, though he be angry, to put a crosse of tribulatiōs vpon their backes, to purge them and to subdue the flesh vnto the spirite or to all to breake their consciences with threatnyng of the law and to feare thē with hell. As a father when his sonne offēdeth him feareth him with the rod, but hateth him not.

Rom. 7.

If we sinne of frailtie God is merciful & ready to forgeue.

God did not hate Paule, when he persecuted, but had layd vp mercy for hym in store, though he was angry with him to scourge him and to teach him better. Neither were those things layd on his backe which he after suffered, to make satisfaction for his foresinnes, but onely to serue his brethren and to keepe the flesh vnder. Neither did God hate Dauid when he had sinned, though he was angry with hym. Neither did he after suffer to make satisfactiō to God for his old sinnes, but to kepe his flesh vnder & to keepe him in mekenesse and to be an example for our learnyng.

The newe life doth tame the flesh and serue her neighbour.

The iiij. Chapter.

IN the fourth sayth he if the Churche were an vnknowē cōpany, how should the infidels, if they longed for the fayth,

God seketh vs and we not hym.

come thereby? O whether wandereth a fleshly mynde, as though we first sought out God. Nay, God knoweth his and seketh them out & lendeth his messengers vnto them & geueth them an hart to vnderstand. Did the heathē or any nation seke Christ? Nay, Christ sought them and sent his Apostles vnto them. As thou seest in the storyes from the begynnyng of the world and as the parables and similitudes of the Gospell declare.

More a lying papist.

And when he sayth, he neuer founde nor heard of any of vs, but that he would forsweare to saue his lyfe. Aunswere, the more wrath of God wil light on them, that so cruelly delite to torment them and so craftely to beguile the weake. Neuertheless yet it is vntrue. For he hath heard of Sir Thomas Hitton whō the Bysshops of Rochester and Caunterbury slew at Maydstone and of many ỳ suffered in Brabant, Holand, & at Colen and in all quarters of Dutchland and do dayly.

Sir Thomas Hitton.

The Pope hath no martyrs.

And when he sayth that their Church hath many Martyrs, let hym shewe me one, that dyed for pardons, and purgatory that the Pope hath fayned, and let him take the maistrie.

And what a do maketh he, that we say, there is a Church that sinneth not & that there is no man but that he sinneth, whiche are yet both true. We read. i. Iohn. iij. he that is borne of God sinneth not. And Ephes. v. men loue your wiues as the Lord doth the Churche, and gaue him selfe for her, to sanctifie her and to clense her in the fountaine of water through the word, and to make her a glorious Church vnto hym selfe, without spot or wrincle.

1. Iohn. 3.

There is a church that sinneth not.

And i. Iohn. i. If we say, we haue no sinne we deceaue our selues and make him a lyer and hys word is not in vs. M. More also wil not vnderstand that the Church is some time taken for the elect onely whiche haue the law of God written in their hartes & sayth to be saued through Christ written there also. which same for all that say with Paule, that good which I would, that do I not. But that euill which I hate, that do I: so it is not I that do it, but sinne that dwelleth in my flesh.

The church is double.

Gal. 5.

And Gala. v. the flesh lusteth cōtrary to ỳ spirit & the spirit cōtrary to ỳ flesh, so that these two fightyng betwene thē selues, ye can not do what ye would. For they neuer consent that sinne is good nor hate ỳ law nor cease to fight against the flesh, but assoone as they be fallen, rise and fight a fresh. And that the Church is some tyme taken for the cōmō rascal of all that beleue, whether with the mouth onely & carnally without spirite neither louyng the law in their harts, nor seclyng the mercy that is in Christ, but either runne all together at riot or keepe the law with cautels and expositions of their owne faynyng and yet not of loue but for feare of hell, as the theues do for feare of the galowes, & make recompence to God for their sinnes with holy dedes.

The carnall church sinneth.

Two maner faithes.

He also will not vnderstand, that there be two maner faythes: one, that is the fayth of the elect, which purgeth them of all their sinnes for euer. As ye see Iohn. xv. ye be cleane sayth Christ, by the reason of the word: that is, thorough beleuyng Christs doctrine. And Iohn. i. he gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, through beleuyng in his name. And Iohn. iij. he that beleueth thē sonne hath euerlastyng lyfe, & a thousand like textes.

Iohn. 15.

The faith of them that be called, but not elect.

And an other of them that be called and neuer elected. As the faith of Iudas, of Symon Magus, of the deuill, and of the Pope. In whose hartes the law of God is not written, as it appeareth by their workes. And therfore when they beleue many thynges of Christ, yet whē they come vnto the salnation that is in his bloud, they be but Iewes and Turkes & forsake Christ and runne vnto the iustifying of ceremonies with the Iewes & Turkes. And therefore they remayne euer in sinne within in their hartes.

Where the elect hauing the law written in their brestes & leuyng it in theyr spirites, sinne there neuer, but without in the flesh. Agaynst whiche sinne they fight continually and minishe it dayly with the helpe of the spirite, thorough prayer, fasting and seruing their neighbours louyngly with all maner seruice, out of the law that is writtē in their harts. And their hope of forgeuenesse is in Christ onely, through his bloud and not in ceremonies.

The v. Chapter.

The Pope hideth the scripture.

AND vnto hys v. Chapter I answere, by the Pope the scripture is hid and brought into ignorance, & the true sence corrupt. And by thē that ye call heretickes we know the scripture and the true sence thereof. And I say, that the Pope keepeth the scripture as did ỳ Pharisees, to make marchaundise of it. And agayne, that the here-

heretickes become out of you, as out of the Scribes and Phariſeis came the Apoſtles and Chriſt himſelfe & Johñ Baptiſt, and that they be plucked out of you and graffed in Chriſt and built vppon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophetes.

The heretikes be fallen out of the miſt.

And in the end, when he ſayth that the heretickes be fallen out of Chriſtes miſticall body, which is the Pope and hys. I aunſwere that ye be a miſticall body, and walke in the miſt and wyll not come at the light, and the heretikes be departed out of your miſt, and walke in the cleare light of Gods worde.

The vj. Chapter.

IN the vj. he ſayth that the heretikes be all nought, for they all periure and abiure. He yet ſaith vntrue. Many abyde vnto the death. Many for theyr weakeneſſe are kept out of your hãds. Many for their ouer much boldneſſe in their owne ſtrength be delyuered into your handes and fall in the fleſhe, their hartes abiding ſtill in the truth, as Peter and thouſandes did, & after repent and be no leſſe Chriſten thẽ before, though ye haue them in derision vnto your owne damnation. And many becauſe they come to Chriſt for fleſhly liberty and not for loue of the truth, fall as it becommeth them vnder your handes: as Judas and Balam, which at the beginning take Chriſtes parte, but afterward when they fynde eyther loſſe or no vauntage, they get them vnto the contrary part, and are by profeſſion the moſt cruell enemyes, and ſubtelleſt perſecuters of the truth. Looke Maiſter More and reade and marke well.

Why many fall.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the vij. he ſayth, that he hath holy Saintes and holy counſels on hys ſide. Name the Saintes & proue it. Name the counſelles and the holy Prelates thereof. Thou ſhalt ſhew me none other Popes or Cardinals, then ſuch as we haue now, that will obey neyther God nor mã, or any law made by God or man: but compell all men to follow them, ſtrengthning their kyngdome wyth the multitude of all miſdoers.

Counſels.

He ſayth alſo that good and bad worſhip Saintes, the good well and the bad euill How cõmeth it then that ye ſhew not the difference, and teach to do it well? I ſee but one faſhion among all the popiſhe.

And finally he ſayth, he is not bound to anſwere vnto the reaſons and ſcriptures that are layde agaynſt them. It is inough to proue their part, that it is a common cuſtome, and that ſuch a multitude do it, and ſo by his doctrine the Turkes are in the right way.

The viij. Chapter.

IN the viij. he ſayth, the Saintes be more charitable now then when they liued. I anſwere, Abrahã was while he lyued as charitable as the beſt. And yet dead, he anſwered hym that prayed to hym, they haue Moſes and ỹ Prophetes, let them heare them. And ſo haue we, not Moſes and the prophets onely, but a more cleare light, euen Chriſt and the Apoſtles, vnto which if we harken, we be Saintes already.

Saintes.

Luke. 16.

And to proue that they in heauen be better then we in earth, he alleageth a text of our Sauiour Luke. vij. that the worſt in heauen is better then Ihon Baptiſt. Now ỹ text is, he that is leſſe in the kingdome of God is greater thẽ he. We that beleue are Gods kyngdome. And he that is leaſt (in doyng ſeruice vnto hys brethren) is euer the greateſt after the doctrine of Chriſt. Now Chriſt was leſſe then Jhon, and therfore greater then he. And by theyr owne doctrine, there was no Sainte in heauen before the reſurrection of Chriſt, but what care they what they ſay, blynded wyth theyr owne ſophiſtrye.

Luke. 7.

Chriſt dyd ſuch ſeruice as all the Saintes could not do.

Moreouer curſed is he that truſteth in ought ſaue God ſayth the text, and therfore the Saintes would haue no man to truſt in them whyle they were aliue. As Paule ſayth 1. Cor. 3. what is Paule ſaue your ſeruaunt to preach Chriſt. Did Paule dye for you? were ye baptiſed in the name of Paule? Did I not marry you to Chriſt to put your truſt in hym? And agayne, let no man reioyce or truſt in man, ſayth he. For all are youres, whether Paule, or Appollo, or Cephas: whether the world, life, death, preſent thynges, or thynges to come: all are youres, and ye are Chriſtes, and Chriſt is Gods. If my fayth be ſtedfaſt in the promiſes that I haue in Chriſtes bloud, I neede but to pray my father in Chriſtes name, and he ſhall ſend me a legion of Angels to helpe me: ſo that my fayth is Lord ouer the Angels and ouer all creatures to turne them vnto my ſoules health and my fathers honour, and may be ſubiect vnto no creature, but vnto

1. Cor. 3.

We may not truſt to Saintes.

Gods woorde in our Sauiour Chriſt onely. I may haue no truſt therefore in the Saintes. If ye ſay, ye put no truſt in them, but onely put them in remembraunce of their dutie, as a man deſireth his neighbour to pray for him, remembring hym of hys dutie, and as when we deſire our brethren to helpe vs at our neede. That is falſe, for ye put truſt in all your ceremonies & all your holy deedes, and in whoſoeuer diſguiſeth hymſelfe and altereth hys coat from the common faſhion, ye and euen in the coates of them that be not yet Saintes, after your doctrine.

If a prieſt ſayd maſſe in his gowne, would ye not riſe againſt hym and ſlea hym, and that for the falſe fayth that ye haue in the other garmētes. For what honour can thoſe other garmentes do to God more then hys gowne or profite vnto your ſoules, ſeyng ye vnderſtand nought thereby? And therto in the collectes of Saintes ye ſay, ſaue me God and geue me euerlaſtyng lyfe for the merites of thys or that Saint, euery man after his phantaſie, chuſing hym one Saint ſingularly to be ſaued by. wyth which collectes I pray you ſhew me, how ſtandeth the death of Chriſt: Paule woulde ſay that Chriſt dyed in vayne if that doctrine were true.

Prayer to Saintes is a great ſuperſtition.

And therto in as much as ye ſay, the Saintes merite or deſerue not in heauen, but in this worlde onely, it is to be feared leaſt their merites be ſore waſted, and the deſeruynges of many all ſpent thorowe our holy fathers ſo great liberalitie.

Before Chriſt we vſed not to pray to Saintes.

Abraham and the Prophetes, and ỹ Apoſtles, and many ſince prayed to no Saintes, and yet were holy inough.

And when he ſayth, they could helpe when they were aliue. That was thorow their fayth in beleuing the promiſe. For they had promiſes that they ſhuld do ſuch miracles to ſtablish their doctrine, and to prouoke vnto Chriſt, and not vnto them ſelues.

And whē he proueth that ỹ Saintes be in heauen in glory wyth Chriſt already, ſaying: if God be their God they be in heauē, for he is not the God of the dead. There he ſtealeth away Chriſtes argument wherewyth he proueth the reſurrection, that Abraham and all Saintes ſhoulde riſe agayne, and not that their ſoules were in heauē, which doctrine was not yet in the worlde. And wyth that doctrine he taketh away the reſurrection quite, and maketh Chriſtes argumēt of none effect. For when Chriſt alleageth the Scripture that God is Abrahams God, & addeth to, that God is not God of the dead but of the liuing, and ſo proueth that Abraham muſt riſe agayne: I deny Chriſtes argument and ſay wyth M. More, that Abraham is yet aliue, not becauſe of the reſurrection, but becauſe hys ſoule is in heauē. And in like maner Paules argument vnto the Corinthians is nought worth. For when he ſayth, if there be no reſurrection, we be of all wretches the miſerableſt. Here we haue no pleaſure, but ſorrow, care, and oppreſſion. And therfore if we riſe not agayne, all our ſuffering is in vayne. May Paul, thou art vnlearned: go to Maiſter More and learne a new way. we be not moſt miſerable, though we ryſe not agayne, for our ſoules go to heauen aſſoone as we be dead, and are there in as great ioy as Chriſt that is riſē againe. And I marueil that Paule had not comforted the Theſſalonians wyth that doctrine, if he had wiſt it, that the ſoules of their dead had bene in ioy, as he did wyth the reſurrection, that their dead ſhould riſe agayne. If the ſoules be in heauen in as great glorie as the aungels after your doctrine, ſhewe me what cauſe ſhould be of the reſurrection.

Mat. 22.

1. Cor. 15.

1. Theſ. 4.

M. More deſtroyeth the reſurrection.

And when hee ſayth, Whether the Saintes do it them ſelues, or by interceſſion made to God, it maketh no matter, ſo we be holpe, it appeareth by his doctrine, that all is good that helpeth, though a man pray vnto the deuill, by whom many be holpe. Now in Chriſt we haue promiſes of all maner helpe & not in them. where then is our faith to be holpe by Chriſt when we hope to be holpe by the merites of Saintes: So it appeareth that the more truſt we haue in Saintes, the leſſe we haue in Chriſt.

The more truſt we haue in Saintes, the leſſe we haue in Chriſt.

And whē he bringeth in a ſimilitude that we pray Phiſitions, though God can helpe vs, and therefore we muſt pray to Saintes. It is not like, for they haue naturall remedies for vs which we muſt vſe & not tempt God. But the Saints haue no natural remedies nor promiſe of ſupernaturall. And therfore it can be but a falſe ſuperſtitious fayth. And where no natural remedy is there god hath promiſed to helpe thē that beleue in hym,

Phiſitions

And moreouer when I pray a Phiſition or Surgion and truſt to be holpe by them, I diſhonour God, except I

firſt

first pray to God & beleue that he will worke with their doctrine and medicines and so receaue mine health of the hand of God. And euen so whē I pray to man, to helpe me at myne neede, I sinne except I complayne first to God and shew him my nede and desire hym to moue one or an other to helpe me, & then whē I am holpe, thanke him and receaue it of his hand, in as much as hee moued the hart of hym that holpe me & gaue him wherewith, and a commaundement to do it. M. More, Christ is not dishonoured because that they which here preach hym truly, shall sit and iudge with hym. Tyndale. That to be true ẏ Scripture testifieth, but what is that to your purpose that they whiche be dead can heare vs & helpe vs? Howbeit, if M. More should describe vs those sectes, I am sure he would paint them after the fashion of my Lord Cardinals holy chaire, as he doth God after the similitude of worldly tyraunts and not accordyng to his owne word. For they that be worldly and fleshly mynded can but fleshly imagine of God all together lyke vnto the similitude of worldely thynges.

We must first call vpon God, & then sende for the physition.

The fleshly mynded cānot iudge the thinges that be of God.

M. More. The Apostles and Saintes were prayed so when they were aliue and God not dishonoured. Tynd. What helpeth that your carnal purpose. I haue aunswered you vnto that & many thinges mo in the obediēce and other places agaynst whiche ye reply not, but keepe your tune and vnto all thyng syng kokow, kokow, we be the Church & can not erre. The Apostles had Gods word for all that they byd and ye none. And yet many dishonoured God and Christ for their false trust & confidence whiche they had in ẏ Apostles as thou mayst see by Paul to the Corinthians.

1. Cor. 3.

Then he breaketh forth into open blasphemy and sayth that it behoueth vs to pray vnto Saints and that God will els not heare vs, for our presumptuous malapertenesse. So it is now presumptuous malapertenesse to trust in Gods word and to beleue that God is true. Paule teacheth vs to be bolde to goe vnto God & sheweth vs good cause in Christ, why we so may & that God would so haue vs. Neither is there any cause to kepe vs backe, saue that we loue him not nor trust him. If a man say, our sinne should keepe vs backe. I say if we repent and beleue in Christ, Christ hath taken them away and therfore through hym we may be bolde. And Christ sayd at his last Supper Iohn. xvi. I say not that I will pray for you vnto my father, for my father loueth you. As who should say, be not afrayed nor stād without the dores as a dastard: but be bolde & go into my father your selues in my name, & shew your complaynte, for he now loueth you, because ye loue my doctrine. And Paul sayth Ephe. ij. we haue all an opē way in through him, and are now no more forenners or straungers but of ẏ houshold of God. Of God therfore we be bold as of a most louyng and mercifull father, aboue all the mercy of fathers. And of our Sauiour Iesus we be bold, as of a thyng that is our owne and more our owne then our owne skinnes, and a thyng that is so soft and gentle, that lade we him neuer so much with our sinnes, he can not be angry nor cast them from of his backe, so we repent and will amende. But M. More hath an other doctrine to driue vs frō God and to make vs tremble and be afferde of him.

Ioh. 16.

Ephes. 2.

We may be bolde to resort to god, for he willeth vs so to do.

Boye driueth from God.

He likeneth God to worldly tyraunte, at whom no man may come, saue a few flatterers whiche minister vnto them all voluptuousnesse & serue their lustes at all poinctes which flatterers must first be corrupt with giftes, yet a man may come at the kyng. Thē hee sayth, a man may pray to euery dead man. That me thinketh should be agaynst the Popes doctrine and profite also. For he will haue no man prayed to vntill he haue cāneled him, I would say, canonised hym, and till God or at the lest way the deuill haue shewed miracles for him.

Heb. 4.

M. More is against the Popes profite.

Then he bringeth how one that was dead and in the inuisible purgatory holpe an other that was alyue and in the visible Purgatory. This is a straunge case, that a man there may helpe an other & not him selfe. And a more straūge case that God heareth a man here for hym selfe, beyng in his owne Purgatory and helpeth him cleane out, or casteth him if it be to lore. But and he be in the Popes Purgatory God wil not heare him for him selfe, and that because the Pope might haue somewhat to deliuer hym. And the straungest case of al is that the Pope is almighty there and God can do there nought at all as the Pope can not here in this Purgatory. But because this is not Gods word nor lyke Gods doctrine, I thinke it no damnable sinne to beleue it Doctrie.

Purgatory

I purgatory visible, and a purgatory inuisible.

Then how ye may pray for them and to them, till they be canonised: and whē they

Canonising

they be canonised, but to them onely, for then ye be sure that they bee in heauen.

How you may know who be Saintes in heauen.

By what token? I may be as sure by ỹ canonising, as I am that all the Byshops which the Pope confirmeth, be holy men, and all the Doctours that he maketh well learned, and that all the Priests which he annoynteth haue the holy ghost. If ye say, because of the miracles, then do men wrong to pray for kyng Henry of Windsore at Cambridge and Eton. For he, as men say doth miracles. And also if the miracles certifie vs, what nedeth to buy the Popes canonising?

King Henry of Windsore.

The ix. Chapter.

A straunge doctrine to pray to him for helpe that is dead & damned.

IN the ix. he putteth no ieopardy to pray to him that is dãned and to sticke vp a candle to him, nor I trow vnto the deuill thereto, if hee might haue a vauntage by him.

Then he maketh no ieopardy to do and beleue what soeuer an open multitude called Gods Church doth and beleueth. For God will haue an open Church that can not erre. For sayth he, when the Israelites fell to Idolatry, the true church remained in Hierusalé among the Iewes. First I say, if a man had no better vnderstanding then M. Mores doctrine, he could not know whether were ỹ true Church, the Iewes or the Israelites.

The Israelites were mo in number thẽ the Iewes.

For the Israelites were in number v. tymes moe then the Iewes and worshypped God, though as present in the Image of a Calfe, as ỹ Iewes for the most part, present in the Arcke of testimonie. And secondarely he sayth false. For the Iewes were fallen into open Idolatrie a thousand tymes worse thẽ the Israelites, euen in their very tẽple, as it appeareth by open stories and by the Prophetes: so that for their open Idolatrie, whiche they would for no preachyng of the Prophetes amende, their Priestes therto resistyng the Prophetes and encouragyng the people in their wickednesse, God sent them captiue out of the land. Yea and the people erred in folowing the Scribes and Phariseis & the open multitude called Gods Church, at ỹ cõmyng of Christ, as it is to see in the Gospell, contrary vnto M. Mores deceitfull Poetry. And agayn, God reserued hym a litle flocke euer in Israell and had euer Prophets there, some time openly and some time in persecution, that euery man must hide hym selfe and keepe hys fayth secret: and euen in the houses of the euill kynges both of Iewry and also of Israell he had good people, and that among the hyghe officers, but secretly, as Nicodemus among the Phariseis. So that the very Churche was euery where ofttymes in captiuitie and persecution vnder their brethren, as we bee vnder ours in the kyngdome of the Pope.

The Iewes committed Idolatry.

God euer reserueth a litle flocke.

Then he putteth no ieopardy to worshipp an vnconsecrated hoste. But with what worshyp men should woorshyp the consecrated doth he not teach, neither the vse of that Sacrament or any other, nor how ought may be worshipped but teacheth onely that all thynges may be worshypped, and sheweth not the right worshyp from the false.

Woze teacheth not to worshyp an vnconsecrated hoste.

Then he noteth Paul. 1. Cor. 1. how he exhorteth vs to agree onely, but not on the truth or on the good, but onely to agree a great multitude together. O this deepe blindnesse. Dyd not Paule first teach them the true way? And did hee not instruct them a new in the true way and in the said Epistle rebuke the false confidence that they had in men, the cause of all their dissention' and all errours that were among them?

1. Cor. 1.

We must first know the true way & then agree in the same.

Then he sayth, the Iewes had Saintes in honour, as the Patriarkes and Prophetes. We teach to dishonour none: But the Iewes prayed to none.

More. Christ rebuked not the Phariseis for garnishyng the sepulchres of the Prophetes but for that they folowed the cõditions of thé that slew them. Tyndale. Yes and for their false trust in suche woorkes as we do you. And ye Syr thinke that ye deserue heauen in worshyppyng the Saintes bones, and be as ready to slea them that beleue, teach and lyue as the Saintes dyd, as your fathers were to slea thẽ: besides that ye worshyp Saintes that folowed Christ after the example of your holy Cardinall, of whom I doubt not but that ye will make a God in processe of tyme also.

Christ rebuked the false trust the Iewes had in their owl woorks.

Then repeateth he for forgettyng, how Eliseus bones raised vp a dead body That was to confirme his preachyng onely. For the Israelites, as wicked as they were, neither prayed to hym, neither kissed his bones, nor offered nor sticked vppe candels before hym. Whiche thyng if they had done in the kyngdõe of ỹ Iewes, I doubt not but that some good kyng wold haue burnt his bones to ashes, as wel as the brasen Serpent, that was as great a relique as dead bones. And Christ shewed

The myracles done by the prophetes and Apostles. was to cõfirme their doctrine.

ed miracles at the findyng of the crosse. That was to stablish the faith of Christes death and that it should be a memory of his death, & not that we shuld trust in the wood as we do. For which false abuse, ỳ whole land where Christ dyd his miracles, is destroyed.

Christ made the woman whole and not hys coate.

Then he alledgeth the woman that was healed, through touching of Christes coate, because we should worshyppe it. when Christ sayd her fayth hath made her whole, not in the coate, but in Christ.

Miracles were done for the confirmation of doctrine.

And the miracle was shewed, to prouoke to the worshyppyng of the preachyng and not of the coate. Though to kepe the coate reuerently in the memoriall of the deede, to prouoke vnto the fayth of Christ were not euill of it selfe. And Paule by your doctrine, sent hys napkin to heale ỳ sicke, that mẽ should shrine his sneueled napkin, and not to beleue his preachyng.

The x. Chapter.

A filthy chapter.

The x. chapter of Saint Walary is meete for the auctor, and his worshipfull doctrine.

The xi. Chapter.

Latria.

In the xi. he iuggleth wyth thys misticall terme Latria. I answere God is no vayne name, but signifieth one that is almighty, all mercifull, all true and good, which he that beleueth will goe to God, to hys promises and Testament, and not follow his owne imaginations, as M. Mores doctrine teacheth.

He sayth, that bodely seruice is not Latria. No but bodely seruice done & referred vnto hym which is a spirite, is Idololatria.

Moses.

Moses bones.

The brasen Serpent.

He trusteth, that men know the Image from the Saint. I aske M. More why God did hide Moses body & diuers other. The Iewes would haue knowen ỳ Moses had not bene God, and that Moses bones had not bene Moses. And they knew that the brasē serpent was not God, and that ỳ golden calues were not God, & that wod and stone were not God. But yet there is euer a false imagination by. The world because they can not worship God in the spirite, to repent of euill and to loue the lawe, and to beleue that he wyll helpe at al neede, therfore runne they vnto their owne imaginations, and thinke that God for such seruice as they do to Images, will fulfill their worldly desires: for godly cã they nought desire. Now God is a spirite and wilbe worshipped in hys worde onely which is spirituall, and wil haue no bodely seruice. And the ceremonies of the olde law he set vp, to signifie his word onely, and to keepe the people in mynde of hys testament. So that he which obserueth any ceremony of any other purpose is an Idolater, that is, an Image seruer.

God is a spirite and wilbe worshipped spiritually.

And when he sayth, if men aske women whether it were our Lady of Walsingam or Ipswich that was saluted of Gabriel, or that stoode by Christ when he hung on the crosse, they wyll say neyther nother. Then I aske hym what meaneth it that they say, our Lady of walsingam pray for me, our Lady of Ipswich pray for me, our Lady of wilsdõ pray for me, in so much ỳ some which recken thẽselues no small fooles, make them roules of halfe an houre long, to pray after that maner. And they that so pray, thou mayst be sure, meane our Lady that stoode by the crosse, and her that was saluted therto.

The Idolatrous persõ worshippeth the Image for ỳ Saint.

Then he rehearseth many abuses, and how that womẽ sing songes of ribaudry in processions in cathedral churches, vnto which abhominatiõs yet our holy church that cãnot erre, cõsent wyth full delectatiõ. For on the one side they will not amende the abuse. And on the other side they haue hyred M. More to proue with his sophistry that ỳ things ought not to be put downe.

Processions, though they be abused may not be put downe.

Then he bringeth in how the wilde Irish and the Welch pray, when they go to steale. And asketh whether, because they abuse prayer, we should put all praying downe. May M. More, it is not like. Prayer is Gods commaundement, & where fayth is, there must prayer needes be & cannot be away. How be it, thynges that are but mens traditions and all indifferent thynges which we may be as well without as wyth, may well be put downe for their dishonouring of God, thorow ỳ abuse. We haue turned kissing in the Church into the Pax. we haue put downe watching all night in the church on saintes euẽs, for the abuse. And Ezechias brake the brasen serpẽt 4. King. 18. for the abuse. And euen so, such processions and the multitude of ceremonies, and of holydayes to, might as wel be put downe. And the ceremonies that be left would haue their significations put to them, and the people should be taught them.

Wilde Irishe.

Welch mẽ.

Many thinges are altered for the abuses sake.

Ezechias.

The true preaching of Gods worde remoueth theft and all other wickednes

And on the Sondayes Gods woorde woulde be truely preached. which if hys holy church would do, neyther the Irishe nor yet the welshe woulde so pray. By which praying and other like blyndnesse M. More may see, that buzsing in Latine on the holy dayes helpeth not the hartes of the people. And I wonder that M. More can laugh at it and not rather weepe for compassion, to see the soules for which Christ shed hys bloud to perish. And yet I beleue that your holy Church will not refuse at Easter to receaue ỹ tithes of all that such blynde people robbe, as well as they dispence wyth all false gottē good that is brought them, and wyll lay the ensample of Abraham and Melchisedeck for them.

The xii. Chapter.

In the xij. he alleageth that S. Hierome and Augustine prayed to Saints, and concludeth, that if any secte be one better then an other they be the best. I answere, though he coulde proue that they prayed to Saintes, yet coulde he not proue hymselfe thereby of the best sect nor that it were good therefore to pray to Saints. For first the Apostles, Patriarkes and Prophetes were sure to be folowed, which prayed to none. And agayne, a good man might erre in many thynges and not be damned, so that hys errour were not directly agaynst the promises that are in Christes bloud, neyther that he held them maliciously. As if I beleued that the soules were in heauē immediatly, and that they prayed for vs, as we do one for an other, and did beleue that they heard al that we spake or thought, and vppon that prayed to some Saint, to pray for me, to put hym in remēbrance onely, as I pray my neighbour, and without other trust or confidence, and though all be false, yet should I not be damned so lōg as I had no obstinacie therein, for the fayth that I haue in Christes bloud should swalow vp that errour, till I were better taught, but M. More should haue alleaged the places where they prayed vnto saintes.

A good mā may erre & yet not be dampned.

And then he alleageth agaynst hym selfe, that the miracles were wrought by God, to confirme hys doctrine and to testifie that the preacher there was a true messenger. But the myracles that confirme praying to Saintes, do not confirme Gods doctrine. But mans imaginations. For there was neuer man yet that came forth and sayd, loe, the soules of the Saintes that be dead be in heauen in ioy with Christ, and God wyll that ye pray vnto them. In token whereof I do this or that miracle.

The myracles of Saintes confirme mans imaginations.

And when he triumpheth a little after, as though all were wonne saying, if our olde holy doctours were false and their doctrine vntrue and their miracles fayned, let them come forth and do miracles themselues and proue ours fayned. Syr, ye haue no doctours that did myracles to stablishe your worshippyng of Images and so forth. Your doctrine is but the opinion of faythlesse people, which to cōfirme ỹ deuil hath wrought much subtiltie. And as for the myracles done at Saints graues and at the presence of reliques, as long as true myracles endured, and vntill the scripture was autentickly receaued, were done to confirme the preaching ỹ such Saints had preached while they were aliue. And therto the myracles which witches do, we confound not wyth other myracles, but wyth scripture we proue them not of God, but of the deuill, to stablishe a false fayth, & to leade from God, as your doctrine doth. And likewise where we can confound your false doctrine with autēticke & manifest scripture, there neede we to do no myracle. we bryng Gods testament cōfirmed wyth myracles for all that we do, & ye ought to require no more of vs.

There were no doctours neither Apostles that did myracles to establishe the worshipping of Images.

Witches.

where true doctrine is set forth, there needeth no myracle.

And in like maner do ye first geue vs autentycke scripture for your doctrine. If ye haue no scripture, come forth and preach your doctrine, and cōfirme it wyth a myracle. And then if we bring not autenticke scripture agaynst you or confounde your myracle wyth a greater, as Moses dyd the sorcerers of Egipt, we wyll beleue you.

Let ỹ Papistes for lacke of scriptures come forth and do miracles.

And when he speaketh of tryall of myracles, what do ye to trie your myracles, whether they be true or fayned. And besides that, Gods woꝛde which should be the triall ye refuse and do all that ye can to falsifie it.

Gods word is ỹ touchstone to trie myracles.

And when he speaketh of sectes of heretickes, I answere, that they which ye call heretickes, beleue all in one Christ, as the scripture teacheth, and ye in all saue Christ. And in your false doctrine of your owne fayning wythout scripture, ye haue as many sundry sectes as all Monkes and Fryers and students in diuinitie in all your vniuersities. For first yer ye come to diuinitie, ye be all taught to deny the saluation that is in Christ. And none of you teacheth an nother so much as the articles of your fayth. But follow almost most euery man a sundry doctour, & in ỹ scripture hys owne brayne, frampng it euer after the false opinions whiche he hath professed yer he come at it.

The sectes in ỹ popish church are almost innumerable.

Mahomets doctrine hath preuailed these viij. hundred yeares

And when he sayth that God would soone vtter fayned myracles. I answere, God hath had at all times one or another to improue yours wyth Gods woorde. And I aske whether Mahometes fayned myracles haue not preuayled viij. hundred yeares. And your abhominable deedes worse then the Turkes testifie that ye loue the truth lesse then they. And vnto them that loue not the truth hath God promysed by the mouth of Paule 2. Thess. 2. to send them aboundaunce and strength of false myracles, to stablishe them in lyes and to deceaue them and lead thē out of the way, so that they cannot but perishe for their vnkindnesse, that they loued not the truth to liue therafter, & to honour God in their members.

The cause of false miracles.

Where the Scripture is, there needeth no miracles.

And whē he sayth, the heretickes haue no miracles. I answer, they nede not, so long as they haue autentickescripture.

And when he sayth, God sheweth no myracles for the doctoures of the heretickes. No more he nedeth not, for all they preach is the scripture confirmed wyth myracles, and receaued many hundred yeares agoe. And therefore God nedeth not to shew myracles for them whyle they liue to strength their preaching. And to shew myracles for them when they be dead, to moue the people to pray to them and to put their trust in them as ye do in yours, were to make them Idoles & not Sauntes.

The preachers of the worde of God nede no miracles.

And when he speaketh of myracles done in their churches in tyme of persecution. I answere, those were not the miracles of your Churche but of them that beleued the Scripture and suffered for it, as ỹ heretickes do now. For ye had neuer persecution for your false doctrine, which ye haue brought in besides the Scripture, nor any that dyed for it: But ye persecute and slea, whosoeuer with Gods woorde doth rebuke it. And as for your owne miracles of which ye make your boast, ye haue fayned them so grosly throughout al your Legendes of Sauntes, that ye be now ashamed of them and would fayne bee rid of thē if ye wist how with honestie, and so would ye of a thousand thinges which ye haue fayned. And the cause why heretickes fayne no miracles as ye doe, is that they walke purely and entend no falsehead.

False doctrine was neuer persecuted.

The Papistes are ashamed of their Legendes of lyes.

And why the deuill doth none for them, is that they cleaue fast to Gods word whiche the deuill hateth and can do no miracles to further it, But to hinder it, as he doth with you. Read the stories of your Popes and Cardinals, & see whether the deuill hath not holpe them vnto their highe dignities. And looke whether your holy Bysshoppes come any otherwise vnto their promotions, then by seruing the deuil, in setting all Christendome at variaunce, in sheddyng bloud, in bringyng the common wealth to tyrāny and in teaching Christen Princes to rule more cruelly then did euer any heathen, cōtrary vnto the doctrine of Christ.

The deuill hath holpē Popes to their dignities.

And as for the Turkes and Sarasenes that ye speake of, I answere that they were Christē once, at the lest way for the most part. And because they had no loue vnto the truth to liue therafter as ye haue not, God did send them false miracles to cary them out of the right waye as ye be. And as for the Iewes, why they byde out, is onely because they haue set vp their own righteousnesse, as ye haue, and therfore can not admit the righteousnesse that is in Christes bloud, as ye can not, and as ye haue forsworne it.

The cause why the Turkes & Iewes can not come to to the truth

And when he sayth, in that they haue miracles and the heretickes none, it is a sure signe that they be the true Churche and the heretickes not. Had ye Gods word with your miracles and the heretickes doctrine were without, then it were true. But now because ye haue miracles without Gods word, to confirme your false imaginatiōs, and they whiche ye call heretickes haue Gods word cōfirmed with miracles, fiue hundred yeares together, it is a sure signe that they be the true church & ye not, in as much also as Christ saith, that ỹ deceauers shall come with miracles: ye & in his name therto, as ye do. For whē christ saith there shal come in my name ỹ shal say he him selfe is Christ, who is that saue your Pope, that wilbe Christes Vicare and yet maketh men to beleue in him selfe, in his Bulles & Calues skinnes and in what soeuer he listeth. And who be those false annoynted that shall come with miracles to deceane the elect if it were possible, saue your Pope with his gretiamus?

Popish doctrine nedeth miracles but Christes doctrine nedeth not now of miracles, for it was confirmed by Christ with myracles.

Math. 24.

The Pope commeth in Christes name with false miracles.

And when he repeteth his miracles, to proue that the olde holy Doctours were good men in the right belefe. I aunswere agayne, that the Doctours which planted Gods word watered it with miracles, while they were alyue,

The preachers of gods word confirmed the same with miracles whyle they were alyue.

And whē they were dead God shewed miracles at their graues, to confirme the same, as of Heliseus. And that continued till the Scripture was full receaued and autenticke. But ye can not shew, nor shal any Doctour which beyng alyue preached your false doctrine confirmyng it with miracles, as God doth his Scripture.

Then sayth hee, God had in the olde Testamēt good mē ful of miracles, whose liuing a man might be bold to folow, and whose, doctrine a man might beleue by reason of theyr miracles, and then iuggleth saying: if God should not so now in the new Testamēt haue Doctours with miracles to confirme their doctrine and liuynges, but contrarywise should bryng to passe or suffer to bee brought to passe with false miracles, that his church should take hypocrites for Saintes, which expounded the Scripture falsly, then should hee deceaue his Church and not haue his spirite present in his Church, to teach them all truth, as he promised them. I aunswere, God suffereth not his Church to be deceaued: But he suffereth the popes Church: because they haue no loue vnto the truth to lyue after the lawes of God, but consent vnto all iniquitie, as he suffered the Churche of Mahomet. Moreouer ỹ gift of miracles was not all way amōg the preachers in the old Testament. For Iohn Baptist did no miracle at all. The miracles were ceased long yer Christ. And as for you in the Popes kingdome had neuer mā that either confirmed Gods doctrine, or your owne with miracles. All your Saintes be first Saints when they be dead and then do first miracles, to confirme tithes and offeringes & the Poetrie which ye haue fayned, and not true doctrine. For to confirme what preachyng doth S. Thomas of Canterbury miracles: He preached neuer nor liued any other life then as our Cardinall, and for his mischiefe dyed a mischieuous death. And of our Cardinall, if we be not diligent, they will make a Saint also and make a greater relique of his shew then of the others.

God suffereth such as haue no loue to hys truth, to be deceaued with lying miracles.

Why the Pope fell.

In the Popish church all miracles are wrought by dead Saintes.

S. Thomas of Cāterbury.

Thomas de Aquino

And of your dead Saintes let vs take one for an example. Thomas de Aquino is a Saint full of miracles, as Friers tell. And his doctrine was, that our Lady was borne in original sinne. And Dunce doyng no miracle at all, because I suppose no man wotteth where he lyeth, improueth that with his sophistrie and affirmeth the contrary. And of the contrary hath the Pope, for the deuotiō of that the gray Friers gaue him, ye may well thinke, made an Article of the fayth.

Dunce.

And finally as for the miracles, they are to make a man astonied & to wonder and to draw him to heare the word earnestly, rather then to write it in his hart. For whosoeuer hath no other felyng of the law of God that it is good, then because of miracles, the same shall beleue in Christ, as did Symon Magus and Iudas: and as they that came out of Egypt with Moyses, and fell away at euery temptation, & shall haue good workes like vnto our Popes, bishops and Cardinals. And therfore when the Scripture is fully receaued, there is no nede of miracles. In so much that they which will not beleue Moses and the Prophetes when the Scripture is receaued, the same wilbe no true beleuers by the reason of miracles, though one arose from death to lyfe to preach vnto them by the testimonie of Christ.

Miracles.

Our fayth may not be grounded onely vpon miracles, but vpon the worde of God.

And agayne, how doth S. Hierome, Augustine, Bede and many other old Doctours that were before the Pope was cropt vp into ỹ consciences of mē and had sent forth his dānable sectes, to preach him vnder ỹ name of Christ, as Christ prophesied it should be, expounde this text, thou art Peter and vppon this rocke I will builde my Church, and this text, Peter feede my sheepe, and all power is geuen me in heauen and in earth, and innumerable such textes cleane contrary vnto all those new old holy doctours that haue made the Pope a God? They knew of no power that man should haue in the kyngdome of Christ, but to preache Christ truly. They knew of no power that the Pope shoulde haue to send to Purgatory or to deliuer thence, neither of any Pardons nor of any such confession as they preach and teach, neither were many that are articles with you, Articles of their faith. They all preached forgeuenesse of sinnes thorough repentaunce toward the law and fayth in our Sauiour Christ, as all the Scripture playnly doth and can no otherwise be taken, and as all the hartes of as many as loue the law of God, do fele, as surely as the finger feeleth the fyre hoate.

Math. 16.

Iohn. 21.

The Apostles of Christe knew no such authoritie as the Pope now vsurpeth.

An aunswere vnto Master Mores third booke.

In

IN his third boke he proceedeth forth as before to proue that the opinions which the Popish teach without Scripture are of equal authoritie with the Scripture. He asketh what if there had neuer bene Scripture written? I answere, God careth for his elect & therfore hath prouided them of Scripture, to trie all thynges and to defend them from all false Prophetes. And I say moreouer that if there had ben no scripture written, that God for his mercy & fatherly loue and care toward his elect must haue prouided, that there should neuer haue bene heresies or against all tymes when sectes should arise, haue styrred vp preachers to cõfound the heresies with miracles. Take this example, the Grekes haue the Scripture & serue God therin much more diligently thẽ we. Now let vs geue that there were no Scripture, but that we receaued all our fayth by ỹ authoritie of our elders, & the Grekes by ỹ authoritie of their elders. whẽ I shall dispute with a Greke about the articles of the fayth which my elders taught me and his elders deny, as eareconfession, the holy pardons of the Pope and all his power that he hath aboue other Bishops & many other thynges beside the Scripture which we hold for articles of our faith & they deny. If there be no other proofe of either part, then to say, my elders which cã not erre so affirme, & that he should aunswere, his Elders which can not not erre so deny, what reason is it, that I should leaue the authoritie of my elders and goe & beleue his, or that he should leaue the authoritie of his elders and come and beleue myne: none at all verely. But the one partie must shew a miracle or els we must referre our causes vnto autẽticke scripture receaued in olde tyme, & confirmed wyth myracles, and therewith trie the controuersie of our Elders.

What if there had bene no scripture.

Grekes.

God to auoide heresies caused the scriptures to be written.

Noe.

And when he asketh, whether there were no true fayth from Adam to Noe. I answere, that god partly wrote their fayth in their sacrifices and partly the Patriarkes were ful of miracles as ye may see in the Bible.

What faith Noah had.

And when More to vtter his darcknes and blynde ignorannce sayth, that they which were ouerwhelmed wyth Noyes floud, had a good faith, and bringeth for hym Nicolaus de Lira. I answere, that Nicolaus de Lira delirat. For it is impossible to haue a fayth to be saued by except a man consent vnto Gods law with all his hart and all his soule, that it is righteous, holy, good, and to be kept of all men, and thereuppon repent that he hath broken it, and sorow that his flesh moueth vnto the contrary, and then come and beleue that god for his mercy will forgeue him all that he hath done agaynst the lawe, & wyll helpe hym to tame his flesh, and suffer his weakenes in the meane season, till he be wared stronger: which sayth if they that perished in Noyes floud had had, they coulde not but haue mended their liuinges, and had not hardened their harts thorow vnbeliefe, and prouoked the wrath of God, and wared worse and worse an hundred & twenty yeares which God gaue thẽ to repent, vntill God could no lõger suffer thẽ, but washed their filthines away with ỹ floud (as he doth ỹ Popes shamefull abhominacions with like inundacions of water) & destroyed thẽ vtterly.

Where true faith is, there is repentaũce and amẽdment of life.

Lo

And whẽ he asketh whether Abrahã beleued no more thẽ is writtẽ of him. I aske him how he will proue that there was no writing in Abrahams time, & that Abrahã wrot not. And againe, as for Abrahams person, he receaued his faith of God, which to cõfirme vnto other, myracles were shewed dayly.

Abraham.

And when he sayneth forth, that they beleued onely becaũse they knew their elders coulde not erre. How could they know that without myracles or wryting confirmed wyth myracles, more thẽ the Turke knoweth that hys elders so many hundred yeares in so great a multitude can not erre & teach false doctrine to damne the beleuers. And ỹ contrary doth M. More see in all ỹ Bible, how after all was receaued in scripture confirmed with myracles, & though miracles ceased not, but were shewed dayly, yet ỹ elders erred & fell to idolatry, an hũdred for one ỹ bode in the right way, and led the younger in to errour wyth them so sore, that God to saue the younger, was faine to destroy the elders and to begin his testamẽt a freshe with the new generatiõ.

The elders did erre.

The elders in ỹ time of the Iewes did erre.

He seeth also that ỹ most part were alway Idolaters for all the scripture and true myracles therto, and beleued the false miracles of the deuill, because his doctrine was more agreable vnto their carnall vnderstanding, then the doctrine of Gods spirit, as it now goeth wyth the Pope: did not ỹ Scribes, Pharisees, and Priestes which were the elders erre?

The Scribes, Pharisees and Elders did erre.

And

And when he asketh, who taught the church to know the true scripture from false bookes. I answere, true miracles that confounded the false, gaue authoritie vnto the true scripture. And therby haue we euer since iudged all other bookes and doctrine.

The scripture was authorised by true myracles.

And by that we know that your legendes be corrupt wyth lies. As Erasmus hath improued many false bookes which ye haue fayned and put forth in the name of S. Hierom, Augustine, Ciprian, Dionise and of other, partly wyth autenticke stories, and partly by ẏ stile and latine and like euident tokens.

False bookes set forth by the Papistes.

Erasmus.

And when M. More sayth (vnto thē that beleue nought but ẏ scripture) he will proue with ẏ scripture, that we be bounde to beleue the church in thinges, wherefore they haue no scripture. Because God hath promised in the scripture, that the holy ghost shall teach hys church all truth. Nay, that text wil not proue it. For the first Church taught nought but they cōfirmed it with myracles which coulde not be done but of God, till the scripture was autentickly receaued. And the Church folowing teacheth nought that they will haue beleued as an article of the fayth, but that which the scripture proueth and mainteineth. As S. Augustine protesteth of his workes that men should compare them vnto the scripture, & therby iudge them and cast away whatsoeuer the scripture did not allow. And therfore they that will be beleued without scripture are false hypocrites and not Christes church. For though I know that that messenger which Christ sendeth can not lie, yet in a cōpany where many liers be, I can not know which is he without a token of scripture or of miracle.

The true church teacheth nothing but that which the scripture proueth and mainteineth.

And when he sayth, the scripture it selfe maketh vs not to beleue the scripture, but the church teacheth vs to know the scripture: for a man might read it & not beleue it. And so I say, that a man might heare you preach and yet beleue you not also. And I say thertto, that your church teacheth not to know the Scripture, but hideth it in the Latine from the common people. And from them that vnderstand latine they hid the true sence wyth a thousand false gloses.

The Pope hideth the scripture.

The Papistes hide ẏ scripture.

And I say moreouer that the scripture is the cause why men beleue the scripture, as well as a preacher is the cause why men beleue hys preachyng. For as he that first tolde in England that the Rhodes was taken, was the cause why some beleued it, euen so might writing sent from those parties be the cause that some men which red it beleued it. M. More will say, that letter had his authoritie of the man that sent it, and so hath the scripture her authority of the church. Nay, the scripture hath her authoritie of him that sent it, that is to wete of God, which thing the miracles did testifie, and not of the man that brought it. He will say, thou knowest ẏ scripture by their shewing. I graunt at the begynnyng I doe.

The scripture is the cause why men beleue ẏ scripture.

Then wil he say, why should ye not beleue them, in all their other doctrine besides the scripture & in al their expositions of ẏ scripture, as well as ye beleue them, when they tell you that such and such bokes are the scripture. May they not shew you a false booke? yes, and therfore at the beginning I beleue all a like. Euery lye that they tell out of their owne braines we beleue to be scripture, and so should I beleue thē if they shewed me a false booke, but whē I haue read the scripture and fynd not their doctrine there nor depend therof, I do not geue so great credence vnto their other doctrine as vnto ẏ scripture. Why? For I finde no witnesses vnto the scripture thē vnto their other doctrine. I finde whole nacions and countryes that receaue the scripture & refuse their other doctrine and their expositions in many places. And I finde the scripture otherwise expounded of them of olde tyme thē they which now will be the church expound it. Wherby their doctrine is the more suspect. I finde mention made of the scripture in stories, that it was, when I can finde no mention or likelihode that their doctrine was. I finde in all ages that men haue resisted their doctrine with the scripture & haue suffred death by the hundred thousandes in resisting their doctrine. I see their doctrine brought in and mainteined by a contrary way to that by which the scripture was brought in. I finde by the selfe same scripture, when I looke diligently thereon, that their other doctrine can not stand therewith.

The Papistes doctrine is not to be beleued without scripture.

Why the Pope is not to be beleued without scripture, & why he is not the true church.

The doctrine of the Papistes hath bene manytimes resisted by ẏ scripture.

I finde in the scripture that they which haue not Christes spirite to follow the steppes of his liuing pertaine not vnto Christ. Rom. viij. I finde in the scripture, that they which walke in their carnall birth after the maner of the children of Adam cānot vnderstād the thinges of the spirit of God. 1. Cor. 2. I

Iohn.5. Iob.5. I finde in ẏ ſcripture that they which ſubmit not thēſelues to do ẏ wil of God, can not know what doctrine is of god and what not. Iob.7. I finde in the ſcripture, Iere.31. & Heb.8. that

Iohn.7.

Heb.8. all the children of God, which only are the true members of his church haue euery one of them the law of god writ-ten in their hartes: ſo that if there were no law to compell, they would yet na-turally out of their owne hartes keepe the law of God: yea and againſt vio-lence compelling to the contrary. And I ſee that they which wil be the church (and to proue it hath not ſo great truſt in the ſcripture as in their ſophiſtrie & in the ſword which they haue ſet vp in all landes to keepe them with violence in the roome) are ſo farre of frō hauing the lawes of God written in their har-tes, that they neither by Gods lawe nor mans refraine from their opē out-ward wicked liuing. Looke in the Chronicles what bloude it hath coſte England to attempt to bring thē vn-der the law, yea and ſee what buſines ẏ Realme hath had, to keepe the Pre-lates within the Realme from taking the benefices with them and lying at Rome, and yet ſcarſely brought it to paſſe, for all that the Pope hath the ſtint of euery Byſhoppricke and of e-uery great Abbey therto as oft as any is voyde, yet a new be admitted to the roome. And I ſee thē bond vnto their owne will, & both to do and to conſent vnto other to do al that God hath for-biddē. I ſee thē of all people moſt vain glorious. I ſee them walke after their fleſhly birth. I ſee them ſo farre of frō the Image of Chriſt, that not onely they will not dye for their flocke after his enſample, but alſo, yet they would loſe one towne, or vilage, any polling or priuilege which they haue falſly got ten, bringyng them ſelues into good paſtures with wiles & ſhuttyng their flocke without, they would caſt away an hundred thouſand of thē in one day and begger their Realmes, yea and in-terdite them and bring in ſtraunge na-tions, though it were the Turke, to cō quere them and ſlea them vp, ſo much as the innocent in the cradle. And I ſee that their other doctrine is for their vā tage onely & that therewith they haue gotten all that they haue.

The Papiſtes will neither by Gods lawe nor mans refraine frō their wic-ked liuyng.

Iohn.10.

The Papiſtes will loſe no-thing that belongeth to them.

And I finde in the Scripture that ẏ Iewes before the cōmyng of Chriſt, knew that thoſe bookes were the ſcrip ture by the Scribes and ẏ Phariſeis. And yet as many as beleued their o-ther doctrine and many expoſitions of the ſcripture were deceaued, as ye ſee, and how Chriſt deliuered them out of errour. And I ſee agayne (which is no ſmall miracle) that the mercyfull care of God to keepe the Scripture to be a teſtimonie vnto his elect, is ſo great, that no men be more gelous ouer the bookes, to kepe them and ſhew them, and to alledge, that they be the Scrip-ture of God and true, then they which when it is read in their eares haue no power to beleue it, as the Iewes and the Popiſh. And therfore becauſe they neither can beleue it falſe, neither con-ſent that it is true as it ſoundeth playn ly in their eares in that it is ſo contra-ry vnto their fleſhly wiſedome, from which they can not depart, they ſeke a thouſand gloſes to turne it into an o-ther ſenſe, to make it agree vnto their beaſtlyneſſe, and where it will receaue no ſuch gloſes, there they thinke that no man vnderſtandeth it.

Chriſt deli-uered the Iewes out of errour.

None haue more care of the ſcrip-ture, then thoſe that beleue it not.

Then in the end of the Chapter M. More cōmeth vnto his wiſe concluſion and proueth nothing ſaue ſheweth his ignorance, as in all thyng. He ſayth we beleue the doctrine of the Scripture without Scripture, as for an example, the Popes pardons, becauſe onely that the Church ſo teacheth, though no Scripture confirmeth it. Why ſo? becauſe ſayth he the holy ghoſt by inſpiration, if I doe my endeuour and captiuate mine vnderſtan-dyng, teacheth me to beleue the Church concernyng Gods worde taught by the Churche and grauen in mens hartes with out Scripture, as well as he teacheth vs to beleue wordes written in the Scripture. Marke where hee is now. Afore hee ſaith, the Scripture cauſeth vs not to beleue the Scripture, for a man may read it & beleue it not. And much more the preacher maketh vs not to beleue ẏ preacher, for a man may heare him and beleue him not alſo. As we ſee the Apo ſtles could not cauſe all men to beleue them. For though the Scripture be an outward inſtrument and the preacher alſo to moue mē to beleue, yet the chief and principall cauſe why a man bele-ueth or beleueth not is within. That is the ſpirite of God teacheth his chil-dren to beleue and the deuill blyndeth his children and kepeth them in vnbe-leffe and maketh them to conſent vnto lyes & thinke good euill & euill good. As the Acts of the Apoſtles ſay in ma ny places there beleued as many as were ordeyned vnto euerlaſtyng lyfe.

M. More reaſo-neth a-gaynſt him ſelfe.

Actes.13.

Iohn.8. And Chriſt ſayth Iohn. viij. they that be of God heare Gods word. And vnto the wicked Iewes he ſaith ye cā not beleue becauſe ye be not of God. And in the ſame place ſayth he, ye be of your father the deuill and his will ye will do, and he bode not in the truth, & ther fore will not ſuffer his children to conſent to the truth. And Iohn in ỹ x. ſaith Chriſt, all that came before me, be theeues & murtherers, but my ſhepe heard not theyr voyces. That is, all that preach any ſaluatiō ſaue in Chriſt murther ỹ ſoules. Howbeit Chriſtes ſhepe could not conſent to their lyes, as the reſt cā not but beleue lyes, ſo that there is euer a remanaunt kepte by grace. And of this I haue ſene diuers examples. I haue knowen as holy men as might be, as the world counteth holynesse, which at the houre of death had no truſt in God at all, but cryed caſt holy water, light the holy candell, and ſo forth, ſore lamentyng that they muſt dye. And I haue knowen other which were deſpiſed, as men that cared not for their diuine ſeruice, which at death haue fallen ſo flat vppon the blond of Chriſt as is poſſible and haue preached vnto other mightyly as it had bene an Apoſtle of our Sauiour and comforted them with comfort of the lyfe to come & haue dyed ſo gladly, that they would haue receaued no worlds good, to bide ſtill in the fleſh. And thus is M. More fallen vpō predeſtination and is compelled with violence of Scripture to confeſſe that which he hateth and ſtudieth to make appeare falſe, to ſtabliſh freewill with all, not ſo much of ignorannce I feare as for lucres ſake and to get honour, promotiō, dignitie and money by helpe of our mitred monſters. Take exāple of Balam the falſe Prophet which gaue counſell & ſought meanes, through like blynd couetouſneſſe, to make the truth and prophecie which God had ſhewed him falſe. He had the knowledge of ỹ truth but without loue therto and therfore for vauntage became enemy vnto the truth, but what came of hym?

They that preach not Chriſt truly are murtherers.

The end of hipocrites.

Predeſtination.

Balam.

But M. More pepereth his concluſiō leſt men ſhould feele the taſt, ſaying, if we endeuour our ſelues and captiue our vnderſtandyng to beleue. O how beſtelblynd is fleſhly reaſon? the will hath none operation at all in the worlyng of fayth in my ſoule, no more then the child hath in the begettyng of hys father. For ſayth Paule it is the gift of God and not of vs. My witte muſt cōclude good or bad yer my will can loue or hate. My witte muſt ſhew me a true cauſe or an apparent cauſe why, yer my will haue any worlyng at all. And of that pepcryng it well appeareth what the Popes fayth is: euen a blynd imagination of their naturall witte, wrought without the light of the ſpirite of God, agreeing vnto their voluptuous luſtes in which their beaſtly wil ſo deliteth that hee will not let their wittes attēde vnto any other learning for vnquietyng hym ſelfe and flyrring from his pleaſure and delectation.

Wit muſt firſt ſhew cauſe, and then will is ſturred to worke.

And thus we be as farre a ſunder as euer we were and his mighty argumentes proue not the value of a poding pricke. M. More feeleth in his hart by inſpiration and with his endeuering him ſelf and captiuatyng his vnderſtandyng to beleue it, that there is a Purgatory as whot as hell. Wherein if a ſily ſoule were appointed by God, to lye a thouſand yeares, to purge him with all, the Pope for the value of a groat ſhall commaunde him thence ful purged in the twinkelyng of an eye, & by as good reaſon if hee were goyng thence, kepe him there ſtill. He feeleth by inſpiration and in captiuatyng hys wittes that the Pope can worke wonders with a Calues ſkinne, that he can commaunde one to eate fleſh though he be neuer ſo luſty, and that an other eate none on payne of dānatiō, though he ſhould dye for lacke of it: and that he can forgeue ſinne and not the payne, & as much and as litle of the payne or all if he luſt, and yet can neither helpe hym to loue the law or to beleue or to hate the fleſh, ſeyng he preacheth not. And ſuch thinges innumerable. M. More feleth true, and therfore beleueth that the Pope is the true Church.

Moore feeleth Purgatory

Popiſh doctrine concernyng Purgatory

The pope, how he can both forgeue and retaine ſinne.

And I cleane cōtrary feele that there is no ſuch worldly and fleſhly imagined Purgatory. For I feele that the ſoules be purged onely by the word of God & doctrine of Chriſt, as it is written Iohn. xv. ye be cleane through the word, ſaith Chriſt to his Apoſtles. And I feele agayne that he which is cleane through the doctrine, needeth not but to waſhe his feete onely, for his head & handes are cleane all ready Iohn. xiij. that is, he muſt tame his fleſh & kepe it vnder for his ſoule is cleane all ready through the doctrine. I feele alſo that bodyly payne doth but purge the body onely: in ſo much that the payne not onely purgeth not the ſoule, but maketh it more foule, except that there be kynde

Tyndall feeleth Purgatory

Iohn. 15.

Iohn. 13.

Bodyly payne purgeth the body and not ỹ ſoule.

kynde learning by, to purge the soule: so that the more a mā beateth his sōne, the worse he is, except he teach him louingly & shew him kindnesse besides, partly to kepe hym from desperation and partly that he fall not into hate of his father and of his commaundement thereto, and thinke that his father is a tyraunt and his law but tyranny.

M.More is of an euill opinion.

M.More feleth with his good endeuour & inspiration together, that a man may haue the best fayth coupled with the worst lyfe and with consentyng to sinne. And I feele that it is impossible to beleue truly except a mā repent, and that it is impossible to trust in ẏ mercy ẏ is in Christ or to fele it, but ẏ a man must immediatly loue God & his commaundementes, and therfore disagree & disconsent vnto the flesshe, and be at bate therewith and fight agaynst it. And I feele that euery soule that loueth ẏ law and hateth his flesshe and beleueth in Christes bloud, hath his sinnes which he committed and payne which he deserued in hatyng the law and consentyng vnto his flesh, forgeuen him, by that fayth. And I feele that the fraultie of the flesh agaynst whiche a beleuyng soule fighteth to subdue it, is also forgeuen and not reken̄ed or imputed for sinne all the tyme of our curyng: as a kynde father and mother reken not or impute the impossibilitie of their yong children to consent vnto their law, and as when the children be of age and consent, thē they reken not nor impute the impossibilitie of the flesh to folow it immediatly, but take al a worth and loue them no lesse, but rather more tenderly then their old and perfect children that do their commaundemētes, so long as they go to schole & learne such thynges as their fathers & mothers set thē to.

Faith in Christes bloud purchaseth forgeuenes of sinne.

And I beleue that euery soule that repēteth, beleueth and loueth the law, is thorough that fayth a member of Christes Churche and pure without spot or wrincle, as Paule affirmeth. Ephe. v. And it is an Article of my beleffe that Christes elect Church is holy and pure without sinne and euery mēber of the same, thorow faith in Christ, and that they be in the full fauour of God. And I feele that the vncleanesse of the soule is but the consent vnto sin and vnto the flesshe. And therefore I feele that euery soule that beleueth and consenteth vnto the lawe, and here in this life hateth his flesh and the lustes therof, and doth his best to driue sinne out of his flesh, and for hate of the sinne gladly departeth from his flesh, when he is dead (and the lustes of the flesshe slaine with death) needeth not as it were bodely tormenting to be purged of that wherof he is quit already. And therfore if ought remaine, it is but to be taught and not to be beaten. And I feele that euery soule that beareth fruit in Christ shalbe purged of the father to beare more fruit day by day, as it is written Joh. xv. not in the Popes Purgatory where no man feeleth it, but here in this life such fruit as is vnto his neighbours profite, so that he which hath his hope in Christ purgeth himselfe here, as Christ is pure. 1. Joh. 3. and that euer yet the bloud of Jesus onely doth purge vs of all our sinnes for the imperfectnes of our workes. And I feele that the forgeuenes of sinnes is to remitte mercifully the payne that I haue deserued. And I do beleue that the payne that I here suffer in my flesshe is to kepe the body vnder, and to serue my neighbour, and not to make satisfaction vnto god for the fore sinnes.

Ephe. v.

There is no purgatory for hym that dyeth repentaunt & beleueth.

Iohn. 15.

1. Iohn. 3.

Payne of sinne.

And therfore when the Pope destributh God after his couetous complexion, and when M.More feleth by inspiration and captiuating his wittes vnto the Pope, that God forgeueth the euerlasting payne and will yet punish me a thousand yeares in the Popes purgatory, that leauen sauoreth not in my mouth. I vnderstand my fathers wordes as they sound, and after the most mercifull maner and not after the Popes leauen and M.Mores captiuing his wittes, to beleue that euery Poetes fable is a true story. There is no father here that punisheth his sonne to purge hym, when he is purged already and hath vtterly forsaken sinne and euill, and hath submitted himselfe vnto his fathers doctrine. For to punishe a man that hath forsaken sinne of his owne accorde, is not to purge him, but to satisfie the lust of a tyrant. Neyther ought it to be called Purgatory, but a Jayle of tormenting and a satisfactory. And when the Pope sayth it is done to satisfie the righteousnes as a iudge. I say we that beleue haue no iudge of him, but a father, neither shal we come into iudgemēt as Christ hath promised vs, but are receaued vnder grace, mercy, and forgeuenes. Shew the Pope a litle money, and God is so mercifull that there is no Purgatory. And why is not the fire out as well, if I offer for me the bloud of Christ? If

The popes leuen.

Purgatory profitable to ẏ Pope.

Purgatory is a tormenting Jayle as ẏ Pope maketh it.

Money dispatcheth Purgatory

Christ hath deserued all for me, who gaue the Pope might to keepe part of his deseruinges from me, and to buy & sell Christes merites, & to make marchaundise ouer vs wyth fayned wordes. And thus as M. More feleth that ỹ Pope is holy church, I feele that he is Antichrist. And as my feeling can be no proofe to him, no more cā his wyth all his captiuating his wittes to beleue phantasies be vnto me, wherefore if he haue no other probation to proue that the Pope is holy church, then that his hart so agreeth vnto hys learning, he ought of no right to cōpell with sword vn to his sect. How be it there are euer two maner people that will cleaue vn to God a fleshly, and a spirituall. The spirituall which be of God shall heare Gods worde and the children of the truth shall consent vnto the truth. And contrary, the fleshly and children of falshead and of the deuill, whose harts be full of lyes, shall naturally consent vnto lyes (as young children though they haue eate themselues as good as dead with fruit, yet will not not cā beleue him that telleth them that such fruit is nought: but hun that prayseth them wyll they heare and eate themselues starcke dead, because their harts be full of lyes, and they iudge all thinges as they appeare vnto the eyes). And the fleshly mynded, assoone as h beleueth of God as much as the deuil doth, he hath inough, and goeth to and serueth God with bodely seruice as he before serued his Idoles, and after his owne imagination and not in the spirite, in louing his lawes and beleuing his promises or longing for them: no if he myght euer liue in the flesh, he would neuer desire them. And God must do for him againe, not what he hath promised, but what he listeth. And his brother ỹ serueth God in ỹ spirit according to Gods word, hym will the carnall beast persecute. So that he which will godly liue must suffer persecution vnto the worldes end, according vnto the doctrine of Christ and of his Apostles, and according vnto the ensamples that are gone before.

The Pope is Antichrist.

The fleshly children do naturally consent vnto lyes.

The fleshly mynded can neuer consent vnto Gods law.

The fleshly persecute them of the spirite.

And finally, I haue better reasons for my feeling that the Pope is Antichrist then M. More hath for his endeuoring himselfe and captiuing his wits that he is the true Church. For the church that was the true messenger of God hath euer shewed a signe and a badge therof, eyther a present myracle or autenticke scripture, in so much that Moses when he was sent, asked how shall they beleue me, & God gaue him a signe, as euer before and since. Neither was there any other cause of the writing of the new & last & euerlasting testamēt, then that when miracles ceased, we might haue wherwith to defende our selues against false doctrine and heresies. Which we coulde not do, if we were bound to beleue that were no where written. And agayne, if the Pope coulde not erre in his doctrine, he coulde not sinne of purpose and profession, abhominably and opēly aboue the Turkes and all the heathen that euer were, and defend it so maliciously as he hath viij. hundred yeares long, and will not be reformed, and maketh them his Saintes and his defenders ỹ sinne as he doth. He persecuteth as the carnall church euer did. whē the scripture is away, he proueth his doctrine with the scripture, and assoone as the scripture commeth to light he runneth away vnto his sophistrie and vnto his sworde. We see also by stories how your confession, penaunce & pardons are come vppe, and whence your purgatory is sprong. And your falshead in the sacraments we see by opē scripture. And all your workes we rebuke with the scripture, and therwith proue that the false beleife that ye couple to them, may not stand with the true faith that is in our Sauiour Iesus.

The true church is not bound out a signe or a miracle to proue that it is Gods church.

The popish life & doctrine is more wicked thē the Turkes & all ỹ heathē that euer were.

The second chapter.

IN the end of ỹ secōd chapter he brin geth in Euticus that fell out at a window Act. 20. whō saith he, S. Paules merites did recouer. Verely Paule durst not say so, but that Christes merites did it. Peter sayth Act. 3. Ye men of Israeli, why gase ye and stare vppon vs, as though we by our power and godlines had made this man go. Nay the name of Iesus and faith that is in him, hath geuen him strength & made him sounde: And euen here, it was the name of Iesus thorow Paules fayth that did that miracle, and not Paules merits, though he were neuer so holy.

If they be indifferent Iudges, they muſt be made ſeruaunts, and do ſeruice, as their dutie is. And whē they haue done a quarters ſeruice, then gene them wages as right is, vnto euery mā that laboureth in Chriſtes harueſt a ſufficient liuyng, and no more, and that in the name of his labour, and not of Saintes, and ſo forth. IN the ende of the fourth he ſaith, the man tooke an othe ſecretly, and was diſmiſſed with ſecret penaunce. O ypocrites, why dare ye not do it openly.

The fift Chapter.

IN the fift the meſſenger aſketh hym whether he were preſent. And hee denyeth and ſayth euer, hee heard ſaye Alas Sir, why take you bribes to defende that you know not? why ſuffer you not them that were preſent, and to whom the matter perteineth, to lye for themſelues?

M. More is a commō teſter and a ſcoffer.

Then he teſteth out the matter with Wilken and Simken, as he doth Hunne and euery thing, becauſe men ſhoulde not conſider their falſhead earneſtly. Wherein behold his ſuttle cōueiaunce. He aſketh, What if Simken would haue ſworne that he ſaw men make thoſe printes. Whereunto M. More aunſwereth vnder the name of, quod he, that he would ſware, that beſides the loſſe of the wager, he had loſt his honeſty and hys ſonle thereto. Behold this mans grauitie, how coulde you that do whē the caſe is poſſible. You ſhould haue put him to his prones, and bid him bring recorde.

Then ſayth he, the church receaueth no mā conuict of hereſie vnto mercy, but of mercy receaueth him to open ſhame. Of ſuch mercy, God gene them plenty that are ſo mercyfull.

Then he ſheweth how mercyful they were to receaue the man to penaūce that abode ſtill in periury and deadly ſinne. O ſhameleſſe hypocrites how can ye receaue into the congregation of Chriſt an open obſtinate ſinner that repēteth not, when ye are commaūded of Chriſt to caſt all ſuch out? And agayn, O Scribes and Phariſeis, by what example of Chriſt and of his doctrine can ye put a man that repenteth vnto opē ſhame and to that thyng whereby euer after he is had in derilion among his brethren of whom he ought to be loued & not mocked: Ye might enioyne honeſt thynges, to tame his fleſh, as prayer and faſting: and not that which ſhould be to him ſhame euer after and ſuch as ye your ſelues would not do.

The Papiſtes are cruell and vnmercyfull.

The vij. Chapter.

IN the vij. chapter he maketh much to do about ſwearyng and that for a ſuttle purpoſe. Notwithſtandyng, the truth is, that no iudge ought to make a man ſweare agaynſt hys will for many inconuenients. If a man receaue an office he that putteth hym in the rowme ought to charge him to do it truly, and may and happly ought to take an oth of him. If a man offer him ſelfe to beare witneſſe, the iudge may & of ſome haply ought to take an othe of them: but to compell a man to beare witnetſe ought he not. And Moreouer if a iudge put a man to an othe that he ſhall aunſwere vnto all that he ſhalbe demaūded of, he ought to refuſe. Howbeit if he haue ſworne, and thē the wicked iudge aſke him of thinges hurtfull vnto his neighbour & agaynſt the loue that is in Chriſt, then he muſt repent that he hath ſworne, but not ſinne agayne to fulfill his othe. For it is agaynſt Gods commaundement, that a man ſhould hurt his neighbour that hath not deſerued it.

Swerynge.

The oth of a witnes may be taken, but no mā may be cōpelled to ſweare & be a witnes.

A godly leſſon.

The viij. Chapter.

VNto Church, prieſt, charity, grace, confeſſion and penaūce is aunſwered him in the beginning of the booke. And when he ſayth Tyndall was confederate with Luther, that is not truth.

M. More is a lyer.

The ix. Chapter.

THē his ix. chapter is there nothing more fooliſh. For if he would haue any wiſe man to beleue that my tranſlation would deſtroy the Maſſe any otherwiſe then the Latine or Greeke text, he ſhould haue alledged the place and how.

The xi. Chapter.

IN the xj. chapter M. More wil not be fed the liuing of our ſpiritualtie, because it is so open that he can not. And as litle should he be able to defēd their lyes, if the light were abroad that men might see. And as he cā not deny them abhominable, so can he not deny them obstinate and indurat therein, for they haue bene oft rebuked with Gods word, but in vayne. And of such ỹ text is plaine that they can not vnderstand the Scripture. And yet M. More will receaue rewardes to dispute agaynst the heresies of some such as be cast out of Christes Churches by such holy Patriarkes, whose liuinges he him selfe can not prayse. As holy Judas, though the Prelates of his Church that is the Pharisees were neuer so abhominable yet because Christes doctrine was cōdemned of them as of Gods Church that could not erre, and all that beleued on him excōmunicat, he was bold to say. Quid vultis mihi dare & ego tradā eū vobis? That is, what wil you geue me and I will deliuer him vnto you?

The Papistes are obstinate & will not repent.

Judas.

The xii. Chapter.

Prayers of an euill Priest profite not.

IN the xij. he hath one cōclusion, that the prayers of an euill Priest profit not. which though it be true, yet the cōtrary is beleued among a great many, in all quarters of England, so blynd be the people and wotte not what prayer meaneth. I haue heard mē of no small reputation say yet this in great audience, that it maketh no matter whether the Priest were good or bad so he tooke money to pray as they seldome pray without, for he could not hurt the prayer were he neuer so noughty.

A fond saying.

And whē he saith that the euill Priest hurteth vs not so much with hys lyuyng as he profiteth vs with ministryng the Sacramentes. O worldly wisedome, if a man lead me thorough a ieoperdous place by day, hee can not hurt me so greatly as by night. The Turke seeth that murther, theft, extortion, oppression, and adultery be sinne. But when he leadeth me by the darkenesse of Sacramentes without signification, I cā not but ketch harme and put my trust and confidēce in that which is neither God nor his word. As for an example, what trust put the people in anoylyng and how cry they for it, with no other knowledge then that the oyle saueth them, vnto their daunnation and denying of Christes bloud?

To minister Sacramēts without signification is to be lead in darkenesse.

Sacrifice.

Heb. 10.

And when he saith the Priest offereth or sacrificeth Christes body. I answere, Christ was offered once for all as it is to see in the Epistle to the Hebrues. As the Priest sleath Christ, breaketh his body and shedeth his bloud, so he sacrificeth him and offereth him. Now the Priest sleath him not actually nor breaketh his body actually nor shedeth his bloud actually neither scourgeth him and so forth, throughout all hys passion: but representeth his slaying, his body breakyng and bloud shedyng for my sinnes and all the rest of his passion & playeth it before mine eyes onely. which signification of the Masse, because the people vnderstand not, therfore they receaue no forgeuenesse of their sinnes therby, and therto can not but ketch hurt in their soules, through a false fayth as it well appeareth, how euery man commeth therto for a sundry imagination, all ignoraunt of the true way.

Christes body in the Sacramēt is not carnall, but spirituall.

Let no man beguile you with hys iugglyng sophistrie. Our offeryng of Christ is to beleue in him, and to come with a repentyng hart vnto the remēbraunce of his passion & to desire God the father for the breakyng of Christes body on the crosse and shedyng of hys bloud and for his death and all his passions, to be mercyful vnto vs & to forgeue vs accordyng vnto his Testamēt and promise. And so we receaue forgeuenesse of our sinnes. And other offeryng or sacrificyng of Christ is there now none. walke in the opē light and feelyng and let not your selues be lead with iugglyng wordes as Mules and Asses in whiche there is none vnderstandyng.

Christe was sacrificed on the crosse once for all.

More. Deacons. Tyndall.

M. Deacons were had in price in the old tyme. Tyndall. For the Deacons then tooke the care of all the poore and suffered none to go a beggyng, but prouided a liuyng for euery one of them. where now they that should bee Deacons make them selues Priestes and robbe the poore of landes, rentes, offeringes and all that was geuen them, deuouring all them selues & the poore dying for hunger.

Christes Deacons and the popes Deacons differ much.

More. Priestes. Tyndall.

M. Priestes be despised because of the multitude. Tyndall. If there were but one in the world as men say of the Fenix, yet if he lyued abhominably, he could not but be despised.

More. Tyndall.

M. A man may haue a good fayth coupled with all maner sinne. Tyndall. A good faith putteth away all sinne, how then can all maner of sinne dwell with a good fayth? I dare say, that M. More durst affirme, that a man might loue God and hate his neighbour both at once, and yet S. Iohn in his Epistle will

1. Iohn. 4

M. Mores ſayth was a common ſayth.

will ſay that he ſayth vntruly. But M. More meaneth of the beſt fayth that euer he felt. By all likelyhode he knoweth of no other but ſuch as may ſtand with all wickednelle, neither in hym ſelfe nor in his Prelates. Wherfore in as much as their faith may ſtand with all that Chriſt hateth, I am ſure he looketh but for ſmall thankes of God for his defendyng of them. And therfore he playeth ſurely to take his reward here of our holy Patriarkes.

More. Tyndall.

M. Fewe durſt be Prieſtes in the olde tyme. Tyndall. Then they knewe the charge and feared God. But now they know the vauntage & dread him not.

More. Tyndall.

M. If the lawes of the Churche were executed which Tyndal and Luther wold haue burnt, it would be better. Tyndall. If the teſtamēt of our Sauiour might be knowen for blynd wretches & couetous tyrāntes, it would write ẏ law of God in all mens harts that beleued it, and then ſhould men naturally & without compulſion kepe all honeſtie. And agayne though the Popes law could helpe, yet is no law as good as a law vnexecuted.

As good no lawe, as a law not executed.

The xiij. Chapter.

IN the xiij. he rageth and fareth exceadyng foule with him ſelfe. There he biteth, ſucketh, gnaweth, towſeth, and mowſeth Tyndall. There he weneth that he hath wonne his ſpurres & that it is not poſſible to anſwere him. And yet there, becauſe he there moſt ſtādeth in his owne conceite, I doubt not vnto them that be learned in Chriſte to prouc hym moſt ignoraunt of all, and cleane without vnderſtanding of godly thynges.

Age is to be preferred before youth.

And I ſay yet, that as no woman ought to rule a mans office, where a man is preſent, by the order of nature, and as a young man ought not to be choſen, to miniſter in ẏ Church, where an old mete for the rowme may be had by the order of nature, euen ſo it was Paules meaning to preferre the maried before the vnmaried, for the inconueniences that might chaunce by the reaſon of vnchaſtitie, which inconueniences M. More might ſee with ſorrow of hart (if he had as great loue to Chriſt as to other thinges) to happen dayly vnto the ſhame of Chriſtes doctrine, among Prieſtes, Fryers and Monkes, partly with open whores, partly with their ſodometrie, whereof they caſt ech other in the teeth dayly in euery Abbey, for the leaſt diſpleaſure that one doth to an other. M. More might ſee what occaſions of vnchaſtitie be geuen vnto the Curates euery where by the reaſon of their office and dayly conuerſation with the maryed.

The chaſt vnchaſtitie of the Papiſtes is abhominable both to God and man.

And when he ſayth, neuer mā could finde that expoſition till now, there he ſayth vntrue. For S. Hierome hymſelfe ſaith that he knew them that ſo expoūded the text, and rebuked them of Rome becauſe they would not admit into the clergie them that had had two wiues, the one before baptim and the other after, ſaying: if a man had killed xx. men before his Baptime, they would not haue forbidden him, and why then ſhould that which is no ſinne at all be a let vnto him. But the God of Rome would not heare him. For Sathan begaune then to worke his miſteries of wickednes.

S. Hierome.

The Pope iudgeth no ſinne to be ſinne, and ſinne to be no ſinne.

And when he ſaith, he that hath ten wiues hath one wife. I ſay that one is taken by the vſe of ſpeaking for one onely. As when I ſay, I am content to geue thee one, meaning one onely. And vnto him that hath no helpe, is there one helpe, to looke for no helpe where one helpe is taken for one onely, and many places els.

And when M. More ſayth, he that hath had two wiues one after an nother, may not be Prieſt, and that if a Prieſtes wife die he may not haue another, or that if he were made Prieſt hauing no wife, he might not after mary if he burnt. I deſire a reaſon of him: If he ſay, it hath bene ſo the vſe: then ſay I an whore is better then a wife, for that hath bene ẏ vſe of our holy father many hundred yeares. But I affirme vnto M. More the contrary. And I ſay firſt wyth Paule, that the kingdome of God is not meate and drinke, and by the ſame reaſon neither huſband or wife, but ẏ keeping of the commaundements and to loue euery man his neighbour as himſelfe. And therefore as meate and drinke were ordeined for mans neceſſitie, and as a man may eate & drinke at all needes in all degrees, ſo farre as it letteth him not to keepe the commaundementes and to loue his neighbour as himſelfe: euen ſo was the wife created for the mans neceſſitie, and therefore may a man vſe her at all hys neede in all degrees, as farre as ſhe letteth hym not to keepe Gods lawe, which is nothing els by Paules learning, then that a man loue hys neyghbour as himſelfe. Now I deſire a reaſon of M. Mores doctrine, what doth

A Prieſt by the Popes order may haue a whore, but not a wife.

Rom. 14.

More doctrine is superstitious my second wife, or my third hinder me to loue my neighbour as my selfe, and to do him seruice against I come to be priest? what let is your second wife to you to serue our holy father the Pope, more then your first would haue bene? And in like maner if my first wife die, when I am a Priest, why may I not loue my neighbour & do hym as good seruice with the second as with ỹ first? And againe, if I be made priest hauing no wife, and after burne, and therfore mary, why may I not loue my neighbour and serue hym wyth that wyfe, as well as he that brought a wife with hym?

1. Tim. 4.

It was not for nought that Paule prophelied that some should departe from the faith, & attend vnto disceauable spirites and deuelishe doctrine, The Pope forbidderh mariage. forbidding to mary and to eate meates which god hath created to be receaued with thankes of them that know the truth, to buy dispẽsations, to vse lawfull meat and vnlawfull wiues.

Apparant godlynesse why the Priest may not haue ỹ secõd wife.

And I aske M. More why he ỹ hath the second wife or hath had two wiues may not be a Priest, or why if a Priestes first wife die, he may not mary the second. He will answere because the Priest must represent the misteries or secrete properties and vnion of Christ the onely husbande of his onely wyfe the church or congregation that beleueth in him onely. That is, as I haue in other places sayd, the scripture describeth vs in matrimonye the mysteries and secrete benefites which God the father hath hid in Christ for all thẽ that be chosen and ordeyned to beleue and put their trust in him to be saued. Christes benefites toward vs are figured by matrimony. As when a man taketh a wife, he geueth her himselfe, his honour, hys riches, and all that he hath, and maketh her of equall degree vnto himselfe: if he be king, and she before a beggers daughter, yet she is not ỹ lesse Quene, and in honour aboue al other. If he be Emperour she is Empresse, and honoured of men as the Emperour, and partaker of all. Euen so if a man repẽt and come, and beleue in Christ to be saued from the dampnation of the synne, of which he repenteth, Christ is hys owne good immediately: Christes death, paine, prayer, passion, fastyng, and all his merites are for that mans sinnes a full satisfaction, and a sacrifice of might and power to absolue hym a pena et a culpa. Christes enheritaunce, his loue and fauour that he hath wyth God his father are that maus by and by: and the man by that mariage is pure as Christ, and cleane wythout sinne, and honourable, glorious, welbeloued and in fauour thorow ỹ grace of that mariage. And because that the Priest must represent vs this signification, is the cause why a Priest may not haue the second wyfe say they, which popishe reason hath deceaued many wise, as who can be but deceaued in some thing, if he receaue all his doctrine by the auctorite of his elders, except he haue an occasion as we haue to runne to Moses and the Prophetes, & there heare & see with our owne eyes, and beleue no longer by the reason of oure forefathers, when we see them so shamefully beguild themselues, and to beguile vs in a thousand things which the Turkes see.

Now to our purpose, if this doctrine be true, then must euery Priest haue a wife or haue had a wife. For he that neuer had wife can not represent vs this. And againe, he that hath an whore or an other mans wife hath lost this property, and therfore ought to be put downe.

And againe, the second mariage thẽ of no man is, or can be a Sacramẽt by that doctrine. And yet I will describe you the mariage of Christ as well by his mariage that hath had ix. wyues, and hath now the tenth, as by his that hath now the first.

O will they say, his wyfe was no virgine, or he when they were maried. Sir the signification standeth not in ỹ virginitie but in the actuall wedlocke. we were no virgines when we came to Christ but cõmon whores beleuing in a thousand Idoles. We were Idolatres when we came to Christ.

And in the second mariage or tenth and ye will, the man hath but one wife and all his are hers, and his other wiues be in a land where is no husbande or wife. I say therfore with Paul that this is a deuilishe doctrine and hath a similitude of godlines with it, but the power is away. The myste of it blyndeth the eyes of the simple and beguileth them, that they can not see a thousand abhominations wrought vnder that cloke.

And therfore I say still, that the Apostles meaning was that he shoulde haue a wife, if haply his age were not the greater, and that by one wife he excludeth them that had two, and them that were detained with other saue their owne wiues, and would haue thẽ to be such as were knowen of vertuous S. Paules doctrine is that prestes should haue wiues.

tuous liuing, for to do reuerence & honour vnto the doctrine of Christ. As it appeareth by the widowes which he excludeth before lx. yeares, for feare of vnchastitie, and admitteth yet none of that age, except she were well knowen of chast, honest and godly behauiour, and that to honour Gods word withall, than which the Pope hath nothing more vile. And whē M. More to mock, bringeth forth the text of the wydowe, that she must be the wife of one man. I answere, for all his iesting, that Paule excludeth not her that had x. husbands one after an other, but her that had ij. husbandes attonce. And when More laugheth at it, as though it had neuer bene the guise. I would to god for his mercy that it were not the guise at this day, and then I am sure hys wrath would not be so great as it is. Paule meaneth onely that he would haue no diffamed woman chosen wydowe for dishonouring the worde of God and the congregation of Christ, and therefore excludeth common women, and such as were diffamed besides their husbandes, and haply ỹ denoyced therto. And that I proue by the same doctrine of Paule, that the kingdome of God is no such busines but the keping of Gods commaundementes onely, & to loue one an other. Now looke on ỹ thing and on the office of the widowe. It was but to waite on the sicke and poore people, and to washe straūgers feete. Now the widowes of ten husbandes must haue be founde of the cost of the congregation, if they were destitute of frends, as all other poore were, though in tyme passed they haue bene diffamed persons.

Widowes.

More is a lyer.

But vnder lx. would Paule let none minister for feare of occasions of vnchastity, and therto none but such as were well knowen of honest liuing and of good report. Now in as much as the widow of ten husbands must be founde of the common cost at her neede, what vncleanes is in her by the reason of her secōd husband, that she is not good inough to be a seruaunt vnto the poore people, to dresse their meate, wash their clothes, to make their beddes and so forth and to wash straūgers feete, that came out of one congregation vnto an other about businesse. and to do all maner seruice of loue vnto her poore brethren and sisters. To haue had the second husband is no shame among the heathen: it is no shame amōg the Christen for when the husband is dead, the wife is free to mary to whom she will in the Lord, and by as good reason the husband, and of right who more free then the Priest? And therfore they shame not our doctrine nor our cōgregation, nor dishonour God amōg the heathen or weake Christen. Now whē we haue a playne rule that he whiche loueth his neighbour as him selfe keepeth all the lawes of God, let hym tell me for what cause of loue toward hys neighbour, a widow of two lawfull husbands may not do seruice vnto the poore people.

The office of the widowes in ỹ primatiue church.

Rom. 13.

Why may not a widow of fifty do seruice vnto the poore? Paule whiche knytteth no snares nor leadeth vs blind nor teacheth vs without a reason geuing of his doctrine, aunswereth, for feare of occasions of euill, lest she be tempted or tempt other: And then if she be taken in misdoyng, the doctrine of Christ be euill spoken of therto and the weake offended.

And when M. More mocketh with my reason that I would haue euerye Priest to haue a wife becausse few men cā liue chaste, I aunswere, that if he loued the honor of Christ and his neighbour as he doth his owne couetousnesse, he should finde that a good Argument. Paul maketh the same and much more slenderly then I after your sophistrie. For hee disputeth thus, some yoūg widowes do dishonest ỹ congregation of Christ and his doctrine, therfore shall no young widow at all minister in the common seruice therof: But shal all be maried & beare children and serue their husbādes. And it is a farre lesse rebuke to the doctrine of Christ and his cōgregation, that a womā should do amisse, then the Bishop or Priest. I am not so mad, to thinke ỹ there could no Priest at all liue chaste. Neither am I so foolish to thinke that there be not as many womē that could liue chast at fifty, as Priestes as fifty. And yet though of a thousand widowes of fifty yeare old ix. hundred xc. & ix. could liue chast, Paul because he knoweth not that one wil let none at all minister in the common seruice amōg occasions of vnchastitie. Christes Apostles considered all infirmities and all that might hynder the doctrine of Christ, and therfore dyd their best to preuēt all occasiōs. wherfore, as fish is no better then flesh, nor flesh better then fish in the kyngdome of Christ, euen so virginitie wedlocke and widowed are none better then other to be saued by in their own nature Young widowes were forbiddē to minister in the commō seruice.

Fishe no better then flesshe, nor flesshe no better then fishe in the kingdame of Christ.

or to please God with all, but with what soeuer I may best serue my brethren, that is euer best accordyng vnto the tyme and fashion of the world. In persecution it is good for euery man to liue chast if he can, and namely for the preacher. In peace when a man may liue quietly and abyde in one place, a wife is a sure thyng to cut of occasiõs.

Wore. Tyndall. Then he would make it seme that Priestes wiues were the occasions of heresies in Almany. Nay, they fell first to heresies and then tooke wiues, as ye fell first to the Popes holy doctrine & then tooke whores.

Wore. Tyndall. More. The Church byndeth no man to chastitie. Tyndall. of a truth, for it geueth licence to who soeuer wil, to kepe whores, and permitteth to abuse mens wiues and suffereth sodomitrie, and doth but onely forbid matrimonie.

Three lyes at once. And when he sayth, chastitie was all most receaued by generall custome, before the lawe was made: one lye. And good fathers dyd but geue theyr aduise therto: an other lye. And it was ratified and receaued with the cõsent of all Christendome: the third lye.

They did well to chose a Poete to be their defender. First it was attempted in generall Councell and resisted by holy fathers which yet thẽ selues were neuer maried, saying that men might not knit a snare for their weake brethrẽ, agaynst the doctrine of Christ and hys Apostles. Neither could it bee brought to passe, vntill the Pope had got the Emperours sword out of hys hãd. The Grekes which were the one halfe of Christendome then I suppose, would neuer admit it.

Now godly ione would neuer suffer them to cõsent that we should be bound vnto that burthen which they themselues could not beare as M. More in an other place affirmeth that they dyd. And agayne, we haue manifest storyes that it was brought in with violence of sword & that all the Priestes of Germany were cõpelled to put away their wiues. And we finde that whersoeuer the pope raigneth, he came in with deceauyng the kyng of the countrey and then with his sword cõpelled the rest. The Pope came but now late into Wales to raigne there ouer the Bishops and Priestes, and that with the sword of the kyng of England.

Priestes compelled to put away their wiues.

And yet though all the Clergie of christendome had graunted it, all the Church had not made it, nor yet the tenth part of the Church. The lay people be as well of the Churche as the Priestes. Neither can all the Priestes in the world of right make any law wherin their part lyeth without their consent. Now it perteineth vnto the cõmon people and most of all vnto the weakest, that their Priestes be endued with all vertue and honestie. And the chastitie of his wife, daughter and seruaunt perteineth vnto euery particular man, which we see by experience defiled dayly, by the vnchast chastitie of the spiritualitie.

Priestes must be endued with vertue and honesty.

Wherfore if the Parishes, or any one Parish, after they had sene the experience what incõueniences came of their chastitie, would haue no Curate except he had a wife to cut of occasions, as Paule when he had sene that prooke, would haue no young widowes minister, who saue a tyraunt, should be agaynst them?

Moreouer the generall Councels of the spiritualtie are of no other maner, sence the Pope was a God, then the generall Parlamentes of the temporalitie. where no man dare say hys mynde freely and liberally for feare of some one, and of his flatterers.

Generall counsell.

And looke in what captiuitie the Parlamentes be vnder the priuate cõsels of kinges, so are the generall Cõcels vnder the Pope and his Cardinals. And this is the maner of both. Some one two or three wilye Fores, that haue all other in subiection, as ye haue sene in my Lord Cardinall, imagine, not what ought to be, but what they lust to haue and conceaue in theyr own braynes and go with child, some tyme a yeare. ij. iij, iiij. v. vj. or. vij. and some tyme. xx. and aboue, castyng, cancelling and compassing for the byrth agaynst opportunitie: openyng the matter priuely vnder an othe a litle and a litle vnto certaine Secretaries whose part is therin, as they finde men of actiuitie and of courage, prepared to sell soule and body for promotion.

Parliament.

The maner vsed both in generall counsailes, and also in parliamentes.

And the matter in the meane tyme is turmoyled and tossed among them selues: and persuasions and sutle reasons are forged to blind the right way and to beguile mens wittes. And whõ they feare to haue aduersaries able to resist them, for such, meanes are sought to bring them in vnto their partie or to conuey them out of the way. And whẽ opportunitie is come, they call a counsel or Parlamẽt vnder a contrary pretẽce. And a shalle of the holy ghost, whom they desire as farre away as were possible, ſible, is ſong and a goodly Sermon is made, to blere mens eyes with all. And then ſodenly other mē vnprouided, the matter is opened, after the moſt ſuttle maner. And many are beguiled with ſuttle argumentes and craftie perſuaſions. And they that hold hard agaynſt thē are called aſide and reaſoned with a part and handled after a faſhion, and partly entiſed with fayre promiſes and partly feared with cruell threatnynges, and ſo ſome are ouercome with ſiluer ſyllogiſmes & other for feare of threatnyng are driuen vnto ſilence, And if any be found at the laſt, that will not obey their falſehead and tyranny, they raple on him and ieſt him out of countenaunce & call him opinatiue, ſelfeynded and obſtinate, & beare him in hand that the deuill is in him that he ſo cleaueth vnto his owne witte, though he ſpeake no ſillable but Gods word, & is aſked whether he wilbe wiſer then other mē. And in the ſpiritualitie, they excommunicate him and make an hereticke of him. And this to be true in the Clergies chaſtitie is as cleare as ỳ day by manifeſt chronicles, in ſo much that the Prelates of Rome, were a brewyng it aboue an hundred yeares and I wot not how long lenger, yet they could bryng it to paſſe, and yet in vayne til they had got the Emperours ſword to proue that it was moſt expedient ſo to be. And for what entent? to bryng all vnder the Pope, and that the Prelates of all landes might as the old maner was, come and wayte on the Pope at Rome, where he prepared thē whores inough.

And that his ſworne Prelates in enery land, might the more conuenientlỳ wayte in Kyngs Courtes, to miniſter the commō wealth vnto the popes pleaſure and profite. For had the Clergie kept their wiues, they could neuer haue come vnto this where they now be, and to theſe pluralities, vniōs and totquottes. For there is no lay man though he were neuer ſo euill diſpoſed, that could for his wife & children haue leyſure to cōtriue ſuch miſchiefe, and to runne from countrey to countrey, to learne falſhead and ſubtiltie, as our ſpiritualtie do, which without feare of God and ſhame of man, keepe whores wherſoeuer they come. And thus ye ſee, that the clergies chaſtitie, pertayneth as much vnto the temporaltie as vnto the ſpiritualtie.

And an other is this, no power among them that profeſſe the truth may bynde where God loweth, ſaue onely where loue and my neighbours neceſſitie requireth it of me. Neyther can any power now binde them to come, but they may freely keepe or breake, as the thing is hurtfull or expediēt. Neither can there be any bond where loue and neceſſitie requireth the contrary. So that this law, loue thy neighbour, to helpe him as thou wouldeſt be holp, muſt interpret all mans lawes.

As if I had ſworne young or vnwiſely that I would liue chaſt & all the world had bound me, if afterwarde I burnt and could not ouercome the paſſion, I ought to marry.

For I muſt condition my vow and ſhew a cauſe of it thereto. I may not vow for the chaſtitie it ſelfe, as though it were ſacrifice to pleaſe God in it ſelf, for that is the Idolatry of heathen. I muſt therfore vowe to do my neyghbour ſeruice (which in that caſe he may not require) or to gene my ſelfe more quietly to prayer and ſtudie (which is not poſſible as long as I burne, and the minde will not be quiet) or that I may the better keepe ỳ lawes of God, which if I burne, I ſtand thorow my chaſtitie in more ieopardy to breake & to hurt my neighbour, and to ſhame ỳ doctrine of Chriſt. And in like maner, if I had forſworne fleſh, & al the world had bound me, yet if neceſſitie require it of me, to ſaue my life or my health, I ought to breake it. And againe though I had ſworne chaſtitie, and the cōmon wealth or the neceſſitie of an other required the contrary, I muſt breake it. But on the one ſide, of all that euer burnt in the Popes chaſtitie, he neuer gaue prieſt licence to take wife, but to keepe whores onely. And on the other ſide, all that vow any vow, do it for the thing it ſelfe, as though it were as I ſayd ſeruice or ſacrifice to God that had delite in the deede, as young children haue in Apples, and that for that deede they ſhall haue an higher roome in heauē then their neighbours, which is the Idolatry of the heathen, whē he ought to beſtow his vow vppon hys neighbour to bryng him to heauen, & not to enuie him, & to ſeeke thereby an higher roome, not caring whether his neighbour come thether or no. And finally to burne and not to vſe the naturall remedy that God hath made, is but to tempt God, as in all other thinges. But & if God haue brought thee into a ſtraite, and haue therto takē the naturall remedy from thee, then to re-

Vowes.

No oth is to be kept that is agaynſt chaſtitie or neceſſitie.

sisse and to crie vnto God for helpe, & to suffer, is a signe ỹ thou louest Gods lawes. And to loue Gods law is to be sure that thou art Gods childe elect to mercy. For in all his children onely, he writeth that token.

And then he sayth, euery man hath his choyce whether he will be Priest or no. But what nettes and snares doth Antichrist lay for them?

The popes snares.

1. First his false doctrine, where with the Elders beguiled, cõpell their children and sacrifice them, to burne in the Popes chastitie with no other mynde, then those olde Idolaters sacrificed their children vnto the false God Moloch: so that they thinke, by the merites of their childrens burning, after the Popes false doctrine, to please god and to get heauen, cleane ignorannt of the testament made in Christes bloud.

2. Then what a multitude are blinded and drawen into the net, with the baite of promotion, honour, dignitie, pleasures, freedome and liberrie to sinne, & to do all mischiefe vnpunished, things which all euill that feare not God do desire?

3. And what a number brought vp idely vnto xx. and aboue, then put their heades in his halter, because they haue no other craft to get their liuinges, & not because they can liue chast.

4. Also some liue chast at xxiij. which same burne at xxx. And that to be true dayly experience teacheth, and good naturall causes there be.

5. And thẽ looke on the Apostles learning and ordinaunce. When one or two young wydowes had brokẽ their chastitie, he would neuer after let any mor bee chosen of the same age. How commeth it then that the Pope for so many hundred thousandes that miscary, will neither breake the ordinaunce or mitigat it, or let any goe backe, but if any burne, sendeth them vnto the shame of Christes doctrine, and offending and hurt of hys Church, & neuer vnto the lawfull remedie of mariage.

Tyndall doth here playnly proue More an hereticke.

And when M. More calleth it heresie, to thinke that the maried were as pleasaunt to God as the vnmaryed, he is surely an hereticke that thinketh the cõtrary. Christes kingdom is neither meate nor drinke, nor husband nor wife, nor widow nor virgine, but the keeppyng of the commaundementes and seruing of a mans neighbour lowingly by the doctrine of S. Paul, where not to eate helpeth me to keepe the commmaũdementes better then to eate, there it is better not to eate then to eate. And where to eate helpeth me to keepe the commaundementes and to do my dutie vnto my neighbour, there it is better to eate then not to eate. And in like case where to be without a wife helpeth more to keepe the cõmaundemẽtes and to serue a mans neighboure, there it is better to be vnmaryed then maried, and where a wife helpeth to keepe the commaundementes better then to be without, there it is better to haue a wife then to be wythout. That hart onely which is ready to do or let vndone all thinges for his neighbours sake, is a pleasaunt thing in the sight of God.

That is euer best, that moueth man to the keepyng of Gods commaundementes.

And when he will haue the Priestes to liue chast, for reuerence of the Sacramentes, it is deuillishe doctrine hauing the similitude of godlines, but the pith & marow is away. If he meane water, oyle, salt, and such like, then is ỹ wyse with her body and all her vses in the lawes of God, incomparable purer & holyer. If he meane the sacrament of Christes body, I aunswere, that the handes defile not the man, nor ought that goeth thorow the handes be they neuer so vnwashed, by the testimony of Christ, and much lesse can they then defile Christ.

Deuillish doctrine.

Math. 15.

Moreouer, the Priest toucheth not Christes naturall body wyth his handes by your owne doctrine, nor seeth it with his eyes, nor breaketh it wyth hys fingers, nor eateth it wyth hys mouth, nor chãmeth it with his teeth, nor drinketh his bloud with his lippes for Christ is impassible. But he that repenteth toward the lawe of God, and at the sight of the sacrament, or of the breaking, seling, eating, chamming or drinking, calleth to remembraunce the death of Christ, his body breaking and bloudshedding for our sinnes, and all his passion, the same eateth our Sauiours body and drinketh his bloud thorow fayth onely, & receaueth forgeuenes of all his sinnes therby, and other not. And all that haue not this doctrine of the Sacrament come therto in vaine. And therfore there is no more cause that he which sayth the Masse should liue chast, then he that heareth it, or he that ministreth the Sacramẽt, then he that receaueth it. It is to me great maruell that vnlawfull whoredome, couetousnes, and extortion, can not defile their handes as well as lawfull matrimonye. Cursed therfore be their deuillishe doctrine wyth false appea-pearing godlines, the fruit and power away, out of the hartes of all Christen men.

And when he bringeth the ensample of the heathen, I prayse him. For the heathen because they could not vnderstand God spiritually, to serue hym in the spirit, to beleue in him, and to loue his lawes, therfore they turned hys glory vnto an Image, and serued hym after their owne imagination with bodely seruice, as the whole kingdome of the Pope doth, hauing lesse power to serue hym in spirite then the Turkes. For when the heathē made an Image of the axes or seuers and sacrificed ther to, they knew that ỹ Image was not the seuers, but vnder ỹ similitude of ỹ Image, they worshipped the power of God which plagued them with the seuers, with bodely seruice, as the Pope doth aboue all the Idolaters that euer were in the worlde. As when we paint Saint Machael weying the soules, & sticke vp a candle to flatter him, and to make him fauourable vnto vs, and regarde not the testament of Christ, nor the lawes of God, because we haue no power to beleue nor to loue the truth. And euen so, to referre virginitie vnto the person of God, to please hym therwith, is false sacrifice and heathenishe Idolatrie. For the onely seruice of god is to beleue in Christ and to loue the lawe. wherfore thou must referre thy wedlocke, thy virginitie and all thy other deedes vnto the keepyng of the lawe and seruing thy neighbour only. And then whē thou lookest wyth a louing hart, on the law that saith, breake not wedlocke, keepe no whore and so forth, and findest thy body weake, and thyne office such that thou must haue conuersation with mēs wiues, daughters and seruauntes, then it is better to haue a wife thē to be without. And againe if thou see seruice to be done ỹ thou canst not so well do with a wyfe as without, then if thou haue power to be without, it is best so to be, and in such like. And els the one is as good as the other, and no difference. And to to take a wife for pleasure, is as good as to abstaine for displeasure.

S. Michaell weyeth soules.

The true seruice of God, what it is.

And when M. More seeth no other cause, why it is not best that our spiritualitie were all gelded, then for losse of merite in resistyng, besides that that imagination is playne Idolatrie, I hold M. More beguiled, if all we read of gelded men be true and the experience we see in other beastes. For then the gelded lust in their flesh as much as the vngelded. which if it be true, then the gelded, in that he taketh such great payne in geldyng, not to minishe his lustes, but if lustes ouercome him, yet that he haue not wherewith to hurt his neighbour, deserueth more then the vngelded. And then it were best that we did eate and drinke & make our flesh strōg that we burned, to deserue in resisting, as some of your holy Saintes haue layd virgins in their beddes, to kindle their courage, that they might after quench their heate in cold water, to deserue the merite of holy Martyrs.

Whether it were best that priestes were gelded.

And whē he sayth, the Priestes of the old law absteined from their wiues when they serued in the tēple. Many thynges were forbidden them, to kepe them in bonde and seruile feare & for other purposes. And yet I trow he findeth it not in the text that they were forbidden their wiues. And when he imagineth so because Zacharias, when his course was out, gat him home to his house, I thinke it was better for him to go to his house, then to send for his house to him, he was also old and his wife to. But and if they were forbidden, it was but for a tyme, to geue them to prayer, as we might do right well and as wel as they. But I read that they were forbidden to drinke wine & strong drinke, when they ministred: of whiche ours powre in without measure. Leuit. 10.

M. More. Christ liued chast and exhorteth vnto chastitie. More.

Tyndall. We be not all of Christes complection, neither exhorteth he to other chastitie then wedlocke, saue at a tyme to serue our neighbours. Now ỹ Popes chastitie is not to serue a mās neighbour, but to runne to riotte and to carie away with him the liuyng of the poore and of the true preacher, euen the tythes of v. or vi. Parishes and to go & either dwell by a stewes or to cary a stewes with him, or to corrupt other mens wiues. Tyndall.

Paphnutius a man that neuer proued Mariage is praysed in the stories, for resistyng such doctrine with Gods word in a generall Councell before the Pope was a God. And now M. More a man that hath proued it twise is magnified for defendyng it with sophistrie. And agayn me semeth that it is a great ouer sight of M. More to thinke that Christ though he were neuer maryed would not more accept the seruice of a maried mā that would more say truth for hym then they that abhorre wed- Paphnutius.

More had two wiues & therefore was Bigamus.

locke: in as much as the spiritualtie ac cept his humble seruice & reward his merites with so high honour, because he can better fayne for them, then any of their vnchast, I would say owne chast people, though he be Bigamus & past the grace of his necke verie.

And finally, if M. More loke so much on ỳ pleasure that is in Mariage, why setteth he not his eyes on the thankes geuyng for that pleasure, & on the pacience of other displeasures.

The xiiij. Chapter.

More. MOre. Wicleffe was the occasion of the vtter subuersion of the Realme of Boheme, both in faith and good liuing and of the losse of many a thousand liues.

Tyndall. Tyndall. The rule of their fayth are Christes promises, and the rule of their liuyng Gods law. And as for losse of liues, it is truth that the Pope slue I thinke an hundred thousand of them, because of their fayth & that they wold no lenger serue him. As he slue in England many a thousand, & slue the true kyng and set vp a false vnto the effusion of all the noble blond and murthe tyng vp of the communaltie, because he should be his defender.

The Pope a cruell tyraunt.

More. M. The constitution of the Byshops is not that the Scripture shall not be in English, but that no man may translate it by his owne authoritie or read it, vntill they had approued it.

Tyndall. Tyndall. If no translatiõ shalbe had vntill they geue licence or till they approue it, it shal neuer be had. And so it is all one in effect: to say there shalbe none at all in English, and to say, till we admitte it, seyng they be so malicious that they will none admitte, but fayne all the cauillations they can, to proue it were not expedient. So that if it be not had spite of their harts it shall neuer be had. And thereto, they haue done their best to haue had it enacted by Parlament, that it should not be in English.

The spiritualtie would not haue the scripture in Englishe.

The xv. Chapter.

Hunne. HE iesteth out Hunnes death with his Poetrie were with he built Utopia. Many great Lordes came to Baynardes Castell (but all nameles) to examine the cause (as ỳ credible Prelates so well learned, so holy and so indifferent whiche examined Bilney and Arture, be also all nameles.)

More. Horsey. M. Horsey tooke his pardon, because it is not good, to refuse Gods pardon and the kynges.

Tyndall. Tyndall Gods pardon can no man haue except he knowledge himselfe a sinner. And euen so he ỳ receaueth the kynges yeldeth him selfe giltie. And moreouer it is not possible ỳ he which putteth his trust in God, should for feare of the rych men or of his iudges, receaue pardon for that hee neuer was faultie vnto the dishonoring of our sauiour Iesus, but would haue denyed it rather vnto the death.

If we be not giltie, we neede no pardon.

And therto, if the matter were so cleare as ye iest it out, then I am sure the kynges graces both curtesie and wisedome, wold haue charged the iudges to haue examined the cuidẽce layd agaynst him diligẽtly & so to haue quit hym with more honesty then to geue him pardon of that he neuer trespassed in, and to haue rid the spiritualitie out of hate and all suspition.

More would excuse the murther of Hunne.

Hunne. Then sayth he Hunne was sore suspect of heresie and conuict. And after he sayth Hunne was an hereticke in deede and in perill so to be proued. And then how was he conuict? I heard say, that he was first conuict, whẽ he was dead and then they did wrõg to burne him, till they had spoken with him, to wete whether he would abiure or no.

More. M. The Byshop of London, was wise, vertuous and cunnyng.

Tyndall. Tyndall. For all those three yet he would haue made the old Deane Colet of Paules an hereticke, for translatyng the Pater noster in English, had not the Byshop of Canterbury holpe the Deane.

Doctour Colet.

The xvj. Chapter.

THe messenger asketh hym, if there be an old lawfull translatiõ before Wicleffes, how happeneth it that it is in so few mens handes, seyng so many desire it? He answereth the Printer dare not Print it and then hang on a doubtful triall, whether it were translated sence or before, for if it were trãslated sence, it must be first approued.

Olde translation.

What may not M. More say by authoritie of his Poetrie? there is a lawfull trãslation ỳ no mã knoweth, which is as much as no lawfull trãslatiõ. why might not ỳ bishops shew which were that lawfull trãslation & let it be Printed? May if that might haue bene obteined of thẽ with large money it had be Printed ye may be sure lõg yet this. But Sir answere me here vnto, how happeneth that ye defenders translate not one your selues, to cease the murmour of the people, & put to your own gloses, to preuent heretikes? ye would

And what can you ſay to this, how that beſides they haue done their beſt to diſanull all trāſlating by Parlament, they haue diſputed before the kynges grace, that is it perilous and not mete and ſo concluded that it ſhall not be, vnder a pretēce of deferring it of certein yeares: where M. More was their ſpeciall Orator, to fayne lyes for their purpoſe.

More. M. Nothyng diſcourageth the Clergie ſo much as that they of the worſte ſorte moſt calleth after it.

Tyndall. Tyndall. It might well be, Phariſeis full of holyneſſe long not after it, but Publicans that hunger after mercy might ſore deſire it. Howbeit, it is in very deede a ſuſpect thyng & a great ſigne of an heretike to require it.

The ſcripture was firſt deliuered to the people in their vulgare tonng

Then he inggleth with allegories. Syr Moſes deliuered them all that he had receaued of God & that in the mother toung, in which all that had the hart therto ſtudied and not the Prieſts onely as thou mayſt ſee in the Scripture. And the Apoſtles kept nothyng behind, as Paul teſtified Actes xx. how he had ſhewed them all the counſell of God & had kept nought backe. Shuld the lay people leſſe hearken vnto the expoſitions of the Prelates in doubtfull places, if the text were in their handes when they preached?

More. M. The Iewes geue great reuerence vnto the Bible and we ſit on it.

Tyndall. Tyndall. The Pope putteth it vnder his feete and treadeth on it, in tokē that he is Lord ouer it that it ſhould ſerue him, and he not it.

More. M. God hath ordeined the ordinaries for chief Phiſitions.

Tyndall. Tyndall. They be Lawyers ordeined of the Pope, and can no more ſkill of the Scripture then they that neuer ſaw it: ye and haue profeſſed a contrary doctrine. They be right hangmen to murther who ſoeuer deſireth for that doctrine that God hath genē to be the ordinary of our fayth and liuyng.

The ordinaries are hangmē to ſuch as deſire the knowledge of the ſcripture.

And when he maketh ſo great difficultie and hardneſſe in Paules Epiſtles. I ſay, it is impoſſible to vnderſtand eyther Peter or Paul or ought at all in ỹ ſcripture, for him that denieth ỹ iuſtifiyng of faith in Chriſtes bloud. And agayn, it is impoſſible to vnderſtād in ỹ ſcripture more then a Turke, for whoſoeuer hath not the lawe of God, written in his hart to fulfill it. Of which pointe and of true faith to, I feare me that you are voyde and empty with all your ſpiritualtie, whoſe defender ye haue taken vppon you to bee, for to mocke out the truth for lucre and vaſſtage.

Noone can vnderſtand the Scripture except he knewe Chriſt to be his iuſtification.

An aunſwere to M. Mores fourth booke.

CHriſtes church hath the true doctrine already, and the ſelfe ſame that S. Paule woulde not geue an Angell audience vnto the contrary. More.

Tyndall. But the Popes Church will not heare that doctrine. Tyndall.

More. Confirmed with ſuch a multitude of miracles, and ſo much bloud of martyrs, and commō conſent of all Chriſtendome. More.

Tyndall. Who ſhewed a miracle to confirme his preaching of eare confeſſion and pardons with like pedlery? or who ſhed his bloud for them? I can ſhew you many thouſandes that ye haue ſlayne for preaching the contrary. And agayne, Grecia the one halfe of Chriſtendome cōſenteth not vnto thē, which Greckes, if ſuch thinges had come from the Apoſtles, ſhould haue had them er ye. Tyndall.

Eare confeſſion and pardons were neuer confirmed by miracle.

More. M. The ſpiritualtie be not ſo tender eared, but that they may heare their ſinnes rebuked. More.

Tyndall. They conſent not vnto the way of truth, but ſinne of malice, and of profeſſiō. And therfore as they haue no power to repent, euen ſo can they not but perſecute both him that rebuketh them and his doctrine to, after the enſamples of the Phariſeis and all tyrauntes that begunne before, namely, if the preacher touch any ground wher by they ſhould be reformed, or by what meanes they maintaine their miſchief. The ſecond Chapter.

More. A Fryers liuiug that hath maryed a Nunne, maketh it eaſie to know that his doctrine is not good. More.

Tyndall. The profeſſion of either other is plaine Idolatry, and deceauing of a mās ſoule and robbing him of his good, and taken vpon them ignorantly therto. Wherfore when they be come vnto the knowledge of the truth, they ought no longer therein to abyde, but the Popes forbyddyng Matrimony Tyndall.

Pope forbiddeth matrimony & the eatyng of meates.

and to eate of meates created of God for mans vse, which is deuillishe doctrine by Paules prophesie, hys geuing licence to hold whores, his continuall occupiyng of Princes in shedding of Christen bloud, his robbing of ỹ poore thorowghout Christendome of all that was geuen to maintaine them, his setting vp in Rome a stues not of womẽ onely, but of the male kynde also agaynst nature, and a thousand abhominations to grosse for a Turke, are tokens good inough that he is ỹ right Antichrist and his doctrine sprong of the deuill.

The wicked & monstrous doynges of the Pope.

More. In penaunce Martin saith there needeth no contricion nor satisfaction.

More.

Tyndall. Call it repentaunce and thẽ it is contricion of it selfe. And as for mendes making with worldly things, that do to thy brother whom thou hast offended, and vnto God offer the repẽtaunce of thine hart, and the satisfaction of Christes bloud.

Tyndall.

M. Tyndall saith that the confessour vttereth the confessions of them that be rich. But yet we see that both rich and poore keepe whores openly without paying peny.

More.

Tyndall. If they be very rich they be suffered, because they may be good defenders of the spiritualty, and if they be very poore, because they haue no money to pay, or els they fine with one or other secretly.

Tyndall.

More. Vppon that lye Tyndall buildeth the destruction of the sacrament of penaunce.

More.

Tyndall. Sacrament is a signe signifiyng what I should do or beleue, or both. As Baptim is the signe of repẽtaunce, signifiyng that I must repent of euill, and beleue to be saued therfrõ by the bloud of Christ. Now Syr in your penaunce describe vs which is ỹ signe and the outward sacrament, and what is the thing that I must do or beleue, and then we will ensearch whether it may be a sacrament or no.

Tyndall.

All Sacramentes teach vs what to do, or what to beleue.

More. Tyndall saith that confession is the worst inuention that euer was.

More.

Tyndall. As ye fashion it meane I, and of that filthy priapishe confession which ye shew in the eare wherewyth ye exclude ỹ forgeuenes that is in Christes bloud for all that repent and beleue therein, and make the people beleue that their sinnes be neuer forgeuen vntill they be shriuen vnto the Priest, and thẽ for no other cause saue that they haue there tolde them, and for the holy deedes to come which the confessour hath enioyned them more profitable ofttimes for himselfe then any man els.

Tyndall.

Eare confession destroyeth the benefite of Christes bloud.

More. Neuer man had grace to spie that before Tyndall.

More.

Tyndall. Yes very many. For many nacions neuer receaued it. And the Greekes when they had proued it, and saw the baudery that followed of it, put it downe agayne. For which cause and to know all secretes, and to leade the consciences captiue, the Pope falsely maintaineth it.

Tyndall.

M. What fruit would then come of penaunce?

More.

Tyndall. Of your iuggling terme penaunce I can not affirme. But of repentaunce would come this fruit, that no man that had it, should sinne wyllingly, but euery man should continually fight against his flesh.

Tyndall. Repẽtaũce

More. He teacheth that the sacrament hath no vertue at all, but by faith onely.

More.

Tynd. The fayth of a repẽting soule in Christes bloude doth iustifie onely. And the sacramẽt standeth in as good stead as a liuely preacher. And as the preacher iustifieth me not, but my faith in the doctrine: euen so the signe iustifieth not, but the faith in the promise which the sacrament signifieth & preacheth. And to preach is all the vertue of the sacrament. And where the sacramentes preach not, there they haue no vertue at all. And sir we teach not as ye do, to beleue in the sacrament or in holy church, but to beleue the sacrament and holy church.

Tyndall. Sacramẽt

More. He teacheth that fayth suffiseth vnto saluation without good workes.

More. Fayth.

Tyndall. The Scripture sayth, that assoone as a man repenteth of euill, & beleueth in Christes bloud, he obtayneth mercy immediatly, because he should loue God, and of that loue do good woorkes, and that he tarieth not in sinne stil till he haue done good workes, and then is first forgeuen for hys workes sake, as the Pope beareth his in hand, excluding the vertue of Christes bloud. For a man must be first reconciled vnto God by Christ and in Gods fauour, yer his workes can be good and pleasaunt in the sight of god. But we say not as some damnably lye on vs, that we should do euill to be iustified by faith, as thou maist see Rom. iij. how they sayde of the Apostles for like preaching.

Tyndall.

to the person of God to buy out thy sin therewith, is to make an Idole of god or a creature. But if thou referre thy worke vnto thy neighbours profite or taming of thine owne flesh, then thou pleasest God therwith.

More. More. Item that a man can do no good woorke.

Tyndall. Tyndall. It is false. But he sayth a man can do no good woorke till he beleue that his sinnes be forgeuen hym in Christ, and till he loue Gods lawe, and haue obtayned grace to woorke with. And then sayth he that we cā not do our workes so perfectly, by the reason of our corrupte flesh, but that there is some imperfectnes therein, as in the workes of them that be not their craftes master. which is yet not reckoned, because they do their good willes, and be scholers & goe to schole to learne to do better.

We can do no good worke except we beleue that our sinnes are forgeuē in Christ.

More. M. Item that the good and righteous man sinneth alway in doing well.

Sinne. Tyndall. Tyndall. In all his woorkes there lacketh somewhat and is a taunte vntil he do thē with as great loue vnto his neighbour as Christ did for him and as long as there is more resistaunce in his flesh then was in Christes, or lesse hope in God: and then no lenger.

More. M. Item that no sinne damneth a man saue vnbeleffe.

Vnbeliefe. Tyndall. Tyndall. what soeuer a man hath done, if he repent and beleue in Christ, it is forgeuen him. And so it foloweth, that no sinne dāneth saue there where there is no belefe.

More. M. Item that we haue no frewill to do ought therewith, though the grace of God be ioined therto, and that God doth all in vs both good and bad and we doe but suffer as waxe doth of the workemā.

Frewill. Tyndall. Tyndall. First where hee affirmeth that we say, our will is not free to doe good and to helpe to compel the members, when God hath geuen vs grace to loue his lawes, is false. But we say that we haue no frewill to captiuate our wittes and vnderstandyng, for to beleue the pope in what soeuer he sayth without reason geuing, when we find in the Scripture contrary testimonie, and see in hym so great falsehead and deedes so abhominable and thereto all the signes by which the Scripture teacheth vs to know Antichrist.

We haue no free will to preuent grace & prepare our selues.

And we affirme that we haue no fre will to preuent God & his grace, & before grace prepare our selues thereto, neither cā we consent vnto God before grace be come. For vntil god haue preuēted vs & powred ỹ spirit of his grace into our soules, to loue his lawes, and hath grauē thē in our harts by the outward ministration of his true preacher and inward worcking of his spirite or by inspiratiō onely, we know not God as he is to be knowen nor feele ỹ goodnesse or any swetnesse in his law. How then can we consent thereto? Sayth not the text, that we can do no good while we be euill, and they which seke glorie and to clyme in honour aboue their brethren can not beleue the truth, and that whores, theues, murtherers, extortioners & such like haue no parte in the kyngdome of God & Christ nor any felyng therof? And who shall take those diseases from them? God onely through his mercy, for they cā not put of that complection of them selues, vn till they be taught to beleue and to fele that it is dannable and to consent vnto the contrary liuing. Math. 12. Iohn. 5. 1. Cor. 6. The hearing of gods worde causeth repentaunce.

And vnto the second part I aunswere, that in respect of God we doe but suffer onely and receaue power to do all our deedes whether we do good or bad, as Christ aunswered Pylate, that hee could haue no power agaynst him except it were geuen him from aboue, and no more could Iudas neither. But in respect of ỹ thing, wherin or wherwith we worke and sheade out agayne the power that we haue receaued, we woorke actually. As the axe doth nothyng in respect of the hād that heweth, saue receaue: but in respect of the tree that is cut, it worketh actually & powreth out agayne the power that it hath receaued. Iohn. 19. There can be no repentaunce in vs but god doth first worke in vs by hys grace.

More. M. Item that God is author of good and euill: as wel of the euill will of Iudas in betraying Christ, as of the good will of Christ in sufferyng his passion.

Tyndall. Tyndall. The power wherewith we do good and euill is of God & the will is of God. As ỹ power which the murtherer abuseth and wherewith he killeth a man vnrightcously is of God & the will wherewith he willeth it. But the wickednesse of his wil and crokednesse or frowardnesse wherewith hee sleath vnrightcously, to anēge him selfe & to satisfie his owne lustes, & the cause why he knoweth not the law of God and consenteth not to it, whiche law should haue informed his will and corrected the crokednesse therof and haue taught him to vse his will & his power right, is his blindnesses fault onely and not Gods. Whiche blindnesse the deuill hath poysoned him with. All power that we haue to good or euill is of God: But ỹ croked and naughty vsage of the same is of our owne cankerd & corrupt nature.

More. Matrimonye. Tyndall.

M. Item matrimonie is no Sacramēt.

Tyndall. Matrimonie is a similitude of the kyngdome of heauen, as are many thynges mo, like as it appeareth by Christ in the Gospell. But who institute it to be a Sacrament? Or who at his mariage was taught the signification of it? who was euer bound to receaue it in the name of a Sacrament. I would to Christes bloud that ye wold make a Sacrament of it vnto all men and women that be maryed and vnto all other, and would at euery mariage teach the people to know the benefite of Christ through the similitude of Matrimony. And I affirme that in the popes Churche there is no Sacrament. For where no signification is, there is no Sacrament. A signe is no signe vnto him that vnderstādeth nought therby: as a speech is no speech vnto him that vnderstādeth it not. I would to Christes passion that ye would let them be Sacramentes which Christ institute & ordeined for Sacramentes. And then if ye make of your own braynes fiue hūdred therto I would not be so greatly greued, though I would not geue my consent vnto so great a multitude, partly for the bondage, and specially lest we should in tyme to come, the significations of them lost, fall into Idolatrie agayne and make holy workes of them, after the exāple of the blindnesse wherin we be now, but I would haue the worde euer liuely preached out of the playne text.

Matrimony cā be no Sacramēt except a doctrine be added therunto that the people may know the benefite of Christ that we haue by matrimony

More. Orders. Tyndall.

M. Item that all holy orders bee but mens inuention.

Tyndall. The office of an Apostle, Bysshop, Priest, Deacon, and widow, are of God: But as concerning the shauyng, the oylyng and diuersitie of rayment and many degrees sence added therto, proue that they be but mens traditions. But and ye will make Sacramentes of the oylyng, shauyng, shetyng, and garmentes, put their significations vnto them and let the kyngs grace compell them to keepe them and I admitte them for Sacramentes, and vntill that tyme I hold them for the false signes of hypocrites.

No Sacrament is wout signification.

More. Cōsecrate. Tyndall.

M. Item that euery man and woman is a Priest and maye consecrate the body of Christ.

Tyndall. In bodyly seruice if the officer appoynted be away, euery other person not onely may, but also is bold to helpe at neede, euen so much as hys neighbours dogge. How much more then ought men to assiste one an other in the health of their soules, at al times of nede: if the man be away, the womā may and is bound to Baptise in tyme of nede, by the law of loue, which office perteineth vnto the priest onely. If she be Lady ouer the greatest ordeined by God, that she may Baptise, why should she not haue power also ouer the lesse, to minister the ceremonies whiche the Pope hath added to, as his oyle, his salt, his spitell, his candle and cresom-cloth? And why might she not pray all the prayers, except that Idole the pope be greater then the very God: if womē had brought a child to Church & while the Priest & other men tayed the child were in ieoperdy, might they not baptise him in the font, if there were no other water by? And if other water were by, yet if that holpe better one mite, loue requireth to baptise him therin. And then why might not women touch all their other oyle? If a woman learned in Christ were driuen vnto an Ile where Christ was neuer preached, might she not there preach and teach to minister the Sacraments and make officers? The case is possible, shew thē what should let that she might not: loue thy neighbour as thy selfe doth cōpel. Nay, she may not consecrat. why: If the pope loued vs as wel as Christ, hee would finde no faulte therewith, though a womā at nede ministred that Sacrament if it bee so necessary as ye make it. In bodyly wealth, he that would haue me one ace lesse then hym selfe, loueth me not as well as himselfe how much more ought we to loue one an other in thynges pertainyng vnto the soule?

Womē that are discreete and discrete may in cases of necessitie minister the Sacramentes as well as the Priest.

More. Sacrifice. Tyndall.

M. Item that the host is no sacrifice.

Tyndall. Christ is no more killed. It is therfore the Sacrament: signe & memoriall of that sacrifice wherewith Christ offered his body for our sinnes and commaūded saying, this do in the remembraunce of me. We be not holpe with any visible deede that the Priest there doth, saue in that it putteth vs in remembraunce of Christes death & passion for our sinnes. As the garmentes and straunge holy gestures, helpe vs not, but in that they put vs in remembraunce of thynges that Christ suffered for vs in his passion. Euen so the shewyng, breakyng, and eatyng of the host, the shewyng and drinkyng of the cup of Christes bloud, and the wordes and the consecration, helpe vs not a pinne, nor are gods seruice, saue onely in that they stirre vp our repentyng fayth to call call to mynde the death and passion of Christ for our sinnes. And therfore to call it a sacrifice, is but abused speach, as when we call one that is new come home to breakfast and set a Capon before him and say, this is your welcome home, meaning yet by that speach, that it is but a signe of ỹ loue of myne hart which reioyseth and is glad that he is come home safe and sounde. And euen so is this but the memoriall of the very sacrifice of Christ once done for al. And if ye wold no otherwise meane, ye shal haue my good will to call it so still, or if ye can shew me a reason of some other meanyng. And therfore I would that it had bene called (as it in deede is and as it was commaũded to be) Christes memoriall, though that I doubt not but that it was called Masse of his Hebrue woord Misach, which signifieth a a pension geuyng, because that at euery Masse, mẽ gaue euery man a portiõ accordyng vnto his power vnto the sustentation of the poore. which offering yet remayneth. But to a false vse and profite of them that haue too much, as all other thinges are peruerted.

An ensample.

The supper of the Lord is geuen vs to be a memoriall of his death once offered for all.

Christes memoriall Masse.

Finally it is the same thinge that it was when Christ institute it at hys last supper. If it were then the very sacrificing of Christes body, and had that same vertue and power with it that his very passion after wrought, why was he sacrificed so cruelly on the morow, and not holde excused therwyth, seyng he was there verely sacrificed?

More. M. Item that there remayneth bread and wine in the sacrament.

Bread.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Improue it. What is that that is broken, and that the Priest eateth wyth hys teeth, ayre onely? if a childe were fed with no other foode he should wax haply as long as his father. wherof then should his body, his flesh and bones grow? wherof should that come (with reuerence I speake it) that he pisseth and so forth? all by miracle will they say. O what wonderfull miracles must we faine to saue Antichristes doctrine, I might wyth as good reason say that the hoste is neyther rounde nor white, but that as my mouth is deceaued in the tast of bread, euen so mine eyes are in the syght of roundnes, and so is there nothing at all. which all are but the disputations of men with corrupt myndes, without spirite to iudge. Neuer the later when the Priest hath once rehearsed the testament of our sauiour thereon. I looke not on bread and wine, but on the body of Christ broken, and blond shed for my sinnes, and by that fayth am I saued from the damnation of my sinnes. Neyther come I to Masse for any other purpose then to set forgeuenes for Christes deathes sake, nor for any other purpose say I Confiteor, & knowledge my sinnes at the beginning of Masse. And if ye haue other doctrine, teach vs a reason & leade vs in light, & we will follow. Christ sayth John. vi. it is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing at all, the woordes which I speake saith he are spirite and lyfe. That is, the fleshely eatyng and drinking of Christes body and blonde profit not, as his carnall presence profited not, by the reason of his presence onely, as ye see by Judas and ỹ Pharisei, and the souldiours that touched hym, and how his bodely presence did let the disciples to vnderstand spiritually. But to eate and drinke in the spirite, that is, to harken vnto his woordes, and with a repenting hart to beleue in hys death, bringeth vs all that Christ can do for vs.

The corrupt and bayne disputations of men to proue christ to be really in the Sacrament.

John. vi.

More. Masse. More. Item that the masse auaileth no man but the Priest.

Tyndall. Tyndall. If ye speake of the prayers, his prayers helpe vs as much as ours him. If ye speake of ỹ sacramẽt, it helpeth as many as be present as much as hym, if moued therby they beleue in Christes death as well as he. If they be absent, the sacrament profiteth them as much as a sermon made in the church helpeth them that be in ỹ fieldes. And how profiteth it the soules of the deade tell me, vnto whome it is no signe?

The Sacrament of Christes body when it is faithfully ministred doth profite as many as do beleue in Christes death.

If ye meane the carnall eating and drinking, then it profiteth the Priestes onely, for he eateth and drinketh vppe all alone, and geueth no man parte wyth hym.

More. More. Item that a man should not be howseled till he lay a dying.

Tyndall. Tynd. That is to shameleese a lye.

More. Touch. Tyndall. M. Item that men and women should not spare to touch it.

Tynd. A perillous case. why? Because the Pope hath not oyled them. Neuertheleese Christ hath annointed them wyth hys spirite and wyth hys bloud. But wot ye why? The Pope thinketh if they should be too busie in handeling it, they woulde beleue that there were bread, and for that cause to strength their faythes, he hath imagined little prety thinne manchetes that shine thorow, and seeme more lyke to be made of paper or fine Parchement then of wheate floure. About which was no smale question in Oxforde of late dayes, whether it were bread or none: some affirming that the floure with long lying in water was turned to starch, and had lost his nature.

More. Worship. M. Item that the sacramēt should not be worshipped.

Tyndall. Tyndall. It is the Sacrament of Christes body and bloud. And Christ calleth it the newe and euerlasting testament in hys bloud, and commaunded that we shoulde so do in the remembraunce of hym, that hys bodye was broken and his bloude shed for our sinnes. And Paule commaundeth thereby to shewe or preach the Lords death. They say not pray to it, neither put any fayth therein. For I may not beleue in the sacramēt, but I must beleue the Sacrament, that it is a true signe, and it true that is signified therby (which is the onely worshippyng of the Sacrament, if ye geue it other worship ye plainly dishonour it). As I may not beleue in Christes Church, but beleue Christes Church, that the doctrine which they preach of Christ is true. If ye haue any other doctrine, teach vs a reason and lead vs in light, and we will follow.

The true worshipping of the Sacramēt, is to beleue that it is a true signe that Christ suffered death for vs.

More. More. Item that a Christē is not bound to keepe any lawe made by man or any at all.

Tyndall. Tynd. You say vntruely: a Christē man is bound to obey tyranny: if it be not agaynst hys fayth nor the lawe of God, vntill God deliuer him therof. But he is no Christen man that byndeth hym to any thing saue that which lone and his neighbours necessitie requireth of them.

And when a lawe made, is no longer profitable, Christen rulers ought to breake it. But now a dayes whē tyraunts haue gotten the simple people vnder, they compell thē to serue theyr lustes and wyly tyranny, without respect of any common wealth. which wyly tyranny, because the truth rebuketh it, is the cause why they persecute it, least the common people seing how good they should be, and feeling how wicked they are, shuld withdraw their neckes frō their vnrighteous yooke. As ye haue ensample in Herode, in the Scribes and Pharisees, and in many other.

More. Purgatory. More. Item that there is no Purgatory.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Beleue in Christ and thou shalt shortly finde purgatoryes inow, as ye now make other feele.

More. Soules sleepe. Tyndall. M. Item that all soules lye and sleepe till domes day.

Tyndall. And ye in putting them in heauen, hell, and purgatory, destroy ꝑ argumentes wherwith Christ & Paul proue the resurrection. What God doth with them, that shall we know when we come to them. The true faith putteth the resurrection which we be warned to looke for euery houre. The Heathen Philosophers denying that, did put that the soules did euer lyue. And the Pope ioyneth the spirituall doctrine of Christ and the fleshly doctrine of philosophers together, things so contrary that they can not agree, no more then the spirite and the flesh do in a Christen man. And because the fleshly mynded Pope consenteth vnto heathen doctrine, therefore he corrupteth the scripture to stablish it. Moses sayth in Deut. the secrete thinges pertaine vnto the Lord, and the thynges that be opened pertaine vnto vs, that we do all that is written in the booke. wherfore Sir if we loued the lawes of God and would occupy our selues to fulfill them, and woulde on the other side be meeke and let God alone wyth hys secretes and suffer him to be wiser then we, we should make none article of the faith of this or that. And againe, if the soules be in heauen, tell me why they be not in as good case as the Angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?

The soules departed rest at Gods will & pleasure.

Deut. 29.

More. Saintes. Tyndall. M. Item no man shall pray to saintes.

Tyndall. When ye speake wyth saintes that be departed, it is not euill to put them in remembraunce to pray for you.

More. Tyndall. M. Why do they not heare vs?

Tyndall. If they loue you so fermētly and be so great with God, why certifie they you not, that they so do?

More. Tyndall. More. So they do in that we feele our peticions graunted.

Tyndall. God saued the olde Idolaters with worldly saluacion, and gaue them their peticions, which they yet asked of their Idoles, as ye see thorow out all the olde testament. God heareth the crowes, foules, beastes, and wormes of the earth, as the text saith, men and beastes doth God saue, which beastes yet pray not to God.

The Iewes and Turkes doth god saue in this worlde, and geueth them their worldly peticions, which yet worship not God, as his godly nature is to Saintes are not to be called vpon, for we haue no promise nor assurance that either they heare vs or can helpe vs.

to be worshipped but after their owne imagination: not in the spirite wyth fayth, hope, and loue, but wyth bodely seruice as the Pope doth. As the popishe serue S. Appoline for the tooth ache and are healed: euen so the Iewes and Turkes be healed and pray not to her, but serue God after an other maner for the same disease. So that God doth saue in this world all that keepe ỹ worldely lawes worldely, that is to wete, outwarde in the body for bodely rewarde and not in the hart of loue that springeth out of the mercy that God hath geuen vs in Christ, which same, though they be Turkes, if they breake the worldly lawes, he rebuketh them, as the Niniuites and punisheth them diuersly. And if they knowledge their sinne and mende, he healeth them agayne. But and if they harden and sinne as beastes, and will not amend, he destroyeth them vtterly as the Sodomites. And yet all such haue no part in the life to come.

The children of god are obedient to hys lawes.

But with his children in whose hartes he writeth the fayth of hys sonne Iesus and the loue of his lawes, he goeth otherwise to worke hys lawes in their will: and their peticions are his honour & their neighbours welth: and that he will prouide them of all thinges necessary vnto this life, and gouerne them that their hartes be not ouercome of euill. And he heareth thē vnto his honour and their euerlasting saluation, and purgeth them and teacheth them thinges wherof the popish and all they whose hartes the God of this world hath blynded, to serue God with workes, hath no feelyng.

Images.

And when he sayth, that the Emperour and that coūsell which decreed that Images for the abuse should be put out of the church, were heretikes. It is much easier so to say, then so to proue. Understand therefore, that Images were not yet receaued in the Churche in the tyme of S. Hierome, at the least waye generally, whether in some one place or no, I can not tell. For S. Hierome rehearseth of one Epiphanius a Byshop in the countrey of Cipres, & that the most perfect of all ỹ Byshops of hys tyme, how that the sayd Epiphanius & the Byshop of Ierusalem went together to Bethell, & by the way they entred into a Churche for to pray and there found a vayle hāgyng before the doore and an image: paynted thereon, as it had bene of Christ or some Saint.

Hierome.

Images were not allowed in the primitiue church

For the Byshop was so moued therwith because sayth S. Hierome, that it was contrary to the Scripture, that he cut & counseled to bury some dead therin, and sent an other cloth to hāg in the stede. And afterward when they were crept in a litle and litle: there was no worshyppyng of them, at the least waye generally vntill the tyme of S. Gregory.

Ephanius cut the Image.

In so much that when Cirenus the Byshop of Massilia offēded with the superstitiousnes of the people burnt thē, S. Gregory wrote that he should not destroy the Images, but teach onely that the people should not worshyp them. But whē it was so farre come that the people worshypped them with a false fayth (as we now know no other vse) and were no longer memorials onely, then the Byshops of Greece & the Emperour gathered them together, to prouide a remedy agaynst that mischief & cōcluded that they should be put downe for the abuse, thinkyng it so most expedient, hauyng for them, first the example of God whom a man may boldly folow, which commaunded in the begynning of all his preceptes, that there should be no image vsed to worship or pray before, not for the Image it selfe, but for the weakenesse of hys people: and hauyng agayne before their eyes; that the people were fallen vnto Idolatrie and imageseruyng by the reason of them.

Gregory Cirenus.

A Councel gathered in Greece byd put downe all Images.

Now aunswere me, by what reason canst thou make an hereticke of hym, that concludeth nought agaynst God, but worketh with God & putteth that blocke out of the way, where at his brother the price of Christes bloud stōbleth and loseth his soule. They put not downe the images for hate of God and of his Saintes, no more then Ezechias brake the brasen Serpēt for enuy of the great miracle that was wrought by it, or in spite of God that commaūded it to be kept for a memoriall. But to kepe the people in the true faith onely. Now seyng we may be all without images & to put them downe is not agaynst Gods cōmaūdemēt but with it, namely if they be abused, to the dishonour of God and hurt of our neighbours, where is charitie, if thou which knowest the truth and canst vse thyne image wel, wilt not yet forbeare thyne image and suffer it to be put out of the way, for thy weake brothers sake whō thou seest perish there through? yea & what thyng maketh both the Turke &

Ezechias.

Images are not to be had in Churches.

the Jew abhorre our fayth ſo much as our imageſeruice? But the Pope was then glad to finde an occaſion to picke a quarell with the Emperour, to get the Empire into hys owne handes, which thyng he brought to paſſe with the ſword of Fraunce & clame ſo highe that euerſence he hath put his own authoritie in ſtede of Gods word in euery generall Councell and hath concluded what him liſte, as agaynſt all gods word and agaynſt all charitie he condemned that bleſſed dede of that Councell and Emperour.

More. Our Lady. M. They blaſpheme our Lady and all Saintes.

Tyndall. Tyndall. That is vntrue. We honour our bleſſed Lady and all holye Saintes and folow their fayth and liuing vnto the vttermoſt of our power and ſubmit our ſelues to be ſcholers of the ſame ſchole.

More. M. They may not abyde Salue regina.

Salue Regina. Tyndall. Tyndall. For therin is much blaſphemie vnto our bleſſed Lady, becauſe Chriſt is our hope and lyfe onely and not ſhe. And ye in aſcribyng vnto her that ſhe is not, diſhonour God & worſhyp her not.

More. M. They ſay if a woman beyng alyue beleue in God and loue him as much as our Lady, ſhe may helpe with her prayers as much as our Lady.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Tell why not. Chriſt whē it was told him that his mother & his brethren ſought him, aunſwered, that his mother, his ſiſters and his brethrē were all they that did his fathers will. And vnto ỹ womā that ſayd to Chriſt, bleſſed be the wombe that bare the and pappes that gaue thee ſucke, Chriſt aunſwered, May bleſſed are they that heare the word of God & keepe it. As Paule ſayth. 1. Cor. ix. I haue nought to reioyce though I preach, for neceſſitie lyeth vpon me, and wo is me, if I preach not. If I do it vnwillingly, an office is committed vnto me, but and if I do it with a good will, then I haue a reward. So now carnall bearyng of Chriſt and carnall geuyng hym ſucke make not our Lady great. But our bleſſed Ladyes greatneſſe is her fayth and loue wherein ſhe exceeded other. Wherfore if God gaue his mercy that an other woman were in thoſe twoo poyntes equall with her, why were ſhe not like great and her prayers as much heard.

Math. 12. Luke. xi. The prayers of all good womē are aſwell accepted of God as the prayers of our Lady.

More. Croſſe. M. Item that men ſhould not worſhip the holy croſſe.

Tyndall. Tyndall. With no falſe worſhip and ſuperſtitious fayth, but as I haue ſaid, to haue it in reuerence for the memoriall of him that dyed theron.

More. M. Item Luther hateth the feſtes of the croſſe and of Corpus Chriſti.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Not for enuy of the croſſe which ſinned not in the death of Chriſt nor of malice toward the bleſſed body of Chriſt, but for the idolatrie vſed in thoſe feſtes.

More. Vow. M. Item that no man or woman is bound to kepe any vow.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Lawfull vowes are to be kept vntill neceſſitie breake them. But vnlawful vowes are to be broken immediatly.

More. Martine. Tyndall. M. Martine appealed vnto the next generall Councell that ſhould bee gathered in the holy ghoſt, to ſeke a long delay.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Of a truth that were a lōg delay. For ſhould Martine liue, till the Pope would gather a Councell in the holy ghoſt or for any godly purpoſe, he were like to be for euery heere of hys head a thouſand yeares old.

Martine. Then bringeth he in the inconſtancie of Martine, becauſe he ſaith in his later booke, how that he ſeeth further then in his firſt. Paraduenture, he is kynne to our Doctours whiche when with preachyng agaynſte pluralities they haue got them three or foure benefices, alledge the ſame excuſe. But yet to ſay the truth the very Apoſtles of Chriſt learned not all truth in one day. For long after the Aſcention they wiſt not that the heathē ſhould be receaued vnto the fayth. How then could Martin (brought vp in the blyndneſſe of your ſect aboue xl. yeares) ſpye out all your falſehead in one day.

Ill falſehode is not eſpyed out in one day.

More. M. Martine offered at Wormes before the Emperour and all the Lordes of Germany, to abyde by his booke and to diſpute, which he might well doe, ſithens he had his ſafe conduct that he ſhould haue no bodyly harme.

Tyndall. Tyndall. O mercyful God, how come ye out your owne ſhame? ye cā not diſpute except ye haue a mā in your owne daunger to do hym bodyly harme, to diote him after your faſhion, to tormēt him and to murther him. If ye might haue had him at your pleaſure, ye wold haue diſputed with him: firſt with ſophiſtrie and corrupting the Scripture: Lo then with offeryng hym promotions: thē with the ſword. So that ye would haue bene ſure, to haue ouercome hym with one Argument or other.

More. Martine. M. He would agree on no Iudges.

Tyndall. Tyndall. What Iudges offered ye hym, hym, saue blynd Bysshops and Cardinals, enemyes of all truth, whose promotions and dignities they feare to be plucked from them, if the truth came to light, or such Judases as they had corrupt with money to maynteine their sect? The Apostles might haue admitted as well the heathen Bishops of Idoles to haue bene their iudges as he them. But he offered you autenticke Scripture and the hartes of the whole world. which yͤ iudges, if ye had good consciẽces and trust in God, ye would not haue refused.

The iii. Chapter.

THe fourth Chapter is not the first Doctrie that he hath fayned.

The v. Chapter.

IN the end of the fift he vntruly reporteth, that Martine sayth, no man is bound to kepe any vowe. Lawfull promises are to be kept, and vnlawfull to be broken.

The vj. Chapter.

IN the beginning of the vi. he describeth Martine after the example of his own nature, as in other places he describeth God after the complection of Popes, Cardinals & worldly tyrants.

More. Martin. M. Martin will abyde, but by the Scripture onely.

Tyndall. Tyndall. And ye will come at no scripture onely: And as for the old doctours ye will heare as litle, saue where it pleaseth you, for all your crying, old holy fathers. For tell me this, why haue ye in England condẽned the vnion of Doctours, but because ye would not haue your falshead disclosed by the doctrine of them.

Union.

More. M. They say, that a Christen man is discharged of all lawes spirituall and temporall saue the Gospell.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Ye iuggle, we say that no Christen man ought to bynde his brother violently, vnto any law wherof he could not geue a reason out of Christes doctrine and out of ỹ law of love. And on the other side we say, that a Christen man is called to suffer wrong and tyranny (thoughno man ought to bynde hym) vntill God rid vs therof: so farre yet as the tyranny is not directly agaynst the law of God and sayth of Christ, and no further.

How far a Christen man is bounde to suffer.

More. More. Martin was the cause of the destruction of the vplandish people of Germanie.

Tyndall. Tyndall. That is false, for then he coulde not haue escaped himselfe. Martin was as much the cause of their cõfusion, as Christ of the destruction of Jerusalem. The Duke elector of Saxon came from the warre of those vplandishe people and other Dukes with him into Wittenberge where Martin is, with xv. hundred men of armes, so that Martin if he had bene giltie, coulde not haue gonne quite. And therto all the Dukes and Lordes that cleaue vnto the word of God this day, were no lesse cumbred with theyr common people then other men.

Then after the loudest maner he setteth out the cruelnes of the Emperors souldiours which they vsed at Rome: but he maketh no mention of the treason which holy church wrought secretly, wherwith the men of warre were so set on fire.

The viij. Chapter.

More. M. What good deede will he do, that beleueth Martin, how that we haue no frewill to do any good with the helpe of grace.

Tyndall. Tyndall. O Poete without shame.

More. More. What harme shall he care to forbeare, that beleueth Luther, how god alone, without our will worketh all the mischiefe that they do.

Tyndall. Tyndall. O naturall sonne of the father of all lies.

More. More. What shall he care, how long he liue in sinne that beleueth Luther, that he shall after this life feele neyther good nor euill in bodye nor soule vntyll the day of dome?

Tyndall. Tyndall. Christ and hys Apostles taught no other, but warned to looke for Christes comming agayne euery houre. which comming agayne, because ye beleue will neuer be, therfore haue ye fayned that other marchaundise.

More. M. Martins bookes be open, if ye will not beleue vs.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Nay, ye haue shut them vp, and therefore be bolde to say what ye luste.

More. M. They liue as they teach, and teach as they liue.

Tyndall. Tyndall. But neither teach nor lyue as other lye on them.

The ix. Chapter.

More. M. Though the Turke offer pleasures vnto the receauers, and death vnto the refusers of his secte (as the Pope doth) yet he suffereth none to breake their promises of chastitie dedicate to

God

God (though haply they vse no such vowes, and as the Pope wil not except it be for money) but Luther teacheth to breake holy vowes.

Tyndall. Unlawfull vowes are not to be obserued.

Tyndall. Luther teacheth that vnlawfull vowes grounded on a false fayth vnto the dishonouring of God are to be broken and no other. And agayne, constrayned seruice pleaseth not God. And thirdly, your Pope geueth licēce and his blessing to breake all lawfull vowes, but with the most vnlawfull of all will ye not dispence.

Vowes.

Then he bringeth forth the ensample of the heathen, to confirme the Popes chastitie. And no wrong, for the same false imagination that the heathē had in theirs, hath the Pope in hys. Understand therfore, if thou vow any indifferent thing, to please God in his owne person, he receaueth not thyne Idolatrie: for hys pleasure & honour is, that thou shouldest be as he hath made thee, and shouldest receaue all such thinges of his hand and vse them so farforth as they were needfull, and geue him thankes, and be bounde to him: and not that thou shouldest be as thou haddest made thy selfe, & that he should receaue such thinges of thee to be bounde to thee, to thanke thee & reward thee. And agayne, thou must geue me a reason of thy vow out of the worde of God. Moreouer when thou vowest lawfully, thou maist not do it precisely, but alway except, if thyne owne or thy neighbours necessitie required the contrary. As if thou haddest vowed neuer to eate flesh, or drinke wine, or stronge drinke, to tame thy flesh, and thou afterwarde fellest in disease so that thy body in that behalfe were to tame, or that there coulde no other sustinaunce be gotten. Thā thou must interprete suche cases excepte, though thou madest no mention of them at the making of thy vow. Some man woulde say, other shifte might be made: What then: If other drinke as hoate as wine and of the same operation, and other meate of the same power and vertue as flesh is, must be had, why shouldest thou forsweare wine or flesh, seing it is now no longer for the taming of thy body. And so forth of all other, as I haue aboue declared.

All vowes are to be made with great aduisement.

We must vse Gods creatures for our necessitie.

And when he bringeth in the Apostles, martyrs, confessours, and xv. hundred yeares, it is cleane contrary. For they had no such false imagination of chastity or of any other worke: but they vsed it to serue their neighbour and to auoyde trouble in time of persecution, and to be eased of that burthen that was to heauy for their weake shoulders, and not to cōpell God to thāke them for that libertie for which they be bound to thanke hym.

All our abstinence & chastising of our selues, is to our owne profite.

The tenth Chapter.

Freewill.

In the tenth he inueyeth and rayleth against that which neither he nor any fleshly mynded Papiste can vnderstand, as they haue no power to cōsent vnto the lawes of God, which herein appeareth, that they compell their brethren which be as good as they, to do and beleue what they lust, & not what God commaundeth. He affirmeth that Martin sayth, how that we do no sinne our selues with our owne will, but that God sinneth in vs, and vseth vs as a dead instrument, and forceth vs therunto and dāneth vs, not for our owne deedes but for his, and for his owne pleasure, as he compelleth vnto sinne for his pleasure or rather he for hys pleasure sinneth in vs. I say, that a man sinneth voluntarily, but the power of the will and of the deede is of God, and euery will and deede are good in the nature of the deede, and the euilnesse is a lacke that there is, as the eye, though it be blinde is good in nature, in that it is such a member created for such a good vse: but it is called euill for lacke of sight. And so are our deedes euill because we lacke knowledge and loue to referre them vnto the glory of God. which lacke commeth of the deuill that blyndeth vs with lustes and occasions that we can not see the goodnesse and righteousnes of the law of God & the meanes how to fulfill it. For could we see it, and the way to do it, we should loue it naturally as a childe doth a fayre apple. For a childe whē as a mā sheweth him a fayre apple, and will not geue it hym weepeth, so should we naturally mourne when the members woulde not come forwarde to fulfill the lawe according to the desire of our hartes. For Paule sayth. ij. Cor. iiij. If our Gospell be hid, it is hid vnto thē that perishe, among which the God of this world hath blynded the wittes of the vnbeleuers, that the light of the glorious gospell of Christ should not shine to them. And Christ sayth that the birdes eate vp the seede sowen vppon the way, and interpreteth by the seede the worde, and by the foules, the deuill. So that the deuill blindeth vs with fal-falſhead and lyes which is our worldly wiſdome, and therewith ſtoppeth out the true light of Gods wiſdome, which blindenes is the cauſe of all our deedes.

And on the other ſide, that an other man loueth the lawes of God and vſeth ẏ power that he hath of god well, and referreth hys will and his deedes vnto the honour of God, commeth of the mercy of God which hath opened his wittes, and ſhewed him light to ſee the goodnes and righteouſnes of the lawe of God, and the way that is in Chriſt to fulfill it, wherby he loueth it naturally and truſteth to do it. why doth God open one mans eyes & not an others? Paule Rom. ix. forbiddeth to aſke why. For it is to deepe for mās capacitie. God we ſee is honoured therby, and his mercy ſet out, and the more ſeene in the veſſels of mercy. But the popiſhe can ſuffer God to haue no ſecret hid to himſelfe. They haue ſearched to come to the botome of hys botomleſſe wiſdome, and becauſe they cā not attayne to that ſecrete and be to proude to let it alone, and to graunt themſelues ignorañt with the Apoſtle that knew no other then Gods glory in the elect, they go and ſet vp freewill with the heathen philoſophers, and ſay that a mans freewill is the cauſe why God chuſeth one and not an other, cōtrary vnto all the ſcripture. Paul ſaith it commeth not of the will nor of the deede, but of the mercy of God. And they ſay that euery man hath at ẏ leaſt way power in his freewill, to deſerue that power ſhoulde be geuen hym of god to kepe the law. But the ſcripture teſtifieth that Chriſt hath deſerued for ẏ elect, euen thē whē they hated God, that their eyes ſhould be opened to ſee the goodnes of the lawe of God, and the way to fulfill it, and forgeuenes of all that is paſſed, wherby they be drawen to loue it and to hate ſinne.

We may not be curious to ſearch gods ſecretes.

A papiſtical opinio.

Witte, reaſon, & iudgement goeth before will.

I aſke the popiſhe one queſtion whether the will can preuent a mans witte and make the witte ſee the righteouſneſſe of the lawe, and the way to fulfill it in Chriſt? If I muſt firſt ſee the reaſon why yer I can loue, how ſhall I with my will do that good thing that I know not of? how ſhall I thanke God for the mercy that is layde vp for me in Chriſt, yer I beleue it. For I muſt beleue the mercy yer I can loue the worke. Now fayth commeth not of our freewill, but is the grace of God geuen vs by grace yer there be any will in our hartes to do the lawe of God. And why God geueth it not euery man I can geue no reckoning of his iudgementes. But well I wot, I neuer deſerued it, nor prepared my ſelf vnto it, but ranne an other way cleane contrary in my blyndneſſe, and ſought not that way, but he ſought me, and found me out, and ſhewed it me, and therwith drew me to him. And I bow the knees of mine hart vnto god night and day, that he will ſhew it all other men. And I ſuffer all that I can to be a ſeruaunt to open their eyes.

Faith is the gift of God & commeth not by free will.

For well I wot they can not ſee of themſelues before God haue preuēted them wyth hys grace. For Paule ſaith Phil. i. he that began a good worke in you ſhall continue or bring it vnto a full ende, ſo that God muſt beginne to worke in vs. And Phil. ij. God it is that worketh both the willing and alſo bringing to paſſe. And it muſt needes be, for God muſt open mine eyes, and ſhew me ſomewhat and make me ſee the goodneſſe of it, to draw me to hym, yer I can loue, conſent, or haue any actuall will to come.

God is the firſt worker & bringer to paſſe of our well doynges.

And when I am willing, he muſt aſſiſte me and helpe to tame my fleſhe, and to ouercome the occaſions of the worlde, and the power of the fendes. God therfore hath a ſpecial care for his elect, in ſo much that he will ſhorten ẏ wicked dayes for their ſakes, in which no man, if they ſhould continue might endure. And Paule ſuffereth all for the electe. ij. Timothy. ij. And Gods ſure foundation ſtandeth ſayth Paule, God knoweth hys. So that refuſe the truth who ſhall, God will keepe a nūber of his mercy, and call them out of blindneſſe, to teſtifie the truth vnto the reſt, that their damnation may be without excuſe.

Math. 24.

The Turke, the Jew and the Popiſh build vpon freewill & aſcribe theyr iuſtifying vnto their woorkes. The Turke when he hath ſynned, runneth to the purifyinges or ceremonies of Mahomet, and the Jew to the ceremonies of Moſes, and the Pope vnto his owne ceremonies, to get forgeuenelle of their ſinnes. And the Chriſten goeth thorough repentaunce towarde the law, vnto the fayth that is in Chriſtes bloud.

The Chriſtians ſeeke helpe of Chriſt.

And the Pope ſaith that the ceremonies of Moyſes iuſtified not, compelled with the woordes of Paule. And how then ſhould his iuſtifie? Moyſes Sacramentes were but ſignes of pro-miles of fayth, by which fayth the beleuers are iustified, and euen so be Christes also. And now because the Jewes haue put out the significations of their Sacraments and put their trust in the workes of them, therfore they be Idolaters, and so is the Pope for like purpose. The Pope sayth that Christ dyed not for vs, but for the Sacramentes, to geue them power to iustifie. O Antichrist.

O abhominable blasphemy.

The xj. Chapter.

Doct. Ferman.

His xj. chapter is as true as his storie of Utopia & all his other Poetrie. He meaneth Doctour Ferman person of Bony lane. who̅ after they had hādled after their secret maner and disputed with secretly and had made him sweare that he should not vtter how he was dealt with, as they haue made many other, then they contrined a maner of disputatiōs had with him, with such oppositions, aunswearynges and argumentes as should serue onely to set forth their purpose. As M. More thoroughout all his booke maketh, quoth he, to dispute and moue questions after such a maner as he can soyle them or make them appeare soyled, and maketh him graunt where he lysteth and at the last to be concluded and lad whether M. More will haue him. Wherfore I wil not rehearse all the argumentes, for it were to long, and is also not to be beleued that he so made them or so disputed with them, but that they added and pulled away & fayned as they liste as their guise is. But I will declare in light that which M. More ruffeleth vp in darkenesse, that ye may see their falshead.

Maister doctour Ferman was a vertuous godly and learned mā

First if ye were not false hypocrites, why had ye not disputed openly with him, that the world might haue heard and borne recorde, that that whiche ye now say of him were true? what cause is there that the lay people might not as well haue heard his wordes of hys own mouth, as read them of your writyng, except ye were iugglyng spirites that walke in darkenesse?

A true note to know hypocrites.

When M. More sayth, the Church teacheth that men should not trust in their workes, it is false if he meane ẏ Popes Church. For they teach a man to trust in domme ceremonies & Sacramētes, in penaūce and all maner workes that come them to profite, whiche yet helpe not vnto repentaunce nor to fayth nor to loue a mans neighbour.

M. More declareth the meanyng of no sentence, hee describeth the proper signification of no word, nor the difference of the significatiōs of any terme, but runneth foorth confusedly in vnknowen wordes and generall termes. And where one word hath many significations he maketh a man some tyme beleue that many thynges are but one thyng, and some tyme he leadeth from one signification vnto an other & mocketh a mans wittes. As he iuggleth with this terme Church, makyng vs in the begynnyng vnderstand all that beleue, and in the conclusion the Priestes onely. He telleth not the office of the law, he describeth not his penaūce nor the vertue therof or vse, he declareth no Sacrament, nor what they meane nor the vse nor wherin the frute of cōfession standeth, nor whence the power of the absolution commeth, nor wherin it resteth, nor what iustifying meaneth, nor the order nor sheweth any diuersitie of faythes, as though all faiths were one fayth and one thyng.

M. Here is a iuggler with termes.

Marke therfore, the way toward iustifying or forgeuenesse of sinne, is the law. God causeth the law to be preached vnto vs & writeth it in our harts and maketh vs by good reasons feele that the law is good and ought to bee kept and that they which keepe it not are worthy to be damned. And on the other side I fele that there is no power in me, to kepe the law wherupon it would shortly folow that I should dispaire, if I were not shortly holpe. But God which hath begon to cure me and hath layde that cōfort vnto my sores, goeth forth in his cure, and setteth hys sonne Jesus before me and all his passions and death, and sayth to me: this is my deare sonne, and he hath prayed for thee & hath suffred all this for thee, and for his sake I will forgeue thee all that thou hast done agaynst this good lawe, and I will heale thy flesh & teach thee to kepe this law, if ẏ wilt learne. And I will beare with thee & take all a worth that thou doest, till thou canst do better. And in the meane season, not withstandyng thy weakenesse, I will yet loue thee no lesse then I do the aungels in heauen, so thou wilt be diligent to learne. And I will assiste thee and keepe thee and defend thee and be thy shielde and care for thee.

The order of iustifying.

A lyuely description of our iustification.

And the hart here beginneth to mollifie and ware soft & to receaue health and beleueth the mercy of God and in beleuyng is saued frō the feare of euerlastyng death, and made sure of euerlastyng

The great mercy and kindenes of God moueth mā to repentāce.

lastyng life, and then beyng ouercome with this kindnesse, begynneth to loue agayne and to submitte her selfe vnto the law of God to learne them and to walke in them.

The right order of our iustificatiō.

Note now the order, first God geueth me light to see the goodnesse and righteousnesse of the law, & myne own sinne and vnrighteousnesse. Out of whiche knowledge spryngeth repentaunce. Now repentaunce teacheth me not that the law is good, and I euill, but a light that the spirite of God hath geuen me, out of whiche light repentaunce spryngeth.

Then the same spirite worketh in myne hart trust and confidence to beleue the mercy of God and his truth, that he will do as hee hath promised. Whiche beleffe saueth me. And immediatly out of that trust spryngeth loue toward the law of God agayne. And what soeuer a man worketh of any other loue thē this it pleaseth not God, nor is that loue godly.

Now loue doth not receaue this mercy but fayth onely, out of whiche fayth loue spryngeth, by which loue I power out agayn vpon my neighbour that goodnesse which I haue receaued of God by fayth. Hereof ye see that I cā not be iustified without repentaūce and yet repentaunce iustifieth me not. And hereof ye see that I can not haue a fayth to be iustified and saued, except loue spryng therof immediatly, and yet loue iustifieth me not before God. For my naturall loue to God agayne doth not make me first see & feele the kyndnesse of God in Christ, but fayth thorough preachyng. For we loue not God first, to cōpell him to loue agayn: but he loued vs first & gaue his sonne for vs, that we might see loue and loue agayne, sayth S. John in his first Epistle. which loue of God to vs ward we receaue by Christ thorough fayth sayth Paule.

1. Iohn. 4.

Faith only apprehendeth our iustification.

And this example haue I set out for them in diuers places, but their blynd Popish eyes haue no power to see it, couetousnesse hath so blynded them. And when we say faith onely iustifieth vs, that is to say, receaueth the mercy wherewith God iustifieth vs and forgeueth vs, we meane not fayth whiche hath no repentaunce and fayth whiche hath no loue vnto the lawes of God agayne and vnto good workes, as wicked hypocrites falsly belye vs.

For how thē should we suffer as we do all misery, to cal the blind and ignorant vnto repentaunce & good workes which now do but consent vnto all euill, and study mischief all day long, for all their preachyng their iustifying of good woorkes. Let M. More improue this with his sophistrie and set foorth his owne doctrine that we may see the reason of it and walke in light.

What faith iustifieth.

Hereof ye see what fayth it is that iustifieth vs. The fayth in Christes blond of a repentyng hart toward the law doth iustifie vs onely and not all maner faythes. Ye must vnderstād ther fore, that ye may see to come out of Mores blynd maze, how that there be many faythes and that all faythes be not one faith, though they be al called with on generall name. There is a story faith without feelyng in the hart, wher with I may beleue the whole story of the Bible & yet not set myne hart earnestly thereto, takyng it for the fode of my soule, to learne to beleue and trust God, to loue him dread him and feare him by the doctrine and examples ther of, but to seme learned & to know the story, to dispute and make marchaundise, after as we haue exāples ynough. And the fayth wherewith a man doth miracles, is an other gift then the faith of a repēting hart to be saued through Christes blond, and the one no kynne to the other though M. More would haue them so appeare. Neither is the deuils fayth & the Popes fayth (wherwith they beleue that there is a God & that Christ is & all the story of the Bible and may yet stond with all wicked nesse and full cōsent to euil) kynne vnto the fayth of them that hate euill and repent of their misdeedes and knowledge their sinnes and be fled with full hope and trust of mercy vnto the bloud of Christ.

There are diuersities of faith, and but one faith that iustifieth vs.

Workes.

And when he sayth, if fayth certifie our hartes that we bee in the fauour of God and our sinnes forgeuen, & become good yer we do good workes, as the tree must be first good yer it bring forth good fruite, by Christes doctrine, thē we make good workes but a shadowe wherewith a man is neuer the better. Nay Sir we make good woorkes, fruites whereby our neighbour is the better, and whereby God is honoured, and our flesshe tamed. And we make of them sure tokēs wherby we know that our fayth is no fayned imagination and dead opinion, made with captiuing our wits after the Popes traditions, but a lyuely thyng wrought by the holy Ghost.

Out of a lively and iustifyng faith spryngeth good workes.

And when he disputeth, if they that haue faith, haue loue vnto the lawe, and purpose to fulfill it, then faith alone iustifieth not, how will he proue that argument: he iuggleth wyth this worde alone: and would make the people beleue that we said, how a bare faith that is without all other company, of repētaunce, loue, and other vertues, yea & without Gods spirite to, did iustifie vs, so that we shoulde not care to do good. But the Scripture so taketh not alone, nor we so meane, as M.More knoweth well inough. when an horse beareth a saddell and a man therin, we may wel say, that ỹ horse onely & alone beareth the saddell, and is not holpe of the man in bearing thereof. But he would make men vnderstand that we ment, the horse bare the saddell emptie and no man therin: let him marke this to see his ignorannce, which woulde God were not coupled with malice. Euery man that hath wit, hath a will to, and then by M.Mores argument, witte onely geueth not the light of vnderstanding. Now the conclusion is false and the contrary true. For ỹ wit without helpe of the will geueth the light of the vnderstanding, neyther doth the will worke at all, vntill the wit haue determined this or that to be good or bad. Now what is faith saue a spirituall light of vnderstanding, and an inwarde knowledge or feelyng of mercy. Out of which knowledge loue doth spring. But loue brought me not that knowledge, for I knew it yer I loued. So that loue in the processe of nature to dispute from the cause to the effect helpeth not at all to the feeling that God is mercifull to me no more than the louing hart and kinde behauiour of an obedient wife to her husband maketh her see his loue & kyndnesse to her, for many such haue vnkinde husbandes. But by hys kynde deedes to her, doth she see hys loue. Euen so my loue and deedes make me not see Gods loue to me in the processe of nature: but his kinde deedes to me, in that he gaue his sonne for me, maketh me see his loue, & to loue againe.

Our loue and good workes make not God first loue vs, and chaunge hym from hate to loue, as the Turke, Iewe, and vaine popishe meane, but his loue and deedes make vs loue, & chaunge vs from hate to loue. For he loued vs when we were euill, and his enemies, as testifieth Paule in diuers places, and chose vs, to make vs good and to shew vs loue, and to draw vs to him, that we should loue againe.

The father loueth his childe, when it hath no power to do good, & when it must be suffered to runne after the owne lustes without lawe, and neuer loueth it better then then, to make it better, and to shew it loue, to loue againe. If ye coulde see what is writtē in the first epistle of John, though all the other scripture were layde a parte, he should see all this.

And ye must vnderstand, that we sometyme dispute forwarde, from the cause to the effect, and sometyme backward from the effect to the cause, and must beware that we be not therwyth beguiled, we say sommer is come and therefore all is grene, and dispute forwarde. For sommer is the cause of the greenesse. we say the trees be greene, & therfore sommer is come, and dispute backward from the effect to the cause. For the grene trees make not sommer but maketh sommer knowen. So we dispute backward, the man doth good deedes and profitable vnto his neyghbour, he must therefore loue God: he loueth God, he must therefore haue a true fayth and see mercy.

And yet my woorkes make not my loue, nor my loue my faith, nor my faith Gods mercy: But cōtrary, gods mercy maketh my fayth, and my fayth my loue, and my loue my workes. And if the Pope could see mercy and worke of loue to his neighbour, and not sell his woorkes to God for heauen after M. Mores doctrine, we needed not so suttle disputing of faith.

And when M.More alleageth Paule to the Corinthians, to proue that faith may be without loue, he proueth nothing, but iuggleth onely. He saith, it is euident by the wordes of Paule, that a mā may haue a faith to do miracles without loue, & may geue all his good in almes without loue, and geue his body to burne for the name of Christ, & al without charitie. Wel I will not sticke with hym: he may so do without charitie & without fayth therto. Then a mā may haue faith without faith. Ye verely because there be many differēces of faith, as I haue sayd, and not all faithes one fayth, as maister More iuggleth. We read in the woorkes of S. Ciprian, that there were martyrs that suffered martyrdome for the name of Christ all the yeare long, and were tormented and healed agayne, and then brought forth a freshe. Which martyrs beleued as ye do, that the payne of their martyrdom ſhould be a deſerning & merite inough not onely to deſerue heauen for themſelues, but to make ſatisfaction for the ſinnes of other men therto, and gaue pardons of their merites, after the enſample of the Popes doctrine, and forgaue the ſinnes of other men, which had openly denyed Chriſt, and wrote vnto Ciprian, that he ſhoulde receaue thoſe men that had denyed Chriſt into the congregation agayne, at the ſatisfaction of their merites. For whiche pride Ciprian wrote to them and called them the deuilles martyrs and not Gods. Thoſe martyrs had a fayth without fayth. For had they beleued that all mercy is geuen for Chriſtes bloudſhedding, they would haue ſent other mē thether, and would haue ſuffered their owne martyrdome for loue of their neighbours onely, to ſerue thē and to teſtifie the truth of God in our ſauiour Jeſu, vnto the worlde, to ſaue at the leaſt way ſome, that is to wete, the elect, for whoſe ſake Paule ſuffereth all thing, and not to winne heauē. If I worke for a worldly purpoſe, I get no rewarde in heauen: euen ſo if I worke for heauen or an hyer place in heauen, I get there no rewarde. But I muſt do my worke for ẏ loue of my neighbour, becauſe he is my brother, and the price of Chriſtes bloude, and becauſe Chriſt hath deſerued it, and deſireth it of me, and then my rewarde is great in heauen.

The deuils Martyrs.

We muſt doe good workes of loue, and not for reward.

And all they which beleue that their ſinnes be forgeuen them, and they receaued as the ſcripture teſtifieth, vnto the enheritaunce of heauē for Chriſtes merites, the ſame loue Chriſt and their brethren for his ſake, and do all thyng for their ſakes onely, not once thinking of heauen when they worke, but on their brethrens neede. when they ſuffer themſelues aboue might, then they comfort their ſoule with the remēbraunce of heauen, that this wretchednes ſhall haue an ende, and we ſhall haue a thouſandfolde pleaſures and rewardes in heauen, not for the merites of our deſeruings, but geuen vs freely for Chriſtes. And he that hath ẏ loue, hath the right faith, and he that hath ẏ faith hath the right loue. For I cā not loue my neighbour for Chriſtes ſake, except I firſt beleue that I haue receaued ſuch mercy of Chriſt. Nor can I beleue that I haue receaued ſuch mercy of Chriſt, but that I muſt loue my neighbour for his ſake, ſeing that he ſo inſtantly deſireth me.

Our doynges can deſerue nothyng, but Chriſte hath deſerued for vs.

And when he alleageth S. James, it is aunſwered him in the Glammon, and S. Auguſtine aunſwereth hym. And S. James expoundeth himſelfe. For he ſaith in the firſt chapter, God which begatte vs of his owne will wyth the worde of truth, which worde of truth, is his promiſes of mercy and forgeneneſſe in our Sauiour Jeſus, by which he begat vs, gaue vs life and made vs a new creature thorow a faſt faith. And James goeth and rebuketh the opinion and falſe fayth of them that thinke it inough to be ſaued by, if they beleue that there is but one god, & that Chriſt was borne of a virgine, and a thouſand things which a man may beleue, and yet not beleue in Chriſt, to be ſaued from ſinne thorow him. And that James ſpeaketh of an other faith then at the beginning appeareth by his enſample. The deuils haue faith ſaith he: yea but the deuilles haue no faith that can repent of euil or to beleue in Chriſt to be ſaued thorow him, or that cā loue God and worke his wil of loue. Now Paule ſpeaketh of a fayth that is in Chriſtes bloude to be ſaued thereby, which worketh immediatly thorough loue of the benefite receaued. And James at the beginning ſpeaketh of a fayth that bydeth trying, ſaying, the trying of your faith worketh or cauſeth patience. But the faith of the deuilles will bide no trying, for they will not worke Gods will becauſe they loue him not. And in like maner is it of the fayth of them that repent not, or that thinke themſelues without ſinne. For except a mā ſeele out of what daunger Chriſt hath deliuered hym, he can not loue the worke. And therfore James ſayth right, that no ſuch fayth that will not worke can iuſtifie a man.

Iames. 2.

James teacheth falſe fruites and not a true and liuely fayth.

Fayth that will not worke when opportunitie ſerueth cā not iuſtifie.

And when Paule ſaith faith onely iuſtifieth: And James, that a man is iuſtified by workes and not by fayth onely, there is great differēce betwene Paules onely and James onely. For Paules onely is to be vnderſtand, that faith iuſtifieth in the harte and before God, without helpe of workes, yea & yet I can worke. For I muſt receaue life thorow faith to worke with, yet I can worke. But James onely is thys wiſe to be vnderſtand, that faith doth not ſo iuſtifie, that nothyng iuſtifieth ſaue fayth. For deedes do iuſtifie alſo. But faith iuſtifieth in the hart and before God, and the deedes before the worlde onely, and maketh the other seene, as ye may see by the scripture.

How workes iuſtifie.

Rom. 4. For Paul sayth Rom. iiij. if Abrahā haue woorkes, he hath whereof to reioyce, but not before god. For if Abrahā had receaued those promises of deseruing, then had it ben Abrahās prayse & not gods, as thou mayst see in the text: neither had God shewed Abrahā mercy and grace, but had onely geuen hym his dutie and deseruyng. But in that Abraham receaued all the mercy that was shewed hym, freely through fayth, out of the deseruynges of the seed that was promised him, as thou mayst see Iohn. 8. by Genesis & by the Gospell of Iohn, where Christ testifieth that Abraham saw his day and reioyced, and of that ioy no doubt wrought, it is gods prayse, and the glory of his mercy. And the same mayst thou see by James, when he sayth Abraham offered his sonne, & so was the Scripture fulfilled, that Abraham beleued, & it was reckened hym for righteousnesse and he was thereby made Gods frend.

How was it fulfilled? before God? Nay, it was fulfilled before God many yeares before, and he was Gods frend many yeares before, euen from the first appointement that was made betwene God and hym. Abraham receaued promises of all mercy & beleued and trusted God and went & wrought out of that fayth. But it was fulfilled before vs which can not see the hart, as James saith, I wil shew thee my faith out of my woorkes, and as the aungell said to Abrahā, now I know that thou dreadest God. Not but that he knew it before, but for vs spake he that, whiche can see nought in Abraham more then in other men, saue by his woorkes.

Abrahā beleued gods promises & therefore was iustified.

And what woorkes ment James? verely the woorkes of mercy. As if a brother or a sister lacke rayment or sustenaunce and ye be not moued to compassion nor feele their diseases, what fayth haue ye then? No fayth (be sure) that feeleth the mercy that is in Christ. For they that feele that, be mercyfull agayne & thankefull. But looke on the woorkes of our spiritualitie which will not onely be iustified with woorkes before the worlde, but also before God. They haue had all Christēdome to rule this vij. hundred yeares, and as they onely be annointed in the head, so haue they onely bene kyng and Emperour and haue had all power in their hands and haue bene the doers onely and the leders of those shadowes that haue had the name of Princes, and haue led them whether they would & haue bred into their braynes what they ysted. And they haue wrought the world out of peace and vnitie and euery man out of his welfare and are become alone well at ease, onely free, onely at libertie, onely haue all thyng & onely do nought therefore, onely laye on other mēs backes & beare nought thē selues. And the good woorkes of them that wrought out of fayth and gaue theyr goods & landes to finde the poore, thē deuoure they also alone. And what woorkes preach they? Onely that are to them profitable & wherbey they raigne in mens cōsciences as God: to offer, to geue to be prayed for & to be deliuered out of Purgatory and to redeme your sinne of them, and to worshyp ceremonies and to be shryuen and so forth.

Yee that seeth hys neighbour in necessitie & hath no compassion on him, hath no fayth.

The Papistes preach woorkes that are profitable to them selues.

And when M. More is come to him selfe and sayth the first fayth and the first iustifying is geuen vs without our deseruyng. God be thanked, and I would fayne that he would describe me what he meaneth by the second iustifying. I know no more to do, then whē I haue receaued all mercy and all forgeuenesse of Christ freely, to go and powre out the same vpon my neighbour.

M. Dauid lost not his fayth, when hee committed adultery. More. Dauid.

Tyndall. No, and therfore he could not continue in sinne, but repēted assoone as his fault was told him. But was he not reconciled by fayth onely, & not by dedes? sayd he not haue mercy on me Lord for thy great mercy and for the multitude of thy mercies put away my sinne. And agayne, make me heare ioy and gladnesse, that the bones whiche thou hast broken may reioyce. That is let me heare thy voyce that my sinne is forgeuen and then I am safe & will reioyce. And afterward he knowledgeth that God deliteth not in sacrifices for sinnes, but that a troubled spirite and a broken hart is that whiche God requireth. And when the peace was made, he prayeth boldly and familiarly to God, that he would be good to Sion and Jerusalem, and saith that then last of all when God hath forgeuen vs of mercy, & hath done vs good for our euill, we shall offer sacrifice of thankes to hym agayne. So that our dedes are but thankesgeuyng. when we haue sinned, we go with a repentyng hart vnto Christes bloud, & there wash it of thorough fayth. And our dedes are but thankes geuyng to God to helpe our neighbours at their nede, Tyndall.

Psal. 51.

When we haue offended God we must returne quickly by repentaunce and call vpon God to heare vs for Christ our Mauls ours sake.

for

for which our neighbours and eche of them owe vs as much agayne at our nede. So that the Teſtament or forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, is built vppon fayth in Chriſtes bloud and not on workes. M. More will runne to the Pope for forgeueneſſe a pœna & culpa. By what merites doth the Pope that? by Chriſtes. And Chriſt hath promiſed all his merites to them that repent and beleue & not geuen them vnto the Pope to ſell. And in your abſolutiõs ye oft abſolue without ioynyng of penaũce. He muſt haue a purpoſe to do good woorkes will ye ſay. That cõdition is ſet before him to do, out of ỹ mercy that hee hath receaued and not to receaue mercy out of them. But the Popiſh can not repẽt out of the hart. And therfore cã not fele the mercy that fayth bryngeth, & therfore can not be mercyfull to their neighbours to doe their woorkes for their ſakes. But they faine them a ſorow for their ſinne in which they euer continue and ſo morue for them in the mornyng that they laugh in them yer midday agayne. And then they imagine them Popiſh deedes, to make ſatiſfaction to God and make an Idole of him.

Pœna culpa.

As we haue receaued at the hãd of God mercy, ſo muſt we ſhewe mercy to our neyghbours.

And finally that good workes, as to geue almes and ſuch like, iuſtifie not of them ſelues, is manifeſt. For as the good which are taught of God do thẽ well, of very loue to God and Chriſt & of their neighbours for Chriſtes ſake, euen ſo the euill do them of vayne glorie & a falſe fayth wickedly, as we haue exãples in the Phariſeis, ſo that a man muſt be good yer he can do good. And ſo is it of the purpoſe to do thẽ: Ones purpoſe is good and an others euill: ſo that we muſt be good, yer a good purpoſe come. How then, to loue the law of God and to conſent therto & to haue it written in thyne hart and to profeſſe it, ſo that thou art ready of thyne own accorde to do it and without compulſion, is to be righteous: that I graunt and that loue may be called righteouſneſſe before God paſſiue and the lyfe & quickeneſſe of the ſoule paſſiue. And ſo farre forth as a man loueth the law of God, ſo farre forth he is righteous, & ſo much as hee lacketh of loue toward hys neighbour after the example of Chriſt, ſo much he lacketh of righteouſneſſe. And that thyng which maketh a man loue the law of God, doth make a man righteous and iuſtifieth him effectiuely and actually and maketh hym alyue as a woorkeman and cauſe efficient. Now what is it that maketh a man to loue? verely not the dedes, for they folow and ſpryng of loue, if they be good. Neither the preachyng of the law, for that quickeneth not the hart Gal. iij. but cauſeth wrath Rom. iiij. & vttereth the ſinne onely Rom. iij. And therfore ſayth Paule that righteouſnes ſpryngeth not out of the deedes of the law into the hart, as the Iewes & the Pope meane: but contrary the deedes of the law ſpryng out of the righteouſneſſe of the hart if they be good. As when a father pronounceth the law, that the child ſhall go to ſchole, it ſayth nay. For that killeth his hart & all his luſtes, ſo that he hath no power to loue it. But what maketh his hart alyue to loue it? verely fayre promiſes of loue & kyndneſſe, that it ſhall haue a gentle ſcholemaſter and ſhal play inough and ſhall haue many gaye thynges and ſo forth. Euen ſo the preachyng of fayth doth worke loue in our ſoules & make them alyue & draw our hartes to God. The mercy that we haue in chriſt doth make vs loue onely & onely bringeth the ſpirite of life into our ſoules.

Workes of them ſelues iuſtifie not.

He that loueth hys neighbour for Chriſts ſake the ſame is righteous.

All our workes if they procede not of loue are no thyng.

And therfore ſayth Paule, we be iuſtified by fayth and by grace without dedes: that is, yer the dedes come. For fayth onely bringeth, the ſpirite of lyfe and deliuereth our ſoules from feare of dãnation, which is in the law and euer maketh peace betwen God and vs, as oft as there is any variaunce betwene vs. And finally whẽ the peace is made betwene God and vs and all forgeuen through fayth in Chriſtes bloud, & we begyn to loue the law, we were neuer the nearer except fayth went with vs, to ſupply out the lacke of full loue, in that we haue promiſes, that that litle we haue is takẽ a woorth and accepted till more come. And agayne when our frailtie hath ouerthrowen vs and feare of damnation inuaded our conſciẽces, we were vtterly loſt, if fayth were not bye to helpe vs vp agayne, in that we are promiſed that when ſoeuer we repent of euill and come to the right way agayne, it ſhalbe forgeuen for Chriſtes ſake. For whẽ we be fallen, there is no Teſtament made in workes to come, that they ſhal ſaue vs. And therfore the workes of repentaũce or of the Sacramẽtes can neuer quiet our cõſciences & deliuer vs from feare of damnation.

Fayth in Chriſt maketh our ſmall workes acceptable.

And laſt of all in temptation tribulation and aduerſities, we periſhed dayly except fayth went with vs to deliuer vs, in that we haue promiſes, that god will aſſiſte vs, cloth vs, fede vs & fight for vs and rid vs out of the handes of our enemyes. And thus the righteous liueth euer by fayth, euen from fayth to fayth, that is, as soone as he is deliuered out of one temptation an other is set before him, to fight against, and to ouercome thorow fayth. The scripture sayth, blessed is the man whose transgression is forgeuen & his sinnes hid, and vnto whom the Lord reckoneth not vnrighteousnes. So that the onely righteousnes of him that cā but sinne, and hath nought of himselfe to make amendes, is the forgeuenesse of sinne, which faith onely bringeth. And as farforth as we be vnrighteous, faith onely iustifieth vs actiuely, and els nothing on our partie. And as farforth as we haue sinned, be in sinne, or do sinne, or shal sinne, so farforth must faith in Christes bloud iustifie vs onely, and els nothing. To loue, is to be righteous, so farforth as thou louest, but not to make righteous, nor to make peace. To beleue in Christes bloud with a repēting hart, is to make righteous, and the onely makyng of peace and satisfaction to Godwarde. And thus because termes be darcke to them that be not expert and exercised, we alway set out our meaning with cleare ensamples, reporting our selues vnto the hartes and consciences of all men.

The righteous liueth by faith.

Faith in Christes bloud doth onely iustifie vs.

More. M. The blasphemous wordes of Luther seme to signifie, that both Iohn Baptiste and our Lady were sinners.

Tyndall. Tyndall. Iohn Baptiste sayde to Christ Mat. 3. I had neede to be baptised of thee, and commest thou to me? wherof did Iohn confesse that he had nede to be washed & purged by Christ, of his holynes and good deedes?

Iohn Baptist and our Lady also were sinners & looked for the redemptiō in Christ.

When Iohn saide, beholde ỹ Lambe of God that taketh away the sinne of ỹ worlde, he was not of that sorte, nor had any sinnes to be taken away at any time, nor any part in Christs bloud which dyed for sinners onely. Iohn came to restore all thyng sayth Christ. That is, he came to enterprete the law of God truely, and to proue all fleshe sinners, to send thē to Christ, as Paul doth in the beginning of ỹ Romanes. Which lawe if M. More coulde vnderstand how spirituall it is, and what it requireth of vs, he woulde not so dispute. And if there were no imperfectnesse in our Ladies deedes, why dyd Christ rebuke her Iohn. 2. when he ought rather to haue honoured his mother, and why did he make her seeke him three dayes. Chrisostomus dare say that our Lady was now and then taken with a little vayne glory. She loked for the promises of him that should come and blesse her, from what? She beleued to be saued by Christ, from what? This I graunt, that our Lady, Iohn Baptiste, Isaac, Iacob, Ioseph, Moses, and many like, did neuer consent to sinne, to follow it: But had the holy ghost from the beginning. Neuer the later, while they folowed the spirite and wrought their best, yet chaunces met them by the way and temptations, that made their woorkes come sometimes vnperfectly to passe, as a potter that hath his craft neuer so wel, meteth a chaunce now and then, that maketh him fashion a pot a misse. So that I thinke the perfectest of them all as we haue ensamples of some, were compelled to say with Paul, that good that I would, I do not and that euill that I would not, that I do. I would not sweare on a booke that if our Lady had bene let slip as we other were, and as hard apposed with as present death before her eyes, that she would not haue denyed somethinges that she knew true, ye but she was preserued by grace that she was not. No but though she were kept by grace from ỹ outwarde deede, yet if there were such wickednes in her flesh, she had sinne. And the grace was, that she knew it, and was meeke to beleue in Christ, to haue it forgeuen her, and to be preserued that it should not bud forth Iohn the Euangelist, when he was as holy as euer was Iohn the Baptist sayd, if we say we haue no sinne, we deceaue our selues. 1. Iohn. 1.

Chrisostomus.

There was neuer any but Christ that was without sinne.

Then he compareth fayth & deedes together and will that fayth shoulde stand in no better seruice of right then deedes. Yes, for the deedes be examined by the lawe, and therfore it is not inough to do them onely, or to do thē with loue: but I must do them with as great loue as Christ did for me, and as I receaue a good deede at my nede. But faith is vnder no lawe, and therfore be she neuer so feeble, she shall receaue according to the truth of the promiser.

Workes are vnder the law.

Fayth is vnder no law.

More. M. What thing coulde we aske God of right because we beleue him?

Tyndall. Tyndall. Verely all that he promiseth, may we be bolde to aske of right and dutie and by good obligation.

More. More. Ferman sayd that all workes be good inough in thē that god hath chosē.

Tyndall.

Tyndall. Tyndall. I am sure it is vntrue, for their best be not good inough, though God forgeueth them their euill of hys mercy, at ỳ repentaunce of their harts.

Then he endeth in his schole doctrine contrary vnto all the scripture, that God remitteth not the sinne of hys chosen people, because that he hath chosen thé not of his mercy, but of a towardnes that is more in one then in an other saying, God saw before that Peter should repent, and Iudas woulde dispaire, and therefore chose Peter. If God chose Peter because he did repent, why chose he not Iudas to, which repented as much as he & knowledged his sinne, and brought the money agayne? O this blindnesse, as God had wrought nothing in the repentaunce of Peter. Sayde not Christ before, that Peter should falle. And sayd he not that he had prayed for him that he shoulde be holpe vppe agayne? Christ prayed a strong prayer for Peter to helpe hym vp agayne, and suffered a strong death thereto. And before his death he committed them vnto his father saying, I haue kept them in thy name and I depart, keepe them now from euill. Peter had a good hart to God, and loued his lawe, and beleued in Christ, & had the spirite of God in him which neuer left him for all his falle. Peter sinned of no malice, but of frailtie and sodaine feare of death. And the goodnesse of God wrought his repentaunce and all the meanes by which he was brought vp againe at Christes requeste. And Iudas was neuer good, nor came to Christ for loue of his doctrine, but of couetousnesse, nor did euer beleue in Christ.

The blinde and fond reasoning of More.

Luke.22.

Iohn.17.

The difference betweene Peters fall & the fall of Iudas.

Iudas. Iudas was by nature and birth (as we all be) heyre of the wrath of God, in whome the deuill wrought his will and blinded his hart with ignorannce. In which ignorannce and blindnes he grew, as he grew in age and fell deeper and deeper therein, and thereby wrought all his wickednesse, and the deuilles will and perished therin. Frō which ignorannce God purged Peter of his mercy, and gaue him light, and his spirite to gouerne him, and not of any towardnesse that was in Peter of hys owne byrth: but for the mercy that we haue in the birth of Christes death.

Iudas perished in desperatiō.

And how will M. More proue that God chuseth not of his goodnes but of our towardnes? what good towardnes can he haue and endeuour that is altogether blinde and caryed away at the will of the deuill, till the deuill be cast out? Are we not robbed of all towardnes in Adam, and be by nature made the children of sinne, so that we sinne naturally and to sinne is our nature? So that as now, though we would do well, the flesh yet sinneth naturally, neither ceaseth to sinne, but so farforth as it is kept vnder with violence: euen so once our hartes sinned as naturally with full lust and consent vnto the flesh, the deuill possessing our hartes, and keeping out the light of grace. what good towardnesse and endeuour can we haue to hate sinne, as long as we loue it? what good towardnes can we haue vnto the will of God while we hate it and be ignoraunt therof. Can the will desire that the witte seeth not? Can the will long for and sigh for that the witte knoweth not of? Can a mā take thought for that losse that he wotteth not of? what good endeuour can the Turkes children, the Iewes children, and the Popes infantes haue, when they be taught all falshead onely, with like perswasions of worldly reason, to be all iustified with workes? It is not therefore as Paule saith of the running or willing, but of the mercy of God, that a man is called and chosen to grace.

By Adam we are all made the children of the wrath of God.

Rom.9.

The first grace, the first fayth, and the first iustifiyng is geuen vs freely sayth M. More, which I would faine were how it will stand with his other doctrine, & whether he meane any other thyng by chosyng them to haue Gods spirite geuen me and fayth to see the mercy that is layd vp for me & to haue my sinnes forgeuen without all deseruyng & preparyng of my self God did not see onely that the theefe that was saued at Christes death, should come thether, but God chose him to shew his mercy vnto vs that should after beleue, and prouided actually & wrought for the bringyng of him thether that day, to make him see and to receaue the mercy that was layd vp for him in store, before the world was made.

God worketh by diuers to make vs to call vpō and to trust in his mercy.

The xij. Chapter.

M. ỳ xij. in challyng himself to heape lye vpon lye, he vttereth his feleable blindnesse. For he axeth this question wherfore serueth exhortatiōs vnto faith, if the hearers haue not libertie of their frewill, by whiche together with Gods grace a man may labour to submitte the rebellion of reason vnto the obediēce of faith and credence of the worde of God.

Frewill.

wherof ye see, that besides his graunt that reason rebelleth agaynst fayth, cōtrary to the doctrine of his first booke, he will that the will shall compell the witte to beleue. whiche is as much to say as the carte must draw the horses and the sonne beget the father, and the authoritie of the Church is greater thē Gods word. For the wil can not teach the wit nor lead her, but foloweth naturally: so that what soeuer the witte iudgeth good or euill, that the will loueth or hateth. If the witte see and leade straight, the will foloweth. If the witte be blynde and leade amisse, the will foloweth cleane out of ẏ way. I can not loue Gods worde before I beleue it, nor hate it, before I iudge it false and vanitie.

The witte leadeth the will.

He might haue wiselier spoken on this maner, wherfore serueth the preachyng of fayth, if the wit haue no power to draw the will to loue that whiche the wit iudgeth true and good. If the will be nought, teach the wit better & the will shall alter and turne to good immediatly. Blindnesse is the cause of all euil, and light the cause of all good: so that where the fayth is right there the hart can not consent vnto euill, to folow the lustes of the flesh, as the popes fayth doth. And this conclusion hath he halfe a dosē tymes in his boke, that the will may compell the witte and captiuate it, to beleue what a mā lusteth. Verely it is like that his wittes be in captiuitie and for vauntage tangled with out holy fathers sophistrie.

Mores wittes are captiuated.

His doctrine is after his owne feelyng and as the profession of his hart is. For the Popish haue yelded thē selues, to folow the lustes of their flesh, & compel their witte to absteine frō looking on ẏ truth lest she should vnquiet them and draw them out of the podell of their filthy voluptuousnesse. As a carte that is ouer laden goyng vp an hill draweth the horses backe, and in a tough mire maketh them stand still. And then the carter the deuill whiche driueth thē is euer by and whistelleth vnto them and biddeth them captiuate their vnderstādyng vnto profitable doctrine for which they shal haue no persecution but shal reigne and be kynges and enioy the pleasures of the world at their owne will.

A pretty example.

The xiij. Chapter.

IN the xiij. hee sayth that the Clergie burneth no man. As though the pope had not first fownd the law, & as though all his preachers babled not that in euery Sermon, burne these heretickes burne them for we haue no other argument to conuince them and as though they compelled not both Kyng & Emperour to sweare that they shall so do, yer they crowne them.

Then hee bringeth in prouisions of Kyng Henry the v. Of whom I aske. M. ¶ William Tyndall to the Christian Reader.

When the olde Scribes and Pharisees had darckned the Scripture wyth their traditions, and false interpretacions, and wicked perswasions of fleshly wisdome, and shut vp the kingdome of heauen (which is Gods word) that the people coulde not enter in vnto the knowledge of the true way, as Christ complayneth in the Gospell. Math. xxiij. Then they sat in the hartes of men with their false doctrine in the stead of God and hys word, & slew the soules of the people to deuoure their bodyes, and to robbe them of their worldly substaunce. But when Christ and Iohn the Baptiste had restored the Scripture agayne vnto the true vnderstanding, and had vttered their falsehead, and improued their traditions, and confounded their false interpretations with the cleare and euident textes, and with power of the holy Ghost, & had brought all their iuggling and hypocrisie to light, thē they gat them vnto the elders of the people & perswaded them saying, this man is surely of the deuill, and hys myracles be of the deuill no doubt. And these good workes which he doth in healing the people, yea and his preaching against our couetousnes are but a cloke to bring hym vnto hys purpose, that when he hath gotte him disciples ynow, he may rise against the Emperour, and make hymselfe kyng. And then shall the Romaynes come & take our land from vs, and cary away our people, and put other nacions in our realme: and so shall we lose all that we haue, and the most part of our liues therto. Take heede therefore betimes while there is remedy, yet he go so far that ye be not able to resiste hym.

Math. 23.

An old practise of the Pharisees, newly practised by the Pope & his Prelates.

The elders of the people which were rich and welthy, though before they in a maner fauoured Christ, or at ẏ least way were indifferent, not greatly caryng whether God or the deuil raigned, so that they might bide in their authoritie, feared immediatly (as Herode did of the losse of his kingdome), when the wise men asked where the new borne king of Iewes was) and conspired with the Scribes and Pharisees against Christ, and tooke him and brought him vnto Pilate, saying: We haue founde this fellow peruerting the people, and forbidding to pay tribute vnto Cesar, and saying that he is king, and mouyng the people from Galile vnto this place. The Pilate though he likewise was before indifferent, put now in feare of the losse of his office thorow such perswasions, slew innocent Christ. And in very deede as the Scribes & Pharisees were all their liues before blynde guides vnto the destruction of their soules, euen so were they at their last ende blinde Prophetes vnto the destruction of their bodyes. For after that they had slayne Christ and diuers of his Apostles, and persecuted those poore wretches that beleued on hym, God to auenge the poore innocent bloude that bare witnes vnto the truth, poured hys wrath among them, that they thēselues rose against the Emperour. And the Romaynes came (according as they blyndly prophesied) and slew the most part of them and caryed ẏ rest captiue into all nacions, and put other nacions in the Realme. But whose fault was that insurrection against the Emperour and mischiefe that followed? Christes and his Apostles whom they falsely accused before hand? May Christ taught that they shoulde geue Cesar that pertayned vnto Cesar, and God that which belonged to God: Euē that they should geue Cesar lawfull their bodely seruice & God the hart, and that they should loue Gods law & repent of their euill, & come and receaue mercy, and let the wrath of god be taken from of them. And the Apostles taught that all soules should obey the hyer powers or temporall rulers: but their obstinate malice that so hardened their harts that they coulde not repent, and their rapyng vpon the open and manifest truth which they coulde not improue, and resisting the holy Ghost, and sleying of the preachers of righteousnes, brought the wrath of God vpō thē, and was cause of their vtter destruction.

The cruell Iewes by persecutyng Christ & his Apostles procured the vengeaunce of God to lyghten vpō them selues

The Apostles taught all obedience.

Euen so our Scribes and Pharises, now that their hypocrisie is disclosed, and their falshead so brought to light that it can no lōger be hid, get thē vnto the elders of the people, the Lordes, gentlemen, and temporall officers, and to all that loue this worlde as they do, and vnto whosoeuer is great wyth the kyng, and vnto the kyngs grace himselfe, and after the same ensample, and wyth the same perswasions cast them into like feare of losing of their worldly dominions, and roze vnto them, saying: ye be negligent and care nothing at all, but haue a good sport that the heretickes raple on vs. But geue thē space a while till they be growen vnto a multitude, and then ye shall see them preach as fast against you, and moue the people against you, and do their beste to thrust you downe also, and shall cry hauocke, and make all common. O generation of serpentes, how well declare ye that ye be the right sonnes of the father of all lyes. For they which ye call heretickes preach nothing saue that which our Sauiour Iesus Christ preached and his Apostles, adding nought therto nor pluckyng ought therfro, as the Scripture commaundeth, and teach all men repentaunce to God and his holy lawe, and fayth vnto our Sauiour Iesus Christ, and the promises of mercy made in hym, and obedience vnto all that God commaundeth to obey. Neyther teach we so much as to resiste your most cruell tyranny with bodely violence, saue wyth Gods worde onely: entending nothyng but to driue you out of the temple of Christ, the harts, consciences, and soules of mē (wherein with your falshead ye sit) and to restore agayne Iesus our Sauiour vnto his possession and inheritaunce bought with his bloude, whence ye haue driuen him out with your manifolde wyles and subtilte.

A good admonition to all blynde guides.

Take heede therefore wicked Prelates, blynde leaders of the blynde, indurat and obstinate hypocrites take heede. For if the Pharisees for their resisting the holy Ghost, that is to say, persecuting the open and manifest truth and sleying the preachers therof escaped not the wrath & vengeaunce of god: how shall ye scape which are farre worse thē the Pharisees. For though the Pharisees had shut vp the Scripture and set vp theyr owne professions: yet they kept theyr owne professions for the most part. But ye will be the chiefest in Christes flocke, and yet wyll not keepe one iot of the right way of his doctrine. Ye haue therto set vp wonderfull professions to be more holy therby thē ye thinke that Christes doctrine is able to make you, and yet keepe as little therof (except it be with dispensations) in so much that if a man aske you, what your maruelous fashioned playing coates, and your other popatrye meane, and what your disfigured heades, & all your Apishplay meane, ye know not: and yet are they but signes of thinges which ye haue professed. Thyrdly ye will be Papistes and holde of the Pope, and yet looke in the Popes lawe and ye keepe therof almost nought at all but whatsoeuer soundeth to make for your bellyes, and to maintaine your honour, whether in the Scripture or in your owne traditions, or in the Popes lawe, that ye compell the laye people to obserue violently, threatening them with your excommunications and cursses, that they shalbe damned both body and soule if they keepe them not. And if that helpe you not, then ye murther them mercilesly with the sworde of the temporall powers, whom ye haue made so blinde that they be ready to sley whom ye cōmaūde, and will not yet heare his cause examined nor geue him roome to answere for himselfe.

Our Prelates seeke to be chiefe and highest.

The Popes clergie are murtherers

A good admonition to all rulers.

And ye elders of the people, feare ye God also. For as the elders of the Iewes which were partakers with the Scribes and Pharisees in resisting the holy Ghost, and in persecuting the open truth, and sleying the witnesses therof, and in prouoking the wrath of God, had their parte with them also in the day of wrath and sharpe vengeaunce which shortly after fell vppon them, as the nature of the sinne against the holy Ghost is, haue her damnation, not onely in the worlde to come, but also in this life, accordyng vnto all the ensamples of the Bible and autenticke stories since the worlde beganne: euen likewise ye, if ye will wincke in so open & cleare light and let your selues be led blyndfold, and haue your part with the hypocrites in lyke sinne and mischief, be sure, ye shall haue your part with them in lyke wrath and vengeance thet is like shortly to fall vpon them.

The commō perswasion vsed by hypocrites.

And concernyng that the hypocrites put you in feare of the rising of your commons agaynst you, I aunswere: if ye feare your cōmōs, so testifie ye agaynst your selues that ye are tyraunts. For if your consciences accused you not of euill doyng, what neede ye to feare your commons? What commons was euer so euil that they rose against their heads for well doyng? Moreouer ye witnesse agaynst your selues also that ye haue no trust in God. For he hath promised the temporall officers assistence, if they minister their offices truly, and to care for the keepyng of thē, as much as they care for to kepe his lawes.

The Popes clergie are lyers.

The hypocrites happly byd you take an example of the Vplandish people of Almany which (they lye) that Martin Luther styrred vp. For first what one sentence in all the writyng of Martin Luther finde they that teacheth a mā to resist his superiour? Moreouer if Martin Luther and the preachers had styrred vp the common people of Germany, how happened it that Martin Luther & other like preachers had not perished likewise with them, whiche are yet all alyue at this houre? Ye will aske me who styrred thē vp then. I aske you. Who styrred vp the commōs of the Iewes to resiste the Emperour, after that the Scribes and Pharisees with the Elders of the people had slayne Christ & his Apostles? Verely the wrath of God. And euen so here, the wrath of God styrred them vp, partly to destroy the enemyes and persecutours of the truth, and partly to take vengeaunce on those carnall beastes, whiche abused the Gospell of Christ to make a cloke of it to defend their fleshly libertie, and not to obey it and to saue their soules therby.

The wrath of God styreth vp the people to destroy the enemies and persecutors of the truth.

If kynges, Lordes, and great men therfore feare the losse of this worlde. Let them feare God also. For in fearyng God shall they prolong their dayes vpon the earth, and not with fightyng agaynst God. The earth is Gods onely, & his fauour and mercy doth prolong the dayes of kynges in their estate & not their owne power and might.

God is the defender of kynges and princes.

And let all men (be they neuer so great) hearkē vnto this and let this be an aunswere vnto them. Wicked kyng Achab sayd vnto the Prophet Elias, Art thou he that troublest Israell? And Elias aūswered, it is not I that trouble Israell, but thou and thy fathers household, in that ye haue forsaken the commaundementes of the Lord and folow Idoles. Euen so the preachers of the truth which rebuke sinne are not the troublers of Realmes and common wealthes, but they that do wickedly, and namely high Prelates and mighty Princes which walke without the feare of God and lyue abhominably, corrupting the common people with their example. They be they that bryng the wrath of God on all Realmes and trouble all common wealthes, with warre, dearth, pouertie, pestilence, euill lucke and all misfortune.

Wicked kynges and rulers that persecute Gods ministers are the troublers of them selues and their realme and not the preachers.

And vnto all subiectes be it sayd, if they profesſe the law of God & fayth of the Lord Jesus, & wilbe Christes Disciples: then let them remember that there was neuer man so great a subiect as Christ was: there was neuer creature that suffred so great vnright so paciently and so meekely, as he. Therfore what soeuer they haue bene in tymes past, let them now thincke that it is their partes to be subiect in the lowest kynde of subiection and to suffer all thynges pacientlỹ. If the hyghe powers bee cruell vnto you with naturall cruelte, then with softenesse and pacience ye shall either wynne them or mitigate theyr fiercenesse. If they ioyne thẽ vnto the Pope, and persecute you for your fayth and hope whiche ye haue in ỹ Lord Jesus: then call to mynde that ye be chosen to suffer here with Christ, that ye may ioy with hym in the ỹle to come with ioye euerlastyng that shall infinitely passe this your short payne here. If they commaunde that God forbiddeth: or forbyd that God commaundeth, then aunswere as the Apostles did, Actes.v. that God must be obeyed more then mã. If they compell you to suffer vnright, then Christ shall helpe you to beare, and his spirite shall comfort you. But onely see that neither they put you from Gods worde, nor ye resiste them with bodely violence. But abyde pacientlỹ a while till the hypocrisie of hypocrites be slayne with the sword of Gods word, and vntill the word be openly published & witnessed vnto ỹ powers of ỹ world, that their blyndnesse may be without excuse. And thẽ wil god awake as a fierce Lyon agaynst those cruell Wolues whiche deuoure his Lambes, and will play with the hypocrites, and compasse them in their owne wyles, & send them a dazing in the head and a swimming in their brayues, & destroy them with theyr owne counsell. And then those malicious and wilfull blynd persecuters whiche refusing mercy when they were called thereto, chose rather to haue theyr part with hypocrites in sheddyng of innocent bloud, shalbee partakers with them also in hauyng theyr owne bloud shed agayne, God geuyng an occasion that one wicked shall destroy an other.

As many as will be the disciples of Christ must learne of him meekenes & obedience to the higher powers.

Ye must suffer wyth Christ that ye may ioye with him in the ỹle to come.

God will be reuenged vpon cruell tyrauntes.

And as for wickednesse whence it springeth, and who is the cause of all insurrection, and of the fall of Princes, & the shortenyng of theyr dayes vpon the earth, thou shalt see in the glasse folowyng which I haue set before thyne eyes, not to resiste the hypocrites with violence (whiche vengeaunce pertayneth vnto God) but that thou mightest see their wicked wayes and abhominable pathes, to withdraw thy selfe from after them and to come agayne to Christ, and walke in hys light, and to folow hys steppes, and to committe the keepyng both of thy body and soule also vnto him, and vnto the father thorough hym, whose name bee glorious for euer. Amen.

In the treatise folowing is shewed who are the causers of insurrection.

¶ Prelates appointed to preach Christ, may not leaue Gods worde, and minister temporall offices: But ought to teach the lay people the right way, and let them alone with all temporall businesse.

OUr Sauiour Jesus Christ answered Pilate, Joh.18. that his kindome was not of thys worlde. And Mathew.x. he sayth: The Disciple is not greater then his master: but it ought to suffice the Disciple that he be as hys master is. Wherfore if Christes kyngdome be not of this worlde, nor any of his disciples may be otherwise then he was, then Christes Vicars which minister his kingdome here in his bodely abslẽce, & haue ỹ ouersight of his flock, may be none Emperours, kinges, Dukes, Lords, Knightes, temporall iudges, or any tẽporal officer, or vnder false names haue any such dominion, or minister any such office as requireth violẽce. And Math.6. No mã cã serue two masters. where Christ cõcludeth saying: Ye can not serue God & Mãmon: that is, riches, couetousnes, ambicion and temporall dignities.

Iohn.18.

Math.10.

The ministers of Christes doctrine may not haue any temporall offices.

Math.6.

And Math.xx. Christ called his disciples vnto him, and sayde: ye know ỹ the Lordes of the heathen people haue dominion ouer them, and they that be great do exercise power ouer them: How be it, it shall not be so among you. But whosoeuer will be great among you, shall be your minister, and he that will be chiefe shalbe your seruaunt: euen as the sonne of man came not that men shoulde minister vnto hym: but for to minister and geue his life for the redemption of many. Wherfore the officers in Christes kingdome may haue no temporall dominion or iurisdiction, nor execute any temporall auctoritie or lawe of violence, nor may haue any like maner among them. But cleane cõtrary they must cast themselues downe vnder al, and become seruauntes vnto all, suffer of all, and beare the burthen of euery mans infirmities, and go before thẽ, & fight for them agaynst the world with the sworde of Gods word, euẽ vnto ỹ death, after the ensample of Christ.

Math.xx.

The officers in Christes kingdome may haue no temporall dominion.

kingdome of heauen, Christ called a young child vnto hym and set him in ỹ middes among them saying: Except ye turne backe and become as childrē, ye shall not enter in the kingdome of heauen. Now younge children beare no rule one ouer an other, but al is felowship amonge them. And he sayde moreouer: whosoeuer humbleth himselfe after the ensample of this childe, he is greatest in the kingdome of heauen, that is, to be (as concerning ambition and worldly desire) so childishe that thou couldest not heaue thy selfe aboue thy brother, is the very bearing of rule, & to be great in Christes kingdome. And to describe the very fashion of the greatnesse of his kingdome, he sayd: He that receaueth one such childe in my name receaueth me. what is ỹ to receaue a childe in Christes name? Verely to submitte, to meeke, and to humble thy selfe, and to cast thy selfe vnder all men, & to consider all mens infirmities and weakenesses, and to helpe to heale their diseases wyth the worde of truth, and to liue purely that they see no contrary ensample in thee to whatsoeuer thou teachest them in Christ, that thou put no stumblinge blocke before them, to make them falle while they be yet yoūg and weake in the fayth: But that thou absteine as Paule teacheth. 1. Thes. 5. Ab omni specie mala, from all that might seeme euill or wherof a man might surmise amisse, and that thou so loue them, that whatsoeuer gift of god in thee is, thou thinke the same theirs and their foode, and for their sakes geuen vnto thee, as the truth is, and that all their infirmities be thine, and that thou fele thē, and that thine hart mourne for them, and that with al thy power thou helpe to amende them, and cease not to crye to God for thē neither day nor night: and that thou let nothing be founde in thee that any man may rebuke, but whatsoeuer thou teachest them, that be thou: and that thou be not a woolfe in a Lambes skinne as our holy father ỹ Pope is, which commeth vnto vs in a name of hypocrisie, and in the title of cursed Cham or Ham, calling himselfe Seruus seruorum, the seruaunt of all seruauntes, and is yet founde tyrannus tyrannorum, of all tyrauntes ỹ most cruell. This is to receaue young children in Christes name, and to receaue young children in Christes name, is to beare rule in the kingdome of Christ. Thus ye see, that Christes kingdome is all together spirituall, and the bearing of rule in it is cleane cōtrary vnto the bearing of rule temporally. wherfore none that beareth rule in it may haue any temporall iurisdiction, or minister any temporall office that requireth violence to compell withall.

To receiue a child in Christes name what it is.

1. Thes. 5.

The Pope is a Woolfe in a lambes skinne.

¶ Peter was not greater then the other Apostles, by any authoritie geuen him of Christ.

They saye that Peter was chiefe of the Apostles, verely as Appelles was called chief of Painters for his excellent cunninge aboue other, euen so Peter may be called chiefe of the Apostles for his actiuitie and boldnes aboue the other: but that Peter had any auctoritie or rule ouer his brethren and felow Apostles, is falise and contrary to ỹ scripture. Christ forbad it the last euen before his passion, and in diuers times before, and taught alway the contrary as I haue rehearsed.

Why Peter was called chief of the Apostles.

Peter had no authoritie aboue the rest of the Apostles.

Thou wilt say: thou canst not see how there should be any good order in that kyngdome where none were better then other, and where the superior had not a lawe and authoritie to compell the inferior with violēce. The worlde truely can see no other way to rule then with violence. For there no man absteineth from euil but for feare, because the loue of righteousnes is not written in their hartes. And therefore the Popes kingdome is of the worlde. For there one sorte are your grace, your holines, your fatherhode: An other, my Lord Byshop, my Lord Abbot, my Lord Prior: An other, master Doctour, Father, Bachelar, mayster Parson, maister Vicar, and at the last commeth in simple syr John. And euery man raigneth ouer other wyth might, and haue euery ruler his prison, his iayler, his chaynes, his tormentes, euen so much as the Fryers obseruauntes obserue that rule, and compell euery man other, with violēce aboue the cruelnesse of the heathen tyrauntes, so that what commeth once in, may neuer out for feare of telling tales out of schole. They rule ouer the bodye with violence, and compell it whether the harte will or not, to obserue thinges of their owne making.

The popes kyngdome is of the worlde.

A rable of the Popes garde that weare his badge.

But in the kingdome of God it is contrary. For the spirite that bringeth them therher, maketh them willing,

and

The ministers of the kyngdome of God, must gouerne with all loue, meknes & patience.

and geueth them lust vnto the law of God, & loue cõpelleth them to worke, and loue maketh euery mãs good & all that he can do cõmune vnto his neighbours nede. And as euery mã is strõg in that kyngdome, so loue compelleth him to take the weake by the hand and to helpe hym, and to take him that can not go vppon his shoulders and beare him. And so to do seruice vnto the weaker, is to beare rule in that kingdome.

Peter in ỹ vse of speakyng for his diligẽce is called (but not in the Scripture) the chief of the Apostles.

And because Peter did excede the other Apostles in feruẽt seruice toward his brethren, therefore is he called, not in the Scripture, but in the vse of speakyng the chiefest of the Apostles & not that he had any dominion ouer them. Of which truth thou mayst see also the practise in the Actes of the Apostles after the resurrection. For when Peter had bene and preached in the house of Cornelius an heathen mã the other that were Circumcised chode him, because he had bene in an vncircumcised mans house & had eaten with him, for it was forbidden in the law, neither wist they yet that the heathen should be called. And Peter was fayne to gene accountes vnto them (which is no token of superioritie) and to shew them how he was warned of the holy ghost so to do Actes. xj.

Peter was enforced to render an accompt to his brethrẽ of his doynges.

And Actes xv. when a Coũcell was gathered of the Apostles and disciples about the Circumcision of the heathẽ, Peter brought forth, not his commaũdement and the authoritie of his Vicarshyp, but the miracle that the holy ghost had shewed for the heathen, how at ỹ preachyng of the Gospell the holy ghost had lighted vppon them and purified their hartes through fayth, and therefore proued that they ought not to be Circumcised.

Peter shewed no part of his authoritie, but the mighty power of God.

And Paule and Barnabas brought forth the miracles also that God had shewed by them among the heathen through preachyng of faith. And then James brought forth a prophecie of the olde Testament for the sayd part: And therewith the aduersaries gaue ouer their hold, and they cõcluded with one assent by the authoritie of the scripture and of the holy ghost, that the heathen should not be Circumcised, & not by the commaundement of Peter vnder payne of curling, excommunicatiõ & interditing and like bugges to make fooles and children afrayed withall.

All the Apostles alledge the authoritie of God in Christ, and no authoritie of their owne.

Peter was sent by the other Apostles vnto the Samaritanes, whiche is an euident token that he had no iurisdiction ouer them (for then they could not haue sent him) But rather (as the truth is) that the congregation had authoritie ouer him & ouer all other priuate persones, to admitte them for ministers and send them forth to preach whether so euer the spirite of God moued them, and as they saw occasion.

Peter was sent to preach in Samaria.

And in the Epistle vnto the Galathians thou seest also how Paule corrected Peter when he walked not the straight way after the truth of the Gospel. So now thou seest that in the kingdome of Christ and in his Churche or congregation and in his coũsels the ruler is the Scripture approued through the miracles of the holy ghost and men be seruauntes onely, and Christ is the head and we all brethren: And whẽ we call men our heades, that we do not be cause they be shorne or shauen, or because of their names: Parson, Vicare, Byshop, Pope: But onely because of the word whiche they preach. If they erre frõ the word, thẽ may whosoeuer God moueth his hart play Paule and correct hym. If he will not obey the Scripture, then haue his brethren authoritie by the Scripture to put hym downe and send hym out of Christes Church among the heretickes whiche preferre their false doctrine aboue the true word of Christ.

Gal. 2.

Paul rebuked Peter to his face.

Scripture is the chiefest of the Apostles.

We gene the ministers reuerence, not for themselues but because of the word that they minister.

How the Gospell punisheth trespassers, and how by the Gospell we ought to go to law with our aduersaries.

THough that they of Christes cõgregation be all willyng: yet because that the most part is alway weake, & because also that the occasions of the world be euer many and great, in so much that Christe which wist all thyng before hand sayth Math. xviij. wo be vnto the world by reason of occasions of euill, and sayth also, that it cã not be auoyded, but that occasions shall come, therfore it cã not be chosen but that many shall ouer fall when a weake brother hath trespalled, by what law shall he be punished: verely by the law of loue, whose properties thou readest in the 1. Cor. xiij. If the loue of God whiche is my professiõ be witten in myne hart, it will not let me hate my weake brother when hee hath offended me, no more then natural loue wil let a mother hate her child when when it trespasseth agaynst her. My weake brother hath offended me, he is fallē, his weakenesse hath ouerthrowē him: it is not right by the law of loue that I should now fall vpon hym and treade him downe in the myre and destroy him vtterly: But it is right by the law of loue that I runne to him & helpe him vp agayne.

how we may go to the lawe wythout trespassers.

By what processe we should go to law with our trespassers, Christ teacheth vs Math. xviij. Tell him his faulte betwene him and thee, with all meknesse remembring thou art a man and mayst fall also: If he repent and thou loue him, ye shal soone agree, and then forgeue him. And when thou forgeuest thy neighbour, thē thou art sure that God forgeueth thee thy trespasses by his holy promise Math. vj. If hee heare thee not, then take a neighbour or two. If he heare them not, then tell the congregation where thou art: and let the preacher pronounce Gods law against him and let the sad and discrete men rebuke him and exhorte him vnto repentaunce. If he repent and thou also loue him accordyng to thy professiō, ye shall soone agree. If he heare not the congregation, then let him be taken as an heathen. If he that is offended be weake also, thē let them that be strōg go betwene and helpe them. And in lyke maner if any sinne agaynst the doctrine of Christ and the profession of a Christen man, so that he be a dronckard and an whore keper or what soeuer open sinne he do, or if he teach false learnyng: then let such be rebuked opēly before the congregation and by the authoritie of Scripture. And if they repent not, let them be put out of the congregation as heathen people. If they thē be not ashamed, we haue no remedy but pacietly to abide what God wil do and to pray in the meane tyme that God will open their hartes and geue thē repentaunce. Other law then this, Christes Gospel knoweth not, nor the officers therof.

Math. 6.

Open and cōmon offēdours are to be rebuked openly.

The kingdome of Christ is spirituall.

It is manifest therfore that the kingdome of Christ is a spirituall kingdom which no man can minister well and a tēporall kingdome to, as it is sufficiētly proued: because that no man whiche putteth his hand to the plow, and looketh backe is apt for the kyngdome of heauen, as Christ aunswered Luke. ix. vnto him ỳ would haue folowed hym, but would first haue take leaue of his housholde. If a man put his hād to the plow of Gods worde to preach it and looke also vnto worldly businesse, his plow will surely go awry. And therefore sayth Christe vnto an other that would likewise folow him but desired first to go and bury his father, Let the dead bury the dead: but come thou and shew or preach the kyngdome of God. As who should say, he that will preach the kingdome of god (which is Christs Gospell) truly, must haue his hart no where els. Luke. 9.

What officers the Apostles ordeined in Christes Church and what their offices were to do.

Officers first ordayned in Christes church

Wherfore the Apostles folowyng and obeyng the rule doctrine & commaundement of our Saniour Jesus Christ their master, ordeined in his kyngdome and congregation two officers: One called after the Greeke worde Byshop, in English an ouersear: which same was called Priest after the Greeke, Elder in English because of his age discretiō and sadnesse: for he was as nigh as could be alway an elderly mā: as thou seest both in the new and old Testament also, how the officers of the Jewes be called the Elders of the people, because (as thou mayst well thinke) they were euer old men as nigh as could be. For vnto age do men naturally obeye and vnto age doth God commaūde to geue honour saying Leui. xix. Rise vp before the hoorehead and reuerence the face of the old man. And also experience of things and coldnesse, without whiche it is hard to rule well is more in age thē in youth. And this ouersear dyd put hys handes vnto the plow of Gods worde and fed Christes flocke and tended thē onely without lookyng vnto any other businesse in the world.

In ỳ aged is experience.

An other officer they chose and called him Deacon after the Greke, a minister in English, to minister the almes of the people vnto the poore and nedy. For in the cōgregation of Christ loue maketh euery mans gift & goods commō vnto the necessitie of his neighbour. Wherfore the loue of God beyng yet hoate in the hartes of men, the rich that had the substaūce of this worldes goodes brought of their aboundaunce great plentie vnto the sustentation of the poore & deliuered it vnto the hāds of the Deacōs. And vnto the helpe of the Deacōs were widowes of lx. yeare old, holy, vertuous, and destitute of frendes, chosen: to tende & wayte vpon the sicke, and to wash the Saints fete, that came from one congregation vnto an other, whether for any busines or for feare of persecution. And those common goodes of the Churche offered for the succour of the poore grew in all Churches so exceedyngly that in some congregation it was so much that it was sufficient to maynteine an host of men. In so much that tyrannes did oft tymes persecute the Christen for those common goodes, as thou seest in the life of S. Laurence the Deacon of Rome.

The great and feruēt charitie in the primatiue church

And moreouer the couetousnes of the Prelates was the decay of Christēdome, and the encreasing of the kyngdome of Mahomete. For by the first springing of the empyre of Mahomete, the Emperours, Kynges, and great Lordes of Christendome had geuen their treasure so mightely vnto the Church, what after great victories, & what at their deathes, that their successours were not able to maintaine battell against the Saracenes & Turkes (for the world was not yet in such captiuitie that they coulde make theyr subiectes sweare on bookes what they were worth, & rayse vp taxes at their pleasure) so that a certayne writer of stories sayth: The prelates gaped whē the laye mē would take the warre vpon them agaynst the Turkes, & the laye men looked when the Prelates woulde lay out their money to make the warre withall, and not to spend it in worse vse, as the most part of them were wont to do, spending the money that was gotten with almose & blonde of martyrs vppon goodly plate and great vesseles of golde & siluer, without care of thinges to come, despising God whom they worshipped for their bellies sake onely and also mā. Moreouer it was the custome cuē then, saith the auctor, to aske what the Bysshopprike was worth: yea and to leaue a worse for a better, or to kepe both with a vnion. And at the same tyme Isacius the deputie of the Emperour came to Rome to confirme the Pope in his sea with the Emperours auctoritie, for ỹ election of the Pope was thē nothing worth except it had bene confirmed by the Emperour, and he founde so great treasure in the Church of Saint Iohn Lateran, that for disdayne which he had that they should haue such treasure in store, and not to helpe the Emperour in his warres against ỹ Turkes, seing his soldiars lacked wages, he tooke it away with violence against the wyll of ỹ Prelates, of which he exiled some, and payde his owne mē of warre with one part, and tooke an other part vnto him selfe, and sent the third part vnto the Emperour: which must needes haue bene a great treasure in one Church.

Isacius.

The election was cōfirmed by the Emperour.

Note here the treasure that ỹ Bysshops of Rome had at thys tyme.

¶By what meanes the Prelates fell from Christ.

The office of a bysshop was a romme at the beginning that no man coueted, and that no man durst take vpō hym, saue he onely which loued Christ better thē his owne life. For as Christ saith that no man might be his disciple except that he were ready to forsake life and all: euen so might that officer be sure that it woulde cost him his lyfe at one time or another for bearing record vnto the truth. But after that the multitude of the Christen were encreased & many great men had receaued ỹ faith, then both landes, and rentes, as well as other goodes were geuen vnto the maintenaunce as well of the clergie as of the poore: because they gaue then no tythes to the Priestes, nor yet now do saue in certaine countreys. For it is to much to geue almes, offeringes, landes, and tithes also. And then the Bysshops made them substitutes vnder them to helpe them, which they called priest, and kept the name of Bysshop vnto themselues.

The Bysshop of Rome in ỹ primatiue Church was a dāgerous office.

At the first entry of Christes Churche, there was no tythes payde to ỹ ministers.

But out of the Deacons sprang all the mischiefe. For thorow their hands went all thing, they ministred vnto ỹ clergie, they ministred vnto the poore, they were in fauoure with great and small. And when the Bysshops office began to haue rest and to be honorable, then the Deacons thorow fauour and giftes clymed vp therunto, as lightly he that hath the olde Abbotes treasure succedeth with vs. And by ỹ meanes of their practise and acquintaunce in ỹ worlde they were more subtile and worldly wise then the olde Bysshops, & lesse learned in Gods worde, as our Prelates are, when they come frō stuardships in Gentlemens houses, and from surueying of great mens landes, Lordes secretes, kinges counsels, Embassidourship, from warre and ministring all worldly matters, ye worldly mischiefe: and yet now they come not thence, but receaue all and bide there still, yea they haue enacted by playne parliament that they must byde in the courte still, or els they may not haue pluralitie of benefices. And then by litle and litle they enhaunsed thēselues, and turned all to themselues, minishing the poore peoples part, and encreasing theirs, and ioyning acquaintaunce with great men, and with their power climed vp and entitled them vnto the chusing and confirming of ye Pope and all Bishops, to flatter and purchase fauour and defenders: trusting more vnto their worldly wisdome thē vnto the doctrine of Christ which is ye wisdome of God, and vnto the defēce of man then of God. Then while they that had the plow by the tayle looked backe, the plow went awry, faith waxed feble and faintie, loue waxed colde, the Scripture waxed darcke, Christ was no more seene: he was in ye mōut with Moses, and therefore the Bishops would haue a God vppon the earth whom they might see, and therupon they begā to dispute who should be greatest.

How the clergie first by riches & the by flattery aduaunced thēselues.

When the Prelates waxed riche, then they disputes who shoulde be highest.

¶ How the Bishop of Rome became greater then other, and called hymselfe Pope.

Jerusalem was ye first seat of our hie bysshop.

WHen quod worldly wisdome, Hierusalē must be the greatest, for ywas Christes seat, Et factū est, so it came to passe for a season. And in conclusion where a great Citie was and much riches, there was the Bishoppe euer greater then his felowes. Alexandre in Egipte and Antioch in Grece, were greater then their neighbours. Then those decaying Constantinople and Rome waxed great, and stroue who shoulde be greater. And Cōstātinople sayd, where the Emperour is there ought to be the greatest seat and chiefest Bishop. For the Emperour lay most at Constantinople, because it was (I suppose) nigh the middes of the Empyre, therfore I must be the greatest sayde the Bishop of Constātinople. Nay quod ye Bishop of Rome, though ye Emperour lye neuer so much at Constātinople yet he is called Emperour of Rome, & Rome is the head of the Empyre, wherefore of right I must be the father of all watē. And thus whether they chalēged their title by the auctorite of God or man: or by Peter or pouling, it was all one, so they might be greatest.

Constantinople. Rome.

How Rome came to be ye chiefest cittie.

Rome the seate and mother of all wickednesse.

And great intercession was made vnto the Emperours of both parties: but in vayne a great season, for ye Emperours stopped their eares at such ambitious requestes long tyme, till at ye last there came an Emperour called Phocas which lay long in Italye, and was a very soft man & a pray for Prelates. In whose tyme Boniface the iij. was Bishop of Rome, a man ambitious and greedy vppon honour, and of a very suttle witte, nothing inferior vnto Thomas wolsee Cardinall of Yorcke. This Boniface was great vnto the Emperour Phocas, and with hys wyly perswasions and great intercession together obtayned of Phocas to be called the chiefest of all Bishops, and that his Church should be the chiefe Church. which auctorite as soone as he had purchased, he sent immediatly his commaundement with the Emperours power vnto all the Bishops of Almany commaunding that euery bishop should call all the priestes of hys diocese, and charge them that euery man should put away his wife vnder payne of excommunication. which tyranny though great resistaunce was made against it, he yet brought to passe with the Emperours swoorde, and his subtletie together. For the Bishops were riche, and durst not displease the Pope for feare of the Emperour.

Phocas.

Pope Boniface the third.

Phocas the Emperour first gaue priuilege to the Bishop of Rome to be the chief Bishop.

The chastitie of Priestes how it came vp.

Assoone as Nemroth that mighty hunter had caught this pray, that he had compelled all Bishops to be vnder him and to sweare obedience vnto him, then he began to be great in the earth, and called hymselfe Papa, wyth this interpretation, father of fathers. And when the Pope had exalted hys throne aboue his fellowes, then the vnitie that ought to be among brethren in Christes Church brake: and deuision began betwene vs and ye Grekes, which Grekes (I suppose) were at ye tyme the one halfe of Christendome. And when any Pope since exhorteth them to vnitie, they answere, that he which will raigne ouer his brethren with violence, breaketh vnitie and not they, and that they will not be vnder his tyranny wherunto he calleth them vnder a colour of vnitie. And from henceforth with the helpe of hys Bishoppes which were sworne to be true ligemen vnto hym, when betymes they were admitted to theyr bishoprikes of the Emperours and kinges, he beganne to lay a baite to catch the whole Empyre into his handes also.

Note here the climing vp of the Pope.

Deuision in the Church.

The Grekes will not be vnder the Popes tyranny.

By what meanes the Pope inuaded the Empyre.

Mahomet & the Pope began at one tyme.

AT that same season Mahomete the auctor of the sect of the Turkes and Saracenes beganne. And assoone as he had got much people vnto hym with wyles and fayned myracles, he inuaded the Empyre of Rome in those quarters. And looke how busie Mahomete was in those parties, so busie was the Pope in these quarters to inuade the Empyre (with the helpe of his swoorne Bysshoppes which preached all of none other God then the Pope) while the Emperour was occupyed a farre of in resisting of Mahomete.

And within few yeares after, when the kynges of Italy now and the vered our holy fathers for their couetous ambicion, then Gregory the third ioyned amitie with the Frenchmen, and called them to helpe, by whose power they gatte al they haue, and also maintaine it vnto this day. For if any man since that tyme hether displeased the Pope neuer so little, he immediatly cursed him, and excommunicate him, and proclaymed him no right enheritour, and that it was not lawfull to holde of him, and absolued his Lordes and subiectes of their allegeaunce, and sent his blessing vnto the French kyng and remission of sinnes to go and conquere his land, the Pope and French kyng alway deuiding the spoyle betweene them, the Bysshops and all that serued God for the helpe preaching the Popes might, how that he had power so to do, and all thynges to bynde and loose at his will, wrestyng the Scriptures to serue for their purpose, corrupting all the lawes both of God & man to proue his Godhead withall.

Gregory the third. The Pope came vp by the French mē, and by them he cōtinueth his estate till.

Pope Zacharias the first. Hildericus Pipinus.

THen came Pope Zacharias the first in whose tyme Hildericus was K. of Fraunce a man that gouerned hys Realme (as it oft chaunceth) by a Debite (as persons preache) one Pipine a Lord of his owne and his swoorne subiect. This Pipine sent an holy Bysshop to Pope Zacharias that he should helpe to make him kyng of Fraunce and he would be his defender in Italy (as the maner of scalled horses is the one to claw the other) and Zacharias answered that hee was more woorthy to be kyng that ruled the Realme and tooke the labours, then an idle shadow that went vp and downe and did nought And so vpon that the Lords of Fraūce by the persuasions of the Prelates consented vnto Pipine and thrust downe their right king vnto whom they were swoorne, & made a Monke of hym. And both the Lordes and also Pipine tooke dispensations for their othes of our holy father and were forswoorne. Thus was our holy father the Pope crept vp into the consciences of men with hys false interpretation of byndyng & loosyng good. viij. hundred yeares agone.

The kyng of Fraunce was made a Monke.

The Pope put downe the right French kyng and set vppe Pipine.

THen came Pope Stephanus the second out of whose hands Estulphus kyng of Lombardy would fayne haue scratched somwhat, for he thought that the holy fathers gathered to fast and had all ready, raked to much vnto thē. But the new kyng Pipine of Fraunce warned of his duty and seruice promised, and mindfull of old frendshyp, and hopyng for part of the praye, came to succour the Pope. And when hee had subdued the kyng of Lombardy, hee gaue vnto our holy father or rather to S. Peter ỹ hungry begger great Prouinces and countreys in Lombardy and in Italy, with the Ile Corsica and many great Cities of which some pertayned vnto the Emperour beyng thē at Constantinople, and yet the Emperour had sent before vnto kyng Pipine that he should not geue of his townes vnto the Pope. But Pipine aunswered that he came for the same intent, and to enhaunce our holy father. And our holy father receaued them.

Pope Steuen the second. Estulphus kyng of Lumbardy

How the Pope was aduaunced.

And thus the Empire was deuided in two partes: the Pope & the French kyng partyng the one halfe betweene them. And as the Emperour decayed, the pope grew. And as the pope grew, so the sect of Mahomete grew, for the Emperour (halfe his empire lost) was not able to defend him selfe agaynst the infidels. And the Pope would suffer no helpe hence to come for two causes: One, lest the Emperour should recouer his Empyre agayne, and an other because the Prelates of the Greekes would not submitte them selues vnto his Godhead as the Prelates of these quarters of the world had done.

By what meanes Mahomet waxed great.

Carolus magnus.

AFter Pipine raigned his sonne the great Charles whom we call Charlemayne which knew no other God but the pope, nor any other way to heauen then to do the Pope pleasure. For the Pope serued him for twoo purposes:

One,

The Pope become a great God on ẏ earth.

One, to dispence with him for whatsoeuer mischief he did: an other, to be stablished in the Empyre by his helpe, for without his fauour hee wist it would not be, so great a God was our holy father become all ready in those dayes.

Desiderius

This Pope Stephen in his latter dayes fell at variaunce with Desiderius kyng of Lombardy about the Archbyshop of Rauenna.

Pope Adrian the first.

After Stephen succeded Adriā ẏ first, with whom Desiderius the K. of Lō bardy would fayne haue made peace but pope Adrian would not. And shortly vpon that the brother of this Charlemayne which raigned with him in halfe the dominion of Fraunce dyed, whose wife for feare of Charles fled with her .ij. sonnes vnto Desiderius king of Lombardy for succour. Desiderius was glad of their comming trusting by the meanes of these two children to obtaine fauour among many of the Frenchmen and so to be able to resist Charles if hee would medle and to bryng Italy vnto the right Emperour agayne, & would haue had that pope Adrian should haue annoynted them kynges in their fathers roome. But Adrian refused that to do (for he saw Charles mighty and mete for his purpose) and was as wyly as Desiderius & thought to kepe out the right Emperour and be Emperor of Rome him selfe, though he gaue an other the name for a season till a more conuenient tyme came.

The Pope purposed to be Emperour himselfe.

Then Desiderius warred vppon the Popes iurisdiction. And Adrian sent to Charles. And Charles came with his army and draue out Desiderius and hys sonne, which sonne fled vnto the right Emperour to Constantinople. And Charles & the Pope deuyded the kyngdome of Lombardy betwene thē. And Charles came to Rome. And the Pope & he were sworne together, that who soeuer should be enemy vnto the one, should be enemy also vnto the other.

Charles & the Pope deuided the kyngdome of Lombardy.

The Pope gathered a Councell, and gaue vnto Charles the Empyre of Rome.

This Adrian gathered a Councell immediatly of an. C. iij. Bishops, Abbotes, and religious persones & gaue vnto Charles & his successours the empyre of Rome & ordeined that the right and power to chose the Pope should be his, and that no Byshop should bee consecrate till he had obtained of hym both consent and the ornamentes of a Byshop also (whiche they now bye of the Pope) vnder payne of cursyng and to be deliuered vnto blacke Sathā the deuill and losse of goodes Dist. ixij.

And Leo the third whiche succeded Adrian confirmed the same and crowned Charles Emperour of Rome for like seruice done vnto him. And then there was appoyntmēt made betwene the Emperours of Constantinople and of Rome and the places assigned how farre the borders of either Empire should reach. And thus of one Empyre was made twayne. And therfore the Empire of Cōstantinople for lacke of helpe was shortly after subdued of the Turkes.

Leo the iij. Pope.

Of one whole Empyre, the Pope made two.

The said Leo also called Charles the most Christen kyng, because of hys good seruice: which title the kynges of Fraunce vse vnto this day though many of them bee neuer so vnchristened: As the last Leo called our kyng the defender of the fayth. And as this Pope Clemens calleth the Duke of Sucldor the eldest sonne of ẏ holy sea of Rome, for no other vertue nor propertie that any man can know, saue that hee hath bene all his lyfe a pickequarell and a cruell and an vnrighteous bloudshedder, as his father that sitteth in that holy sea is. So now aboue seuen hundred yeares to be a Christē kyng is to fight for the Pope, and most Christen that most fighteth and sleath most men for his pleasure.

Most Christen kyng.

Defender of the fayth

The eldest sonne of the holy seate.

Who is a Christian kyng.

This Charles was a great conquerour that is to say a great tyraunt, & ouercame many natiōs with the sword, and as the Turke compelleth vs vnto his fayth, so he cōpelled thē with violence vnto the faith of Christ say the stories. But (alas) Christes fayth whereunto the holy Ghost onely draweth mens hartes thorough preachyng the worde of truth and holy liuyng accordyng therto, he knew not, but vnto the Pope hee subdued them and vnto this superstitious Idolatrie whiche we vse cleane contrary vnto the Scripture.

The lyfe of Charles.

Charles cōpelled all men to the obedience of the pope.

Moreouer, at the request and great desyre of his mother, hee maryed the daughter of Desiderius kyng of Lombardy, but after one yeare vnto the great displeasure of his mother he put her away agayne: but not without the false sutilte of the Pope thou mayst be sure, neither without his dispensation. For howe could Charles haue made warre for the Popes pleasure with Desiderius her father, and haue thrust hym out of his kingdome, and banished his sonne for euer, deuiding his kingdome betwene him and the pope, as long as she had bene his wife?

And therfore the Pope with his au-thorite of byndyng and losyng, losed the bondes of that Matrimony (as he hath many other sence, and dayly doth for lyke purposes) to the entent that he would with the sword of the Frenche kyng put the kyngdome of Lombardy that was somewhat to nye him, out of the way: by the reason of whose kings hys fatherhode could not raygne alone nor assigne or sell the Bysshoppriches of Italy to whom he lusted and at his pleasure.

Charles a filthy whoremonger.

The sayd Charles also kept iiij. concubines, and lay with two of his own daughters therto. And though he wist howe ẏ it was not vnknowne, yet his lustes being greater thē great Charles, he would not wete nor yet refrayne.

Charles hath hys whore caried with hym.

And beyond all that, the saying is: ẏ in his old age a whore had so bewitched him with a ryng and a pearle in it and I wotte not what imagerie grauen therein, that he went a sante after her as a dogge after a bitche, and the dotehead was beside him selfe & whole out of his mynde: in so much that whē the whore was dead, he could not departe from the dead corps, but caused it to be enbaumed & to be caryed with him whether soeuer he went, so that all the world wondered at him: till at the last his Lordes accombred with carying her from place to place and ashamed that so old a man, so great an Emperour and such a most Christen kyng, on whom & whose dedes euery mans eyes were set, should dote on a dead whore, toke counsell what should be ẏ cause. And it was cōcluded that it must nedes be by enchauntement. Thē they went vnto the Lophyne and opened it and sought and found this ring on her finger: which one of the Lordes tooke of and put it on his owne finger. whē the ring was of, he commaunded to burye her, regardyng her no longer. Neuertheless he cast a phantasie vnto this Lord and began to dote as fast on him, so that he might neuer be out of sight: But where our Charles was there must that Lord also be, and what Charles did, that must he be priuey vnto: vntill that this Lord perceauyng that it came because of this enchaunted ring, for very payne and tediousnesse tooke and cast it into a well at Acon in Douchland. And after that the ryng was in the well the Emperour coulde neuer depart from the towne, but in the sayd place where the ring was cast, though it were a foule marresse, yet he built a goodly monastery in the worship of our Lady, and thether brought reliques, from whence he coulde gette them, and pardōs to sanctifie ẏ place, & to make it more haunted. And there he lyeth, & is a Saint, as right is. For he did for Christes Vicar as much as the great Turcke for Mahomete: but to saue his holines that he might be canonised for a Saint, they fayne in hys life that his abiding there so continually was for the hotte bathes sakes which be there.

A dotyng Emperour

The Pope made this lecherous Emperour a Saint.

After Charlemayne, Lewes ẏ mylde was Emperour, which was a very patient man (a nother Phocas and a nother pray for the Pope) and so meke and softe that scarcely he coulde be angry at any thing at all. when our holy fathers had seene his water and spyed what complexion he was, they chose Steuen the 4. of that name Pope, without his knowledge, and bad him neyther good morrow nor good euen, nor once God speede about the matter, against their owne graunt vnto his father for his good seruice. And his softnes was yet somewhat displeased ther with, in as much as the election of the Pope perteyned vnto his right. But the Pope sent Embassadours & wrote all the excuses that he coulde, and came after him selfe to Fraunce to him, and peaced him, and crowned hym there Emperour, and passed the tyme a season with him, and they became very familiar together.

Lewes the milde.

Pope Steuen the iiij.

The Pope elected and set vp without the assent of the Emperour

After that, they chose Paschalis Pope of the same maner, which Paschalis sent immediatly Legates vnto the Emperour softe Lewes, excusing hymselfe & saying: that it was not his faulte, but that the clergie and the commō people had drawne him thereto with violence against his will. Then the Emperour was content for that once, & bad they should no more do so, but that the olde ordinaunce ought to be kept. The softnesse of this Lewes did him much care. For he was after prisoned of his owne sonne with helpe of Pope Gregory the fourth.

Pope Paschale.

The Pope how he abused the Emperour

After this mans dayes the Popes neuer regarded the Emperours, nor did the clergie of Rome sue any more to the Emperour, either for the election or confirmation of the Pope. More ouer after this Lewes there was neuer Emperour in Christendome of any power or able of his owne might to correct any Pope, neyther was there any kyng that coulde correct the outragious vices of the spiritualtie of his own realme after this time. For this Lewes left three sonnes, among which he deuided ỳ realme of Fraūce & all Douchland. which same for pride & disdayne that one should haue more then an other, fell together (as we say) by the eares, ech destroying others power, so that Fraunce was afterwarde of no might to do any great thyng. And thē the Pope raigned in Italy alone without care of any Emperour: in so much that Nicholaus the first, decreed that no secular Prince or Emperour should haue ought to do or be at the counsels of the clergie.

Alone.

Pope Nicholaus the first.

And after that Adrian the secōd was chosen Pope, the Emperours deputie being in Rome, and not once spokē to of the matter.

Pope Adrian the second.

And when the Emperours embassadours disdained, they answered who can resiste the rage of the people, and prayed them to be cōtent, and to salute him as Pope. And Adrian the thyrde decreed that they should not abide or tarie for the Emperours confirmation or authoritie in chusing the Pope, and that the Pope onely should call a generall counsel, and not the Emperour: or if the Emperour would presume ỳ to do, the counsell should be of none effect, though all the prelates of Christēdome were there, and though what soeuer they did were but Gods word.

Pope Adrian the third.

So mighty was the beast now waxed when he once began to raygne alone. And from this tyme hetherto perished the power of the Emperours and the vertue of the Popes, sayth Platina in ỳ lyfe of Popes. For since that tyme, as there was none Emperour of might, so was there no Pope of any vertue.

The vertue of the Pope and power of ỳ Emperour perished together.

After this Lewes, the Empyre of Fraunce, and of all Douchlād, was deuided betwene his three sonnes, which (as I sayde) fought one with another and destroyed the strength of the Empyre of Fraunce. And from that tyme to this, which is aboue vij. hundred yeares, thou shalt reade of few Popes that haue not led their liues in bloudshedding, in so much that if thou consider the stories well, thou shalt easely perceaue that there hath bene slayne about their cause farre aboue xl. hūdred thousand men, besides that there hath bene but few Princes in Christēdome that hath not bene busied and combred a great part of his life about their matter. Either in warres begunne at their setting on, eyther in ceasing scismes or diuision that hath bene amōg the clergie, who should be Pope: or striuing of byshops, who should be greatest, as betwene the Byshop of Yorke & Canterbury in England, and betwene the Byshops of England & wales, whereof all the chronicles be full, or in reforming Fryers or Monkes, or in sleying them that vttered their false hypocrisie with Gods worde.

The popes haue bene euer bloud shedders a. bout. vij. C. yeares.

All Christē dome hath bene troubled with the Popes caules.

When the Emperour was downe, and no man in Christendome of any power to be feared, then euery nacion fell vppon other, and all landes were at variaunce betwene thēselues. And then as the Danes came into England and vexed the Englishmen, and dwelt there in spite of their hartes, euen so came straunge nacions whose names were scarce heard of before in these quarters (as the Vandales, Hunnes, and Gothes) and ran thorowout all Christendome by C. thousands together, and subdued the landes and dwelt therin maugre the inhabitours, as thou mayst see in Douchland how diuers nacions are inclosed in ỳ middes of the lande of a straunge tongue which no Douchmen vnderstande: and that rule continued well vij. or ix. score or two hundred yeares. And in all this season, whosoeuer wan the maystrye, hym the spiritualtie receaued, and him they crowned kyng, and to him they claue. And whatsoeuer any tyraunt had robbed all hys life, that of the most part thereof must he deale among them at hys death for feare of Purgatory. The spiritualtie all that season preached the Pope mightely, built Abbayes for recreation and quyetnes, shrining them alway for saintes which purchased them priuileges, or fought for their liberties, or disputed for the Popes power, howsoeuer they liued (but after 1. yeare whē their liues were forgotten) and if any resisted thē whatsoeuer mischief they went about, hym they noted in the chronicles as a cruell tyraunt: ye and whatsoeuer misfortune chaunced any of hys posteritie after him, that they noted also, as though God had plagued them, because their forefather was disobedient vnto holy church, and euer put the stories that vttered their wickednes out of the way, and gathered reliques frō whence they coulde get them, and fayned myracles, and gaue thēselues only vnto Poetry: and shut vp the scripture: so that this was the very tyme of which Christ speaketh Math. xxiiij. in Vandales. Hunnes. Gothes.

The spiritualtie obeyed to him that gat the victory, how wicked soeuer he was.

This was the tyme that false prophetes did arise in the church.

which

which false Prophetes should arise, & shew myracles and wonders, to deceaue the very elecre if it had bene possible.

FInally in thys busie worlde, the kynges of Lumbardy gatte a little might and came vp agayne, and were diuers tymes Emperours, though of no great might. And one Beringarius kyng of Lumbardy began to meddle with our holy fathers busines. wherfore ỳ Pope fled vnto Ottho kyng of ỳ Saxons, which by that tyme had gotten might, and brought him into Italy against Beringarium, which Ottho ouercame Beringarium, and was made Emperour for his labour, and thus came the Empyre first vnto Douchlande.

Beringarius.

Ottho.

And Ottho receaued the Empyre of one Pope Iohn (say they) with thys othe: I Ottho do promise and sweare vnto the Lord Iohn by the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost, and by the wod of the crosse that maketh liuing, and by these reliques of Saintes, that if I come to Rome with Gods helpe, I will exalte the holy church of Rome and the gouernour of the same vnto my power: Neyther shalt thou lose lyfe nor members, or that honour that thou hast by my will, counsell, consent or setting a worke. Moreouer I will make in Rome no constitution or ordinaunce of any thing that pertayneth vnto thee or vnto the Romaines without thy counsell. And what so euer of the landes of Saint Peter commeth vnto our hands, I will deliuer it ther. And vnto whosoeuer I shall commit the rule of Italy, I will make hym sweare that he shall helpe thee, to defende the landes of Saint Peter vnto his power.

Pope Iohn the.xij.

The oth of the Emperour made to the pope.

Note here the dissimulation of ỳ Pope, in callyng his possessions S. Peters possessions.

And Gregory the fift (when they had got at the last that which they long gaped for) made this ordinaunce of chusing ỳ Emperour, to stablishe it withall: that vj. Lordes of Almany, iij. of the spiritualtie and iij. of the temporaltie with the kyng of Bohem the vj. to be the odde man & Emperr should chuse him for euer, and sende hym to the Pope to receaue his othe, and to be crowned. Neuertheless the Pope to keepe the Emperour a far of, sendeth hym hys coronation home to him ofttymes, much leuer than that he should come any nearer, as a meeke spyryted man, that had leuer liue solitarie and alone then haue his holinesse seene.

Pope Gregory the fift.

The election of the Emperour appertayneth to the Lordes of Germany.

A proper similitude to describe our holy father.

AND to se how our holy father came vp, marke the example of an Iuy-tree: first it springeth out of ỳ earth, & then a while creepeth along by ỳ ground till it finde a great tree: then it ioyneth it selfe beneath alow vnto the body of the tree and creepeth vp a litle and a litle fayre and softly. And at the begynnyng while it is yet thynne and small that the burthen is not perceaued, it semeth glorious to garnishe the tree in the wyntre & to beare of the tempestes of the weather. But in the meane season it thrusteth his rootes into ỳ barck of the tree to hold fast with all and ceasseth not to clyme vp till it be at the top and aboue all. And then it sendeth hys braunches a long by the braunches of the tree and ouergroweth all and waxeth great, heauy and thicke and sucketh the moysture so sore out of the tree and his braunches, that it choketh and stifleth them. And then the foule stinckyng Iuye waxeth mighty in the slope of the tree and becommeth a sete and a nest for all vncleane byrdes & for blind Oules whiche hauke in the darke and dare not come at the light.

The Iuy-tree springeth.

The maner how ỳ pope did spring vp to hys great auctorite.

Euen so the Bishop of Rome now called Pope at the begynnyng crope a long vppon the earth, and euery man trode vpon him in this world. But assoone as there came a Christen Emperour he ioyned him selfe vnto hys seete and killed them, and crope vp a litle with beggyng nowe this priuilege now that, now this Citie now that, to finde poore people with all and the necessary Ministers of Gods word. And hee entitled the Emperour with chosing the Pope and other Bishops, and promoted in the spiritualty, not whom vertue and learning but whom the fauour of great men cõmended: to flater to get frendes and defenders with all.

The chusing of the Pope & all Bishoppes pertayned vnto the Emperour and kinges once.

And the almes of the congregation which was the fode and patrimony of the poore and necessary preachers, that he called S. Peters patrimony, S. Peters rentes, S. Peters landes, S. Peters right: to cast a vayne feare and an heathenish superstitiousnesse into the hartes of mẽ, that no man should dare meddle with what soeuer came once in to their handes for feare of Saint Peter, though they ministred it neuer so euil: and that they which should thinke it none almes to geue them any more

The almes geuen vnto the poore is become S. Peters patrimony.

(because

(because they had to much already) should yet geue S. Peter somewhat (as Nabucodonesser gaue his GOD Beel) to purchasse an aduocate and an intercessor of S. Peter, and that S. Peter should at the first knocke let thē in.

Dan. xiiij.

And thus with flatteryng and fayning and vayne superstition vnder the name of S. Peter he crept vp and fastened his rootes in the hart of the Emperour, and with his sword clame vp aboue all his felowbyshops & brought them vnder his feete. And as he subdued thē with the Emperours sword, euen so by sutiltie & helpe of them (after that they were sworne faythfull) he clame aboue the Emperour, and subdued hym also, and made stoupe vnto his feete, and kisse thē an other while.

The Pope first gat aboue all the Bishops, & then aboue the Emperour.

O Lucifer.

Yea pope Cœlestinus crowned the Emperour Henry the fift holdyng ỳ crown betwene his feete. And when he had put the crowne on, he smote it of with his feete agayne saying: that he had might to make Emperours and put them downe agayne.

Note this deuilish & abhominable pride.

And he made a constitution that no lay man should medle with their matters nor be in their Councels or witte what they did, and that the pope onely should call the Councell, and the Emperour should but defēd the Pope, prouided allway that the Councel should be in one of the Popes Townes, and where the Popes power was greater then the Emperours: then vnder a pretence of condemnyng some heresie hee called a generall Councell, where he made one a Patriarcke, an other Cardinall, an other Legate, an other Primate, an other Archbyshop, an other Bishop, another Deane, another Archdeacon, and so forth as we now see.

A lawe made by the Pope.

The Pope createth his shauelyngs into dignities.

And as the Pope played with the Emperour, so dyd his braunches and his members the Byshops play in euery Kyngdome, Dukedome, & Lordshyp: in so much that the very heyres of them by whom they came vp, hold now their landes of them and take thē for their chief Lordes. And as the Emperour is sworne to the Pope, euen so euery kyng is sworne to the Byshops and Prelates of his Realme: and they are the chiefest in all Parlamentes: yea they and theyr money and they that be sworne to them and come vp by them rule all together.

Quales pater talis filius, good naturall children.

And thus the Pope the father of all hypocrites hath with falsehode & guile peruerted the order of the worlde and turned the rootes of the trees vpward and hath put downe the kyngdome of Christ, and set vp the kyngdome of the deuil whose Vicare he is, and hath put downe the Ministers of Christ, and hath set vp the Ministers of Sathan, disguised yet in names and garmentes lyke vnto the aungels of light & ministers of righteousnes. For Christes kyngdome is not of the world John. xviij. and the Popes kyngdome is all the world.

The Pope and his order compared with Christes.

And Christ is neither iudge nor diuider in this world Luke. xij. But the Pope iudgeth & deuideth all the world and taketh the Empyre and all kyngdomes and geueth them to whom he lusteth.

Christ and the Pope compared together.

Christ sayth Math. v. Blessed are the poore in spirite: so that the first step in the kyngdome of Christ is humblenesse or humilitie, that thou canst finde in thyne hart to do seruice vnto all mē and to suffer that all men treade thee.

The Pope sayth. Blessed be the proude & hygh mynded that can clyme and subdue all vnder them and maynteine their right and such as will suffer of no man: so that he which was yester day taken from the dongehill and promoted this day by his Prince, shall to morow for the Popes pleasure curse him and excommunicate him and interdite his Realme.

Christ sayth. Blessed be the meke or soft that be harmlesse as Doues.

The Pope blesseth them that can set all the world together by the eares and fight and slea mānfully for his sake, that he may come haste from bloudshedyng to a Byshoprycke as our Cardinall dyd, and as S. Thomas of Canterbury did, which was made Byshop in the field in complete harnesse on his horse backe and his speare bloudy in his hand.

Christ hath neither holes for Foxes nor nestes for byrdes nor yet whereon to lay his head, nor promised ought in this world vnto his Disciples nor toke any to his Disciple but hym that had forsaken all.

The Iuytree the Pope hath vnder his rootes thoroughout all Christendome in euery village holes for Foxes and nestes for vncleane byrdes in all his braunches, and promiseth vnto his Disciples all the promotions of the world.

Christ bringeth a man lowe, but the Pope lifteth vp & hygh.

The nearer vnto Christ a man commeth, the lower he must descende and the poorer he must waxe: But the nearer vnto the Pope ye come, the hygher ye muſt chyme and the more riches ye muſt gather whence ſoeuer ye can get them, to paye for your Bulles, and to purchaſe a glorious name and licence to weare a mitre & a croſſe and a palle and goodly ornamentes.

How the Pope receaueth hys kyngdome of the deuill and how he diſtributeth it agayne.

The Pope receaueth his riches and kyngdomes of the deuill.

SHortly, the kyngdomes of the earth and the glory of them (which Chriſt refuſed (Math. iiij. dyd the deuill proffer vnto the Pope, and he immediatly fell from Chriſt and worſhipped the deuill, and receaued them. For by falſehead (as he maynteineth them) came he thereto, and by falſehead do all hys diſciples come therto. who of an hundred one is pope, Byſhop or any great Prelate, but either by Nicromancy or Symonie or waytyng on great mens pleaſures & with corruptyng of Gods word & faſhioning it after their luſtes.

The Pope diſtributeth his fathers kyngdome.

And the Pope after he had receaued the kyngdome of the world of the deuill and was become the deuilles Vicare, tooke vp in lyke maner all Chriſtendome an hygh and brought them from the mekeneſſe of Chriſt vnto the hyghe hill of the pride of Lucifer and ſhewed them all the kingdomes of the earth, ſaying: fall downe and worſhyp me, and I will geue you theſe. Vnto the ſpiritualitie he ſayth: fall frō Chriſt and preach me and take thou that Cardinalſhip thou that Byſhoprycke, thou that Abbotſhyp, and ſo forth: thou as many benefices as thou wilt and a diſpenſation for what thou wilt. And to Monkes and Friers in lyke maner, take thou that hole, and thou that neſt with what priuileges ye wil deſire and diſpenſations of your rules, if ye will preach me.

And vnto the temporalitie he ſayth: Firſt to the Emperour, if thou wilt fall downe and kyſſe my feete and ſweare to hold of me and to defend me I geue thee the Empyre.

And to all kynges in lyke maner, if they will ſweare to defende his liberties, and to hold of him, he crowneth them. And euē ſo all temporall Lordes from the higheſt vnto the loweſt and all officers and all maner ſubiectes, if they will enioy landes, rentes, offices, goodes and their very lyues they muſt runne the ſame way.

The very whores (Gods honour vnregarded) as lōg as they deſpiſe not him and his ordinaunces, they ſhall neſte in hys rentes and among hys Prelates. And the theeues and murtherers ſhall haue dennes in his ſanctuaries, whatſoeuer they do agaynſt God, ſo long as they hang on hym.

The Apoſtles choſe Prieſtes to preach Chriſt onely all other thynges layde a parte, and choſe none but learned and vertuous. The popes order compared with the order of the Apoſtles.

The Pope ſhaueth whoſoeuer commeth, leuer out of the ſtues then from ſtudie, and when they be ſworne, he ſendeth them vnto all great mens houſes to preach his godhed, to be ſtuardes, ſurueyers, receauers and counſellers of all maner miſchiefe: to corrupt wife, daughter and mayde, and to betray their owne maſter, as oft as it needeth to promote their falſhead withall. For thereto are they ſworne together. And when they haue done all miſchiefe, there ſhall no man wete whence it commeth. The popes Prieſtes.

The Apoſtles choſe Deacons to miniſter the almoſe of the riche vnto the poore. And to helpe the Deacons they choſe widowes of lx. yeare olde, holy and deſtitute of frendes to tende the ſicke. And the Pope in ſtead of ſuch widowes, maketh whoſoeuer commeth whether ſhe be young or old, but none ſaue them that be rich and able to pay xx. xxx. or xl. pounde for their profeſſion, to whom for as much more he will geue a diſpenſation on the morow to mary againe. And in ſtead of ſuch Deacons, he maketh both Deacons & ſubdeacons, which do nothing at all but are vaine names without office, except it be that on ſome holy day in ſtead of miniſtring ỹ goodes of the church vnto the poore they ſing an epiſtle or goſpell to begge more from the poore. The popes widowes. The popes Deacons.

And as his Deacons miniſter the goodes of the Church vnto the poore: euen ſo do his Prieſts preach Chriſtes Goſpell vnto the flocke.

And the almoſe that was geuen to the ſuſtentation of the poore, whiche thou ſhalt read in ſtories that it was in ſome cities aboue xx. xxx. xl. yea an hundred thouſand pounde, and all the landes geuen for the ſame purpoſe, they haue ſtollen from them and haue deuided it among themſelues. And therwith did they at the beginning corrupt the great men of the worlde, and clam vp to this heith where they now be. And for that haue they ſtroken a- How the Pope deuideth the poore peoples almes.

mong

mong themselues this viij. hundred yeares. And to maintein that which they haue falsely gotten, hath the pope stirred vp a sword of warre in al Christendome this viij. hundred yeares, and hath taken peace cleane out of the worlde.

When the Byshops, Priestes, and Deacons were fallen, and had reccaned of the Pope the kingdome that pertayned vnto the poore people, and had robbed them and parted their patrimony among thēselues: then sprang the orders of Monkes. Whose profession was, to abstaine from flesshe all their liues, to weare vile rayment, to eate but once in the day, and that but butter, chese, egges, fruites, rootes, and such thinges that were not costly, and might euery where be found. And they wrot bookes, and wrought diuers thynges to get their liuing withall. When the laye men sawe that the priestes were fallen into such couetousnes, and that the Monkes were so holy: they thought, these be meete mē to minister our almose vnto the poore people. For their profession is so holy that they can not deceaue vs as ỹ priestes do, and made the Monkes tutors and ministers vnto the poore, & gaue great landes & riches into their hands to deale it vnto the poore. When the Monkes saw such abundaunce, they fell after the ensample of the Priestes, and tooke dispensations of the Pope for their rules, and straite profession, which now is as wide as their coules, and deuided all among them and robbed the poore once more. And out of the Abbayes tooke he the most part of byshoprikes and cathedrall churches, and the most part of all the landes he hath, besides that there remayne yet so many mighty Abbayes and Nunries therto.

Monkes.

Monkes made ministers to the poore.

Monkes robbe the poore.

Assoone as the Monkes were fallē, then sprang these begging Fryers out of hell, the last kynde of Caterpillers, in a more vile apparell, and a more straite religion, that (if ought of relicte were left among the laye men for the poore people) these horseleches might sucke that also. Which dronebees as soone as they had learned their crafte, and had buylt them goodly and costly nestes, and their limiters had deuided all countryes amōg them to begge in, and had prepared liuinges of a certaintie, though with begging, then they also tooke dispensations of the Pope for to liue as largely and as lewdly as the Monkes.

Begging friers.

And yet vnto the laye men whome they haue thus falsely robbed, and frō which they haue deuided themselues, and made them a seuerall kyngdome among themselues, they leaue the paying of tolle, custome, and tribute (for vnto all ỹ charges of the realmes will they not pay one mite, and the finding of all the poore, the finding of scholers for the most part, the finding of these forclayd horseleches, and caterpillers, the begging Fryers, the repayring of the hye wayes, and bridges, the building and reparations of their Abbaies and Cathedrall Churches, Chapels, Coledges, for which they sende out their pardons dayly by heapes, and gather a thousand pounde for euery hundred that they bestow truely.

The charge of the lay people.

If the laye people haue warre or what soeuer charge it be, they will not beare a mite. If the warre be theirs (as the one part almost of all warre is to defende them) they will with falshead make thē beare the greatest part, besides that they must leaue their wines and children and go fight for them and lose their liues. And likewise in al their charges they haue a cast to poule the laye people. The Scottes cast downe a castel of ỹ Byshop of Durhams on the Scottishe bancke called Noram castell. And he gat a pardon frō Rome for the bulding of it againe, wherwith I doubt not but he gat for euery peny that he bestowed three.

And what do they with their store that they haue in so great plenty euery where: so that the very begging Fryers in short space to make a Cardinall or a Pope of their secte, or to do what feate it were for their profite, would not stick to bring aboue a kynges raūsom? verely make goodly places and parkes of pleasure, and gaye shrynes, and painted postes, and purchase pardons, wherewyth they yet still poule and plucke away that little wherwith the poore which perishe for neede, and fall into great inconueniences myght be somewhat holpen and relieued. And lay vppe in store to haue alway to pay for the defending of their faith, and for to oppresse the truth.

How the spirituallte bestow their tresure.

¶ How the Pope made him a lawe, and why.

After that the Pope with tyranny was clom vp aboue his brethren, and had made all the spiritualtie hys subiectes, and had made of them & hym a seuerall kingdome among thēselues, and had seperated them from the lay in all things, and had got priuileges, that whatsoeuer they did no man shoulde meddle with them: and after also he had receaued the kingdomes of the earth of Sathan, and was become his Vicar to distribute thē: and after that the Emperour was fallen in like maner at his feete and had worshipped him as God to receaue his Empyre of hym, and all kinges had done likewise to be annointed of him and to be crowned of hym, and after that the worlde both great & small had submitted themselues to receaue the beastes badge: then because ẏ Christes doctrine was contrary vnto all such kingdomes, & therefore had no law therein how to rule it, he went and made him a seuerall lawe of his owne makyng, which passed in cruelty and tyranny ẏ lawes of all heathen Princes.

The Pope maketh lawes.

And in his lawe he thrust in fayned giftes of olde Emperours that were out of memory, saying ẏ the Emperor Constantinus had geuen vp the Empyre of Rome vnto Saint Siluester which is proued a false lye for diuers causes: One that Saint Siluester being so holy a man as he was would not haue receaued it contrary to his masters commaundementes & doctrine: Another that the Emperours raigned in Rome many yeares after, and all Byshops sued vnto the Emperour, & not to the pope, which was but bishop of Rome onely, & not called father of fathers. Moreouer that no autentike story maketh mention that any Emperour gaue them their patrimony, but that Pipine which falsely and wyth strength inuaded the Empyre gaue it vnto hym. Then put he in the graunt of Phocas, then the gift of Pipine confirmed by the great Charles: then a fayned release of the election of the Pope geuen vp agayne vnto Pope Paschale by the Emperour Lewes. For they thē selues had graunted vnto Charlemaine and his successours, for euer the election or denomination of the Pope and Byshops to flatter him withall, and to make him a faithfull defender, and that in a generall counsell which (as they say) can not erre. Neuertheless Pope Paschall though he beleued the counsell coulde not erre, yet he thought them somewhat ouer seene to make so long a graunt, and therefore he purchased a release of gētle Lewes as they pretend. But verely it is more likely that they fayned that graunt to excuse their tyranny after they had taken the election into their handes againe with violēce, when the Emperours were weake & not able to resist them: as they fayned the gift of Constantine, after they had inuaded the Empyre with subtiltie & falsehead. And last of all they brought in the othe of Ottho with the order that now is vsed to chuse the Emperour.

What subtiltie the Pope vseth to stablishe his kingdome.

The Pope hath feined the gift of Constantine.

How the Pope corrupteth the Scripture and why.

Moreouer lest these his lyes should be spyed and lest happly the Emperours folowyng might say, our predecessours had no power to bynde vs nor to minish our might: And lest kynges folowyng should say after the same maner, that the sword & ful power to punish euil doers indifferently is geuen of God to euery kyng for hys ryme, and therfore that their predecessour could not binde them cōtrary vnto the ordinaunce of God: but rather ẏ it was vnto their damnation to make such grauntes and that they did not execute their office. And therfore the foule and mishapen monster gate him to the Scripture and corrupted it with false expositions, to proue that such authoritie was geuen him of God, and chalenged it by the authoritie of Peter, saying that Peter was the head of Christes Church, and that Christ had made him Lord ouer ẏ Apostles his felowes in that he bade him fede his shepe and lambes: John the last, as who should say that Paule which came long after, was not cōmaunded to feed as specially as Peter, which yet wold take none authoritie ouer the bodyes or ouer the faythes of them which he fed, but was their seruaunt for Christes sake, Christ euer the lord and head: And as though the other Apostles were not lykewise as specially commaunded as Peter: And as though we now & all that here after shall loue Christ were not commaunded to fede Christes flocke, euery man in his measure, as well as Peter. Are not we commaunded to loue our neighbours as our selues as well as Peter? why then are we not commaūded to care for hys flocke as well as Peter?

The Pope corrupteth the scripture, and why.

Peter (sayth the Pope) was the head of Christes church.

All ministers haue as great a charge geuen them of God as Peter had Moreouer if to fede Christes shepe is to be greatest (as no doubt to fede Christes flocke is to be great and most

to

to fede, is to be greatest, in which office though Peter was great, yet Paule was greater) how commeth it that the pope by that authoritie chalēgeth to be greatest, & yet this viij. hundred yeares feedeth not at all: but poysoneth their pasture with the venemous leuen of hys traditions and with wrestyng the text vnto a contrary sense?

Peter preached but the Pope preached not.

Then came he to this text Math. xvj. Thou art Peter and vppon this rocke I will builde my congregation or Church. Lo saith Antichrist the carnall beast, Peter is the rocke whereon the Church of Christ is built, & I am his successour, and therfore the head of Christes Church. When Christ ment by the rocke the confession that Peter had confessed saying: Thou art Christ the sonne of the lyuing God which art come into this world. This sayth is the rocke wheron Christes Churche is built. For who is of Christes Churche but he onely: that beleueth that Christ is Gods sonne come into this worlde to saue sinners? This faith is it, against which hell gates cā not preuaile. This sayth is it, which saueth the congregation of Christ, and not Peter.

Fayth is the rocke whereon Christes Churche is built.

Thē he goeth forth vnto that which foloweth: Vnto thee I will geue the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen, and what soeuer thou byndest in earth, it shalbe bound in heauen. &c. Loe sayth he, in that he sayth what soeuer thou bindest in earth, he excepteth nothyng, therfore I may make lawes and binde both King & Emperour. When Christ as he had no worldly kyngdome, euen so he spake of no worldly bindyng, but of bindyng of sinners. Christ gaue hys Disciples the keye of the knowledge of the law of God to binde all sinners, and the keye of the promises to loose al that repent & to let them into the mercy that is layed vp for vs in Christ.

Byndyng and losyng how it is to be vnderstand.

The keyes

Then cōmeth he vnto an other text which Christ rehearseth Mathew last saying: All power is geuen me in heauen and earth go ye therfore and teach all natiōs Baptising them in the name of the father and the sonne & of the holy ghost, teachyng them to kepe all that I commaūded you: And behold, I am with you vnto the worldes end: Loe sayth the Pope, Christ hath all power in heauen and earth without exceptiō, and I am Christes Vicare, wherfore all power is myne and I am aboue all kynges and Emperours in temporall iurisdiction and they but my seruaūtes to kisse not my feete onely but my. M. also if I list not to haue them stoupe so low. When Christ as I sayd, because he had no temporall kyngdome, euen so he ment of no temporall power: but of power to saue sinners, which the processe of ẏ text declareth by that he sayth, go ye therfore and teach and Baptise: that is, preach this power to al natiōs, and wash of their sinnes through fayth in the promises made in my bloud.

Behold here Antichrist, how he wresteth the Scriptures.

Christes power is to saue sinners.

Then hee commeth vnto an other text. Heb. vij. which is. The priesthode beyng translated, the law must needes be translated also. Now saith the pope, the Priesthode is translated vnto me, wherefore it pertayneth vnto me to make lawes and to binde euery man. And ẏ Epistle meaneth no such thyng, but proueth euidently that the ceremonies of Moyses must ceasse. For the Priestes of the olde Testament must needes haue bene of the tribe of Leui as Aarō was, whose duty for euer was ẏ offeryng of sacrifices. wherfore when that Priesthode ceased the sacrifices & ceremonies ceased also. Now ẏ Priesthode ceased in Christ, whiche was a Priest of ẏ order of Melchisedeke & not of the order of Aaron: for then he must haue bene of the tribe of Leui, and that he was not, but of the tribe of Juda & of the seede of Dauid. wherefore they that are vnder Christes Priesthode are vnder no sacrifices or ceremonies. And of this maner nuggle they with all the Scripture, whiche falshed lest the laye men should perceaue with reading the processe of the text, is all their feare what soeuer they pretend.

Of this maner nuggleth hee with all textes.

At the sufferyng of Christ, the offeryng of sacrifices & ceremonies ceassed: for Christ offered hym selfe once for all.

Moreouer that thou mayst perceaue the Popes falshed, marke, Christ sayd vnto Peter I will geue & not I geue, neither sayd he I will geue vnto the onely. Therfore looke in the. xx. chapter of John where hee gaue them the keyes after his resurrection, and thou shalt see that he gaue them vnto all indifferently saying: As my father sent me so send I you. whether sent he thē into all the world, and vnto all natiōs. what to do? to preach the law that the people might repent, and the promises that they might beleue in Christ for the remission of sinnes saying: receaue the holy ghost, who soeuers sinne ye forgeue they shall be forgeuen. By which holy ghost he gaue them vnderstādyng of the Scripture and of all that they should preach: as thou mayst see Luke last, where he opened their wittes to vnderstand the Scripture and sayd, that repentaūce and forgeuenesse of sinnes Christ gaue all his Apostles like authoritie.

must be preached in his name to all nations, and that they were witnesses to preach it. Whereby thou seest that to bynde and to lose is but to preach & to tell the people their faultes, & to preach mercy in Christ to all that repent.

To bynde and lose is to preach.

And when he sayth all power is geuen me: he sayth not, go thou Peter & preach: but saith vnto all indifferently, go ye and preach this power geuen me of my father to saue all that repent and to damne them that repent not, but follow the lustes of their flesh with full desire to lyue beastly beyng enemyes vnto the law of God.

Christ sent out all hys Apostles & not Peter alone.

Note.

And Math. xviij. Peter asked Christ howe oft hee should forgeue hys brethren, whether seuē tymes. And Christ sayd, seuentie tymes seuen tymes. As who should say, as oft as he repenteth and asketh forgeuenesse.

Now though this were spokē vnto Peter onely, because Peter onely moued the question, yet pertaineth it not vnto vs all as well as vnto Peter? Are not we as much bound to forgeue our neighbours that repēt and aske forgenenesse, as Peter? Yes verely. But because Peter onely asked the question, therfore did Christ teach vs by Peter. If an other had asked, he would haue taught vs by that other. And in lyke maner when Christ asked who say ye that I am: if any other of the Apostles which beleued it as well as Peter, had sayd as Peter did, thou art Christ the sonne of the lyuyng God whiche art come into the world of sinners, to saue them: vnto him would Christ haue answered as he did to Peter, that vppon the rocke of that his cōfession he wold haue built his church, and would haue promised him keyes as well as he dyd Peter. Yea and in the xviij. chapter of Mathew Christ sayth to all the Apostles, yea and to all congregatiōs where sinners be, that what soeuer they bownd should be bound, and whatsoeuer they loosed should be loosed.

We are bound to forgeue our neighbours as well as Peter wold.

Christ builded his Churche vpon the confession of Peter, & not vppon Peter.

Moreouer euery man and woman that know Christ & his doctrine, haue the keyes and power to bynde & loose: in an order, and in their measure, as tyme place and occasion geueth, & priuately. May not a wife, if her husband sinne agaynst God and her, and take an other woman, tell him his fault betwene him & her secretly, and in good maner humbly, & binde his conscience with the law of God? And if he repent may she not forgeue him and loose him as well as the Pope? Yea, and better to, as long as the sinne is secret, in as much as hee sinneth specially agaynst her and not agaynst the Pope.

A woman hath power to bynd.

How a woman may bynde and lose.

And so may the sonne do to hys father, and a seruaunt to his master, and euery man to his neighbour, as thou seest in the sayd. xviij. chapter of Mathew. Howbeit to bynde and lose in the conscience by open preachyng pertaineth vnto the officers that are appointed therto. And to bynde and lose open sinners, and them that will not repent till they be complayned on vnto the congregation, pertaineth vnto the congregation.

To bynde the conscience, and to reproue opē sinners perteineth to the congregation.

Finally, there were many that preached Christ at Rome yer Peter came thether, if he came euer thether: as Paule and many other. Had they not authoritie to bynde and lose? Or els how did they conuert the people? Peter also was an Apostle and went from place to place as Paule dyd, and as Paule ordeyned Byshoppes in euery place to teach the people, so no doubt did Peter. why then might not those Byshops chalenge authoritie by Peter as well as they of Rome? They say also in their own Legendes that Peter had his seate at Antioch first. Dyd he runne to Rome leaning no mā behynde hym to teach the people at Antioch? God forbid. why then myght not that Byshop chalenge Peters authoritie? They will haply say sooner thē proue it, that Peter dyed at Rome, and therfore his authoritie is greatest there. Then by that rule Christes power is no where so full as at Hierusalem. But what hath Christes inuisible kyngdōe to do with places? where Christes Gospell is, there is his power full and all his authoritie as well in one place as in an other.

Reasons that Peter was not the greatest by authoritie geuen hym of Christ.

Peter had first his seate at Antioche.

Christes power is in the Gospel

Finally to get authoritie whence soeuer they cā snatch it, they ioyne Paule with Peter in their owne lawes Distinctio. xxij. saying, By the authoritie of Peter and Paule. which is cleane agaynst themselues. For they say in their awne lawe in the presence of the superiour the power of the inferiour ceaseth and is none at all. Now if Peter be greater then Paule, then by that rule where Peter is presēt there Paule is but a subiect and without authoritie: And where Christ is present bodely and preacheth himselfe, there the Apostles geue vp their authoritie, and holde their peace and sit downe at hys feete, and become scholers & harkē to.

Paul is cald to helpe

In the presence of the greater the power of the lesser doth cease.

Wherfore in that they ioyne Paule

wyth

wyth Peter, and chalenge their superiorite as well by the authorite of Paule as of Peter, there they make Paule fellow and equall wyth Peter. And thus it is false that Peter was greater then his felowes. But ỹ blinde owles care not what they houle, seyng it is night and the day light of Gods worde shut vp that no man can spye them.

Paule is made equal fellow with Peter.

Moreouer with this terme Peters seat they iuggle a pase (as with infinite other) saying that Peters seat is the chiefe seat, but what Peters seat is, that they tell you not. For wist ye that, ye should soone perceaue that they lye. Peters seat is no stoole or chayre (for what hath the kingdome of Christ to do with such baggage) but it is a spirituall thing. Christ saith in the Gospell Math. xxiij. The Scribes & Pharisis sit on Moses seat. what was Moses seat there, a chayre, or the temple, or the churches, or sinagoge of the land? Nay verely, for Moses came neuer there. But Moses seat was Moses lawe and doctrine. Euē so Peters seat is Peters doctrine, the Gospell of Christ which Peter taught. And the same doctrine is Peters keyes: so that Peters seat, Peters keyes and Peters doctrine is all one thyng. Now is Peters doctrine Paules doctrine, and the doctrine of all the xij. Apostles indifferently, for they taught all one thing. Wherefore it followeth that Peters keyes and Peters seat be the keyes & seat of Paule also and of all the other xij. Apostles, and are nothing saue the gospell of Christ. And thus as Peters doctrine is no better then Paules but one thing: Euen so Peters seat is no greater nor hyer nor holier thē the seat of the other xij. Peters seat nowe is Christs seat, Christes gospel on which all the Apostles sat, and on which this day sitteth al they onely ỹ preach christ truely. Wherfore as Antichrist preacheth not Peters doctrine (which is Christes Gospell) so he sitteth not on Peters seat, but on the seat of Sathan, whose vicar he is and on the seat of his owne lawes and ceremonies and false doctrine wherunto he compelleth all men with violence of sworde.

Peters seate what it is.

Peters seate Peters doctrine & Peters keyes are all but one thyng.

Peters seate is Christes Gospell.

The Pope sitteth in the deuils seate, whose Vicare he is.

Then he clame to Purgatory with the ladder of the sayd text, whatsoeuer thou bindest in earth. &c. Purgatory sayth he is in earth: wherefore I am Lord there to. Neuertheless as he can proue no purgatory, so cā he not proue that if there were any, it should be in the earth. It might well be in the element or spere of fire vnder the Mone as well as in the earth. But to bynde and lose is as I haue aboue sayde, to preach and to fede, and with Christes doctrine to purge soules. And they that be dead be not of the flocke which Christ bad Peter fede, but they that lyue onely.

Purgatory

The Pope sayth that Purgatory is in earth.

Thē clame he vp with the same ladder still ouer all vowes and professiōs of all religious persōs, and ouer othes made betwene man and man to dispence with them, and ouer all mens testamentes to alter them. For what thou makest an hospitall, that will he shortly make a colledge of Priestes, or a place of religion, or what he lusteth. Thē all maner Monkes and Fryers and like draffe tooke dispensations of hym for the ordinaunces of theyr olde foūders. And because, as they thought they had prayed & distributed for theyr soules inough to bring them out of purgatory, they thrust thē out of theyr beadrolles, and tooke dayly moe and moe.

Vowes.

Othes.

Testamēts

The Pope altereth mēs willes & testamēts at his pleasure.

But euer since they tooke dispensations of the Pope, both for their rules and to deuide all among them, they receaued in the name, not of the poore, but of purgatory, to quēch the raging fire thereof, which is as hote as theyr bellyes can fayne it, and fooles be out of their wittes to beleue it: promising a Masse dayly for xl. shillinges by the yeare, of which foundations whē they haue gotten twenty, they will yet with an vnion purchased of the Pope make but one chauntry. For if they shoulde do all that they haue promised from ỹ first founder vnto this day. v. hundred Monkes were not inough in many cloysters.

Thinkest thou that men were euer so mad to make the fashions that are now amōg them? to geue the Sclerar such a summe, and the Priour or supprior and the other officers so much for their partes as they haue yearely, and to exempt the Abbot from his brethren, and to send him out of the Abbay into such parkes & places of pleasures, and geue him a thousand, fiftene hundred, two thousand or three thousand pounde yearely to sport himselfe with all? Nay but when thorow hypocrisie they had gotten land inough, thē they turned vnto the Pope and tooke dispēsations both for their rules which were to hard for such aboundaunce, & for the willes of their founders, and serued a great sort of founders vnder one per dominum, and deuided among few, that which was inough for a great multitude.

It was the Pope that deuised all these fashions to corrupt the Prelates wyth aboundaunce of worldly pleasures, of which he wist that the worste would be most greedy, and for which he wist also that he should finde Judasses inow that would forsake Christ and betray ỳ truth and be sworne false vnto him and his Godhed. He maketh of many chauntryes one, of an Abbay a Cathedrall church, and out of the Abbayes plucked he the Byshopprykes. And as Byshops pay for their bulles, euen so do an infinite number of Abbottes in Christendome, in all landes some, which Abbottes be Byshoppes within thẽselues, & immediatly vnder the Pope. And other Abbots and Priours send after the same example dayly vnto Rome to purchase licẽce to weare a mitre and a crosse & gay ornaments, to be as glorious as the best. &c. And where before God no man is a Priest but he that is appointed to preach christes Gospell vnto the people, and the people ought not to geue ought vnto the spiritualtie but for the maintenaũce of the preaching of Gods worde, the Pope taketh vi. or vij. yea ten. xx. and as many benefices as he listeth, & geueth them vnto one that preacheth not at all, as he doth all other dignityes of the spiritualtie. He that will purchase and pay and be sworne shal haue what he will.

Choppyng and chaungyng vsed by the pope

The wicked bestowing of benefices by the Pope.

How they proue all their generall counselles.

When the Byshops and Abbottes and other great Prelates had forsaken Christ and hys lyuing, and were fallen downe before the beast the vicar of Sathan to receaue their kyngdome of hym, then the Pope called together diuerse counseles of such holy Apostles and there concluded and made of euery opinion that semed profitable, an article of the fayth. If thou aske where the scripture is to proue it? They answere we be the church and can not erre. and therefore say they, what we conclude, though there be no scripture to proue it, it is as true as the Scripture and of equall authoritie with the Scripture & must be beleued as wel as the scripture vnder payne of dãnation. For say they our truth dependeth not of the truth of the scripture, that is, we be not true in our doing because the scripture testifieth vnto vs that we do truely: but contrary, the truth of the scripture (say they) dependeth of vs: that is, the scripture is true because that we admitte it, and tell thee that it is true. For how couldest thou know that it were the scripture except we tolde thee so? and therefore we neede no witnesse of the scripture, for that we do it is inough that we so say of our owne head, for we can not erre.

The church can not erre.

The Pope sayth that the Scripture is true not of it selfe, but because he alloweth & approueth it.

which reason is like as though young Mõkes newly professed should come by the rules of their order & ordinaunces of their olde founders, and would go about to kepe them: and the old cankerd Monkes should cal them backe vnto the corrupt and false maner that now is vsed saying: ye erre. Do onely as we teach you, for your profession is to obey your elders. Accordyng vnto the rules of our order and ordinaunces of our founder shall they say. we can teach you no other shall the old Monkes say, nor can lye vnto you: ye ought therfore to beleue vs and to do as we bid you. The yoũg Monkes shall aunswere we see that ye lye cleane contrary vnto all that is written in our rules and ordinaunces. The old Monkes shall say ye can not vnderstand them except we expounde them vnto you, neither yet know that they be your rules except that ye beleue that we cã not lye vnto you. For how can ye know that these be your rules and ordinaunces, but as we your elders tell you so? Now when we tell you that these be your rules and ordinaunces, how can ye be sure vndoubtedly that it is so, except ye beleue vndoubtedly that we can not lye. wherfore if ye will be sure that they be your rules and ordinaunces, then ye must first beleue that we can not lye. Leaue such imaginations and disputations therfore and laye your rules and ordinaunces out of your handes and looke no more on them, for they make you erre. And come and do as we tell you and captiuate your wittes and beleue that we can not lye vnto you and that ye can not vnderstand your rules and ordinaunces. Euen so if thou say it is contrary vnto the Scripture: they aunswere that thou vnderstandest it not, & that thou must captiue thy witte and beleue that though it seme neuer so cõtrary, yet it is not contrary: no if they determine that Christ is not risẽ again

A similitude.

This doctrine the papistes vsed in those dayes.

The common saying and teaching of the Papistes.

and

and though the Scripture testifie that he is risen agayne yet (say they) they be not contrary, if they be wisely vnderstand. Thou must beleue say they that there is some other meanyng in the Scripture and that no man vnderstandeth it: but that we say, whether without Scripture, or agaynst it, that must thou beleue that it is true.

And thus because that the Scripture would not agree with them they thrust it out of the way first and shut vp the kyngdome of heauen which is Christes Gospell, with false expositiõs and with such sophistrie and with false principles of naturall wisedome. And the Abbottes toke the Scripture from their Monkes, lest some should euer barke agaynst the Abbottes lyuing, & set vp such long seruice and singyng to wery them with all that they should haue no laysure to read in the Scripture but with their lippes, and made them good cheare to fill their belyes & to stoppe their mouthes. And the Byshops in lyke maner to occupy theyr Priestes with all that they should not study ỹ Scripture for barkyng against them, set vp long seruice wondrous intricate, so that in a dosen yeares thou couldest scarce learne to turne a right vnto it: lõg Matens, long Euẽsongs, long Masses, long Diriges with vaũtage yet to mitigate the tediousnesse, quia leuis est labor cum lucro, for lucre (say they) maketh the labour light: euer noselyng them in ceremonyes & in their owne constitutions, decrees, ordinaunces and lawes of holy Church.

The Abbotes keep the monks in ignorãce and the bishops ỹ priestes.

Saint Iohn saith ỹ pain maketh payne nothing.

And the promises and Testament which the Sacrament of Christes body & bloud did preach dayly vnto the people, that they put out of knowledge and say now that it is a sacrifice for the soules of Purgatory, that they might the better sell their Masse. And in the Vniuersities they haue ordeined that no man shall looke on the Scripture vntill he be noseled in heathẽ learning vij. or nyne yeare & armed with false principles, with whiche he is cleane shut out of the vnderstandyng of the Scripture. And at his first commyng vnto Vniuersitie he is sworne that he shall not defame the Vniuersitie what soeuer he seeth. And when he taketh first degree he is sworne that he shall hold none opinion condemned by the Churche, but what such opinions be that he shall not know. And they whẽ they be admitted to studye Diuinitye, because ỹ Scripture is locked vp with such false expositions & with false principles of natural Philosophy that they can not enter in, they go about the ouţside and dispute all their lyues about words & vaine opiniõs pertaining as much vnto the healpug of a mans hele as health of his soule. Prouided yet all way, lest god gene his singulare grace vnto any person, that none may preach except he be admitted of the Byshops.

Then came Thomas de Aquino and he made the Pope a God with his sophistrie, and the Pope made him a Sainte for his labour and called him Doctour Sanctus, for whose holynesse no man may deny what so euer he sayth sane in certaine places where among so many lyes he sayd now and then true. And in like maner who soeuer defendeth hys traditiõs, decrees and priuileges him he made a Sainte also for his labour were his liuyng neuer so contrary vnto the Scripture, as Thomas of Canterbury with many other like whose life was like Thomas Cardinalles, but not Christes, neither is Thomas Cardinals like any thyng sane a counterfaytyng of saint Thomas of Canterbury. Thomas Becket was first sene in marchaundise tempozall and then to learne spirituall marchaundise he gat hym to Theobald Archbyshop of Canterbury which sent him diuers times to Rome about businesse of holy Churche. And when Theobald had spyed his actiuitie he shoze him Deacon lest he should go backe & made him Archdeacon of Canterbury and vppon that presented him to the kyng. And the kyng made hym his Chaunceller in which office he passed the pompe & pride of Thomas Cardinall as farre as the ones shrine passeth the others tombe in glozy and riches. And after that, he was a man of warre and captayne ouer fiue or sixe thousand men in ful harnesse as bright as S. George & his speare in his hand & encountred who soeuer came against him and ouerthrew the iolyest rutter that was in all the host of Fraũce. And out of the field hoate from bloud shedyng was he made Bishop of Canterbury, and did put of his helme and put on his mitre, put of his harnesse & on with his robes, and layde downe hys speare & tooke his crosse, yet his hãdes were cold, and so came with a lusty corage of a mã of warre to fight an other while against his Prince for the Pope. where his Princes causes were with the law of God and the Popes cleane contrary. And the pompe of his consecration was after his old worldly fashiõ. Howbeit yet he is made a Saint for his worshyppyng of the holy seate of saint Peter, not that seate of Peter whiche is Christes Gospell, but an other lyed to be Peters and is in deede Cathedra pestilentiæ, a chayre of false doctrine. And because he could no skill of our Lordes Gospell, he sayd of Marye with our Lady. Such as vnderstand the Latin, read his life and compare it vnto the Scripture, and thẽ he shall see such holynesse as were here to long to be rehearsed. And euery Abbay & euery Cathedrall Church did shryne them one God or other, and myngled the lyues of the very Saintes with starke lyes, to moue mẽ to offer whiche thing they call deuotion.

And though in all their doings they oppresse the temporaltie and their cõmon wealth, and be greuous vnto the rich, and paynfull to the poore: yet they be so many and so exercised in wyles & so subtill, and so knit and sworne together that they compasse the temporalitie and make them beare thẽ whether they will or will not (as the Oke doth the Jupe) partly with iugglyng and beside that with worldly policy. For euery Abbot will make him that may do most in the shyre or with the kyng, the stuard of his landes and geue him a fee yearely, and will lend vnto some, and feast other, that by such meanes they do what they will. And litle master Parsõ after the same maner, if he come into an house and the wife be smouteface he will roote him selfe there by one craft or other: either by vsing such pastime as the good mã doth, or in beyng beneficiall by one way or other, or he will lend him, and so bryng him into his daunger, that he can not thrust him out when he would, but must be compelled to beare him and to let him be homely whether he will or no.

Policie.

The practise of litle master parson.

An example of practise out of our owne Chronicles.

K. Herold.

Robert of Caterbury

TAke an exãple of their practise out of our owne stories. Kyng Herold exiled or banished Robert Archbyshop of Cãterbury. For what cause the English Polychronicõ specifieth not. But if the cause were not somwhat suspect, I thinke they would not haue passed it ouer with silẽce. This Robert gat him immediatly vnto king William the cõquerour then Duke of Normãdy. And the pope Alexander sent Duke William a baner to go and conquere England and cleane remission vnto who soeuer would folow the baner and go with kyng Williã. Here marke how streight the Pope folowed Christes steppes & his Apostles: they preached forgenesse of sinnes to all that repented thorough Christes bloud shedyng: ỹ pope preacheth forgeuenesse of sinnes to all that wil slea their brethrẽ bought with Christes bloud, to subdue them vnto his tyranny. what soeuer other cause Duke William had agaynst K. Herold, thou maist be sure ỹ the pope wold not haue medled if Herold had not troubled his kyngdome: neither should Duke William haue bene able to cõquere the land at that tyme except the spiritualtie had wrought on his side. what bloud did that conquest cost England, thorow which almost all the Lords of the Englishe bloud were slayne, and the Normandes became rulers, & all the lawes were chaunged into French: But what careth the holy father for shedyng of laye mens bloude: It were better that ten hundred thousand laye knaues lost their liues, then that holy Church should lose one inch of her honour, or Saint Peters seate one iot of her right.

Remission of sinnes to conquere England.

Note here how wel Christ and the pope agree Christ biddeth saue, & the pope biddeth kill.

The pope is a cruell & mercilesse tyrant.

And Anselmus that was Byshop in short tyme after, neuer left stryuynge with that mighty prince kyng William the second vntill he had compelled him maugre his teeth, to deliuer vp the inuestiture or election of Byshops vnto Saint Peters vicar, which inuestiture was of olde tyme the kynges dutie.

Anselmus a chapleine of ỹ popes.

And agayne, when the sayde kyng William woulde haue had the tribute that Priestes gaue yearely vnto theyr Byshoppes for their whores, payde to hym, did not Rãfe Byshop of Chichester forbid Gods seruice (as they call it) and stoppe vp the Church doores with thornes thorowoughout all his diocesse, vntill the kyng had yelded hym vp his tribute agayne? For when the holy father had forbode Priestes theyr wyues, the Byshop permitted them whores of their owne for a yearely tribute, & do still yet in all landes saue in England where they may not haue any other saue mens wines onely.

The pope is wel pleased to admit priestes to haue whores, but not wiues.

And agayne, for the election of Steuẽ Langton Archbyshop of Canterbury, what mysery and wretchednes was in the realme a long season? Then was ỹ land interdited many yeares. And whẽ that holpe not, then Ireland rebelled against agaynst kyng Iohn immediatly, & not without the secrete worckinge of our Prelates I dare well say. But finally, when neither the interdicting, neither that secrete subtiltie holpe, and when Iohn would in no meanes consent that Saint Peters vicar should raigne alone ouer the spiritualtie, and ouer all that pertayned vnto them, and ỹ they should sinne and do all mischiefe vnpunished, the Pope sent remission of sinnes to the kyng of Fraunce, for to goe and conquere his land. whereof kyng Iohn was so sore afrayde that he yelded vp his crowne vnto the Pope, and sware to holde the land of him, and that his successours should do so likewyse.

Remission of sinnes to conquere England.

Thomas Arundell.

And againe, in king Richardes dayes the second, Thomas Arundell Archbyshop of Canterbury and Chauncellar was exiled wyth the Earle of Darby. The outward pretence of the variaūce betwene the king and hys Lords was for the deliueraunce of the towne of Breste in Britayne. But our prelates had an other secrete mistery a bruyng. They could not at their owne lust slea the poore wretches which at that tyme were conuerted vnto repētaunce & to ỹ true fayth, to put their trust in Christes death & bloud shedyng for the remissiō of their sinnes by the preaching of Iohn Wiclefe. As soone as the Archbyshop was out of the realme, the Irishmen began to rebell agaynst kyng Richarde, as before agaynst kyng Iohn: But not hardly without the inuisible inspiration of thē that rule both in the courte and also in the consciences of all men. They be one kyngdome sworne together one to helpe an other scatered abroad in all realmes.

Practise of Prelates.

And howbeit, that they striue amōg themselues who shalbe greatest, yet agaynst the temporal power they be alwayes at one, though they dissemble it, & faine as though one helde agaynst the other, to know their enemies secretes, to betray them withall. They can enspyre priuely into the brestes of the people what mischiefe they liste, & no man shall know whence it cōmeth. Their letters go secretly from one to an other thorowoughout all kingdomes. Saint Peters vicar shall haue worde in xv. or xvj. dayes from the vttermost part of Christendome. The Byshops of Englande at their neede can write vnto the Byshops of Ireland, Scotland, Denmarke, Douchland, Fraūce and Spayne, promising them as good a turne an other tyme, putting thē in remembraunce that they be all one holy Church, and that the cause of ỹ tone is the cause of the tother, saying: if our iugglinge breake out, youres can not be long hid. And the other shall serue their turne and bring the game vnto their handes, and no man shall know how it commeth about.

The popes clergy are secret and subtile conspirators.

Assoone as kyng Richard was gone to Ireland to subdue these rebellions, the Byshop came in againe and preuēted the kyng, and tooke vp his power agaynst hym, and tooke him prisoner, and put hym downe, and to death most cruelly, and crowned the Erle of Darbye kyng. O mercifull Christ what bloud hath that coronacion cost England? but what care they? their causes must be auenged. He is not worthy to bee kyng that will not auenge their quarels. For do not the kyngs receaue their kyngdome of the beast, & sweare to worship hym, and maintayne hys throne? And thē whē the Erle of Darbye which was king Henry the fourth, was crowned, the prelates tooke hys swordc, and his sonnes Henry the fift after hym (as all the kynges swordes since) and abused them to shed Christē bloud at their pleasure. And they coupled their cause vnto the kynges cause (as now) and made it treasō to beleue in Christ as the scripture teacheth, and to resiste the Byshops (as now) and thrust them in the kinges prisons (as now) so that it is no new inuention that they now do, but euen an olde practise, though they haue done theyr busie cure to hide their sciēce, that their conueyaunce should not be espyed.

I treyterous practise.

The Papistes are styrrers vppe of warres & feeders of bloud.

And in kyng Henry the fift dayes how raged they as fierce Liōs against good Duke Humfrey of Glocester the kynges vncle and protectour of the realme in the kynges youth and childhod, because that for him they myght not slea whom they would, and make what chenysaunce they lusted. Would not the Byshoppe of winchester haue fallen vpon him and oppressed him openly with might and power in the citie of London, had not the Citizens come to his helpe.

But at the last they founde ỹ meanes to contriue a drift to bring their matters to passe, and made a parlyament farre from the Cityzens of London, where was slayne the good Duke and onely wealth of the realme, and the mighty shylde that so long before that kept it from sorow which shortly after hys

I Parliament kept at Bury.

The death of Homfrey Duke of Glocester protectour of the Realme of England.

his death fell theron by heapes. But the chronicles can not tell wherfore he dyed, nor by what meanes. No maruell verely. For he had neede of other eyes then such as ẏ worlde seeth withall that should spye out their priuy pathes. Neuertheless the chronicles testifie that he was a vertuous man, a godly and good to the commō wealth.

This is Syr Tho. More.

Moreouer the proctour of purgatory saith in his Dialoge, quod I, and quod he, and quod your frende, how that the forsayd Duke of Glocester was a noble mā and a great clarcke, and so wise that he coulde spye false myracles and disclose them, and iudge them from the true, which is an hatefull science vnto our spiritualtie, and more abhorred amongest them then Necromancye or witchcrafte, and a thyng wherfore a man by their lawe I dare well say, is worthy to dye, and that secretly if it be possible. Now to be good to the common wealth, and to see false myracles, and thyrdly to withstand that Fraude then brought vnder the foote of the Englishmen, should not be set vp agayne, by whose power the Pope holdeth downe the Emperour, and raygneth in his steade, be causes why he myght die though by what meanes he not knowne.

The Clergy cannot abyde them that can iudge false miracles.

The thre causes why the Duke of Glocester was murthered

For to be good to the cōmon wealth is to be hurtfull to the spiritualtie, seyng the one is the others pray, as the Lambe is the wolues. Secondaryly, if a man be so cleare eyed that he can spye false myracles, how can iugglers get theyr liuing and be in price where such a telow is? Thyrdly to keepe downe the kyngdome of Fraunce is to pull Saint Peters Vicar out of his seate.

The Pope is the whore of Babylon.

Now, if the great bande the whore of Babylō were destroyed, thē woulde the bordell and stues of our Prelates shortly perishe. If Abadon that destroyer king of the grashoppers which deuoure all that is greene, were destroyed, then were the kyngdome of our caterpillars at an ende.

¶ By what crafte the Pope keepeth the Emperour downe.

An other practise of Prelates.

MArke an other practise of our most holy prelates. when the Empyre was translated vnto the Germaynes, though ẏ Emperour was fallē downe and had kyssed the Popes feete, and was become his sworne seruaunt: yet there was much strife and open warre oftymes betwene the popes and the Emperours. And the popes haue put downe many good Emperours by helpe of the Byshoppes, which euery where secretly perswaded the Lordes to forsake the Emperours and to take dispensations of ẏ pope for their othes.

Popes haue deposed Emperours, and lykewise Emperours haue deposed Popes.

And contrarywise the Emperours haue now and then deposed diuerse popes at request of the Cardinalles & other great prelates, by whose helpe onely they were able to do it. For els verely though all kynges christened had sworne to depose one pope out of hys seat, if they had not the fauour of other prelates therto, they might haply by the secrete practise of them, to be put out of their owne seates in the meane tyme.

The pope therfore, to be sure of him selfe, and out of the feare and daunger of the Emperour were he neuer so mighty, and that ẏ Emperour should not see hys dayly open pastimes, made frendship and amitie wyth the Venecians on the one side of him, and let thē come into certaine cities of the Emperours in Italy: and with the French kyng on the other side, and let him also vp into certayne cities and possessions of the Emperours: and he hymselfe in the middes: & shut out the Emperour from commyng any more to Rome, and euer sent him his coronation home to him. And then he made a law that no man should rebukē the Pope for what soeuer mischief he did, saying, that the Pope was aboue all & iudge ouer all and none ouer him, and therfore forbad in his law. Distinctio. xl. Si Papa, saying: though the pope be proued negligent about him selfe and also the soule health of his brethren & slacke in his workes & speachlesse as concernyng any good, & draw ẇ him by his example innumerable people to hell to be punished with him with diuers tormētes euerlasting: yet see that no mortall man presume once to rebuke hys faultes here. For he shall iudge all men and no man him. O Antichrist. Is he not Antichrist that will not haue his life tried by Gods word?

No man may rebuke the Pope for any misdeed that he doth.

If the Venetians ketch any of our holy fathers Townes or possessions, whether by warre, or that they haue bought it, or that it be layd to morgage vnto thē, or that the old Pope hath geuen it with the mariage of some daughter, vnto the Duke of Venice: then the holy father that succeedeth, whē he seeth Venetians.

The Pope may geue and take agayne at hys will & pleasure.

his

his season sendeth for it agayne saying that it is not lawfull for lay men to withhold S. Peters patrimonie. If they alledge that they bought it and so forth: his fatherhode answereth that the old Pope had none authoritie to make any such chevisaūce with S. Peters inheritaūce: he could have but the vse of it his life long, and after it must needes returne vnto his successour agayne. And vppon that he interditeth them & curseth thē as blacke as coales downe to the pit of hell.

But the Venicians knowing more of our holy fathers practise for their nyenesse then we which dwell a farre of, & wiser then we of cold countreys, percrauyng also that their colour chaungeth, not with his curling, & that they sincke not, and that their meate digesteth as well as before, and that (as Erasmus sayth) they shyte as easily as before (with reuerence of the holy course I speake it) and therfore feare not his interdiction nor excommunication.

The Venicians care not for the popes cursing nor blessing.

Then our holy father rayseth vp all the power that he is able to make in Italy agaynst them and sendeth for the Sochenars to come and helpe. If he be not yet strong inough, then he sendeth vnto the bishops of Fraūce warning them that if his seate decay, theirs can not long prosper, and therfore, that they put their kyng in remembraunce how that he is called most Christian kyng, and that they desire him to doe somewhat for his title, agaynst this disobedient rebellions vnto the most holy sea of Rome our mother holy Church.

Frenchmē. If an other tyme the Frenchmen come to our holy father, as they be euer gaping for Italy, to bryng the Empire home agayne to Fraunce. Then ỹ most holy Vicare bringeth his whole power agaynst them with the power of the Venicians, & with his old frēdes the Sochenars. If he be not yet strōge inough, thē he sendeth to the Bysshops Englishmē of England, to helpe their God and to moue their kyng to do somewhat for holy Church, puttyng him in remembraūce of whom he holdeth his crown and of his othe, and how many cappes of mainteinaunce haue bene euer sent vnto his forefathers and what honour it was vnto them and that he may easely get as great honour as they, and happly a more excellent title, if he will take our holy fathers part, besides that hee shall purchase remission of all his synnes.

The practise of the pope with all kinges & princes.

Then must the peace and all the appointementes made betwene vs and Fraunce be broken, and the kyng must take a dispēsation for his othe. For the king of Fraunce will attempt nothing in Italy, vntil he haue set his ambassadours & haue made a perpetuall peace with our kyng, the Sacrament of the body of our Sauiour broke betwene them to cōfirme thē appointment. But I suppose that the breaking signifieth that the appointement shall not long endure, for a greate deale of flower would not make so many hostes as they call thē or singyng loues, as hath bene broke in our dayes betwen Christen Princes (as they will be called) to confirme promises that haue not long bene kept. Other vse of that blessed sacrament will the Princes none know: but Christ ordeined it to be a perpetuall memory that his body was broken for our sinnes vpon the crosse, and that all that repent should receaue as oft as they eate of it forgeuenesse of their misdedes through faith. If the kynges of the earth when they breake that Sacrament betwene thē, do say on this wise: The body of our Sauiour (which was broken on the crosse for the sinne of all that repent and haue good hartes and would fayne keepe his law) be broke vnto my damnation if I breake this othe: then is it a terrible othe and they had nede to take hede how they make it: and if it be lawfully made, not to breake it at all. But as they care for their othe, whiche they make in wedlocke, so they care for this.

The pope a breaker of peace.

The abuse of the sacrament.

How ỹ sacrament should be broken betwene kinges and princes.

What soeuer nede the Pope hath, he wil not send to the Emperour to come and helpe him in Italy, for feare lest he would take to him selfe what soeuer he conquered of the Frenchmen and ware to strong and minish our holy fathers power and become our holy fathers Vicare, as he is S. Peters. Neuertheless if we Englishmen wil hyre the Emperour to come and fight agaynste Fraunce for the right of the Churche in these quarters that be next vnto vs, his fatherhode is content to admitte his seruice.

The Pope would not haue the Emperour to strong

When our kyng hath graunted to take our holy fathers part, then the pretence and cloke outward must be, that the kyng will chalenge his right in Fraunce. And to ayde the kyng in hys right must the commons be milked till they blede agayne. Thē to do the kyng seruice the Lordes sel or lay their lādes to morgage. Then is cleane remission genen to slea Frenche dogges. He that dyeth in the quarell shall neuer see Purgatory, but flye to heauen streight, euē with a thought.

Remission of sinnes, & cleane deliuerance out of purgatorye.

WHen the Pope hath what he desireth in Italy, then must we make peace with the Frēchmen agayn immediatly, that Fraunce be not all to gether troden vnder the foote: but that it remayne alwaye in a meane state, strōg inough to match the Emperour and to keepe him downe, but not to mighty for oppressing the Pope. And then our Prelates to bring the peace about, send immediatly a Frier Forest or a Vicare of Croyden to preach before the kyng and his Lordes, which preacher roareth and crieth vnto them as though he halowed his houndes & maketh exclamations saying: Alas what will ye do? spare Christen blood: will ye slea your owne soules? Be not the Frenchmen as wel Christen as ye? Moreouer ye slea poore innocētes that neuer offended. Make peace for the passion of Christ. Kill not one an other as though Christ had not dyed for you: but fight rather agaynst the Turkes.

A frier Forest or a vicar of Croyden.

Popish practises.

Then come in the Ambassadours of Fraunce and money a few Prelates & certaine other the kinges playfelowes that be sworne with them to betray both the kyng and the Realme to: And then is peace concluded. But outwardly there is nothyng saue a truce taken for halfe an yeare, till our souldiers be at home agayn, for feare lest they wold not bee content. Then commeth the whole host home beggarde both great and small. And the poore that can not sodenly get worke fall to stealyng and be hanged at home. This could More tell in hys Utopia before he was the Cardinals sworne Secretary and fallen at his foote to betray the truth, for to get promotion.

Dissembled truce.

Henry, v.

Take an example: the Bishops sent kyng Henry the fifte out to conquere Fraūce. The cause was saith the Chronicles, that the kyng wēt about to take their temporalities from them. And therfore to bring the kyng into an other imagination they moyned hym & sent him into Fraunce.

K. Henry. v. conquered more then the prelates thought he would do.

When they had sent out the kyng, he conquered more then was their will and more then they supposed possible for him in so short space and brought Fraunce cleane vnder the foote: so that our Prelates had much secret businesse to set it vp agayne, but what is impossible vnto so great Gods.

In kyng Henryes dayes the vj. our holy father of Rome made the Bishop of winchester a Cardinal, which went shortly after into Fraunce to treate of a truce betwene England & Fraunce. And him mette a Legate of Rome a Cardinall also: after which mearyng Englishemen had euer the woorse in Fraunce, and their chiefest frende the Duke of Burgaine forsoke them. For when Cardinals and Bishops mete together they haue their secret counsell by them selues, wherin they conclude neither what is good for England nor yet for Fraunce, but what is best for our holy fathers profite to kepe him in his state.

Henry. vi.

The crafty practise of the popes legate.

When kyng Henry was of age there was a mariage made betwen him and the Earle of Armynakes daughter in Gyan with the which should haue ben geuen many Castles and Townes in Gyan & a great somme of money therto. But that mariage was broken, not without the secret worcking of our Prelates and dispensation of our holy father thou maist be sure. And a mariage was made betwen him and the kyngs daughter of Cecile for which England gaue vp the whole Dukedome of Eyā and Earledome of Mayne wherby we lost all Normandy whereof they were the kaye. And beside that the comunons gaue a fiftene and an halfe to fette her in wyth pompe. And then was the good Duke of Glocester trayterously murthered, partly because he coulde iudge false myracles, & partly because of the delineraunce of these two countryes. For he beyng a liue they durste not do it.

The mariage of kyng Henry vi.

The Duke of Glocester trayterously murthered.

And when kyng Edwarde had put downe kyng Harry, a mariage was made and concluded betwene him and the kyng of Spayne, this quenes mother that now is. But yer the Embassadours were come home, our Prelates had bewitched kyng Edwarde by their apostle Fryer Bongaye, and maryed hym vnto a wydow that was a knyghtes wyfe, least if Spayne and England had bene ioyned together, kyng Edwarde should haue recouered Fraunce agayne. But what folowed after the breaking of the mariage betwene kyng Edwarde and the Erle of warwicke, and what came of his children? yea and what came on king Hēry of windsores children also? But what care our prelates what vēgeaūce or mischiefe fall on Princes or on their realmes, so their kingdome prosper.

In kyng Henryes dayes the vi. the Cardinall Morton, and Bishop Fox of wincheſter deliuered vnto ỹ kinges grace the confeſſions of as many Lordes as his grace luſted. who ſo euer was miſtruſted, if he ſhroue himſelfe at the Charter houſes, Sion, Greenewich, at Saint Johns or wherſoeuer it was, the confeſſour was commaunded by the auctoritie of the Pope to deliuer his confeſſion written, & ſworne that it was all. And Cardinall Morton had a licẽce of the Pope for xiiij. to to ſtudie Necromãcy, of which he himſelf was one, & other I haue heard named, which at this tyme I paſſe ouer with ſilence. And how the holy Friers obſeruauntes caryed fayned letters to trye who was true, I paſſe ouer with ſilence alſo. Howbeit ſuch tẽptations & fayned profers were inough to moue thẽ that neuer would haue thought amyſſe: yea & in cõfeſſion, mẽ will ſhriue thẽ ſelues of thoughtes which they neuer went about in the outward deede.

Confeſſion in the eare was a wicked inuention.

whẽ any great man is put to death how his confeſſour entreateth him, & what penaunce is enioyned him, concerning what he ſhall ſay when he cõmeth vnto the place of execution, I coulde geſſe at a practiſe ỹ might make mens eares glow.

And did not the ſubtile counſell of the ſayde two prelates fayne the ſiege of Bolen to make a pretence to gather in a fiftene, when there was no more warre betwene the kyng of Fraunce and of Englãd, thã is betwene a mãs head that hath luſt to ſleepe & hys pyllow? which ſiege yet coſt many a man their lyues, yea and ſome great men thereto which knew not of that fayning. The kynges grace went ouer wyth a ten thouſand men to conquere all Fraunce, and ſpent haply an hundred thouſand pounde, of which he ſaued the fourth part in the dandy prats, and gathered at home v. or vj. hundred or more. And two other ſuch fayned viages coulde I haply rehearſe, which I paſſe ouer for diuerſe cauſes, where many an Engliſhe man loſt hys lyfe. But what care they for mens liues?

A ſubtile practiſe of Prelates.

And did not our Cardinall with like policy thinke ye, to gather that which he thought would not well be payde, except the commons ſawe ſome cauſe, bring a great multitude of Scots vnto the Engliſhe pale, eyther by ſome Biſhoppes of Scotland, or by ſome great man whom he corrupted wyth ſome yearely penſion? agaynſt which the poore Northen men muſt goe on their owne coſte to keepe them out. And general proceſſion was cõmaunded at London thryſe in the weeke and throughout all the land, whyle the kynges receauers gathered the tare of the common people. which plagne & ſuch like after the threatening of God Leuit. xxvj. and Deut. xxviij. and xxix. Leui. 26. Deut. 28. 29.

Yea and what fained the Cardinall at that great lone to beguile his owne Prieſtes to make them ſweare what they were worth, and the better wyllyng to pay, for the common prieſtes be not ſo obedient vnto theyr ordinaryes that they will pay money except they know why. Now it is not expedient that euery raſcall ſhould know ỹ ſecretes of the very true cauſe, for many conſiderations. And therefore another pretence muſt be made and another cauſe alleaged. And therefore the prieſtes were charged by their ordinaryes to appeare before the gentlemẽ of the countrey and temporall officers, & ſweare what euery man was worth. Now the prieſtes had leuer be ſlayne and dye martyrs after the enſample of Saint Thomas of Caunterbury, then to ſweare before a laye iudge, for they thinke it greater ſinne then to ſlea their owne fathers, and that then the libertyes of the Church were cleane loſt, & they no better thẽ the vile lay people. And when they were in that perplexitie that they muſt eyther ſweare or run into the kinges daunger and loſe their goddes (I would ſay their goods) thẽ my Lord Cardinall ſent downe hys gracious power ỹ they ſhould ſweare vnto their ordinaries onely. And then the Prieſtes for ioy that they were rid out of the lay mens handes, were ſo glad & ioyous that they wiſt not what thankes to gene my Lord Cardinall, and ſo were obedient to ſweare and to lende, or els for all the curſſes that my Lord Cardinall hath and the Pope to, they woulde neither haue ſworne or payde a peny.

¶ The practiſe of our tyme.

When the kynges grace came firſt to the right of the crowne & vnto the gouernaunce of the realme yong and vnexpert, Thomas wolffee a mã of luſt and courage and bodely ſtrẽgth to do and to suffer great thinges, and to endure in all maner of voluptuousnes, expert and exercised in the course of the worlde, as he which had heard, read, and seene much policy, and had done many thynges hymselfe, and had bene of the secrete counsell of weighty matters, as suttle as Sinon that betrayed Troy, vtterly appointed to sẽble and dissemble, to haue one thing in the hart and an other in the mouth, being therto as eloquent, as subtile, and able to perswade what he lusted to thẽ that were vnexpert: so desirous & gredy of honour, that he cared not but for the next and most compendious way thereto, whether godly or vngodly: this wyly wolfe I say, and raging sea, and shipwracke of all Englãd, though he shewed himselfe pleasaunt & cauline at the first (as whores do vnto theyr louers) came vnto the kynges grace, and wayted vppon hym, and was no man so obsequyous and seruiceable, & in all games and sportes the first and next at hand, and as a captayne to corage other, & a gaye finder out of new pastymes to obtayne fauour withall.

Thomas Wolffe.

The description of Cardinall Wolsey.

The kings byrth calked by the Cardinall.

And therto as the secrete communication went, which by many tokens thou mayst well coniecture and gather to be true, he calked the kynges nativitie and byrth, which is a common practise among Prelates in all landes, wherby he saw whereunto the kynges grace should be enclined all hys lyfe, & what should be like to chaunce hym at all tymes.

Byshops calke kings nativities.

And as I heard it spoken of diuers, he made by craft of Necromancy, grauen imagery to beare vppon hym, wherwith he bewitched the kynges mynde, and made the kyng to dote vpon hym more then euer he did on any Lady or gentlewoman, so that now ẏ kinges grace folowed him as he before folowed the kyng. And then what he sayd, that was wisdome, what he praysed, that was honourable onely. Moreouer in the meane tyme he spyed out ẏ natures and dispositions of ẏ kynges play felowes, & of all that were great, and whom he spyed meete for his purpose, him he flattered, & him he made faithfull w̃ great promises, & to him he sware, & of him he toke an oth againe, that the one should helpe the other, for without a secrete othe he admitted no man vnto any part of hys priuities.

Kyng Henry the viij. had Cardinall Wolsey in great estimation.

And euer as he grew in promotions and dignitie, so gathered he vnto hym of the most suttle witted, and of them that were dronke in the desire of honour most like vnto himselfe. And after they were sworne he promoted thẽ and with great promises made thẽ in falsehead faithfull, and of them euer presented vnto the kynges grace, and put them into his seruice, saying, thys is a man meete for your grace. And by these spyes (if ought were done or spoken in the court agaynst the Cardinal) of that he had worde within an houre or two. And then came the Cardinall to courte with all his magicke to perswade to ẏ cõtrary. If any in the court had spoken agaynst the Cardinall, and the same not great in the kynges fauour, the Cardinall bad him walcke a vilayne, and thrust hym out of ẏ courte hedlong. If he were in conceite wyth the kinges grace, then he flattered and perswaded, & corrupt some with giftes, and sent some Embassadours, & some he made captaine at Calice, Hãmes, Gynes, Jarnsie and Gernsie, or sent them to Ireland, and into the North, and so occuppyed them tyll the kyng had forgot them, and other were in theyr rowmes, or till hee had sped what he entended.

The maner & practise of Cardinal Wolsey.

The kyng is betrayed

And in like maner played he wyth the Ladyes and gentlewemen. whosoeuer of them was great, wyth her was he familiar and to her gaue he giftes. Yea: and where Saint Thomas of Canterbury was wont to come after, Thomas Cardinall went oft before preuenting his Prince, and peruerted the order of ẏ holy man. If any were suttill witted & mete for hys purpose, her made he sworne to betray the Queene likewise & to tel him what she sayd or did. I know one that departed ẏ Court for no other cause thẽ that she would no lenger betray her mastresse.

The quene is betrayed

Note this deuilish practise.

And after the same example he furnished the Court with Chaplaines of his owne sworne Disciples and thildren of his owne bringing vp to be alway present and to dispute of vanities and to water what soeuer the Cardinall had planted. If among those cormorantes any yet began to be to much in fauour with the kyng, & to be somewhat busie in the Court and to drawe any other way then as my Lord Cardinall had appointed that the plowe should go, anone he was sent to Italy or to Spayne: or some quarel was picked agaynst him and so was thrust out of the Court, as Stokesly was.

He promoted the Byshop of Lyncolne that now is, his most faythfull frend frend and old companion & made him confessour: to whom of what soeuer the kynges grace shroue him selfe, thinke ye not that hee spake so loude that the Cardinall heard it? and not vnright: for as Gods creatures ought to obey God and serue his honor, so ought the Popes creatures to obey the pope and serue his Maiestie.

Cardinall Wolsey ruled altogether.

Finally Thomas Wolfsey became what he would, euen porter of heauen, so that no mā could enter into promotion but through him.

The cause of all that we haue suffred this xx. yeares.

ABout the beginnyng of the kinges grace that now is, Fraunce was mighty, so that I suppose it was not mightyer this v. hundred yeares. King Lewes of Fraunce had wonne Naples and had taken Bonony from S. Peters see. Wherefore Pope Iuly was wroth & cast how to bring the Frenchmen downe, yet soberly lest while he brought him lower he should geue an occasion to lift vp ỹ Emperour higher. Our first viage into Spayne was to bryng the Frenchmen lower. For our meynye were set in the forefront and borders of Spaine toward Gascoyne: partly to kepe those parties and partly to feare the Gascoynes and to kepe them at home whyle in the meane time the Spanyardes wanne Nauerne. when Nauerne was wonne our men came to house, as many as dyed not there, and brought al their mony with them home againe saue that they spent there. Howbeit for all the losse of Nauerne, the Frenchmen were yet able enough, to match Spayne, the Venetians, and the Pope, with all the souchenars that he could make: so that there was yet no remedy but we must set on the Frenchmen also, if they should be brought out of Italie.

K. Lewes.

Pope Iulye.

This is a true story.

Then pope Julie wrote vnto hys deare sonne Thomas wolfse, that he would be as good, as louing, and as helping to holy church, as any Thomas euer was, seeing he was as able. Then the new Thomas as glorious as the old, tooke the matter in hand, & perswaded the kinges grace. And then the kinges grace tooke a dispensation for his oth made vpon the appointmēt of peace betweene hun, and the french king, and promised to helpe the holy seat, wherein Pope Peter neuer sate.

The new Thomas.

But the Emperor Maximilian might in no wise stand still, least the Frenchmen should mony him, and get ayd of him, since the Almaines refuse not mony whence soeuer it be proffered: then quod Thomas wolfse, Oh and like your grace, what an honour should it be vnto your grace, if the Emperour were your souldiar? so great honour neuer chaunced any King christened: it should be spoken of while the world stood: the glory and honour shall hyde and darken the cost that it shall neuer be seene, though it shoulde coste halfe your Realme. Dixit, & factum est. It was euen so. And then a Parlament: and then pay: & then vpon the French dogs, with cleane remission of all hys sinnes, that slew one of them, or if he be slain (for ỹ pardons haue no strēgth to saue in this life, but in ỹ life to come only) then to heauen straight without feeling of the paynes of purgatory.

Maximilian the Emperour was K. Henry. & his souldier

Remission of sinnes.

Then came our king with all hys might by sea and by land, and the Emperour with a strong army, and the Spaniardes, and the Pope, & the Venecians al at once against king Lewes of Fraunce. Assone as the Pope had that he desired in Italy, then peace immediatly. And Frenchmen were christen men: and pitie yea and great sinne also were it to shed their bloud: & the French King was the most Christen king againe. And thus was peace concluded, and our Englishmen or rather sheep, came home against winter, and left their fleeces behind them. Wherefore no small number of them while they sought them better rayment at home, were hanged for their labour.

Note here the subtletie & craft of the pope.

How king Henry. 8. with al his armye was abused.

Why the kinges sister was turned vnto Fraunce.

WHen this peace was made, our holy Cardinalles and Bisshops (as their old guise is to catke and cast pl. l. yea, an hundred yeare before, what is like to chaunce vnto their kingdome) considered how the Emperour that now is, was most like to be chosē emperour after his graundfather Maximilian: for Maximilian had already obtayned of diuers of the Electours, that it should so be.

They considered also how mighty he shuld be: first king of Spaine with all that perteyneth thereto, which was wont to be v. vj. or vij. kingdomes: then duke of Burgaine, erle of Flaun-ders, of Hollonde, Zelande, and Brabant, with all that pertaine therto: the Emperour: and his brother Duke of Austrie: and his sister Quene of Hungrie. wherfore thought our prelates, if we take not heed betimes, our kingdome is like to be troubled, and we to be brought vnder ẏ feet: for this mā shall be so mighty, that he shall with power take out of the French kinges handes, out of the hands of the Venetians, and from the pope also, whatsoeuer pertaineth vnto the Empire, and whatsoeuer belongeth vnto his other kingdomes and dominions thereto: and then will he come to Rome, & be crowned there: and so shall he ouerlooke our holy father, and see what he doth: and then shall the old heretikes rise vp againe and say that the pope is Antichrist, and stir vp againe & bring to light that we haue hid and brought a sleep with much cost, payne, & bloudshedding more then this hundred yere long. Considered also that his Aunte is Quene of England, and his wife the King of Englands sister: considered the old amitie betweene the house of Burgaine, & the old kings of England, so that they could neuer do ought in Fraunce without their helpe: & last of al considered the course of marchandise that England hath in those parties, & also the naturall hate that Englishmen beare to Frenchmen: wherefore if we shall vse our old practise, and set the French king against him: then he shall lightly obtayne the fauour of the King of Englande, by the meanes of his aunt and his wife, & ayd with men and money: wherefore we must take heed betimes and breake this amitye: which thing we may by this our old craft easely bring to passe. Let vs take a dispensation, and breake this mariage, and turne the Kinges sister vnto the French King: If the Frenche King gette a male of her, then we shall lightly make our king protector of Fraunce: and so shall England and Fraunce be coupled together: and as for the Queene of England, we shall trim hir well enough, and occupy the king with straunge loue, and keepe hir that she shall beare no rule. And as the goddes had spoken, so it came to passe. Our fayre yong doughter was sent to the old pocky king of Fraunce, ẏ yeare before our mortall enemie and a miscreant, worse them a Turke, and disobedient vnto our holy father, and no more obedient, then he was compelled to be against his will.

The Prelates see euer beforehand what is like to folow.

The kinges sister sent to Fraunce.

The cause of the iorny to Callice.

IN shorte space thereafter Thomas Wolfe now cardinall and Legate a latere, and greatly desirous to be pope also, thought it exceding expedient for his many secret purposes, to bring our king, & the king of Fraunce that now is, together: both to make a perpetuall peace and amitie betweene them, and that while the two Kinges and their lordes dalied together, the great Cardinales and Bisshops of both parties might betray them both, and the Emperour and all christen kinges therto.

Craftye rous Prelates.

Then he made a iourney of gentlemen arayed altogether in silk, so much as their very shoes, and lining of their bootes, more like their mothers, then men of warre: yea I am sure that many of their mothers would haue bene ashamed of so nice and wanton array: Howbeit they went not to make war but peace for euer & a day longer. But to speake of the pompous apparell of my Lord himself, & of his chaplaines, it palleth ẏ rȳ. Apostles. I dare swere that if Peter and Paule had sene them sodenly & at a blush, they would haue bene harder in beleefe that they or any such should be their successoures, then Thomas Didimus was to beleeue that Christ was risen againe from death.

The pomp and apparell of the Cardinall & his chaplaines passed the Apostles.

When all was concluded betweene the King of Fraunce, and oures, that Thomas Wolfe had deuised: and whē the Prelates of both parties had cast their penisworthes against all chaūces, and deuised remedies for al mischeifs. Thē the right reuerend father in God Thomas Cardinal & Legate wold go see the yong Emperour newly chosen to the roome, and haue a certaine secreat communication with some of his prelates also. And gatte him to Bridges in Flaunders, where he was receaued with great solemnity as belongeth vnto so mighty a pillar of Christes church, and was saluted at the entring into the towne of a mery fellow which sayd, Salue rex Regis tui, atquè regni sui. Hayle both king of thy king, and also of his Realme. And though there were neuer so greate strisse betwene the Emperour, and the French king, yet my lord Cardinal ingled him fauour of them both: & finally brought the Emperour to Calcs to the kinges grace, where was great triumph and great loue and amitie shewed on both parties, insomuch that a certaine man marueiling at it, asked the old Bishop of Deram. How it might be that we were so great with the Emperour so shortly vpon so strong and euerlasting a peace made betweene vs & the frenchmen, the Emperour and the King of Fraūce being so mortall enemies. My lord aunswered that it might be well enough if he wist all: but there was a certaine secret (sayd he) wherof all men knew not. Yea verily, they haue had secrets this viii. hundred yeres, which though all the lay men haue felt them, yet few haue spyed them, saue a few Judases which for lucre haue bene confederate with them to betray their own kinges and all other.

A certaine secreat.

Then were we indifferent, & stood still: and the Emperour & the French king wrastled together: and Ferdinādus the Emperors brother wan Millane of the frenchmen: and the Emperour Turnay our great cōquest, which yet after so great cost in building a castle, we deliuered vp againe vnto the Frenchmen, in earnest and hope of a mariage betweene the Dolphine, and our Princesse.

How the Emperour came thorow England.

The Emperor came thorough England.

After that the Emperour would into Spaine, & came through England, where he was receaued wt great honour and with all that partaineth to loue and amitie. The kings grace lent him mony, and promised him more: & the Emperour should tary a certayne yeres and mary our princesse: not that the Cardinal entended that, thou maist be sure, for it was not profitable for their kingdome: but his minde was to daly with the Emperour, and to keepe him without a wife that (insomuch as he was yong and lusty) he might haue bene nozeled & entangled with hores, (which is their nurturing of kinges) & made so effeminate and beastly, that he should neuer haue bene able to lift vp hys hart to any goodnesse or vertue: that Cardinals and Bishoppes might haue administred hys dominions in the meane time, vnto our holy fathers profite.

Nurturing of kinges.

Practise.

The king of Fraunce hearing the fauour that was shewed vnto the Emperour, sent imediatly a defiaunce vnto our king, not without our Cardinals and Bishops counsell thou mayst well wite. For frenchmen are not so folish to haue done it so vnaduisedly and so rashly, seing they had to many in their toppes already. Then our king spake many great woordes, that he would driue the frenchking out of his realme, or els the frenchking should driue him out of his. But had he added as the legate Pandulph taught king Iohn, with the Popes licence, his words had sounded much better. For there can no vow stand in effecte, except the holy father confirmed it.

The french king sendeth a defiance to K. Henry viij.

We sent out our souldiers two summers agaynst the Frenchmen, vnto whose cheef Captaynes the Cardinall had appointed how far they should go and what they should do: and therfore the French king was nothing afrayd, but brought all his power against the Emperour in other places: & so was the Emperor euer betrayed. And thus the Cardinall was the Emperours frend openly, and the french kinges secreatly. For at the meeting with the french king beside Cales he vtterly betrayed the Emperour, yet for no loue that he had to Fraunce, but to helpe the Pope, and to haue bene Pope happly, & to saue their kingdome. which treason though all the world smelled it, yet it brake not out openly to the eye, tyll the siege of Pauia. And the Cardinall lent the Emperour much mony openly, and gaue the French king more secretly. He played with both handes to serue their secreat that all men know not, as ỹ Bishop of Durham sayd. But whatsoeuer the frenchmē did, they had euer the worse notwithstanding the secreat working of our holy prelates on their side.

Armies sēt into fraunce.

The Cardinal was the Emperours frēd openly, and the french kinges secreatly.

The siege of Pauie.

Finally vnto the siege of Pauie, came the French king personally with lx. thousand men of warre, of which xij. thousand were horsemen, & with mony enough. And the Emperours host was vnder xx. thousād, of which were but iij. thousand horsmen, with no mony at all. For he trusted vnto the pope for ayde of men, and vnto our Cardinall for mony. But the pope kept back his men till the Frenchmen had geuen them a feld: and our Cardinall kept back his mony for the same purpose. And thus was the sely Emperour betrayed, as all his predecessoures haue bene this viij. hundred yeares. Howbeit there be that say, that the Emperours souldiers so threatened Pace the kinges graces Embassadour, that he was fayne to make cheuisaunce wyth marchauntes for mony in the kinges name, to pay the souldiers withall, wherefore the Cardinall tooke from him all his promotions, & played tormentours wyth hym, when he came home, because he presumed to do one iote more then was in his cõmission. But howsoeuer it was, the Emperors men in tarying for helpe had spent out all their vitayles. Wherupon Burbon the chiefe captaine of the Emperour, sayd vnto his vnder captaines: ye see, helpe commeth not, and ẏ our vitayles are spent: wherfore there is no remedy but to fight, though we be vnequallie matched. If we winne we shall finde meat enough: if we lose we shall lose no more then we must lose with hunger though we fight not. And so they concluded to set vpon the Frenchmen by night. The king of Fraunce, and his lordes supposing that the Mone wold sooner haue fallen out of the skie, then that the Emperours hoste durst haue fought with them, were somwhat negligent, & went the same night a mumming that Burbon set vpon them. The Emperours host therefore with their sodaine comming vpon them, amased the frenchmen, and draue them vpon heaps together one on another, so that they neuer could come in aray agayne, and tooke the king, and diuers of hys lordes, and slew many, and wanne the field. And there came out all the Cardinals preuy treason: for in the French kinges tent (say men) were letters found, & beside that in the french kings treasure, and in all the host among the souldiers were english shippes found innumerable, which had come sayling a thousand miles by land. But what wonder? ships be made to saile ouer ẏ sea, & wings to flye into far countries, and to mount to the top of hye hilles.

The Emperour setteth vpon ẏ french king by night.

These shippes were english Angels of gold

When the French king was taken, we sang, Te Deum. But for all that singing we made peace with frenchmen. And the Pope, the Venetians, Fraũce and England were knit together, least the Emperours army should do any hurt in Fraunce. wherby ye may coniecture of what minde the Pope & the Cardinall were toward the Emperor and with what hart our spiritualtie with their inuisible secretes, sang, Te Deum. And from that time hetherto, the Emperour & our Cardinall haue bene twaine.

At the taking of the french king Te Deum was song, and great triumph made in England.

After that when the king of Fraūce was deliuered home agayne, and hys sonnes lefte in pledge, manye wayes were sought to bring home the sonnes also: but in vayne except the French king would make good that which he had promised the Emperour. For the bringing home of those children no mã more buried his wits then the Cardinal. He would in any wise the Emperour should haue sent them home, & it had bene but for our kings pleasure for ẏ great kindnes that he shewed him in times past. He would haue maried the kings daughter our princesse vnto the Dolphin againe, or as ẏ voice went among many, vnto the secõd brother, & he shoulde haue bene Prince in England, & king in time to come: so that he sought all wayes to pluck vs from the Emperor, & to ioine vs vnto Fraunce to make Fraunce strong enough to match the Emperour, & to keepe him downe, that the Pope might raigne a god alone, and do what pleaseth him, without controlling of any ouersear. And for the same purpose he left nothing vnprouided to bring the marte from Antwarpe to Cales.

Subtile practises of the Cardinall.

The marte should haue bene at Calis.

But at that time, the Pope taking part with the French king had warre with the Emperour: and at the last the Pope was taken, which when the Cardinall heard, he wrote vnto the Emperour that he should make hym pope. And when he had gotten an answere that pleased him not, but according vnto his deseruinges toward the Emperour, then he waxed furious mad, & sought all meanes to displease the Emperour, and imagined the disorcement betwene the King and the Queene, and wrote sharpely vnto the Emperor with manacing letters, that if he woulde not make him Pope, he woulde make such ruffling betweene Christen princes as was not this hundred yeare, to make the Emperour repent: yea, though it should coste the whole realme of England.

A ruffler.

The Lord Jesus be our shield, what a fierce wrath of God is this vpon vs, that a misshapen monster shoulde spring out of a dunghill into such an heigth, that the dread of God and man layd a part, he should be so malepart, not onely to defye vtterly the maiestie of so mighty an Emperour, whose authoritie both Christ, and all his Apostles obeyed, and taught all other to obey, threatening damnation to them that would not: But should also set so little by the whole realme of England

¶ The putting downe of Cardinall Wolsey.

Cardinall Wolsey a great traytor.

COncerning the Cardinals putting downe, I consider many thinges. First that I neuer heard, or read, that any man being so great a traytor was so easely put to death. Then the naturall disposition and inclination of the man, how ỹ his chief study, yea and all his felicitie and inward ioy hath euer bene to exercise that aungels wit of his (as my lord of Lincolne was wont to praise him) in driuing of such drifftes to beguile all men and to binde the whole world with all. wherefore I can none otherwise indge by an .C. tokens euident vnto whomsoeuer hath a natural wit, but that this is also nothing saue a cast of his olde practise: so that when God had wrapped him in his owne wiles that he wist not which way out, (for the Emperour preuailed for al the Cardinals treason: and the french children might not come home: and he had learned also of his necromancie, that this would be a iopardous yeare for him) what for the treason that he had wrought against the Emperour, and what for ỹ mony which he had borowed of the Commons, least any rising should be against him, then he thought to vndoe his destiny with his policies and went and put downe himselfe vnder a colour (which the processe of the tragedy well declareth) and set vp in his roome to minister forth, & to fight against God as he had begun, the chiefest of all his Secretaries, one nothing inferiour vnto his master in lying, fayning, & bearing two faces in one hode, a whelpe that goeth not out of kinde from his syre, the chiefest stale wherewith the Cardinall caught the kinges grace, whome he called vnto the confirmation of al that he entended to perswade, saying: If it like your grace, More is a learned man, and knoweth it: and is also a lay man, wherefore he will not say otherwise then it is, for any partialitie to vswarde. which secretary, yet must first deserue it wyth writing against Martin, and against the Obedience, and Mammon, and become the proctour of Purgatorye, to write against ỹ supplicatiō of beggers.

Cardinall Wolsey committed treason against the Emperour.

Cardinall Wolsey preferred More to be Chauncellour.

And then to blinde the world withall, many quarrels were picked: the Cardinall might not speake with the kinges grace, the broad seale was fette away, high treason was layd to hys charge. i. that he breathed (heard I say) in the kinges face, when he had the french pockes, (O hypocrites) but the very treason that he had wrought, was not spoke of at all, nor ought worthy of a traytour done to him at all.

Treason layd to the Cardinals charge.

Then they called a Parliament (as though the golden world should come againe) wherin the hypocrits to bleare mens eyes withall, made a reformation of mortuaries and probates of testamentes, the root yet left behind whence all that they haue for a time weeded out, will spring againe by litle and litle as before, if they as their hope is, may stop this light of Gods worde that is now abroad. They made a reformation also of pluralities of benefices, ordayning that henceforth no man may come by pluralitie of benifices with vertue and conning, but with seruing for thē in ỹ court. which what other thing is it saue playne symony? O blinde busserdes and shameleese hypocrites. what care they to do, whether against God or their own lawes, to flatter great men withall, & to blind thē. But harke here. The tithes were ordayned at the beginning to finde the preachers, and the poore people which now goe a begging: so that the church wardens ought to take the benefices into their handes in the name of the parish, & deliuer the preacher of Gods word there dwellyng and preset a sufficient liuing, & deuide the rest among ỹ poore people. And the king is bound to maintaine that order, and not to resist them except he will be an open tyraunt. Now I appele the consciences of the kinges grace and of his lordes. what answer will they geue when they come before Christ in ỹ last iudgement, for their robbing of so many soules in so many parishes, of Gods word, with holding euery man so many chaplaynes in their houses wyth pluralities of benefices, and for the robbing of so many poore and needy of their due and dayly foode, whose need for lacke of succour cryeth to God continually for vengeaunce against them, which we see daily by a thousand misfortunes fall on them, and on their wiues and children. Let them read Exodus and Deuteronomie, and see what they finde there. Yea and what shall so many chaplaines do? First slay theyr soules, & then defile their wiues, their daughters, and their maydens, and last of all betray them.

When this reformation the coloure and cloke of their hipocrisy was made, then the spiritualtie came douking before the kinges grace, and forgaue him ẏ mony which they had lēt their pope, to bring in the temporalty, & to make thē after their example to do likewise, as louing subiects, & no lesse kinde vnto their Prince thē the spiritualty. For their arses were vpō thornes til ẏ lone was forgeuen, for feare of afterclaps. wherupon the tēporality forgaue their part also in hope of ẏ thy obteined not. For assone as the lone was forgeuē the parliament brake vp, because our prelates, & their cōfederat frends had found ẏ they sought, & caught ẏ fish for which they layed the bayt of all those faces of reformations, and for which the Cardinall, to bring ẏ worlde into a fooles paradise, was compelled euē with his owne good will to resigne his chauncellorshyp, & that to whō he listed him selfe. And as for the bishoprike of Durham, to say the very truth, he could not of good congruitie but reward his old chaplaine, and one of the chief of al his secretaries with all, still Saturne, that so seldome speaketh, but walketh vp & downe all day musing and imagining mischiefe, a douking hypocrite made to dissemble.

The Byshoprike of Durhā.

Which for what seruice done in christes Gospell came he to the bishoprike of London? Or what such seruice did he therein? He burnt the new Testament, calling it, Doctrinam perigrinam, straunge learning. Yea verily: Looke how strange his liuing in whose bloud that testament was made, was from the liuing of the pope: euen so straunge is that doctrine from the popes law, in which onely, and in the practise therof is Tunstal learned. which also for what cause left he the bishoprike of London? Euen for the same cause he tooke it after that he had long serued for it, couetousnes and ambition. Neither is it possible naturally that there should be any good Bishop, so long as the bishoprickes be nothing saue worldlye pompe and honour, superfluous abundance of all maner riches and libertie to do what a man listeth vnpunished: thinges which onely the cuill desire, and all good men abhorre.

Tunstall Byshop of Durham burnt the new Testament.

¶ Bishoprickes is a superfluous honor, and a lewde liberty.

And assone as the Parliament was ended, the Cardinall had his charter, and gat him home: and all Bishops gat them euery fore to his hole, leuing yet their attournies behinde them: to come againe themselues assone as the constellation is somewhat ouerrunne, whereof they be afrayd.

The Cardinall cleare ly discharged.

¶ What the cause of all this mischiefe is.

WHence commeth all this mischiefe? Verily it is the hand of God to auenge the wantonnesse of great men, which will walke without the feare of God, folowing ẏ steps of the hye Prelates, contrary vnto their profession, & to auenge also ẏ wrongs, the blasphemies & subtil persecuting of his word.

For when Martin Luther had vttered the abhominations of the Pope, and his clergy with Gods worde, and diuers bookes were come into England: our Cardinall thought to finde a remedy against that well enough, and sent to Rome for this vaine title, Defender of the fayth: which the Vicar of Croydon preached, that the Kynges grace would not lose for all London, and xx. mile round about it. Neyther is it marueil, for it hath cost more then London and xl. mile about it is able to make (I think) at this houre, beside the effusion of innocēt bloud that was offred vnto the idoll, and dayly is offred therto. when this glorious name was come from our holy father, the Cardinall brought it vnto the Kinges grace at Greenwich. And though the king had it already and had read it, yet against the morning, were all the lordes & gentlemen that could in so short space be gathered together, sent for, to come and receaue it in with honour. And in the morning after, the Cardinall gat him through the backside into the frier obseruantes. And part of the gentils went round about, and welcommed him from Rome, as representing the Popes person: part met him halfe way: part at the court gate: and last of all the kings grace him self met him in the hall, and brought him vp into a great chamber, where was a seate prepared on hye for the Kinges grace and the Cardinal, while the Bull was read: in so much that not the wise onely, but men of meane vnderstanding laughed the vaine pomp to scorne, not far vnlike to the receauing of the Cardinals hatte. which whē a ruffian had brought brought vnto him to Westminster vnder his cloke, he clothed the messenger in rich aray, and sent him backe to Douer againe, and appoynted the Bishop of Canterbury to meete him, and then an other company of lordes and gentles I wotte not how oft, ere it came to Westminster, where it was set on a cupborde and tapers about, so that the greatest Duke in the lande must make curtesie thereto: yea and to his empty seat he being away.

The falsest and veinest Cardinall that euer was.

And shortly for lacke of authoritie of Gods worde Martin must be condemned by the authoritie of the king. And the kinges grace to claw the Pope againe must make a booke, in which to proue all that they would haue stablished, for lacke of scripture, yea and contrary to the open scripture, is made this mighty reason: Such prelates are the church, and the church cannot erre, and therfore all that they do is right, & we ought to beleeue them without any scripture, yea and though the scripture be contrary. wherefore God offended with such blasphemy, to make his enemies feele that they woulde not see in the open scripture, nor in the practise of their liuings and doings cleane contrary vnto the scripture, and vnto the liuing of Christ and his Apostles, this viij. hundred yeares, hath poured his wrath vppon vs, and hath snared the wise of the world with the subtlety of their owne wittes.

The chirch erreth, if ỹ pope and bishops be the chirch.

Marten Luther submitted him self to king Henry viij.

Moreouer when Marten Luther had submitted himselfe in an epistle, let his grace consider what answer he gaue agayne. where is the glory of ỹ great prayse become that his grace gaue the Cardinall for his goodly actes and benefites which all the common wealth of the whole realme should feele?

More is proud a liar.

And More among his other blasphemies in his Dialogue sayth, that none of vs dare abide by our sayth vnto the death: but shortly thereafter, God to proue More, that he hath euer bene a false lyar, gaue strength vnto his seruaunt Sir Thomas Hitton, to confesse, and that vnto the death, the faith of his holy sonne Jesus, which Thomas, the Bishops of Canterbury and Rochester, after they had dieted and tormented him secretly, murthered at Maydstone most cruelly.

Sir Thomas Hittō

I beseech the kings most noble grace therefore to consider all the wayes by which the Cardinall and our holy Bishops haue lead him, since he was first king, and to see whereunto al the pride, pompe, and vaine boast of the Cardinall is come, and how God hath resisted him and our Prelates in all theyr wiles. wee hauing nothing to do at all, haue medled yet in all matters, and haue spent for our prelats causes more then all Christendome, euen vnto the vtter beggering of our selues, & haue gotten nothing but rebuke and shame & hate among all nations, and a mocke and a scorne thereto of them whome we haue most holpen.

I damned in Paris.

For the Frenchmen (as the saying is) of late dayes made a play or a disguising at Paris, in which the Emperour daunsed with the Pope, and the French king, and wered them, the K. of England sitting on a hye bench, and looking on. And when it was asked, why he daunsed not, it was aunswered, that he sate there, but to pay the minstrels their wages onely.

As who should say, we payd for all mens daunsing. we monyed the Emperour openly, and gaue the Frenchemen double and treble secretly, and to the Pope also. Yea and though Fardinandus had money sent him openly to blinde the world withall: yet the saying is throughout all Douchland, that we sent money to the king of Pole, and to the Turke also, and that by help of our mony Fardinandus was driuen out of Hungarie. which thing though it were not true, yet it will breed vs a scab at the last, and gette vs with our medling, more hate then we shall be able to beare, if a chaunce come: unlesse that we waxe wiser betime.

Here Tindal prayeth for ỹ ceasing of persecution.

And I beseech his grace also to haue merry of his own soule, and not to suffer Christ, and his holy Testament to be persecuted vnder his name any longer, that the sword of the wrath of god may be put vp againe, which for that cause no doubt is most chiefly drawne.

And I beseech his grace to haue cōpassion on his poore subiectes, which haue euer bene vnto his grace both obediente, louing, and kinde: that the realme vtterly perishe not, wyth the wicked counsell of our pestilent prelates. For if his grace which is but a man, should dye, the lordes and commons not knowing who hath most right to enioy the crowne: the realme could not but stande in great daunger.

And I exhorte the lordes temporall of the realme, that they come and fall before the kinges grace, and humblye desire his maiestie to suffer it to be tryed, who of right ought to succed, and if he or

Tindall prayeth the vnderstanding of such as of right should succeed to the crowne.

he or she kayle who next, yea and who third. And let it be proclamed openly. And let al the lords temporal be sworn therto, and all the knightes, & squires, and gentlemen, and the commons aboue xxiij. yeares old, that there be no strife for the succession. For if they trye it by the sworde, I promise them, I see none other likelyhode, but that as the Cardinall hath prophecied it will cost the realme of England.

And all that be sworne vnto the cardinall, I warne them yet once againe to breake their othes, as I did in the obedience. And all my lord Cardinals privy secretaries and spyes, by whom he worketh yet I warne thē to beware betime. My lord Cardinall though he haue the name of all, yet he wrought not all of his owne brayne: but of all wilye and exercised in mischiefe, he called vnto him the most experte, and of their counsell and practise, gathered that most seemed to serue his wicked purpose.

Tindall warneth al the Cardinals secretaries to repent and turne to God.

And all that be confederate with the Cardinall, and with the Bishops vpō any secret appointment be they neuer so great, I rede thē to breake their bondes, and to follow right by the playne and open way, and to be content, and not too ambitious: for it is now euill climing, the boughes be brittle. And let them looke well on the practise of Bishops, how they haue serued all other men in times past, and into what troubles they haue brought them that were quiet. Many a man both great & small haue they brought to death in England, euen in my dayes (beside in times past) whose blond God wil seek once. Let them learne at the last that it is but the cast of the Bishops to receaue the sacrament with one man secretly vpon one purpose, and with an other man as secreatly vppon the contrary to deceaue al parties. For of periury they make as much conscience, as a dog of a bone: for they haue power to dispence with all thing, thinke they.

A generall exhortation to all kinds of people.

Popish bishops make no accompt of periury.

At the beginning of the warre betwene the Frenchking and the Emperour, the prognostication said yeare by yeare, that there should be great labor for peace: but it shall not come to passe, for there is Bicorporeū, or Corpus neutrum, that commeth betwene and letteth it: that is to say, a body that is neither nother, or holdeth on neither part: and that body is the spiritualtie, which hold but of thēselues onely. For when any Ambassadors goe betwene to entreat of peace, the bishops are euer the chief, which though they make a goodly oration for the peace openly to deceaue the lay men, yet secreatly by the bishops of the same countrie, they cast a bone in the way, and there can be no peace, vntill the peace be for their profite, let it cost in the meane season what blond it will.

The spiritualtie are neither of the one side nor of the other for there is no truth in them: more then there serue their turne.

And as for them which for luker, as Iudas, betraye the truth, and write agaynst their consciences, and which for honour as Balaam, enforce to curse the people of God: I would fayne (if their hartes were not to hard) that they dyd repent. And as fayne I would that our prelates did repent, if it were possible for them to prefer Gods honour before their owne.

And vnto all subiectes I say, that they repent. For the cause of euill rulers is the sinne of the subiectes, testifyeth the Scripture. And the cause of false preachers is, that the people haue no loue vnto the truth, sayth Paule. 2. Thes. 2. we be all sinners an hundred times greater then all that we suffer. Let vs therfore ech forgeue other, remembring the greater sinners the more welcome, if we repent, according to the similitude of the riotous sonne. Luc. 15. For Christ dyed for sinners and is their sauiour, and hys blond they treasure to pay for their sinnes. He is that fatted calf which is slaine to make them good cheare withall, if they will repent, and come to their father again. And his merites is that goodlye rayment, to couer the naked deformities of our sinnes.

In admonition to all subiectes.

Luk. 15.

These be sufficient at this time, although I could say more, and though other haue deserued that I more sayd: yea, and I could more deeply haue entred into the practise of our Cardinall, but I spare for diuers considerations, and namely for his sake, which neuer spared me, nor any faythfull frende of his owne, nor any that told him truth, nor spareth to persecute the blond of Christ in as cleare light as euer was, and vnder as subtile colour of hypocrisie as euer was any persecutiō since the creation of the worlde. Nether haue I sayd for hate of any person or persons, God I take to recorde: but of their wickednes onely, and to cal them to repentaunce, knowledging that I am a sinner also, and that a greeuous. Howbeit it is a deuilish thing and a merciles, to defend wickednes against the open truth, and not to haue power

Here Tindall sheweth himself to be voyde of malice to any priuate person.

to

to repent. And therefore I doubt not, if men will not be warned hereby, but that God will vtter more practise by whome he will, and not ceale vntill he haue broken the bonde of wilie hypocrites which persecute so subtelly.

God is mercyfull to the ignorannt, but he pleaseth the malicious & willful offender.

And finally if the persecution of the kinges grace, and of other temporall persons conspiring with the spiritualtie be of ignorannce, I doubt not but that theyr eyes shall be opened shortly and they shal see & repent & God shall shew them mercy. But and if it be of a set malice against the truth, and of a grounded hate against the law of God by the reasō of a full consent they haue to sinne, and to walke in their olde wayes of ignorannce, wherunto (being now past all repentance) they haue vtterly yelded themselues to follow ẏ ful lust without bridle or snaffle, which is the sinne agaynst the holy Ghost: then ye shall see euen shortly that God shall turne the poynt of the swoorde wherewith they now shedde Christes bloud, homeward to shed their owne again after the ensamples of the bible.

And let them remember that I well toward iij. yeares agone to preuent al occasions and all carnall beastes that seeke fleshly liberty, sent forth the true obedience of a christen man which yet they condemned, but after they had condemned the New Testament, as right was whence the Obedience hath his authoritie. Now then if when the light is come abroad, in which theyr wickednes cā not be hid, they finde no such obedience in the people vnto their old tyranny, whose fault is it? This is a sure conclusion: none obedience that is not of loue can not long endure: and in your deedes can no man see any cause of loue: and the knowledge of Christ, for whose sake onely a man wold loue you thougb ye were neuer so euill, ye persecute. Now thē if any disobedience rise ye are the cause of it your selues.

The obedience of a Christen man written thyrs yeares before this booke.

Say not but that ye be warned.

A Pathway into the holy Scripture, made by William Tyndall.

I Do marueil greatly, derely beloued in christ, that euer any mā should repugne or speake against the Scripture to be had in euery lāguage and that of euery man. For I thought that no man had bene so blinde to aske why light should be shewed to thē ẏ walke in darkenes, where they cā not but stomble, and where to stomble, is the daunger of eternall damnation: other so despightfull that he would enuie any mā (I speake not his brother) so necessary a thyng: or so Bedlem mad to affirme that good is ẏ naturall cause of euill, and darkenes to procede out of light, that lying should be grounded in truth and verity, and not rather cleane contrary, that light destroyeth darkenes and veritie reproueth all maner lying.

Scriptures should be translated into euery language.

The cause of the edition of this Pathway.

Neuertheless seyng that it hath pleased God to send vnto our English men, euen to as many as vnfaynedly desire it, the Scripture in their mother tōg, cōsidering that there be in euery place false teachers and blind leaders, that ye should be deceaued of no man, I supposed it very necessary to prepare this Pathway into the Scripture for you, that ye might walke surely & euer know the true frō the false. And aboue all to put you in remembraunce of certaine pointes, which are: that ye well vnderstand what these wordes meane. The old Testament. The new Testament. The law. The Gospell. Moses, Christ, Nature, Grace. Worckyng and beleuing. Dedes and faith. Lest we ascribe, to the one that which belongeth to the other, and make of Christ, Moses, of the Gospell the Law, despise grace and robbe fayth: & fal from meke learnyng into idle despitions, brawlyng and scoldyng about wordes.

What are contayned in the old Testamēt.

The old Testament is a booke, wherein is written the law of God, & the dedes of them which fulfill them, & of them also which fulfill them not.

The contentes of the newe Testamēt.

The new Testament is a booke, wherein are contcined the promises of God and the dedes of them which beleue them or beleue them not.

Euangelion (that we call the Gospel) is a Greke word, and signifieth good,

The Etymologie of this worde Euangelió mery, glad and ioyfull tydinges, that maketh a mans hart glad, and maketh him sing, daunce and leape for ioy. As when Dauid had killed Goliath the gyaunt, came glad tydinges vnto the Jewes, that their fearefull and cruell enemy was slayne, and they deliuered out of all daunger: for gladnes wherof, they song, daunced, and were ioyful. In like maner is the Euangelion of God (which we call Gospell, and the new Testament) ioyfull tydinges and as some say: a good hearing published by the Apostles throughout all the world, of Christ the right Dauid how that hee hath fought with sinne, with death, and the deuil, & ouercome them. wherby all men that were in bondage to sinne wolded with death, ouercome of the deuill, are without their owne merites or deseruinges, losed, iustified restored to life and saued, brought to libertie and reconciled vnto the fauour of God & set at one with him agayne: whiche tydinges as many as beleue laude, prayse, & thanke God, are glad, syng and daunce for ioy.

Euangelió is called the newe Testamēt.

This Euangelion or Gospell (that is to say, such ioyfull tydinges) is called ỹ new Testament. Because that as a mā whē he shall dye appointeth his goods to be dealt & distributed after his death among them whiche he nameth to bee his heyres. Euen so Christ before hys death commaūded and appointed that such Euangelion, Gospell, or tydynges should be declared throughout all the world, and therewith to geue vnto all that repent and beleue all his goodes: that is to say, his lyfe wherewith hee swalowed and deuoured vp death: hys righteousnes, wherewith he banished sinne: his saluatiō, wherwith he ouercame eternall damnation. Now cā the wretched man (that knoweth him selfe to be wrapped in sinne, and in daūger to death & hell) heare no more ioyous a thyng, then such glad and comfortable tydinges of Christ. So that he can not but be glad and laugh frō the low bottome of his hart, if hee beleue that the tydinges are true.

No greater comfort can happen to a sinner being penitent thē the promises of the Gospell.

The Gospell was promised of God in the old Testamēt by the Prophets.

To strēgth such sayth with all, God promised this his Euangelion in the old Testament by the Prophetes (as Paul sayth Rom. i.) How that he was chosē out to preach Gods Euāgelió, which he before had promised by the Prophetes in the Scriptures that treate of his sonne which was borne of the sede of Dauid. In the Gene. iij. God sayth to the Serpent: I wil put hatred betwen thee and the woman, betwen thy sede and her sede, that selfe sede shall treade thy head vnder foote. Christ is this womās seede, he it is that hath troden vnder foote the deuils head, that is to say, sinne, death, hell, & all his power. For without this seede can no man auoyde sinne, death, hell, and euerlasting damnation.

Christ hath ouer throwen ỹ deuill, and all hys power.

Agayne Gene. xvij. God promised Abraham saying: in thy seede shall all the generations of the earth be blessed. Christ is that seede of Abraham sayth S. Paule Gala. iij. He hath blessed all the world through the Gospell. For where Christ is not, there remaineth the curse that fell on Adam as soone as he had sinned, so that they are in bōdage vnder the damnation of sinne, death, and hell. Against this curse blesseth now the Gospell all the world, in almuch as it cryeth opēly, vnto all that knowledge their sinnes and repēt saying: who soeuer beleueth on the sede of Abraham shalbe blessed, that is, he shal be deliuered from sinne, death and hell, and shall hence forth continue righteous, and saued for euer, as Christ hym selfe sayth (in the xi. of John.) He that beleueth on me shall neuer more dye.

The law was geuē by Moses, grace and truth by Jesus Christ.

The law (sayth John. i.) was geuē by Moses: but grace and verity by Jesus Christ. The law (whose minister is Moses) was geuen to bring vs vnto the knowledge of our selues, that we might thereby feele and perceaue what we are of nature. The law cōdemneth vs and all our deedes, and is called of Paule (in the iij. Cor. iij.) the ministration of death. For it killeth our consciences and driueth vs to desperation, in as much as it requireth of vs that which is vnpossible for our nature to do. It requireth of vs the deedes of an whole man. It requireth perfect loue from the low bottome and grounde of the hart, as well in all thinges whiche we suffer, as in the thinges which we do. But sayth John in the same place, grace and veritie is geuē vs in Christ. So that when the law hath passed vpō vs, and condemned vs to death (which is his nature to do) then haue we in Christ grace, that is to say fauour, promises of life, of mercy, of pardon, freely by ỹ merites of Christ, & in Christ haue we veritie & truth, in that God for his sake fulfilleth all his promises to them that beleue. Therfore is ỹ Gospell the ministration of life. Paule calleth it in the fore rehearsed place of the Cor. iij. the ministration of the spirite and of righteousnes. In the Gospell when

The law requireth of vs that whiche is impossible for our nature to do.

When the law hath condemned vs, Christ graunteth vs free pardon.

we

we beleeue the promises, we receaue the spirit of life, and are iustified in the bloud of Christ from all thyngs wherof the law condemned vs. And we receaue loue vnto the law and power to fulfill it, and grow therein dayly. Of Christ it is written in the fore rehearsed Joh. i. this is he of whose aboundaunce or fulnes, all we haue receaued, grace for grace, or fauour for fauour. That is to say, for the fauour that God hath to his sonne Christ, he geueth vnto vs his fauour & good wil & al giftes of his grace as a father to his sonnes. As affirmeth Paule saying: whiche loued vs in his beloued before the creation of ẏ world. So ẏ Christ bringeth the loue of God vnto vs and not our owne holy woorkes. Christ is made Lord ouer all, and is called in Scripture Gods mercy stole, who soeuer therfore flyeth to Christ, can neither heare nor receaue of God any other thyng saue mercy.

Christ is Gods mercy stoole, so that no mercy commeth from God, but through Christ.

In the old Testamẽt are many promises, which are nothyng els but the Euãgelion or Gospel, to saue those ẏ beleued thẽ frõ ẏ vengeaunce of the law. And in the new Testament is oft made mention of the law, to cõdemne them, which beleue not the promises. Moreouer the law and Gospell may neuer be seperate: for the Gospel and promises serue but for troubled consciences, which are brought to desperation and feele the paynes of hell and death vnder the law, and are in captiuitie and bondage vnder the law. In all my dedes I must haue the law before me to condemne myne vnperfectnes. For all that I do (be I neuer so perfect) is yet damnable sinne, when it is compared to the law, whiche requireth the ground and bottome of myne hart. I must therefore haue alwayes the law in my sight, that I may be meke in the spirite, and giue God all the laude and prayse, ascribyng to him all righteousnes, and to my selfe al vnrighteousnes and sinne. I must also haue the promises before myne eyes, that I dispayre not, in which promises I see the mercy, fauour, and good will of God vpon me in the bloud of hys sonne Christ, which hath made satisfaction for myne vnperfectnes, and fulfilled for me, that which I could not do.

The law must euer be my sight to make vs humble spirited: & the gospel also before our eyes to comfort vs.

Here may ye perceaue that two maner of people are sore deceaued. First they whiche iustifie them selues with outward dedes, in that they abstayne outwardly frõ that which the law forbiddeth, and do outwardly that which the law commaundeth. They compare them selues to open sinners and in respect of them iustifie them selues condemning the open sinners. They set a vayle on Moyses face and see not how the law requireth loue from the bottome of the hart and that loue onely is the fulfilling of the law. If they dyd they would not condemne their neighbours. Loue hydeth the multitude of sinnes, sayth S. Peter in his first Epistle. For whom I loue from the deepe bottome & grounde of myne hart him condemne I not, neither recken his sinnes, but suffer his weakenes & infirmitie, as a mother the weakenes of her sonne, vntill he grow vp into a perfect man.

Two maner of people deceaued. Those that iustifie them selues by their woorkes: & those that through their blinde opinion of faith deterly peruert the liuely sayth.

Those also are deceaued which with out all feare of God geue them selues vnto all manner vices with ful consent, and full delectation, hauyng no respect to the law of God (vnder whose vengeaunce they are locked vp in captiuitie) but say: God is mercyfull & Christ dyed for vs, supposing that such dreaming & imaginatiõ is that fayth which is so greatly cõmended in holy Scripture. Nay that is not faith, but rather a foolish blind opinion springing of their owne corrupt nature, and is not geuẽ them of the spirite of God but rather of the spirite of the deuill, whose fayth, now a dayes, the Popish compare and make equall vnto the best trust, confidence and belefe that a repenting soule can haue in the bloud of our Sauiour Jesus, vnto their owne confusion, shame & vttering what they are within. But true faith is (as sayth the Apostle Paule) the gift of God and is geuẽ to sinners after the law hath passed vpon them and hath brought their consciences vnto the brim of desperation, and sorowes of hell.

He that hath a right fayth delyteth in the law although his weaknes can not fulfill the same.

They that haue this right faith, confesse to the law that it is righteous, and good, and iustifie God which made the law, and haue delectation in the law (notwithstanding that they cã not fulfill it as they would for their weakenes) and they abhorre what soeuer the law forbiddeth, though they can not all wayes auoyde it. And their great sorrow is, because they can not fulfill the will of God in the law, and the spirite that is in them cryeth to God night & day for strength and helpe with teares (as sayth Paul) that can not be expressed with toung. Of which thinges the belefe of our Popish or of their father, whom they so magnifie for his strong faith hath none experience at all.

He that iustifieth him selfe reiecteth ỹ law & promises.

The first, that is to say, he whiche iustifieth him selfe with his outward deedes, consenteth not to the law inward, neither hath delectation therin, ye, he would rather that no such law were. So iustifieth he not God, but hateth him as a tyraunt, neither careth he for the promises, but will with his owne strength be sauiour of him selfe: no wise glorifieth he God, though he seme outward to do.

The voluptuous person.

The second, that is to say, the sensuall person, as a voluptuous swyne, neither feareth God in his law, neither is thankefull to him for his promises and mercy, which is set foorth in Christ to all them that beleue.

A true christian.

The right Christen man consenteth to the law that it is righteous, and iustifieth God in the law, for he affirmeth that God is righteous and iust, which is author of the law, he beleueth the promises of God, & iustifieth God, iudgyng him true and beleuyng that he will fulfill his promises. with the law he condemneth him selfe and all his dedes, and geueth all the prayse to God. He beleueth the promises, and ascribeth all truth to God: thus euery where iustifieth he God, and prayseth God.

By nature through the fall of Adam are we the children of wrath, heyres of the vengeaunce of God by byrth, yea and from our conceptiõ. And we haue our felowship with the damned deuils vnder the power of darkenes and rule of Sathan, while we are yet in our mothers wombes, and though we shewe not foorth the frutes of sinne, as soone as we be borne, yet are we full of the naturall poyson where of all sinnefull deedes spryng, and can not but sinne outwardes (be we neuer so young) as soone as we be able to worcke if occasion be geuen, for our nature is to do sinne as is the nature of a Serpent to stynge. And as Serpent yet young, or yet vnbrought foorth is full of poyson, and can not afterward (when the tyme is come and occasion geuen) but bryng foorth the frutes therof. And as an adder, a tode, or a snake is hated of man (not for the euill that it hath done, but for the poyson that is in it and hurt which it can not but do) so are we hated of God for that naturall poyson which is cõceaued and borne with vs, before we do any outward euill. And as the euil, which a venemous worme doth, maketh it not a Serpent: but because it is a venemous worme, doth it euill and poysoneth, and as the frute maketh not the tree euill: but because it is an euill tree, therfore bryngeth it foorth euill frute, when the season of frute is. Euen so do not our euill dedes make vs first euill though ignorance & blindnes through euill worckyng hardeneth vs in euill & maketh vs worse and worse: but because that of nature we are euill, therefore we both thinke and do euill, and are vnder vengeaunce vnder the law, conuict to eternal damnation by the law, and are contrary to the will of God in all our will, and in all thynges consent to the will of the fende.

A proper similitude.

By grace (that is to say by fauour) we are pluckt out of Adã the ground of all euill, and grafted in Christ the roote of all goodnes. In Christ God loued vs his elect and chosen, before the world began, and reserued vs vnto the knowledge of his sonne and of his holy Gospell, and when the Gospell is preached to vs openeth our hartes, and geueth vs grace to beleue and putteth the spirite of Christ in vs, and we know him as our father most mercyfull, and consent to the law, and loue it inwardly in our hart, and desire to fulfill it, and sorrow because we can not: which will (sinne we of frailtie neuer so much) is sufficient till more strength bee geuen vs, the blood of Christ hath made satisfaction for the rest: the blood of Christ hath obteyned all thyngs for vs of God. Christ is our satisfaction, redemer, deliuerer, sauiour from vengeaunce and wrath. Obserue and marke in Paules, Peters & Johns Epistles & in the Gospell what Christ is vnto vs.

We are plucked frõ Adam, and grafted in Christ by grace.

The blood of Jesus hath obteyned al thinges for vs of God.

By faith are we saued onely in beleuyng the promises. And though fayth be neuer without loue & good worckes, yet is our saluing imputed neither to loue nor vnto good worckes but vnto faith onely. For loue and woorkes are vnder the law which requireth perfection, and the ground and fountayne of the hart, and damneth all imperfectnes. Now is fayth vnder the promises, which damne not: but geue pardõ grace, mercy, fauour, and what soeuer is contayned in the promises.

Sundry sortes of righteousnes.

Righteousnes is diuers: for blynd reasõ imagineth many maner of righteousnesses. There is the righteousnes of worckes (as I sayd before) when the hart is a way and is not felt how the law

law is spirituall and can not be fulfilled, but from the bottome of the hart. As the iust ministration of all maner of lawes, and the obseruyng of them, for a worldlye purpose and for our owne profite and not of loue vnto our neighbour without all other respect, and moreall vertues wherein Philosophers put their felicity and blessednes, whiche all are nothyng in the sight of God in respect of the lyfe to come. There is in like maner the iustifying of ceremonies whiche some imagine their owne selues, some counterfaite other, saying, in their blynd reasō: such holy persons dyd thus and thus, and they were holy men, therfore if I do so likewise I shall please God: but they haue none aūswere of God, that, that pleaseth. The Iewes seke righteousnes in their ceremonies which god gaue vnto them not for to iustifie: but to describe and paynt Christ vnto thē, of which Iewes testifieth Paule saying: how that they haue affection to god: but not after knowledge, for they go about to stablish their owne iustice, and are not obedient to the iustice or righteousnesse that commeth of God, which is the forgeuenesse of sinne in Christes bloud vnto all that repent and beleue. The cause is verely, that except a man cast away his owne imagination and reason, he can not perceaue God, and vnderstand the vertue & power of the bloud of Christ. There is a full righteousnes, when the law is fulfilled from the ground of the hart. This had neither Peter nor Paule in this life perfectly: vnto the vttermost, that they could not be perfecter but sighed after it. They were so farreforth blessed in Christ, that they hungred and thyrsted after it. Paule had this thyrst, he consented to the law of God, that it ought so to be, but he found an other lust in his members cōtrary to the lust & desire of his mynde that letted him, and therefore cryed out saying: Oh wretched man that I am: who shall deliuer me from this body of death: thankes bee to God through Iesus Christ. The righteousnes that before God is of value, is to beleue the promises of God, after the law hath confounded the conscience. As when the temporall law ofttymes condemneth the these or murtherer & bringeth him to execution, so that he seeth nothyng before him but present death, and then commeth good tydinges, a charter frō the kyng and deliuereth hym. Likewise when Gods law hath brought the sinner into knowledge of himselfe, and hath confounded his conscience, & opened vnto him the wrath and vengeaunce of God, then commeth good tydinges, the Euangelion sheweth vnto him the promises of God in Christ, and how that Christ hath purchased pardon for him, hath satisfied the law for him and peased the wrath of God. And the poore sinner beleueth, laudeth and thāketh God, through Christ, and breaketh out into exceedyng inward ioy and gladnes, for that he hath escaped so great wrath, so heauy vengeaunce, so fearefull and so euerlastyng a death. And he henceforth is an hūgred and a thurst after more righteousnes, that he might fulfill the law, & mourneth continually commendyng hys weakenes vnto God in the bloud of our Sauiour Christ Iesus.

Mās sensuall reason can not perceaue the vertue of Christes bloud.

Here shall ye see compendiously and playnly set out the order and practise of euery thyng afore rehearsed.

The fall of Adam hath made vs heyres of the vengeaunce and wrath of God and heyres of eternall damnatiō. And hath brought vs into captiuitie and bondage vnder the deuill. And the deuill is our Lord, and our ruler, our head, our gouernour, our Prince, yea and our God. And our will is locked and knit faster vnto the will of the deuill, then could an hundred thousand chaines bynde a man vnto a post. Unto the deuils will consent we, with all our hartes, with all our myndes, with all our might, power, strēgth, will and lust: so that the law and will of the deuill is written as well in our harts as in our members, and we runne headlong after the deuill with full seale, and the whole swyng of all the power we haue: as a stone cast vp into the ayre cōmeth downe naturally of his owne selfe with all the violence and swyng of his owne waygh. With what poyson deadly, and venemous hate, hateth a man hys enemy? With howe great malice of mynde inwardly do we slea and murther? With what violence and rage, yea and with how feruent lust commit we aduoutrie, fornication, and such like vncleannes? With what pleasure and delectation inwardly serueth a glotton his belly? With what diligence deceaue we? How busily seke we the thinges of this world? What soeuer we doe, thinke, or imaginne, is abhominable in the sight of God. For we can referre nothyng vnto the honour

Adams fall brought vs in bondage to the deuill.

The naturall corruption of the myndes of Adams heyres playnly set forth.

nour of God: neither is his law or will written in our members or in our hartes: neither is there any more power in vs to folow the will of God then in a stone to ascende vpward of hys owne selfe. And beside that we are as it were a slepe in so depe blindnes, that we cā neither see, nor feele in what misery, thraldome, and wretchednes we are in, till Moses come and wake vs, and publish the law. when we heare the law truly preached, how that we ought to loue and honour God with all our strength and might, from the low bottome of the hart: because he hath created vs, and both heauen and earth for our sakes and made vs Lord therof: and our neighbours (yea our enemies) as our selues inwardly from the grounde of the hart, because God hath made them after the likenesse of his owne image, & they are his sonnes as well as we, and Christ hath bought them with his bloud and made them heyres of euerlastyng lyfe as well as vs: And how we ought to do what soeuer God biddeth, and abstaine from what soeuer God forbiddeth, with all loue and mekenes, with a feruent and a burnyng lust from the center of the hart, then begynneth the conscience to rage against the law, and against God. No sea, be it neuer so great a tempest, is so vnquiet. For it is not possible for a naturall mā to cōsent to the law, that it should be good, or that God should be righteous, which maketh the law: in as much as it is contrary vnto hys nature and damneth him and all that he cā do, & neither sheweth him where to fetch helpe nor preacheth any mercy, but onely setteth mā at variaunce with God, as witnesseth Paule Rom. iij. and prouoketh hym and stirreth hym to rayle on God and to blaspheme him as a cruell tyraunt. For it is not possible for a mā, till he be borne agayne, to thinke that God is righteous to make hym of so poyson a nature, either for his own pleasure or for the sinne of an other man, and to geue him a law that is impossible for him to do or to cōsent to: his witte, reason, and will beyng so fast glued, yea nayled and chayned vnto the will of the deuill. Neither can any creature louse the bondes, saue the bloud of Christ onely.

When before his regeneratiō, can not thinke well of God.

This is captiuitie and bondage whence Christ deliuered vs, redemed, and loused vs. His bloud, his death, his pacience, in suffering rebukes and wronges, his prayers and fastynges his mekenes and fulfillyng of the vttermost point of the law, pealed the wrath of God, brought the fauour of God to vs agayne, obteined that God should loue vs first, and be our father, and that a mercyfull father, that will consider our infirmities and weakenes, and wil geue vs his spirite agayn (which was taken away in the fall of Adam) to rule, gouerne, & strength vs, and to breake the bondes of Sathan, wherein we were so straite bounde. When Christ is thus wise preached, & the promises rehearsed which are contained in the Prophetes, in the Psalmes, and in diuers places of the fiue bookes of Moses: which preachyng is called the Gospell or glad tydinges: then the hartes of them which are elect and chosē, begyn to waxe soft and melt at the bountreous mercy of God, and kyndnes shewed of Christ. For when the Euangelion is preached, the spirite of God entreth into them, which God hath ordeined and appoynted vnto eternall lyfe, and openeth their inward eyes, and worketh such beleke in them. when the wofull consciences feele and tast how swete a thyng the bitter death of Christ is, & how mercyfull & louing God is through Christes purchasyng and merites, they begin to loue gayne, and to consent to the law of God, how that it is good and ought so to be, and that God is righteous which made it, and desire to fulfill the law euen as a sicke man desireth to be whole, and are an hungred and thirst after more righteousnes and after more strength, to fulfill the law more perfectly. And in all that they do, or omit and leaue vndone, they seke Gods honour, and his will with meekenesse, euer condemnyng the vnperfectnes of their deedes by the law.

The harts of the elect do euē melt at the preachyng of Gods mercy, and Christes kyndnes.

Now Christ standeth vs in double stede, and vs seruyth two maner wise. First he is our redeiner, deliuerer, reconciler, mediator, intercessor, aduocate, atturney, soliciter, our hope, comfort, shield, protectiō, defender, strēgth, health, satisfaction and saluation. His bloud, his death, all that he euer dyd, is ours. And Christ him selfe, with all that he is or can do, is ours. His bloud shedyng and all that he dyd, doth me as good seruice, as though I my selfe had done it. And God (as great as he is) is myne with all that he hath as an husband is his wiues, through Christ and his purchasing.

Christ left nothyng vndone, that might be to our saluation.

Secondaryly after that we be ouer-come come with loue and kindnes, and now seke to do the will of God (which is a Christen mans nature) Then haue we Christ an exãple to counterfeit, as saith Christ him selfe in John: I haue geuen you an example. And in an other Euãgelist, he sayth: He that wilbe great among you shalbe your seruaunt and Minister, as the sonne of man came to minister and not to be ministred vnto. And Paule sayth: Counterfeit Christ. And Peter sayth: Christ dyed for you, and left you an example to folow hys steppes. what soeuer therefore sayth hath receaued of God through Christs bloud and deseruyng, that same must loue shed out euery whit, and bestow it on our neighbours vnto their profite, yea and that though they be our enemyes. By sayth we receaue of God and by loue we shed out agayne. And that must we do frely after the example of Christ without any other respect, saue our neighbours wealth onely, & neither looke for reward in earth, nor yet in heauen for the deseruyng & merites of our deedes as Friers preach, though we know that good deedes are rewarded, both in this lyfe and in the lyfe to come: but of pure loue must we bestow our selues all that we haue, & all that we are able to do, euen on our enemyes to bryng them to God, consideryng nothyng but their wealth, as Christ dyd ours. Christ dyd not hys deedes to obteyne heauen therby (that had bene a madnes) heauē was his all ready, he was heyre therof, it was his by inheritaunce, but dyd them frely for our sakes, consideryng nothyng but our wealth and to bryng the fauour of God to vs agayne and vs to God. As no naturall sonne that is his fathers heyre, doth his fathers will because he would be heyre, that he is already by byrth: his father gaue him that yer hee was borne and is lother that he should go without it, then he him selfe hath wit to be: but of pure loue doth he that he doth. And aske him why he doth any thing that he doth, he aunswereth: my father bade, it is my fathers will, it pleaseth my father. Bond seruauntes worke for hyre, Children for loue. For their father with all he hath, is theirs already. So doth a Christen man frely all that he doth, considereth nothyng but the will of God, & his neighbours wealth onely. If I liue chaste, I do it not to obteine heauen therby. For then should I doe wrong to the bloud of Christ: Christes bloud hath obteined me that, Christes merites haue made me heyre therof. He is both doore and way thether wardes. Neither that I loke for an higher roume in heauē, thē they shal haue which liue in wedlocke, other thē a whore of the stewes (if she repēt) for that were the pride of Lucifer. But frely to wayte on the Euangelion: and to auoyde the trouble of the world and occasions that might plucke me there from, and to serue my brother with all, euen as one hand helpeth an other, or one member an other, because one feeleth an others grief, & the payne of the one is the payne of the other. What soeuer is done to the least of vs (whether it be good or bad) it is done to Christ, and what soeuer is done to my brother (if I be a Christen mā) that same is done to me. Neither doth my brothers payne greue me lesse then myne owne. Neither reioyse I lesse at his wealth then at mine own if I loue hym as well and almuch as my selfe, as the law cōmaundeth me. If it were not so: how sayth Paule? let hym that reioyseth, reioyse in the Lord, that is to say Christ, whiche is Lord ouer all creatures. If my merites obteined me heauē or a hygher place there, then had I wherein I might reioyse besides the Lord.

Here see ye the nature of the law, & the nature of the Euangelion. How the law is the key that byndeth and damneth all men, and the Euangelion is the keye that loseth them agayne. The law goeth before, and the Euangelion followeth. when a preacher preacheth the law, he byndeth all consciences, and when he preacheth the Gospell, he looseth them agayn. These two salues (I meane the law and the Gospell) vseth god & his preacher to heale & cure sinners with all. The law driueth out the disease, and maketh it appeare, and is a sharpe salue, and a freatyng corsey, & killeth the dead flesh, and louseth and draweth the sores out by the rootes, & all corruption. It pulleth from a man the trust and confidence that he hath in him selfe, & in his owne workes, merites, deseruinges and ceremonies and robbeth him of all his righteousnesse and maketh him poore. It killeth him, sendeth hym downe to hell, and bryngeth him to vtter desperation, and prepareth ỹ way of the Lord, as it is written of John the Baptist. For it is not possible that Christ should come to a man, as long as he trusteth in him self, or in any worldly thyng or hath any Christ an example to vs of all goodnes.

What faith receiueth of God through Christes bloud, that we must bestowe on our neighbours, though they be our enemyes.

Christ dyd not good deedes to merite heauē, for that was his all ready, but frely for our sakes.

The law byndeth, & the Gospel louseth all men.

The forces of the law.

righteousnesse of his own, or riches of holy workes. Then commeth the Euãgelion a more gentle paster, which soupleth and swageth the woundes of the cõscience, and bringeth health. It bringeth the spirite of God, which loseth the bondes of Sathã, and coupleth vs to God and his will through strong fayth and feruent loue, with bondes to strong for the deuill, the world, or any creature to lose them. And the poore & wretched sinner feeleth so great mercy, loue, & kyndnes in God, that he is sure in hym selfe how that it is not possible that God should forsake him, or withdraw hys mercy and loue from hym. And boldly cryeth out with Paul saying: who shall separate vs from the loue that GOD loueth vs withall? That is to say: what shall make me beleue that God loueth me not? Shall tribulation? Anguish? Persecution? Shal hũger? Nakednes? Shal sword? Nay, I am sure that neither death, nor lyfe, neither aungell, neither rule nor power, neither present thynges, nor thinges to come, neither hygh nor low, neither any creature is able to separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesu our Lord. In all such tribulations a Christen man perceaueth that God is his father, and loueth hym, euen as he loued Christ when he shed his bloud on the crosse. Finally, as before, when I was bond to the deuill and his will, I wrought all maner euill and wickednes, not for hells sake which is the reward of sinne, but because I was heyre of hell by byrth and bondage to the deuill, dyd I euill. For I could none otherwise do: to do sinne was my nature. Euen so now since I am coupled to GOD by Christes bloud, do I well, not for heauens sake which is yet the reward of wel doyng: but because I am heyre of heauen by grace and Christes purchasyng, & haue the spirite of God I do good frely, for so is my nature. As a good tree bryngeth forth good frute, and an euill tree euill frute. By the frutes shal ye know what the tree is. A mãs dedes declare what he is within, but make him neither good nor bad, though after we be created a new by the spirite & doctrine of Christ we ware perfecter alwaye with woorkyng accordyng to the doctrine, and not with blynd woorkes of our owne imagining. We must be first euill yer we doe euill, as a Serpent is first poysoned yer he poyson. We must be also good yer we do good, as the fire must be first hoate yer it heate an other thyng. Take an example. As those blynd and deafe which are cured in the Gospell could not see nor heare, till Christ had geuen them sight & hearyng, and those sicke could not do the dedes of an whole man, till Christ had geuen them health: So can no man do good in his soule, till Christ haue losed hym out of the bondes of Sathan, and haue geuẽ him wherewith to do good, yea & first haue powred into hym that selfe good thing which he sheddeth forth afterward on other. whatsoeuer is our owne is sinne. whatsoeuer is aboue that, is Christes gift, purches, doyng, and working. He bought it of his father dearely with his bloud, yea with his most bitter death, and gaue his lyfe for it. what soeuer good thyng is in vs, that is geuen vs frely without our deseruyng or merites for Christes bloudes sake. That we desire to folow ỹ will of God, it is the gift of Christes bloud. That we now hate the deuils will (whereunto we were so fast locked, and could not but loue it) is also the gift of Christes bloud, vnto whom belongeth the prayse and honour of our good dedes, and not vnto vs.

The byrling sinner feeleth such ioy in the Gospell that he thinketh it impossible that God should forsake hym.

Ill synne in vs is of our selues, and all goodnes of Christ.

Our deedes do vs three maner seruice. First they certifie vs that we are heyres of euerlastyng life. And that the spirite of God, whiche is the earnest therof is in vs, in that our hartes consent vnto the law of God, and we haue power in our mẽbers to do it, though imperfectly. And secondarily we tame the flesshe therewith and kill the sinne that remayneth yet in vs & ware dayly perfecter and perfecter in the spirite therewith & kepe that the lustes choke not the word of God that is sowen in vs, nor quench the giftes and worcking of the spirite, and that we lose not the spirite agayne. And thirdly we do our dutie vnto our neighbour therewith & helpe their necessitie vnto our own cõfort also, and draw all mẽ vnto the honoryng and praysing of God.

Workes certifie vs of euerlastyng inheritaunce, kill sinne in vs, and releue the necessitie of our neighbour.

And whosoeuer excelleth in the giftes of grace, let the same thinke that they be geuen hym, as much to do hys brother seruice as for his owne selfe, & as much for the loue whiche God hath to the weake as vnto him, vnto whom God geueth such giftes. And he that withdraweth ought that he hath from hys neighbours neede, robbeth hys neighbour and is a theefe. And he that is proude of the giftes of God & thinketh hym selfe, by the reason of them

Giftes of grace belõg to our brother as much as to our selues.

better

better then his feeble neighbour, & not rather as the truth is, knowledgeth hym selfe a seruaunt vnto hys poore neighbour, by the reason of them the same hath Lucifers spirite in hym and not Christes.

These thynges to know: first the law: how that it is naturall, right, and equitie, that we haue but one God to put our hope and trust in, and hym to loue with all the hart, all the soule, and all our might and power, and neither to moue hart nor hand but at his commaundemẽt, because he hath first created vs of nought, and heauẽ and earth for our sakes. And afterward when we had marred our selfe through sinne, he forgaue vs and created vs agayne in the bloud of his beloued sonne.

And that we haue the name of our one God in feare and reuerence, & that we dishonour it not in swearyng therby about light trifles or vanitie or call it to recorde for the confirming of wickednesse or falshead, or ought that is to the dishonour of God, whiche is the breakyng of hys lawes, or vnto the hurt of our neighbour.

And in almuch as he is our Lord and God and we his double possessiõ, by creation and redemption, and therfore ought, as I sayd, neither to moue hart or hand without his commaũdement, it is right that we haue nedefull holy dayes to come together & learne his will, both the law, which he will haue vs ruled by, and also the promises of mercy whiche he will haue vs trust vnto: and to geue God thankes together for his mercy, and to commit our infirmities to hym through our Sauiour Jesus, and to reconsile our selues vnto hym, and eche to other, if ought be betweene brother and brother that requireth it. And for this purpose and such lyke, as to visite the sicke and nedy, and redresse peace and vnitie were the holy dayes ordeined onely, & so farforth are they to be kept holy frõ all maner workes that may be conueniently spared for the tyme till this be done and no further, but then lawfully to worke.

Holydayes necessary to come together in, & learne Christes will.

And that it is right that we obey father and mother, Master, Lord, Prince and Kyng and all the ordinaunces of the world bodely and ghostly by which God ruleth vs and ministreth freely his benefites vnto vs all. And that we loue them for the benefites that we receaue by them, and feare them for the power they haue ouer vs to punish vs if we trespasse the law and good order. So farre yet are the worldly powers or rulers to be obeyed onely, as their commaũdements repugne not against the commaundement of God, and thẽ hoo. Wherefore we must haue Gods commaundement euer in our hartes, and by the hygher law interpret the inferiour: that we obey nothyng agaynst the belefe of one God, or agaynst the fayth, hope and trust that is hym onely, or agaynst the loue of God, wherby we doe or leaue vndone all thyng for his sake, & that we do nothyng for any mans cõmaundement agaynst the reuerence of the name of God, to make it despised and the lesse feared & set by: and that we obey nothyng to the hynderaunce of the knowledge of the blessed doctrine of God whose seruaũt the holy day is.

Worldly rulers to be obayed so far forth as their lawes impugne not Gods lawes.

Notwithstandyng though the rulers which God hath set ouer vs commaunde vs agaynst God, or do vs open wrong and oppresse vs with cruel tyranny, yet because they are in Gods rowme, we may not auẽge our selues, but by the processe and order of Gods law, and lawes of mã made by the authoritie of Gods law, whiche is also Gods law, euer by an hygher power, and remittyng the vengeaunce vnto God, and in the meane seasõ suffer vntill the houre be come.

Though rulers appointed of God oppresse vs, yet we may not auenge they being in Gods roome.

And on the other side to know that a man ought to loue his neighbour equally and fully as well as hym selfe, because his neighbour (be he neuer so simple) is equally created of God and as full redemed by the bloud of our sauiour Jesu Christ. Out of which commaundement of loue spring these: Kill not thy neighbour: defile not his wife: beare no false witnesse agaynst hym, & finally, not onely do not these thynges in deede but couete not in thyne harte, his house, his wife, his manseruaunt, maydseruaunt, oxe, asse or what soeuer is his. So that these lawes pertaynyng vnto our neighboure are not fulfilled in the sight of God saue with loue. He that loueth not hys neighbour kepeth not this commaundemẽt, defile not thy neighbours wife, though hee neuer touch her or neuer see her or thinke vpon her. For the commaundement is, though thy neighbours wife be neuer so fayre, & thou haue neuer so great opportunitie geuen thee, and she contẽt, or happly prouoke thee as Putiphers wife did Joseph, yet see thou loue thy neighbor so well, that for very loue thou can not finde in thine hart to do ẏ wickednes. And euē so he that trusteth in any thing saue in God only & in his sonne Jesus Christ, keepeth no cō maundemēt at all in the sight of God.

We must loue our neighbour as our self.

For he that hath trust in any creature whether in heauen or in earth, saue in God & his sonne Jesus, cā see no cause to loue God with all his hart &c. neither to absteine from dishonoryng his name nor to keepe the holy day for the loue of his doctrine, nor to obey louingly ẏ rulers of this world not any cause to loue his neighbour as him selfe & to absteine from hurtyng hym, where he may get profite by hym & saue him selfe harmeles. And in likewise against this law, loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. I may obey no worldly power, to do ought at any mans cōmaundemēt vnto the hurt of my neighbour that hath not deserued it, though he be a Turke.

And to know how cōtrary this law is vnto our nature, & how it is dānation not to haue this law writtē in our hartes, though we neuer committe the dedes: & how there is no other meanes to bee saued from this damnation then through repentaūce toward the law & fayth in Christes bloud which are the very inward baptisme of our soules, & the washyng & the dippyng of our bodyes in ẏ water is the outward signe. The plungyng of the body vnder the water signifieth that we repent & profesle to fight against sinne and lustes, & to kill them euery day more and more, with the helpe of God & our diligence in folowyng the doctrine of Christ and the leadyng of his spirite, and that we beleue to be washed from our naturall damnation in which we are borne, and from all the wrath of the law, and frō all the infirmities & weakenesses that remayne in vs, after we haue geuen our consent vnto the law, and yelded oure selfe to be scholers thereof, and from all the imperfectnesse of all our dedes done with cold loue, and from all actuall sinne which shall chaunce on vs while we enforce the contrary and euer fight theragaynst and hope to sinne no more. And thus, repentaunce and fayth begyn at our Baptisme and first profelling the lawes of God, and cōtinue vnto our liues end, and grow as we grow in the spirite. For the perfecter we be, the greater is our repentaūce & the strōger our faith. And thus, as the spirit & doctrine on Gods part, & repentaūce & fayth in our part beget vs a new in Christ: euen so they make vs grow & ware perfect & saue vs vnto the ende, & neuer leaue vs vntill all sinne be put of and we cleane purified and full formed & fashioned after the similitude & lickenes of the perfectnes of our Sauiour Jesus, whose gift all is.

Our baptisme signifieth that we repent and profelle a new life.

The perfecter we are, the greater is our repentance and the stronger is our fayth.

And finally to know ẏ what soeuer good thyng is in vs, that same is ẏ gift of grace and therfore not of deseruyng, though many things be geuen of God through our diligence in worlkyng his lawes & chastising our bodyes and in praying for thē & beleuyng his promises, which els should not be geuen vs: yet our worlking deserueth not ẏ gifts, no more thē the diligēce of a marchaūt in seekyng a good shyppe bringeth the goods safe to lād, though such diligēce doth now & thē helpe therto. But whē we beleue in God and then do all that is in our might & not tempt him, then is God true to abyde by his promise & to helpe vs and performe alone when our strength is past.

Our workes deserue not ẏ gifts of grace.

These thynges I say to know, is to haue all the scripture vnlocked & opened before thee, so that if thou wilt go in & read thou canst not but vnderstād. And in these thinges to be ignorāūt, is to haue all the Scripture locked vp, so that ẏ more thou readest it, the blinder thou art, & the more contrarietie thou findest in it, & the more tāgled art thou therin & canst no where through. For if thou adde a glose in one place, in an other it will not serue. And therfore because we be neuer taught the profession of our Baptisme, we remaine alwayes vnlearned, as well the spiritualtie for all their great clergy & high scholes, as we say, as the lay people. And now because the lay and vnlearned people are taught these first principles of our professiō therfore they read the scripture & vnderstand and delite therin. And our gret pillers of holy church, which haue nailed a vaile of false glofes on Moses face, to corrupt the true vnderstanding of his law, can not come in. And therfore barke & say ẏ scripture maketh heretickes & it is not possible for them to vnderstand it in the English, because they thē selues do not in Latin. And of pure malice that they cā not haue their will, they slea their brethren for their faith they haue in our sauiour, & therwith vtter their bloudy wolnish tyrānny, and what they be within & whose disciples. Herewith, reader, be cōmitted vnto the grace of our sauiour Jesus, vnto whō and God our father thorough hym be prayse for euer and for euer. Amen.

The principles of scripture perfectly learned, all ẏ rest is easie.

¶ Except a man haue the profeſſion of his baptiſme in his hart, he can not vnderſtand the Scripture.

The Prologue.

AS a man can by no meanes read, except he be firſt taught the letters of the croſſerow: euen ſo it is vnpoſſible for a man of whatſoeuer degree or name he bee of, to vnderſtande ought in the Scripture vnto the honour of God, and health of his ſoule, except he be firſt taught the profeſſion of his baptiſme, & haue it alſo written in his hart.

We muſt firſt learne the profeſſion of our Baptiſme.

Which profeſſion ſtandeth in .iij. thinges. The one is the knowledge of God, vnderſtanding it ſpiritually, as Chriſt expoundeth it, Math. v. vj. and vij. ſo that the roote and life of all lawes be this: Loue thy Lord God with all thyne hart, all thy ſoule, and all thy might: and thy neighbour as thy ſelfe, for his ſake: and that loue onely is the fulfilling of the law (as Paule teacheth) and that whatſoeuer deed we do, and not of that loue, that ſame fulfilleth no law in the ſight of God.

The profeſſion of our Baptiſme what it is.

Goſpell.

And the other is to know the promiſes of mercy, which are in our Sauiour Chriſt: vnderſtanding them alſo purely without all leuen, after the mercifulleſt faſhiō as Scripture ſoundeth them, and after al fatherly loue and kindenes of God, vnto all that repent toward the law, and beleue in Chriſt.

And to haue this profeſſion written in thyne hart is to cōſent vnto the law that it is righteous, and good, and to loue it in thyne hart, and to ſubmit thy ſelfe thereunto for to learne it, and to rule and ſquare al thy deedes therby, & thē to beleue in Chriſt, that for his ſake all thy ſinnes which thou diddeſt before the knowledge of this profeſſion, are forgeuen thee clearly both a pœna & culpa, to vſe the popes termes, and that for none other ſatisfaction to Godwarde then Chriſtes bloud, and euen ſo, that all the ſinne which we do after this knowledge, eyther of chaunce, ignorāunce, infirmitie, negligence, or prouoked and ouercome of the fleſh, is forgeuen vs like wiſe both Pœna & culpa, through repentaunce and fayth in Chriſt, without our ſatisfaction of workes to Godwarde.

All one ſinnes for Jeſu Chriſtes ſake, & for hys death & paſſion are clearely forgeuen.

Notwithſtanding we being all ſonnes of one God, and ſeruauntes of one Chriſt, muſt agree among our ſelues, and he that hath offended muſt meekly knowledge his fault, and offer himſelf to make amendes vnto the vtmoſt of his poure: and if he haue not wherewith, aſke forgeueneſſe for Chriſts ſake, the other is bound to forgeue him. Neither without reconſiling himſelf vnto his brother may any man be at the firſt receiued vnto the profeſſion of Chriſtes fayth nor continue therin, nor be receiued in againe if he be for his open offences put thereout. For how can a man loue his neighbour as well as himſelf, and be ſory that he hath hurt him, except he ſhould offer himſelf to make amendes?

Euery Chriſten man muſt reconcile himſelfe vnto his brother.

And we muſt from henceforth walke in the life of penaunce (if ye will haue it ſo called) and after the doctrine of Chriſt euery man tame his fleſh with prayer, faſting, and the continuall meditations of Chriſtes penaunce, and paſſions for vs, and of the holy ſaintes, and with ſuch abſtinence, and kinde of liuing as euery man thinketh moſt meete for his cōplexion, the yonger confeſſing their infirmities to the elder, diſcreter, and better learned, and aſking their aduiſe and holeſome counſell for the repreſſing of their diſeaſes, but all to tame the fleſhe, and to ſerue thy neighbour without any ſuperſtious minde.

The right penaunce is repentaunce of ſinne and amendemēt of lyfe.

All one lyke muſt tend to this ende, to tame our fleſh & ſerue our neighbour.

But to Godward is there no ſatiſfactiō, ſaue fayth in Chriſtes bloud out of a repenting hart. For our outwarde deedes can not be referred vnto God, to do him ſeruice in his owne perſon, and to helpe him, or make him better therewith. We can do no more wyth them, were they neuer ſo perfect, & done with all loue, then ſatiſfie the law for the preſente time, and do our dutie vnto our neighbours, and tame our owne fleſh, but not to make ſatisfaction to God for ſinne that is once paſt. The ſinne that is once committed muſt God forgeue freely of a fatherly loue for Chriſtes ſake.

Fayth in Chriſtes bloud with a repentaūt hart is the onely ſatisfaction that we cā make towarde God.

When God viſiteth vs with ſickneſs, pouertie, or whatſoeuer aduerſitie it be, he doth it not of a tyrannious minde to ſatiſfy his luſt in our ſuffering of euyll to make ſatisfaction for the ſinne that is paſt of which we repent, and be ſory: But of a fatherly loue to make vs know our ſelues, and feele his mercy, and to tame our fleſh, and to keepe vs from ſinning againe. As no naturall father puniſheth his child becauſe he delighteth in tormenting of him, to take ſatiſfactiō for the ſinne that is paſt: but firſt teacheth kindly, and ſuffreth, and forgeueth once or twiſe, and then at the laſt, when he ſeeth the body ſo wanton, that the chylde can not continue in the right way for the rage of wild luſtes, he beateth to ſubdue the fleſhe onely, and to tame it, that the doctrine of ỹ father may haue her due courſe in the hart of the childe, and ſhoulde not be choked with luſtes.

The father of loue correcteth the child.

Euen ſo is it of God, if any of his children that haue profeſſed his law, and thē faith of our Sauiour, bee negligent to tame hys fleſh, with prayer, faſting, and good dedes after the doctrine of Chriſt, he wil ſurely ſcourge him, to bring him into the right way agayne, and to keepe him that the doctrine of his ſoules health periſh not in him. But he taketh not his mercy from vs, nor thinketh on the ſinne that is paſt, after that we repent and be full conuerted, but abſoluteth vs both a pœna & culpa, for Chriſtes ſake: and is as mighty & as mercyfull to do it for Chriſtes ſake, as the Pope for money, beſides that he hath promiſed mercyfully ſo to do.

God as a louyng father careth for vs and gētlye correcteth vs to keepe vs in the right way.

The

¶ The knowledge of our baptisme is the key and the light of the Scripture.

And againe, as he which knoweth his letters well, and can spell perfectly, can not but read if he be diligent: and as hee whiche hath cleare eyes without impediment or let, and walketh therto in the light and open day, can not but see, if he attende and take heede: euen so who so euer hath the profession of baptisme written in his hart, can not but vnderstand the scripture, if he exercise him selfe therein, and compare one place to an other, and marke the maner of speach, and aske here and there the meaning of a sentence, of them that be better exercised.

To vnderstand our baptisme is to vnderstād the law and the Gospell.

For as the doctrine which we should be taught before we were baptized, and for lack of age is deferred vnto the yeares of discretion is the key that bindeth and looseth, locketh and vnlocketh the conscience of all sinners: euen so that lesson, where it is vnderstād is onely the key that openeth all ỹ scripture, and euen the whole scripture in it selfe gathered together in a narrow compasse, and brought into a compendiousnes. And til thou be taught that lesson, that thine hart feele the sweetnesse of it, the Scripture is locked and shut vp from thee, and so darke that thou couldest not vnderstande it, though Peter, Paule, or Christ himselfe did expound it vnto thee, no more then a blinde man can see, though thou set a candle before him, or shewedst him the Sunne, or poyntedst with thy finger, vnto that thou wouldest haue him looke vppon.

The key & light of the Scripture.

Howe the Scripture is locked vp from our vnderstandyng.

Now we be all baptized: But alas, not one from the hyest to the lowest euer taught the profession or meaning thereof. And therfore we remayne all blinde generally, as well our great Rabines for all their hye learning which they seeme to haue, as the lay people: yea and so much the more blind are our great clerkes, that where the lay people for a great number of them are taught naught at al, they be all wrong taught, and the doctrine of their baptisme is all corrupt vnto them, with the leuen of false gloses, ere they come to read the scripture. So that the light which they bring with them to vnderstand the scripture withall, is vtter darknesse, & as contrary vnto the scripture as the deuill vnto Christ.

By reason wherof the Scripture is locked vp and become so darke vnto them, that they grope for the dore, and can finde no way in, and is become a maze vnto them, in which they wander as in a mist, or (as we say) led by Robin Goodfellow, that they can not come to the right way, no though they turne their cappes: and the brightnes thereof hath blinded their eyes with malice, so that though they beleue not the Scripture to be false, yet they persecute the right vnderstanding therof, and can not beleeue it true in the playne sense, which it speaketh to them in. It is becomme a turnagaine lane vnto them, which they can not goe thorough, nor make iij. lines agree together. And finally the sentences of the Scripture are nothing but very riddles vnto thē, as the which they cast, as the blind man doth at the Crow, and expound by gesse, an hundred Doctoures an hundred wayes, and one man in xx. sermons alleadging one texte after xx. fashions, hauing no sure doctrine to cleaue vnto, and all for lacke of the righte knowledge of the profession of oure Baptisme.

If we be not taught by God, we do but wander cleane out of the way.

¶ He that hath the profession of his Baptisme written in his hart, can be no hereticke.

Another conclusion is this. As he which euer creepeth a long by the grounde and neuer clymeth can not fall from an hygh. Euen so no man that hath the profession of his Baptisme written in his hart can stomble in the Scripture, and fall vnto heresies or become a maker of diuision and sectes and a defender of wilde and vayne opinions. For the whole and onely cause of heresies and sectes is pride.

He that vnderstandeth the profession of his Baptisme can be no hereticke.

Now the law of God truly interpreted robbeth all them in whose hartes it is written, and maketh them as bare as Job of all thyngs wherof a man can be moued to pride. And on the other side they haue vtterly forsaken them selues with all their hyghe learnyng and wisedome and are become the seruauntes of Christ onely whiche hath bought thē with his blond, & haue promised in their hartes vnfaynedly to folow hym and to take him onely for the author of their religiō, & his doctrine onely for their wisedome & learning, and to mainteine it in word and deede, and to keepe it pure and to builde no straunge doctrine therupon, and to be at the hyghest neuer but felow with their brethren, and in that felowshyp to waxe euer lower and lower, and euery day more seruaunt then other, vnto his weaker brethren, after the example and Image of Christ and after his commaundemēt and ordinaunce, and not in fayned wordes of the Pope.

The Scripture teacheth lowlyness, and hateth pride.

The Scripture maketh no hereticke.

This hee sayd because of them that say that the Scripture maketh men hereticke and corrupteth with false opinions contrarie vnto the professiō of their Baptisme, and the light wherewith they should expounde the Scripture is turned into darkenes in their hartes, & the doore of the Scripture locked, & the welles stopped vp yer they come at it.

And therfore because their darknes can not cōprehend the light of Scripture, as it is writtē Joh. i. The light shyned in darknes but the darknes could not comprehēd it, they turne it into blynd ridles and read it without vnderstandyng as lay men do our Lady Mattines, or as it were Marlynes prophecies, euer their myndes are vppon their heresies. And when they come to a place that soūdeth like, there they rest and wring out wonderfull expositions to stablishe their heresies with all, after the tale of the boy that would fayne haue eaten of the pastie of lampreese but durst not vnto the belles sang vnto him. Sit downe Jacke boy and eate of the lamprey, to stablishe his wauerynge conscience withall. Is it not a great blyndnes to say in the begynning of all together, that the whole scripture is false in the litterall sence, and killeth the soule. Whiche pestilent heresie to proue, they abuse the text of Paule saying. The letter killeth, because that text was become a ridle vnto them and they vnderstode it not. When Paule by this word letter vnderstode the law giuen by Moyses to condēne all consciences and to rob them of all righteoulnes to compell them vnto the promises of mercy that are in Christ.

Heresie springeth not of the Scripture no more then darknes of the Sunne, but is a darke cloude that springeth out of the blynde hartes of hypocrites, and couereth the face of the Scripture, and blyndeth their eyes that they can not behold the bright beames of the Scripture.

Heresy spring-eth out of the harts of hypocrites.

The whole & summe then of all together is this. If our hartes were taught the appoyntment made betwene GOD and vs in Christes bloud whē we were Baptised, we had the key to open the Scripture, and light to see and perceiue the true meaning of it, and the Scripture should be easie to vnderstand. And because we be not taught that professiō, is the cause why the Scripture is so darke, and so farre passyng our capacitie. And the cause why our expositions are heresies, is because we be wrong taught, & corrupt wt false opiniōs before hand and made heretickes per we come at the Scripture, and haue corrupt it, and it not vs: as the tast of the licke maketh holesome and well seasoned meate bitter, worish and vnsauery. Neuertheles yet the Scripture abydeth pure in her selfe and bright, so that he which is sounde in the faith shall at once perceiue that the iudgemēt of the hereticke is corrupt in their expositions, as an whole man doth smelle at once euen with smelling to the meate that the tast of the licke is infected. And with the Scripture shal they euer improue heresies and false expositions, for the Scripture purgeth her selfe, euen as the water once in the yeare casteth all filthynes vnto the sides. Which to be true ye see by the authoritie of Paule. 2. Timo. 3. saying. All the Scripture was giuen of God by inspiration, and is good to teach with all, to improue and so forth. And by the example of Christ and the Apostles, how they confounded the Iewes with the same Scripture whiche they had corrupt, & vnderstode them amisse after their own darknes, and as ye see by the example of vs now also, how we haue manifestly improued the hypocrites in an hundreth textes which they had corrupt to proue their false opinions brought in besides the Scripture, and haue driuē them of. And they be fled and openly confesse vnto their shame that they haue no Scripture and sing an other song, and say they receaued them by the mouth of the Apostles. Vnto whiche stopping oyster. I answere here grosly, seyng they are answered before. That as he were a foole which would trust him to tell his money in his absent that hath pyked his purse before his face, euen so sithe ye haue corrupt the open Scripture before our eyes and takē with the maner that ye cā not denie, we were madde to beleue that, which hath lyen. xv. C. yeares as ye say in your rottē mawes, should now be holesome for vs ye haue chewed and mingled it with your poyson spetel. Can ye deare vs in hand and perswade vs thinke ye with your sophistry to beleue that ye should minister your secrete traditions without grounde truly, when we see you minister the open Scripture falsly? Can ye bewyche our wittes with your Poetry to beleue that ye should minister your secret traditions for our profite when wee see you corrupt the open Scripture to the losse of our soules for your profite? May it is an hundreth tymes more likely yᵗ ye should be false in secret things thē in open. And therefore in the very Sacramentes whiche the Scripture testifieth, that Christ him selfe ordeined them we must haue an eye vnto your hand, how ye minister them. And as wee restore the Scripture vnto her right vnderstandyng from your false gloses: euen so deliuer we the Sacramentes and ceremonies vnto their right vse from your abuse. And that must we do with the Scripture, which can corrupt no mā that commeth therto with a meke spirite, seekyng there onely to fashion him selfe lyke Christ, accordyng to the profession and vowe of our Baptisme. But contrarywise, hee shall there finde the myghtie power of GOD, to alter hym, and chaunge hym in the inner man a litle and litle in processe vntill he be full shapen after the image of our Sauiour, in knowledge & loue of all truth and power to worke therafter.

Finally then for as much as the Scripture is the light and life of Gods elect, & that mightie power wherewith God createth thē and shapeth them, after the similitude, liuenes and very fashion of Christ, and therfore sustenaunce, comfort, and strength to courage them, that they may stād fast, and endure and meryly beare their soules health, wherewith the lustes of the flesh subdued and killed, and the spirite mollified and made soft, to receiue the print of the image of our Sauiour Iesu. And as much as the Scripture is so pure of it selfe that it cā corrupt no man, but the wicked onely, which are infect before hand per they come at it, corrupt it with the heresies they bring with them. And for as much as the complaynt of the hypocrites that the Scripture maketh heretickes is vayne and fayned, & the reasons wherewith they would proue that the laye people ought not to read the Scripture false, wicked, and the frute of roten trees, therefore are they faythfull seruauntes of Christ and faythfull Ministers & dispēsers of his doctrine, and true harted toward their brethren, which haue giuen them selues vp into the hand of God, and put them selues in ieoperdy of al persecutiō, their very lyke despised, and haue translated the Scripture purely and with good conscience, submityng them selues, and desiryng them that can to amend their trāslation, or (if it please thē) to trāslate it themselues, after their best maner, yea and let them sow to their gloses, as many as they thinke they can make cleaue thereto, and then put other mens translation out of the way.

gayne, the light to vnderstād it by, and expell that darke cloude which the hypocrites haue spread ouer the face of ỹ scripture to blind the right sense and true meanyng therof. And therfore at their diuers introductions ordeyned for you, to teach you the professiō of your Baptisme the onely light of the Scripture, one vppon the Epistle of Paule to the Romains and an other called The pathway into the Scripture. And for the same cause, haue I taken in hand to interpret this Epistle of S. Iohn the Euangelist to edifie the lay mā and to teach him how to read the Scripture, and what to seke therein, & that he may haue to answere the hypocrites and to stop theyr mouthes with all.

Introductions made to bring you to the true vnderstanding of the scripture.

And first vnderstand that all the Epistles that the Apostles wrote, are the Gospell of Christ, though all that is the Gospell be not an Epistle. It is called a Gospell, that is to say glad tydinges, because it is an open preachyng of Christ, and an Epistle, because it is sent as a letter or a bill to them that are absent.

¶Here begynneth the first Epistle of S. Iohn.

Chapter. 1.

1. Ioh. 1. THat which was from the begynnynge declare wee vnto you, which we haue heard, which we haue seene with our eyes, which we looked vppon, and our handes haue handled of the worde of lyfe. For the lyfe appeared, and we haue sene, and beare witnesse and shewe vnto you that euerlastynge lyfe, which was with the father and appeared vnto vs.

S. Iohn witnesseth that Christ is very God.

In that S. Iohn sayth. The thyng which was from the begynnyng, and the euerlastyng lyfe that was with the father, he witnesseth that Christ is very God, as he doth in the begynnyng of his Gospel saying. The word or the thyng, was at the begynnyng, and the thyng was with God, and that thyng was God, and all thinges were made by it.

That Christ is very man.

And whē he sayth, which we heard & saw with our eyes, & our handes handled hym, he testifieth that Christ is very man also, as he doth in the begynning of his Gospell saying. The word or that thyng was made flesh, that is, became man. And thus we haue in playne and opē wordes a manifest Article of our fayth, that our Sauiour Christ is very God and very man.

He that beleueth that Christ is the sonne of God, & also very man, hath euerlasting life.

Which Article who soeuer not onely beleueth, but also beleueth in it, the same is the sonne of God, & hath euerlasting lyfe in him, & shall neuer come into condemnation, as it is written. Iohn. i. He gaue them power to be the sonnes of God, in that they beleued in his name. And Iohn. iij. He that beleueth in the sonne hath euerlastyng life. And a litle before in the sayd Chapter. He that beleueth in hym shall not be condēned. And to beleue in the wordes of this Article, is ỹ eatyng of Christes flesh and drinkyng his bloud of which is spoken Iohn. vj. The wordes which I speake are spirite and lyfe, & the flesh profiteth not at all, meanyng of ỹ fleshly eatyng of his body, and fleshly drinkyng of hys bloud. There is therefore great difference betwene beleuing that there is a God and that Christ is God & mā, and to beleue in God and Christ God and man, and in the promises of mercy that are in hym. The first is cōmune to good and bad, and vnto the deuils thereto and is called the fayth & beleue of the hystory. The secōd is proper vnto the sonnes of God & is their lyfe, as it is written. The righteous liueth by fayth, that is, in puttyng hys trust, confidēce, and whole hope in the goodnes, mercy, and helpe of God, in all aduersities, bodely and ghostly, and all temptations, & euen in sinne & hell, how depe so euer he be fallen therin.

To beleue in Christ.

To beleue that Christ is God and man, is to put all our trust, hope, & confidēce in him.

But as he which seeleth not hys disease, can long for no health, euen so it is impossible for any man to beleue in Christs bloud, except Moses haue had hym first in cure, & with his law haue robbed hym of his righteousnes, and cōdemned him vnto euerlastyng death & haue shewed hym vnder what dānation they are in by birth in Adā: & how all their deedes (appeare they neuer so holy) are yet but damnable sinne because they cā referre nothyng vnto the glory of God, but seke thē selues, their owne profite, honour and glory. So that repentaunce toward the law must go before this belefe, and he which repenteth not, but cōsenteth vnto the life of sinne hath no part in this fayth.

Moses.

And when Iohn calleth Christ the euerlastyng life that was with the father, hee signifieth that Christ is our lyfe, as after in the Epistle, and in the first also of his Gospel saying. In him was lyfe. For vntill we receaue lyfe of Christ by fayth we are dead and can be Christ is our life.

but but dead, as sayth Iohn. iij. He that beleueth not in the sonne, can see no lyfe, but the wrath of God abydeth vppon him. Of which wrath we are heyres by

By nature we are the chyldren of wrath.

byrth sayth Paule. Ephe. ij. Of whiche wrath we are ignorannt, vntil the law be published, and walke quyetly after our lustes, & lone God wickedly, that he should be content therwith & maintene vs therin cõtrary vnto his godly and righteous nature. But alsoone as the lawe (whose nature is to vtter sinne. Roma. iij. and to set man at variaunce, with God) is preached, thẽ we first awake out of our dreame, and see our damnatiõ, and haue the law which is so contrary vnto our nature, and grudge agaynst God therto, as young chyldren do agaynst their elders when they first commaũde, and count God a cruell tyraũt because of his law in that he cõdemneth vs for that thyng which we can not lone, nor of lone fulfill.

The law condemneth vs.

Christ.

But when Christ is preached, how that God for his sake receiueth vs to mercy, & forgiueth vs all that is past, & henceforth reckeneth not vnto vs our corrupt and poysoned nature, & taketh vs as his sonnes, and putteth vs vnder grace and mercy, & promiseth that he will not iudge vs by the rigorousnes of the law, but nourture vs with all mercy and patiẽce, as a father most mercyful. Onely if we will submit our selues vnto his doctrine and learne to kepe his lawes. Yea and he will therto consider our mekenes, and what soeuer chaunceth neuer taketh away hys mercy, till we cast of the yoke of our profession first, and rinne away with vtter defiaunce, that we will neuer come more at schole. Then our stubburne and hard hartes mollifie & wax soft, and in the confidẽce and hope that we haue in Christ and his kindnes we go to God boldly as vnto our father and receaue life, that is to say loue vnto God and vnto the law also.

If we submit our selues to Christ, & knowledge our weakenes he will of his great mercy receaue vs.

That whiche we haue seene and heard we declare vnto you that ye may haue felowshyppe with vs, and that our felowshyppe may be with the father, and with his sonne Iesus Christ. And these thynges we write vnto you that your ioye may be full.

The touch stone of all true doctrine and preachers.

To bryng vnto the felowshyp of God and Christ, and of them that beleue in Christ, is the finall intent of all the Scripture, why it was giuen of God vnto man, and the onely thyng which all true preachers seke, & whereby ye shall euer know and discerne the true word of God from all false, and counterfayted doctrine of vayne traditions & the true preacher from the wylie hypocrite. We preache vnto you (sayth Iohn) ỳ euerlastyng lyfe which we haue heard, and in hearyng receaued through fayth and are sure of it, to draw you to vs out of the felowshyp that ye haue with the damned deuils in sinnefull lustes and ignorannce of God, for we seeke you and not yours as sayth Paul. ij. Cor. xij. We lone you as our selues in God, & therfore wold haue you felowes, and equall with vs, & build you vpon the foundation layd of the Apostles and Prophetes which is Christ Iesus, and make you of the houshold of God for euer, that ye, and we, felowes and brethren, and coupled together in one spirit, in one fayth and in one hope, might haue our felowshyp thereby with God, and become his sonnes & heyres, & with Iesus Christ, beyng his brethren and coheyres, and to make your ioy ful through that glad tydinges, as the aungell sayd vnto the shepheardes Luke. ij. Behold I shew you great ioye that shalbe vnto all the people, how that there is a Sauiour borne vnto you this day whiche is Christ the Lord. And these tydinges we bryng you with the worde of God onely which we receaued of his spirit, and out of the mouth of his sonne as true messengers.

The modest & charitable maner of S. Paules doctrine.

S. Paule preached Christ and not hym selfe.

We preach not our selues, but Christ our Lord, and vs your seruauntes for hys sake, we do not lone our selues, to seke yours vnto vs, that after we had with wiles robbed you of all ye haue, we should exalte our selues ouer you & separate our selues frõ you and make our selues a seuerall kyngdome, free and frãke raygnyng ouer you as heathen tyraunte & holdyng you in bondage to serue our lucre and lustes tangiyng your conscience with doctrine of man whiche draweth from God and Christ and fearing you with the bugge of excommunication agaynste Gods word. Or if that serued not, shakyng a swoord at you.

And this is the tydinges whiche we haue heard of hym, and declare vnto you, that God is lyght and in hym is no darknes at all. If we say that we haue felowshyp with hym, and yet walke in darkenes we lye, and do not the truth. But and if we walke in light as he is in light, then haue we felowshyp together, and the bloud of Christ his sonne clenseth vs from all sinne.

As God is light, so the deuil is darkenes.

As the deuill is darknes and lyes, so is God light and truth onely, and there is no darknes of falshead & consentyng to wickednes in hym. And the brightnes of his light is his word and doctrine, as the. C. and. xix. Psalme sayth. Thy worde is a lanterne vnto my feete & a light to my pathes. And Christe is the light that lightneth all men. And the Apostles are called the light of the world, because of the doctrine. And all that knowe truth are light. Ye were once darkenes sayth Paule. Ephes. v. but now light in the Lord, walke therfore as the children of lyght. And good workes are called the frutes of light. And all that lyue in ignoraūce are called darknes, as he sayth afterward, he that hateth his brother walketh in darknes. For if the light of the glorious Gospell of Christe dyd shyne in his hart, he could not hate his brother.

Good workes are the frutes of lyght.

Walkyng in darknes or in light.

By walking vnderstande consenting, doing, and working. If then we walke in darcknes, that is, consent and worke wickednes, and say we haue felowshyp with God, we ly. For to haue felowshyp with him, is to knowe, and consent, and profesle his doctrine in our hartes. Now if the commaundementes of GOD bee written in our hartes, our members can not but practise thē & shew the fruite. So whether light or darknes be in the hart, it will appeare in ẏ walking. For though our members be neuer so dead vnto vertue, yet if our soules knowledge the truth, & consent vnto righteousnes, we haue the spryte of life in vs. And Paule sayth, Rom. viij. If the spirite of him ẏ rayled vp Jesus from death be in you, thē wil he ẏ raised vp Jesus frō death, quicken your mortall bodies, by the reasō of the spirit that dwelleth in you. So that it is not possible for him that knoweth the truth, & consenteth thereto, to continue in sinne. And then finally if we haue the light in our harts, and walke therein, then we haue felowshyp with God, and are his sonnes and heires, and are purged from all sinne through Christes bloud.

If we haue the spirite of God in vs, then will he rayse vs vp with Jesus Christ.

If we say we haue no sinne, we deceaue our selues, and trueth is not in vs.

Hee that sayth he hath no sinne deceaueth him selfe.

If we think there is no sinne in vs, we are beguiled, and blinde, and the light of Gods word is not in vs, and eyther folow sinne as beastes without conscieēce at all. Or if we see the grosse sinnes, as murther, theft, and aduletery, yet we haue hanged a vayle of false gloses vpon Moses face, and see not the brightnes of the law, how that it requireth of vs, as pure an hart to God, and as great loue vnto our neigbours as was in our sauiour Jesus, & ceaseth not before to condemne vs as sinners.

If we knowledge our sinnes, he is faythfull and iust to forgeeue vs our sinnes, and to clense vs from all vnrighteousnes.

If we confesse our sinnes to God with true fayth and repentaunce he will forgeue vs.

If we confesse our sinnes, not in the priestes eare (though that tradition restored vnto the right vse were not dāmable,) but in our hartes to God with true repentaunce and fast beleife: then is he faythfull to forgeue and to purge vs, because of his mercifull truth and promise. For he promised Abraham, that in his seede all the worlde should be blessed from the curse of sinne. And hath aboundantly renued his euerlasting mercy vnto vs in the new testament, promising that our sinnes shall be forgeuen vs in Christes blond, if we repent and trust thereto.

If we say we haue not sinned, we make him a lyer, and hys woord is not in vs.

All we are sinners.

For his word testifyeth against vs, that wee are all sinners, yea, and eis Christ dyed in vayne. Salomon sayth, 3. Reg. 8. That there is no man that sinneth not agaynst God. And Paule proueth by the authoritie of the Scripture vnto the Romaines, that we are all sinners without exception. And the scripture witnesseth that we are damnable sinners, and that our nature is to sinne. which corrupt and poysoned nature, though it be begō to be healed, yet it is neuer through whole vntil the houre of death. For the which cause with all our best fruites, there growe wedes among. Neither can there be any deed so perfect that could not be amended. When a blind bungler wondreth at his glorious woorkes, a cunning workeman ẏ hath a cleare iudgemēt

Nothing can be so well done, but it may be amended.

ment, perceaueth that it is vnpossible to make a woorke that coulde not bee made better. Now the law requireth woorkes of vs in the highest degree of perfection, and ceaseth not to accuse vs vntill our woorkes flow naturally, as glorious in perfection as the woorkes of Christ. And Christ teacheth vs to pray in our Pater noster: Forgeeue vs our trespasses as we forgeue our trespassers. whereby ye may easelye vnderstande, that we sinne dayly one agaynst an other, and all agaynst God. Christ taught also to pray that our Father should not let vs slip into temptation: signifying that our nature cannot but sinne if occasions be geuen, except that God of his especiall grace keepe vs backe. which readinesse to sinne is damnable sinne in the lawe of God. Dauid prayed Psal. 68. Let not the tempest drowne me, let me not fall into the bottome, and let not the pitte shut her mouth vpon me: as who shoulde say: First keepe me O God from sinning, then if I shall chaunce to fall, as no flesh can escape, one time or other, then call me shortly backe agayne, and let me not sincke to deepe therein: and though I yet fall neuer so deepe, yet Lord let not the way of mercy be stopped: signifying that it is vnpossible to stand of our selues, and much lesse to rise againe. which impotencie and feblenes is damnable in the law of God except that wee saw it, and repented, and were fled to Christ for mercy.

In the nature of mā is sinfull.

Chap. 2.

MY little children, I write these thinges vnto you, that ye sinne not. And though any man sinne, yet we haue an aduocate with the Father, euen Iesus Christ, which is righteous.

I write vnto you on the one syde, that God is light, and therfore that no man which willingly walketh in the vnfruitfull woorkes of darknesse, hath any felowship with that light, or part in the bloud of his Sonne. And this I write and testifie vnto you my deare children, that ye sinne not: that is, that ye consent not vnto sinne, nor should sinne of lust and purpose maliciously: but contrariwise that ye feare God, & resiste sinne with all your might and power according as ye haue promised.

We must resist sinne with al our power and might.

For whosoeuer sinneth of purpose after the knowledge of truth, the same sinneth against the holy Ghost remediesse. Heb. 6. 10.

And on the other side I testifie vnto you that we be alway sinners, though not of purpose and malice after the nature of damned deuils, but of infirmitie and frailtie of our flesh, which flesh not onely letteth vs that our woorkes can not be perfect, but also now & then through manifold occasions and temptations caryeth vs cleane out of the right way, spight of our hartes. How be it (I say) if when the rage is past, we turne vnto the right way agayne, and confesse our sinnes vnto our Father with a repenting hart, he hath promised vs mercie, and is true to fulfill it. So that if we sinne not deuilishly against the holy Ghost, refusing the doctrine which we can not improue that it should not be true: but after the frailtie of man, there is no cause to dispair: For we haue an aduocate and an intercessour with the Father, euen Iesus Christ that is righteous.

We sinne daily by the frailty and weaknes of our flesh.

The name of our aduocate is Iesus, that is to say, a sauiour. Cal his name Iesus, sayd the Angell to Ioseph: for he shall saue his people from their sinnes. Math. 1. And this aduocate & our Iesus to saue vs from our sinnes, continueth euer, as it is written, Heb. 7. and hath, Sempiternum Sacerdotium, an euerlasting office, to make an attonement for sinne: by the reason whereof (sayth the text) he is able euer to saue them that come to God through him, with repentance and fayth, and liueth euer to speake for vs. And besides that our Iesus is God and almightie. He tooke our nature vpon him, and felt al our infirmities and sicknesses, and in feeling learned to haue compassion on vs, and for compassion cryed mightely in prayers to God the Father for vs, & was heard. And the voyce of the same bloud that once cryed, not for vengeaunce as Abels, but for mercy onely, & was heard, cryeth now and euer, and is euer heard, as oft as we call vnto remembrance with repenting fayth how that it was shed for our sinnes. He is also called Christus, that is to say, king annoynted with all might and power ouer sinne, death and hell, and ouer all sinnes, so that none that flyeth vnto him shall euer come into iudgement of damnation. He is annoynted with all fulnesse of grace, and hath all the treasure and riches of the spirite of God in his hande, with which he blesseth all men accordyng to the promise made to Abraham, and is thereto merciull to geue vnto al that cal on him. And how much he loueth vs, I report me vnto the ensamples of his deedes.

By Iesu Christ we are made blessed.

And he is righteous, both towarde God in that he neuer sinned, and therfore hath obtayned all his fauour and grace: and also toward vs in that he is true to fulfill all the mercye that he hath promised vs, euen vnto the vttermost iotte.

And he is the satisfaction for our sinnes, and not for oures only, but also for all the worldes.

That I call satisfaction, the Greeke calleth Ilasmos, and the Hebrue Copar. And it is first taken for the swaging of wounds, sores, and swellings, and the taking away of payne and smarte of them. And thence is borowed for the pacifying and swaging of wrath and anger, and for an amendes making, a contenting, satisfaction, a raunsome, & making at one, as it is to see abowndantly in the Bible. So that Christ is a full contenting, satisfaction and raunsome for our sinnes. And not for oures onely which are Apostles and Disciples of Christ while he was yet here: or for ours which are Iewes or Israelites and the seed of Abraham: or for ours that nowe beleue at this present tyme, but for all mens sinnes, both for their sinnes which went before and beleued the promises to come, & for ours which haue sene them fulfilled, and also for all them whiche shall afterward beleue vnto the worldes ende, of what soeuer nation or degree they be. For Paule commaundeth. 1. Timo. 2. To pray for all mē and all degrees, saying that to bee acceptable vnto our Sauiour God, whiche will haue all men saued and come to the knowledge of the truth, that is, some of al natiōs and all degrees, & not the Iewes onely. For (sayth hee) there is one God, and one mediatour betwene God and man, the man Christ Iesus, whiche gaue him selfe a redemption and full satisfaction for all men.

Christes blond is the satisfaction for our sinnes.

Christ gaue himselfe for the redemption & saluation of al the world.

Let this therefore be an vndoubted Article of thy fayth, not of an hystorie fayth as thou beleuest a gest of Alexander, or of the old Romains, but of a lively fayth and belefe, to put thy trust and confidēce in, and to by and sell theron, as we say, and to haue thy sinnes takē away, and thy soule saued thereby, if thou hold it fast: and to continue euer in sinne, and to haue thy soule damned if thou let it slip, that our Iesus, our Sauiour that saueth his people from their sinnes, & our Christ, that is our kyng ouer all sinne, death and hell, annoynted with fulnesse of all grace and with the spirite of God, to distribute vnto all men, hath accordyng vnto the Epistle to the Hebrues & all the scripture, in the dayes of his mortall flesh, with fastyng, prayng, sufferyng, and crying to God mightily for vs, & with shedyng his blond made full satisfaction both a pœna & a culpa (with our holy fathers leaue) for all the sinnes of the world both of theirs that went before, & of theirs that come after in the faith, whether it be Originall sinne or actual, & not onely the sinnes cōmitted with consent to euill in tyme of ignorannce before the knowledge of the truth, but also the sinnes done of frailtie after we haue forsaken euill and cōsented to the lawes of God in our harts promising to folow Christ and walke in the light of his doctrine.

Christ is king ouer death, hell, & sinne.

Hee saueth his people from their sinnes. Math. 1. and that he onely. So that there is no other name to be saued by. Actes. 4. And vnto hym beare all the Prophets recorde, that all that beleue in hym shall receaue remission of their sinnes, in his name. Actes. 10. And by him onely we haue an entring in vnto the father and vnto all grace. Ephe. 2. 3. and Rom. 5. And as many as come before hym are theues & murtherers. John. 10. That is, whosoeuer preacheth any other forgiuenesse of sinne then through fayth in hys name, the same slayeth the soule.

Christ only is our saluiour.

This to be true, not onely of originall but of actual, and aswel of that we commit after our profession, as before, mayst thou euidently see by the ensamples of the Scripture. Christ forgaue the woman taken in adulterie. John. 8 and an other whom he healed. John. 5 And he forgaue Publicanes and open sinners, and put none to do penaunce as they call it, for to make satisfactiō for the sinne, which he forgaue through repentaunce & fayth, but enioyned them the lyfe of penaunce, the profession of their Baptisme, to tame the flesh in kepyng the commaundementes and that they should sinne no more. And those sinners were for the most part Iewes and had their Originall sinne forgiuen them before through fayth in the Testament Christ forgeueth all our sinnes freely for his mercy sake.

stament of God. Christ forgaue his Apostles their actuall sinnes after their professiō which they committed in denyeng hym, & put none to do penaunce for satisfactiō. Peter Actes. 2. absolueth the Jewes thorough repentaunce and fayth from their actuall sinnes whiche they dyd in consentyng vnto Christes death, and enioyned them no penaūce to make satisfaction. Paul also had his actuall sinnes forgiuen hym freely thorough repentaunce and fayth without mention of satisfactiō. Actes. 9. So that accordyng vnto this present texte of John. If it chaūce vs to sinne of frailtie, let vs not dispayre for we haue an aduocate and intercessour, a true attorney with the father Jesus Christ righteous toward God and man, and is the reconcilyng and satisfaction for our sinnes.

Christ onely is our aduocate,

For Christes workes are perfect, so that he hath obtained vs all mercy and hath set vs in the full state of grace and fauour of God, and hath made vs as welbeloued as the aungels of heauen, though we be yet weake. As the yoūg childrē though they can do no good at all are yet as tenderly beloued as the old. And God for Christes sake hath promised that whatsoeuer euil we shal do, yet if we turne and repent he will neuer more thinke on our sinnes.

Popith for grecnesse.

Thou wilt say, God forgiueth the displeasure but we must suffer payne to satisfie the righteousnes of God. A then God hath a righteousnes whiche may not forgeue paine & al, ỳ the poore sinner shuld go skotfre without ought at all. God was vnrighteous to forgiue the theefe his payne and all thorough repentaunce & faith vnto whom for lack of laysure was no penaūce enioyned. And my faith is, that whatsoeuer exāple of mercy God hath shewed one, that same he hath promised all, ye will he peraduenture forgiue me, but I must make amendes? If I owe you xx. li. ye will forgiue me, that is, ye will no more be angry with me, but I shal pay you the. xx. poundes. O Popithe forgiuenesse with whom it goeth after the common prouerbe, no peny no pardon. His fatherhode giueth pardō freely but we must pay money aboundantly. Paules doctrine is. Rom. 3. If a man worke, it ought not to be sayd, that his hyre was giuē hym of grace or fauour, but of dutie: But to hym that worketh not: but beleueth in hym that iustifieth the vngodly, his faith (he sayth not his workes although he commaundeth vs diligently to worke and despiseth none that God commaūdeth) his faith (faith hee) is reken ed hym for hys righteousnes. Confirmyng his saying with the testimonie of the prophet Dauid in the 32. Psalme: saying. Blessed is the man vnto whō God imputeth or rekeneth not his sinne: that is to say, which man although he be a sinner, yet God layeth not it to his charge for his faithes sake. And in the. xi. hee sayth. If it come of grace then it cōmeth not of workes. For then were grace no grace sayth he: For it was a very straunge speakyng in Paules eares to call that grace that came of deseruyng of workes: Or that deseruyng of workes, whiche came by grace: for he reken ed workes & grace to be contrary in such maner of speach. But our holy father hath coupled thē together of pure liberalitie I dare say, & not for couetousnes. For as his holynesse if hee haue a cause agaynst any man, immediatly bretheth out an excommunication vppon hym and will haue satisfaction for the vttermost farthing and somwhat aboue, to teach thē to beware agaynst an other tyme yet he will blesse agayne from the terrible sentence of his heauy curse, euen so of that blessed complection hee describeth the nature of the mercy of God that God will remitte his anger to vs vpon the appointment of our satisfaction. When the Scripture sayth Christ is our righteousnes, our iustifying, our redemption, our attonement, that hath appeased God, and clenseth vs frō our sinnes, and all in his bloud, so that his bloud, is the satisfaction onely.

Faith in Christ is accompted to vs for righteousnes.

We are iustified by grace, and not by workes of the law.

The Pope when any man offendeth him, falleth to cursing.

And that thou mayst the better perceaue the falshead of our holy fathers fleshly imagination, call to minde how that the Scripture sayth. John the iiij. God is a spirite and must be worshypped in the spirite. That is, repentaūce, fayth, hope, and loue toward his law and our neighbour for his sake is hys worshyp in the spirite. And therefore whosoeuer woorshyppeth God with workes, and referreth his woorkes to God, to be a sacrifice vnto hym, to appease hym as though hee delited in the worke for the woorkes sake, the same maketh of God an image or idoll and is an image seruer, and as wicked an Idolater as euer was any blynd heathen, and serueth God after the imagination of his owne hart and is abhominable vnto god, as thou seest in how many places God defieth the sacrifice of the children of Israell, for the sayd i-imagination. So that whosoeuer supposeth that his candle stickyng before an Image, his puttyng a peny in the boxe, his goyng a pilgrimage, his fastyng, his wolward goyng, barefoote goyng, his crowchyng, knelyng, and paintaking, be sacrifices vnto God, as though he delited in them, as we in the gestures of Jack Napes, is as blind as hee that gropeth for his way at none. Popish workes.

Gods worshyp is to loue hym for hys mercy, & of loue to bestow al our workes vpon our neighbour for his sake, and vpon the tamyng of our flesh, that we sinne not agayne, which should be the chiefest care of a Christen man whyle Christ careth for that that is once past and cõmitted already, whether before our profession or after. For the conditions of the peace that is made betwen God & vs in Christes bloud are these. The law is set before vs, vnto whiche if we consent and submit our selues to be scholers thereof, then are not onely all our foresinnes forgiuen both Pœnæ & culpæ (with our holy fathers licence euer) but also all our infirmities, weaknes, proneſſe, readynes, and motions vnto sinne are pardoned and taken awoyth and we translated frõ vnder the damnation of the law which damneth as well those infirmities as the sinne that springeth of them, and putteth vs vnder grace. Rom. 7. So that we shall not henceforth, as long as we forsake not our professiõ be iudged by the rigorousnes of the law. But chastised if we do amise as children that are vnder no law. Now then if God in Christ pardon our infirmities, by reaõ of which we cannot escape but that we shal now and thẽ sinne, it foloweth that he must likewise pardon the actuall sinne whiche we do compelled of those infirmities in spite of our hartes, and agaynst the will of the spirite. For if thou pardon the sickneſſe of the sicke, then must thou pardõ the deeds which he doth, or leueth vndone by the reason of his sickneſſe. If the madnes of a mad man be pardoned and vnder no law, then if he murther in his madneſſe, he may not be slayne agayne. If children within a certaine age are not vnder the law that slayeth theues, then can ye not of right hang them, though they steale. what popishe pardoning were that? Thys doth Paule, Rom. 7. so confirme that all the world cannot quitch agaynst it, saying: I consent vnto the law of God that it is good, and fayne would I do it, and yet haue I not alwayes power so to do, but find an other thing in my flesh, rebelling agaynst the will of my minde, and leading me captiue into sinne, so that I cannot do that I wold doe: but am compelled to doe that I would not. If (sayth he) I do that I woulde not, then I do it not, but the sinne that dwelleth in me doth it: And then sayth he: who shall deliuer me from this body of deathe, in which I am bound prisoner agaynst my will: Thankes be to God (saith he) through Jesus Christ our Lorde, which hath conquered and ouercome sinne, death, and hell, and hath put the damnation of the law out of the way, vnto all that professe the law, and beleue in him. Gods worshyp. God doth pardon and forgeue all our sinnes whatsoeuer they are for Christes sake. Christes victory.

We be vnder the lawe to learne it, and to fashion our deedes as like as we can, but not vnder the damnation of the lawe, that we shoulde be damned though our deedes were not perfect as the law requireth, or though of frailty we at a time breake it. As children are vnder the law that they steale not, but not vnder the damnation though they steale. So that all they that are grafted into Christ to follow hys doctrine, are vnder the law to learne it onely, but are deliuered from feare of euerlasting death and hell, and all the threatenings of the law, and from conscience of sinne, which feared vs from God. And we are come into God thorough the confidence that we haue in Jesus Christ, & are as familiar & bold with him, as yong innocent children which haue no conscience of sinne, are with their fathers and mothers, or chẽ that nourishe them. which were vnpossible if God now (as the pope paineth him) did shake a rod at vs of hys yeares punishment, as sharpe as the paynes of hel for euery trespace we do, which trespace for the number of them were like to make our purgatory almost as long as hell, seing we haue no Gods word, that we shall be deliuered thence, vntil we haue payd the last farthing. And therefore could our conscience neuer be at rest, nor be bolde and familier with God. The popes purgatory is terrible.

If ye say the Pope can deliuer my conscience from feare of purgatory (as his pottry onely putteth me in feare) and that by this text, whatsoeuer thou bindest on earth. &c. If thou this way vnderstand the text, whatsoeuer thou being in earth losest any where: then might he lose in hell, and binde in heauen. But why may not I take the text of Christ, Ioh. 16. Whatsoeuer ye aske Winde and loose. Note this text.

my

my Father in my name, he will gene it you, and desire forgeuenesse of all together in Christes name, both a pœna & culpa: and thē remayneth no such purgatory at all? Howbeit the text of binding & losing, is but borowed speach, how that after the similitude of worldly binding and losing locking and vnlocking: the word of God truely preached doth binde and lose the conscience, Binding & losing is by the true preachyng of Gods word.

God sayth to Hieremias, cap. 1. Behold I gene thee power ouer nations and kingdomes to plucke vp by the rootes, and to shiuer in peeces, to destroy and cast downe, and to build and plante. How did he destroy nations & kingdomes, and how did he build thē? verily by preaching and prophecying. What nation, kingdome, or citie he prophecyed to be ouerthrowne, was so. And what citie he prophecyed to be built againe, was so. And what nation after they were brought into captiuity he prophecyed to be restored agayne, were so. And whome he prophecyed to perish, perished. And whome he prophecyed to be saued, was saued.

Euen so whomesoeuer a true preacher of Gods word saith shall be damned for his sinne, because he will not repent and beleue in Christ, the same is damned: And whomesoeuer a true preacher of Gods worde sayth shall be saued because he repenteth and beleeueth in Christes bloud, the same is saued. And this is the binding and losing that Christ ment.

Notwithstanding ye must vnderstand that when we haue sinned, though our hartes were not to sinne, and though we repēt, ere the deed be done, yet the body in sinning hath ouercome the spirite, and hath got the maistrye. So that the spirite is now weaker and feebler to vertue, and to folow the law of God and doctrine of Christ, and the flesh stronger to folow vice and sinne. Wherfore as when an olde sore is broken forth againe, we begin as it were a new cure with greater diligence and more care then before: euen so here we must renue our old battayl against the flesh, and more strongly goe to worke, to subdue it, and to quench the lustes therof, which are waxen so ranke, that they bud out openly, according to the profession of our baptisme, which is ỹ very sacrament or signe of repentance, or if they wil so haue it called penance, by the interpretation of Paul. Rom. 6. For the plunging into the water, as it betokeneth on the one part that Christ hath washed our soules w̄ his bloud: euen so on the other parte it signifyeth that we haue promised to quench and slay the lustes of the flesh with prayer, fasting, and holy meditation, after the doctrine of Christ, and with all godlye exercise, that tame the flesh, and kyll not the man.

We must struggle & striue with sinne.

Wherupon the Bishops that succeded the Apostles, when men had done any open sinnes, enioyned them penaunce as they call it, by the authoritie of the congregation and gouernours therof, and aduise of the most wise and discrete, and with the willing consent of the trespassers, to tame the flesh, as to go woolward, to weare shurtes of heire, to goe barefoote and bare head, to pray, to fast bread and water, some once in the weeke, some twise, or al the weeke, an whole yeare, iij. yeares, iij. yeares, vij. yeares, xx. yeares, & some all their liues long. And to goe in pilgrimage to visite ỹ memoriall of saintes, to strength them the better to folow the ensample and such like, and all to slay the worldly minde of the flesh. Which maner when it was once receiued of ỹ people by custome, it became a law. And the bishops by little & little gat it whole into their own handes.

How penaunce came vp & Purgatory.

When the Bishops sawe that, how they had got the simple people vnder them in such humble obedience, they beganne to set vp their cresles, and to raigne ouer them as princes, and to enioyne sore penaunce for small trifles, namely, if ought were done agaynste their pleasure, and beate some sore, and spared other, and solde their penaunce to the ritch, and ouerladed the poore, vntill the tyranny was waxed so greuous that the people would beare it no longer. For by this time, what w̄ the multitude of ceremonies and heap of mens constitutions whole right vse was thereto cleane forgotten, & partly because our shepheardes were busyed to seeke themselues and their hye authority, & exalted euery mā his throne, and were become wolues vnto ỹ flock, the cause why the people were disobedient vnto holesome counsel: the word of God was sore darckened, and no where purely preached. And therefore the Prelates loth to lose their hye authoritie, and to let the people goe free of their yoke, began to turne their tale, and sing a new song, how that this penaunce was enioyned to make satisfaction to God for the sinne that was committed, robbing our soules of the fruite of Christes bloud, and making vs imageseruauntes, referring oure deedes vnto the perill of God, & worshipping him as an image of our own imagination with bodely worke, saying moreouer, if we would not do such penaunce here at their iniunctions we must do it in an other worlde, and so fayned purgatory where we must suffer vij. yeares for euery sinne. And when the kingdome of Antichrist was so enlarged that it must haue an head, they set vp our holy father of Rome, or rather vsurped that Rome with violence, and to him was geuen this prerogatine to sell whome he would from purgatorye.

How the Pope and bys shauelyngs haue abused penaunce.

Here was Purgatory kindled.

The definition of penaunce made by the Papistes.

And the sacrament of penaunce they thus describe: Contrition, Confession, and Satisfaction. Contrition, sorow for thy sinnes. Confession, not to God and them whome thou hast offended, but tell thy sinnes in the priestes eare. Satisfaction, to do certaine deedes enioyned of them, to buy out thy sinnes. And in their description they haue cleane excluded the fayth in the satisfaction of Christes bloud, which onely bringeth life, and the spirite of life, and righteousnes, and without the which it is impossible to please God. Heb. xi. In whose stead they haue put in the presumption of our owne workes. And for lacke of trust in Christes bloud our contrition is but a fruitlesse sorow in y respect of hell, which maketh vs hate the law still, & consequently God that made it: where true contrition annexed with fayth, is sorow in respect of the law, vnto which we consent that it is good & loue it and therfore mourne partly because we haue offended it and partly because we lacke power to fulfill it as we would.

Fayth is the chiefest part of penaunce.

These thynges to be true our Prelates know by open hystories as well, as whē it is Noone, the Sunne is flat South: but it deliteth them to resist the holy ghost and to persecute the preachers of the thynges whiche if they as well loued as they knowe to be true, they would preache the same them selues and lyue therafter. Herof ye may see our woorkes are but to tame the flesh onely, and can be no satisfactiō to God, except we make him an image & our selues image seruaunts. And herof ye may see how out of this open penaunce came the eare cōfession, satisfaction of workes Purgatorie and pardons. For when they had put the satisfaction of Christes bloud out of y way, then as they compelled to cōfesse open sinnes and to take open penaunce, euē so they compelled to confesse secrete sinnes and to take secret penaūce. And as they made marchaūdise of open penaūce, so did they of secret. And for thē that would not receaue such pardon, fayned they Purgatory, and for them that receaued them fayned they pardō, turnyng bindyng and losing with preaching Gods word vnto byeng and selling sinne for money. And since that tyme hetherto, the worse the people were the better were the Prelates cōtent, euer resistyng that they should be made better through their blessed couetousnes & proude desire of honour.

Our workes can make no satisfaction, but onely faith in Christes bloud.

The practise & marchaūdise of the Pope & his Clergy
